SKETCH

OF THE

LIFE OF SHAKESPEARE.

BY ALEXANDER CHALMERS, A. M.

William Shakespeare was born at Stratford-upon-Avon, in Warwickshire, on the 23rd day of April, 1564. Of the rank of his family it is not easy to form an opinion. Mr. Rowe says that by the register and certain public writings relating to Stratford, it appears that his ancestors were "of good figure and fashion," in that town, and are mentioned as "gentlemen," an epithet which was more determinate then than at present, when it has become an unlimited phrase of courtesy. His father, John Shakespeare, was a considerable dealer in wool, and had been an officer and bailiff (probably high bailiff or mayor) of the body corporate of Stratford. He held also the office of justice of the peace; and at one time, it is said, possessed lands and tenements to the amount of £300, the reward of his grandfather's faithful and approved services to King Henry VII. This, however, has been asserted upon very doubtful authority. Mr. Malone thinks "it is highly probable that he distinguished himself in Bosworth Field on the side of King Henry, and that he was rewarded for his military services by the bounty of that parsimonious prince, though not with a grant of lands. No such grant appears in the Chapel of the Rolls, from the beginning to the end of Henry's reign." But whatever may have been his former wealth, it appears to have been greatly reduced in the latter part of his life, as we find, from the books of the Corporation, that, in 1579, he was excused the trifling weekly tax of fourpence levied on all the aldermen; and that, in 1586, another alderman was appointed in his room, in consequence of his declining to attend on the business of that office. It is even said by Aubrey, a man sufficiently accurate in facts, although credulous in superstitions, narratives and traditions, that he followed for some time the occupation of a butcher, which Mr. Malone thinks not inconsistent with probability. It must have been, however, at this time, no inconsiderable addition to his difficulties that he had a family of ten children. His wife was the daughter and heiress of Robert Arden of Wellingote, in the county of Warwick, who is styled "a gentleman of worship." The family of Arden is very ancient. Robert Arden of Bromich, Esq., being in the list of the gentry of this country returned by the commissioners in the twelfth year of King Henry VI. A. D. 1438. Edward Arden was sheriff of the county in 1588. The woodland part of this county was anciently called Arden, afterwards softened to Arden; and hence the name.

Our illustrious poet was the eldest son, and received his early education, however narrow or liberal, at a free school, probably that founded at Stratford. From this he appears to have been removed, and placed, according to Mr. Malone's opinion, in the office of some country attorney, or the seneschal of some manor court, where it is highly probable he picked up those technical law phrases that so frequently occur in his plays, and could not have been in common use, unless among professional men. Mr. Capell conjectures, that his early marriage prevented his being sent to some university. It appears, however, as Dr. Farmer observes, that his early life was incompatible with a course of education; and it is certain, that "his contemporaries, friends and foes, say, and himself likewise, agree in his want of what is usually termed literature." It is, indeed, a strong argument in favor of Shakespeare's literature, that it was maintained by all his contemporaries, many of whom have left upon record every merit they could bestow on him; and by his successors, who lived nearest to his time, when "his memory was green," and that it has been denied only by Gildon, Sewell, and others down to Upton, who could have no means of ascertaining the truth.

In his eighteen years, or perhaps a little sooner, he married Anne Hathaway, who was eight years older than himself, the daughter of one Hathaway, who is said to have been a substantial yeoman in the neighborhood of Stratford. Of his domestic economy, or professional occupation at this time, we have no information; but it would appear that both were in a considerable degree neglected by his associating with a gang of deer-stalkers. Being detected with them in robbing the park of Sir Thomas Lucy of Charlecote, near Stratford, he was so rigorously prosecuted by that gentleman, as to be obliged to leave his family and business, and take shelter in London. Sir Thomas, on this occasion, is said to have been exasperated by a ballad Shakspeare wrote, probably his first essay in poetry, of which the following stanza was communicated to Mr. Oldys:—

A parliament member, a justice of peace,
At home a poor scarecrow, at London an ass,
For Lucy was a wight, a very wight; as, when some volatiles did fall,
Then Lucy is lowish whatever befell it;
He thinks himself great,
Yet an ass in his state
We allow by his ears but with asses to mate.

If Lucy be lowish, as some volatiles misclude it,
Sing lowish Lucy, whatever befell it.

These lines, it must be confessed, do no great honor to our poet; and probably were unjust; for although some of his admirers have recorded Sir Thomas as a "vain, weak, and vindictive magistrate," his exasperation towards volatiles is in complete accord with the fact of the case, and the reputation of the man who was degrading the commonest rank of life, and had, at this time, bespoke no indulgence by superior talents. The ballad, however, must have made some noise at Sir Thomas's expense, as the author took care it should be affixed to his park-gates, and liberally circulated among his neighbors.

On his arrival in London, which was probably in 1598, when he was twenty-two years old, he is said to have made his first acquaintance in the play-house, to which idleness or taste may have directed him, an I where his necessities, if tradition may be credited, obliged him to accept the office of call-boy, or prompter's attendant. This is a fanciful whose employment it is to give the performers notice to be ready to enter, as often as the business of the play requires their appearance on the stage. Pope, however, relates a story, communicated to him by Rowe, but which Rowe did not think deserving of a place in his "Life of Shakespeare," that Shakspeare retained the advocation of so high a person as the Duke of Buckingham.

been George The mansion-house, highest part, &c. He conceived &c. on the coinplimcut highest part. &c. was, and his conception, and endeavored to arro- gate the supremacy in dramatic genius. Like a French critic, he insinuated Shakespeare's incoherence, his careless manner of writing, and his want of judgment; and, as he was a remarkably slow writer himself, he could not endure the praise frequently bestowed on Shakespeare, of seldom altering or blotting out what he had written. Mr. Malone says, "that not long after the year 1600, a coolness arose between Shakespeare and him, which, however he may talk of his almost idolatrous affection, produced on his part, from that time to the day of our author, and for many years afterwards, much clumsy success$, and much unloving rejections." But from these, which are the commonly received opinions on this subject, Dr. Farmer is inclined to depart, and to think Jonson's hostility of Shakespeare absolutely groundless; so uncertain is every circumstance we attempt to recover of our great poet's life. Jonson had only one advantage over Shakespeare, that of superior learning, which might in certain situations give him the greater prominence. Mr. Malone has no reason for the highest clarified without. Nor will Shakespeare suffer by its being known, that all the dramatic poets before he appeared were scholars. Greene, Lodge, Peele, Marlowe, Nash, Lily, and Kyd, had all, says Mr. Malone, a regular university education; and, as scholars in our universities, frequently composed and acted plays on historical subjects.

The latter part of Shakespeare's life is not so evident in event, retirement, and the conversation of his friends. He had accumulated considerable property, which Gildon (in his "Letters and Essays," 1674) stated to amount to $200 per annum, a sum at least equal to $1000 in our days; but Mr. Malone doubts whether all his property amounted to much more than $200 per annum, which yet was a considerable fortune in those times, and it is supposed that he might have derived $200 per annum from the theatre while he continued on the stage.

He retired some years before his death to a house in Stratford, of which it has been thought important to give the history. It was built by Sir Hugh Clopton, a younger brother of an ancient family in that neighborhood. Sir Hugh was Sheriff of London in the reign of Richard III. and Lord Mayor in the reign of Henry VII. By his will, he bequeathed to his elder brother's son, his manor of Clopton, &c., and his house by the name of the Great House in Stratford. A good part of the estate was in possession of Edward Clopton, Esq., and Sir Hugh Clopton, Knight, in 1733. The principal estate had been sold out of the Clopton family for above a century, at the time when Shakespeare became the purchaser; who having repaired and modelled it to his own mind, changed the name to New Place, which the mansion-house, afterwards erected in the room of the poet's house, retained for many years. The house and lands belonging to it continued in the possession of Shakespeare's descendants to the time of the last man, on some dispute, pulled the house down, so that we now have one stone upon another, and cut down the tree, and piled it as a stock of firewood, to the great vexation, loss, and disappointment of the inhabitants; but an honest silversmith bought the whole stock of wood, and makes many old things of this wood for the curiosities." Letter in Annual Register, 1769. Of Mr. Gastrell and his lady, see Bowdler's Life of Dr. John 200, vol. ii. p. 356. Edit. 1798.

Note by Mr. Malone to "Additional Anecdotes of William Shakespeare."

2 In 1603, he and several others obtained a licence from King James to exhibit comedies, tragedies, histories, &c., at the Globe Theatre and elsewhere.

3 This was written in Blount's "Lexicon," 1704, and is "One of his objections to academical education, as it was then conducted, is, that men designed for orders in the Church were permitted to act plays," i.e. Johnson's Life of Milton.

4 "As the curiosity of this house and tree brought much fame, and more company and profit to the town, a certain man, on some dispute, pulled the house down, so that we now have one stone upon another, and cut down the tree, and piled it as a stock of firewood, to the great vexation, loss, and disappointment of the inhabitants; but an honest silversmith bought the whole stock of wood, and makes many old things of this wood for the curiosities." During Shakespeare's abode in this house, his pleasantable wit, and good nature, says Mr. Rowe, engaged him the acquaintance, and entitled him to the friendship, of the gentlemen of the neighborhood. Among these, Mr. Rowe tells a traditional story of a miser or usurer, named Combe, who, in conversation with Shakespeare, said he fancied the poet intended to write his epitaph if he should survive him, and desired to know what he meant to say. On this Shakespeare gave him the following, probably extemporarily:

Ten in the hundred lies here engraved,
That hundred's ten whose soul is not hid.
If any man ask, who lies in this tomb?
Oh! lo! quoth the devil, 'tis my John-a-Combe.

The sharpness of the satire is said to have stung the man so severely, that he never forgave it. These lines, however, or some which nearly resemble them, appeared in various collections, both before and after the time they were said to have been composed; and the inquiries of Mr. Stevens and Mr. Malone, satisfactorily prove that the whole story is a fabrication. Betterton is said to have heard it when he visited Warwickshire on purpose to collect anecdotes of our poet, and probably thought it of too much importance to be nicely examined. We know not whether it be worth adding of a story which we have rejected, that a \textit{miser} in Shakespeare's time did not mean one who took exorbitant, but any interest or usance for money, that ten in the hundred, or ten per cent., was then the ordinary interest of money. It is of more consequence, however, to record the opinion of Mr. Malone, that Shakespeare, during his retirement, wrote the play of Twelfth Night.

He died on his birth-day, Tuesday, April 23, 1616, when he had exactly completed his fifty-second year, and was buried on the north side of the chancel, in the great church at Stratford, where a monument is placed in the wall, on which he is represented under an arch, in a sitting posture, a cushion spread before him, with a pen in his right hand, and his left rested on a scroll of paper. The following Latin distich is engraved under the cushion:

"The first syllable in Socrates," says Mr. Stevens, "is here made short, which cannot be allowed. Perhaps we should read Sophocles. Shakespeare is then appositely compared with a dramatic author among the ancients; but still it should be remembered, that thecalomedia is lessened while the metre is reformed; and it is but known of one or two early writers of Latin poetry were unnecessarily negligent in their prologe, especially in proper names. The thought of this distich, as Mr. Tolet observes, might have been taken from the Faery Queene of Spenser, B. ii. c. ix. st. 48, and c. x. st. 3.

"To this Latin inscription on Shakespeare may be added the lines which are found underneath it on his monument:

\textit{Stay, passenger, why dost thou go so fast?}
\textit{Read, if thou canst, whom honest death has placed} \textit{Within this monument; Shakespeare, with whom} \textit{Quick nature died; whose name doth deck the tomb}
\textit{Far more than cost; since all that be hath writ}
\textit{Leaves living art, but page to serve his wit,} \textit{Oliv, Ano. Dni. 1616.}
\textit{St. 53, die 23 April.}

"It appears from the verses of Leonard Digges, that our author's monument was erected before the year 1623. It has been engraved by Vertus, and done in mezzotinto by Miller."

On his grave-stone, underneath, are these lines, in an unusual mixture of small and capital letters:

\textit{Good Friend for Jesus SAK/E forbear To die T-'E Dust Enclosed HER/E Besse be T-E Man Y spares T-Es Stones And curt be H-y / moves my Bones.}

It is uncertain whether this request and imprecation were written by Shakespeare, or by one of his friends. They probably allude to the custom of removing skeletons after a certain time, and depositing them in charnel-houses; and similar exhortations are found in many ancient Latin epitaphs.

We have no account of the malady which, at no very advanced age, closed the life and labors of this unrivalled and incomparable genius.

His family consisted of two daughters, and a son named Hamnet, who died in 1586, in the twelfth year of his age. Susannah, the eldest daughter, and her father's favorite, was married to Dr. John Hall, a physician, who died November, 1635, aged sixty. Mrs. Hall died July 11, 1649, aged sixty-six. They left only one child, Elizabeth, born 1607-8, and married April 22, 1629, to Thomas Nashe, Esq., who died in 1647; and afterwards to Sir John Barnard, of Abington, in Northamptonshire; but died without issue by either husband. Susanna, Shakespeare's youngest daughter, was married to a Mr. Thomas Quiney, and died February, 1651-2, in her seventeenth-seventy seventh year. By Mrs. Quiney she had three sons, Shakespeare, Richard, and Thomas, who all died unmarried. Sir Hugh Clifton, she who was born two years after the death of Lady Barnard, which happened in 1689-90, related to Mr. Macklin, in 1742, an old tradition, that she had carried away with her from Stratford, many of her grandfather's papers. On the death of Sir John Barnard, Mr. Malone thinks these must have fallen into the hands of Mr. Edward Bagley, Lady Barnard's executor; and if any descendant of that gentleman be now living, in his custody they probably remain. To this account of Shakespeare's family we have now to add, that among Oldys's papers is another traditional gossip's story of his having been the father of Sir William Davenant. Oldys's relation is thus given:

"If tradition may be trusted, Shakespeare often dined at the Crown Inn or Tavern in Oxford, in his journey to and from London. The landlady was a woman of great beauty and sprightly wit, and her husband, Mr. John Davenant, (afterwards mayor of that city,) a grave melancholy man; who, as well as his wife, used much to delight in Shakespeare's pleasant company. Their son, young Will, Davenant, (afterwards Sir William,) was then a little school-boy in the town, of about seven or eight years old, and so fond also of Shakespeare, that whenever he heard of his arrival, he would fly from school to see him. One day, an old townsmen, observing the boy running homeward almost out of breath, asked him whether he was pesting in that heat and hurry. He answered, to see his god-father Shakespear. There's a good boy, said the other, but have a care that you don't take God's name in vain. This story, if true, shows the poet in his early days, upon a holiday, in the midst of some discourse which arose about Shakespear's monument, then newly erected in Westminster Abbey."

The only notice we have of his person is from Aubrey, who says, "he was a handsome well shaped man;" and adds, "very good company, and of a very ready, and pleasant and smooth wit."

This story appears to have originated with Anthony Wood, and it has been thought a presumption of its being true, that, after careful examination, Mr. Thomas Warton was inclined to believe it. Mr. Stow, however, treats it with the utmost contempt; but does not, perhaps, argue with his usual attention to experience, when he says William Davenant's "heavy, vulgar, unmeaning face," as a proof Shakespear could not be Shakespear's son.

In the year 1741, a monument was erected to our poet in Westminster Abbey, by the direction of the Earl of Burlington, Dr. Mead, Mr. Pope, and Mr. Martyn. It was the work of Scheemakers, (who received £200 for it,) after a design of Kent, and was opened in January of that year. The performers of each of the parts of the play, engraved the title and reference to each of the poet's works in Westminster Abbey, and made a large present of the ground. The money received by the performance at Drury Lane theatre amounted to above £200, but the receipts at Covent Garden did not exceed £10.

From these imperfect notices, which are all we have been able to collect from the labors of his biographers and commentators, our readers will perceive that less is known of Shakespear than of almost any writer who has been considered as an object of laudable curiosity. Nothing could be more highly gratifying than an account of the early studies of this wonderful man, the progress of his pen, his moral and social qualities, his friendships, his failings, and whatever else constitutes personal history. But on all these topics his contemporaries and his immediate successors have been equally silent, and ifught can be hereafter discovered, it must be by exploring sources which have hitherto escaped the anxious researches of those who have devoted their whole lives, and their most vigorous talents, to retracing the history and illustrating the characters of their predecessors. In the sketch we have given, if the dates of his birth and death be excepted, what is there on which the reader can depend, or for which, if he contemplate it, he may not be involved in controversy, and perplexed with contradictory opinions and authorities?

It is usually said that the life of an author can be little else than a history of his works; but this opinion is liable to many exceptions. If an author, indeed, has passed his days in retirement, his life can afford little more variety than that of any other man who has lived in retirement; but if, as is generally the case with writers of great celebrity, he has acquired a pre-eminence over his contemporaries, if he has excited rival contentions, and defeated the attacks of criticism or of malignity, or if he has plunged into the controversies of his age, and performed the part either of a tyrant or a hero in literature, his history is not a less interesting as that of any other public character. But whatever weight may be allowed to this remark, the decision will not be of much consequence in the case of Shakespear. Unfortunately, we know as little of his writings as of his personal history. The industry of his illustrators for the last thirty years has been such, as probably never was surpassed in the annals of literary investigation; yet so far are we from information of the conclusive or satisfactory kind that even the order in which his plays were written, rests principally on conjecture, and of some plays usually printed among his works, it is not yet determined whether he wrote the whole, or any part.

Much of our ignorance of every thing which it would be desirable to know respecting Shakespear's works, must be imputed to the author himself. If we look merely at the state in which he left his productions, we should be apt to conclude, either that he was insensible of their value, or that, while he was the greatest, he was at the same time the humblest writer the world ever produced—that he thought his works unworthy of posterity—that he leaved no ideal tribute upon future times, nor had any further prospect, than that of present popularity and present profit. And such an opinion, although it apparently partakes of the case and looseness of conjecture, may not be far from probability. But before we are at liberty to decide on this, we must learn the history of his life. He derived his labors, if it may be said, from his profession, which, he was determined to consider their precise nature, and certain circumstances in his situation which affected them; and, above all, we must take into our account the character and predominant occupations of the times in which he lived, and of those which followed his decease.

With respect to himself, it does not appear that he printed any one of his plays, and only eleven of them were printed in his lifetime. The reason assigned for this is, that he wrote them for a particular theather, that it was to them in the theatre that they were produced; his style was poetical, not actor, reserved; the money which he received, not as a manager, and when he disposed of his property in the theatre, they were still preserved in manuscript to prevent their being acted by the rival houses. Copies of some of them appear to have been surreptitiously obtained, and published in a very incorrect state; but we may suppose, that it was wiser in the author or managers to overlook this fraud, than publish a correct edition, and so destroy the exclusive property they enjoyed. It is clear, therefore, that any publication of his plays by himself would have interfered, at first with his own interest, and afterwards with the interest of those to whom he had made over his share in them. But even had this obstacle been removed, we are not sure that he would have gained much by publication. If he had no other copies but those belonging to the theatre, the business of correction for the press must have been a toil which we are afraid the taste of the age did not assume the burden. We know from the best authority, that he was very joyed; it was probably the highest which dramatic genius could confer: but dramatic genius was a new excellence, and not well understood. His claims were probably not heard out of the jurisdiction of the master of the actors, certainly not beyond the metropolis. Yet such was Shakespear's reputation, that we are told his name was put to pieces which he never wrote, and that he felt himself too confident in popular favor to undeceive the public. This was singular resolution. If the actors were not sure that at this day, the test of internal evidence must be applied to his doubtful productions with the greatest caution. But still how far his character would have been elevated by an examination of his plays in the closet, in an age when the refinements of criticism were not understood, and the sympathies of taste were seldom felt, may admit of a question. "His language," says Dr. Johnson, "not being designed for the stage, and published in a state to be if possible improved, has drawn upon it a lasting censure."

Shakespear died in 1616; and seven years afterwards appeared the first edition of his plays, published at the charges of four booksellers,—a circumstance from which Mr. Malone infers, "that no single publisher was at that time willing to risk his money on a complete collection of our author's plays." This edition was printed from the copies in the hands of his fellow-managers, Hening and Condel, which had been in a series of years frequently altered through convenience, caprice, or ignorance.

*Dr. Johnson's Preface.
Hemings and Condell had now retired from the stage; and, we may suppose, were guilty of no injury to their successors, in printing what their own interest only had formerly withheld. Of this, although we have no documents amounting to demonstration, we may be convinced, by adverting to a circumstance, which will, in our days, appear very extraordinary, namely, the decension of Shakspeare's popularity. We have seen that the publication of his works was attended a doubtful speculation; and we are the more disposed to think that public taste was at that time in quest of variety. But for several years after his death the plays of Fletcher were more frequently acted than his, and during the whole of the seventeenth century, they were made to give place to performances, the greater part of which cannot now be endured. During the same period, only four editions of his works were published, all in folio; and perhaps this unwieldy size of volume may be an additional proof that they were not considered as having a ready market. The impressions were numbered in the thousands.

These circumstances which attach to our author and to his works, must be allowed a plausible weight in accounting for our deficiencies in his biography and literary career; but there were circumstances enough in the history of the times to suspend the progress of that more regular drama of which he had set the example, and may be considered as the founder. If we wonder why we know so much less of Shakspeare than, let us recollect, of his modern contemporaries; but we may hastily observe that we have known, or, at least, we now rate it, took a direction which was not calculated for permanent admiration, either in the age in which he lived, or in that which followed. Shakspeare was a writer of plays, a promoter of an amusement just emerging from barbarism; and an amusement which, although it has been classed among the schools of reality, has ever had such a strong tendency to deviate from moral purposes, that the force of law has, in its endeavor to preserve it within the published common decency, been made to suffer. The Church has ever been unfriendly to the stage. A part of the injunctions of Queen Elizabeth is particularly directed against the printing of plays; and, according to an entry in the books of the Stationers' Company, in the forty-first year of her reign, it is ordered, that no plays be printed, except allowed by persons in authority. Dr. Farmer remarks, that in that age, poetry and novels were destroyed publicly by the bishops, and privately by the puritans. Of a canonization of that period, could not admit of much attention to matters of amusement. The Reformation required all the circumspection and policy of a long reign to render it so firmly established in popular favor as to brave the charge of any succeeding sovereign. This was effected, in a great measure, by the diffusion of

In fifty years after his death, Dryden mentions that he was then become "a little obsolete." In the beginning of the last century, the plays of Dryden completed the public library complete, and his quarto quarto phrase and wit." It is certain, that for nearly a hundred years after his death, partly owing to the immediate revolution and rebellion, and partly to the licentious taste encouraged in Charles II's time, and perhaps partly to the incorrect state of his works, he was almost entirely neglected. Mr. Malone has justly remarked, that if he had been read, admired, studied, and imitated, in the same degree as his admirers, the one or other of his admirers in the last age would have induced him to make some inquiries concerning the history of his theatrical career, and the anecdotes of his private life. Mr. Adams, however, if he had admired him in that age, possessed no portion of such enthusiasm. That curiosity, which in our days has raised biography to the rank of an independent study, was scarcely known in the days of King James. If curiosity publicly took rise, it, in addition to the circumstances already stated, we consider how little is known of the personal history of Shakespeare's contemporaries, we may easily resolve the question, why, of all men that have ever claimed admiration by genius, wisdom, or valor, who have eminently contributed to enlarge the taste, promote the happiness, or increase the reputation of their country, we know the least of Shakspeare; and why, of the few particulars which seem entitled to credit, when simply related, and in which there is no manifest violation of probability, or promise of importance, there is scarcely one which has not swelled into a controversy. After a careful examination of all that modern research has discovered, we know not how to trust our curiosity beyond the limits of those barren dates which afford no personal history. The nature of Shakspeare's writings prevents that appeal to internal evidence, which in other cases has thrown light on the character of the writer. The parts of his plays, which are not his own, and of his plays, must be measured against the licentiousness of his language, and the question will then be, how much did he write from conviction, and how much to gratify the taste of his hearers? How much did he add to the age, and how much did he borrow from it? Pope says, "he was obliged to please the lowest of the people, and to keep the worst of company;" and Pope might have said more; for although we hope it was not true, we have no means of proving that it was false.

The only life which has been prefixed to all the editions of Shakspeare of the eighteenth century, is that drawn up by Mr. Rowe, and which he modestly calls, "Some Account," &c. In this we have what Rowe could collect when every legitimate source of information was closed, a few traditions that were floating nearly a century after the author's death. Some inaccuracies in his account have been detected. In the valuable notes of Mr. Steevens and Mr. Malone, of their respective editions, have scattered a few brief notices which we have incorporated in the present sketch. The whole, however, is unsatisfactory. Shakspeare, in his private character, in his friendships, in his amusements, in his closet, in his family, is no where before us; and such was the nature of the writings on which his fame depends, and of that employment in which he was engaged, that being in no important respect connected with the history of his age, he is in vain to look into the latter for any information concerning him.

Mr. Steevens's Advertisement to the Reader, first printed in 1773.
Mr. Malone's Preface to his edition, 1790.
Mr. Capell is of opinion, that he wrote some prose works, because "it can hardly be supposed that he, who had so considerable a share in the confidence of the Earls of Essex and Southampton, could be a taste spectator only of controversies in which they were so much interested." This editor, however, appears to have taken for granted, a degree of confidence with these two statesmen, which he ought first to have proved. Shakespeare might have enjoyed the confidence of their social hours; but it is mere conjecture that they admitted him to the confidence of their state affairs. Mr. Malone, whose opinions are entitled to a higher degree of credit, thinks that his prose compositions, if they should be discovered, would exhibit the same perspicuity, the same ease, the same elegance and vigor, which he finds in his plays. It is unfortunate, however, for all wishes and all conjectures, that not a line of Shakespeare's manuscript is known to exist, and his prose writings are no where hinted at. We have only printed copies of his plays and poems, and so depraved by carelessness or ignorance, that all the labor of all his commentators has not yet been able to restore them to a probable purity. Many of the greatest difficulties attending the perusal of them, yet remain, and will require, what it is scarcely possible to expect, greater sagacity and more happy conjecture than have hitherto been employed.

Of his Poems, it is perhaps necessary, that some notice should be taken, although they have never been favorites with the public, and have seldom been reprinted with his plays. Shortly after his death, Mr. Malone informs us, a very incorrect impression of them was issued out, which in every subsequent edition was implicitly followed, until he published a corrected edition in 1760 with illustrations, &c. But the peremptory decision of Mr. Stevens on the merits of these poems must be our apology for omitting them in the present abridgment of that critic's labors. "We have not reprinted the sonnets, &c., of Shakespeare, because the strongest act of Parliament that could be framed would fail to compel readers into their service. Had Shakespeare produced no other works than these, his name would have reached us with as little celebrity as time has conferred on that of Thomas Watson, an older and much more elegant sonneteer."

The elegant preface of Dr. Johnson gives an account of the attempts made in the early part of the last century to revive the memory and reputation of our poet, by Rowe, Pope, Theobald, Hammer, and Wilkes, whose respective merits he has characterized with candor and with justice. The second edition of his Poems, which was published in 1779, was reprinted with much curiosity, and so many opinions; but Johnson's preface is an accompaniment worthy of the genius it celebrates. His own edition followed in 1785; and a second, in conjunction with Mr. Stevens, in 1793. The third edition of the joint editors appeared in 1789, the fourth in 1799, and the last and most complete, in 1808, in twenty-one volumes octavo. Mr. Malone's edition was published in 1799, in ten volumes, crown octavo, and is now become exceedingly scarce. His original notes and improvements, however, are incorporated in the editions of 1798 and 1803, by Mr. Stevens. Mr. Malone says, that "from the year 1716 to the date of his edition in 1799, that is, in seventy-four years, above 50,000 copies of Shakespeare have been dispersed through England." Among the honors paid to his genius, we ought not to forget the very magnificent edition undertaken by Messrs. Boydell. Still less ought it to be forgotten how much the reputation of Shakespeare was revived by the unrivalled excellence of Garrick's performances. His share in directing the public taste towards the study of Shakespeare was, perhaps, greater than that of any individual in his time, and such was his zeal, and such his success, in this laudable attempt, that he may readily be forgiven the foolish rumour of the Stratford Jubilee.

When public opinion had begun to assign to Shakespeare the very high rank he was destined to hold, he became the promising object of fraud and imposture. This, we have already observed, he did not wholly escape in his own time, and he had the spirit or policy to despise it. It was reserved for modern impostors, however, to avail themselves of the obscurity in which his history is involved. In 1751, a book was published, entitled, "A Compendious or brief examination of certain extraordinary Complaints of divers of our Countrymen in those our days: which, although they are in some Partes unjust and frivolous, yet are they all by way of dialogue thoroughly debated and discussed by William Shakespeare, Gentlemen." This had been originally published in 1751; but Dr. Farmer has clearly proved that W. S., gent., the only authority for attributing it to Shakespeare is the reprinted edition, meant William Stafford, gent. Theobald, the same accurate critic informs us, was desirous of palmimg upon the world a play called "Dobme Falsehood," for a posthumous one of Shakespeare. In 1754, in the "Festival," an old play called "The Tragedy of Arden," was revived, as "an ode to the memory of Shakespeare," which Mr. Stevens has very happily characterized as "the performance of a madman without a just interval," or to enter more at large into the nature of a fraud so recent, and so soon acknowledged by the authors of it. It produced, however, an interesting controversy between Mr. Malone and Mr. George Chalmers, which, although mixed with some unpleasant asperities, was extended to inquiries into the history and antiques of the stage, from which future critics and historians may derive considerable information.1

1 Mr. Malone has given a list of fourteen plays ascribed to Shakespeare, either by the editors of the two later folios, or by the compilers of ancient catalogues. Of these, Reticula has found advocates for its admission into his works.
TEMPEST.

PERSONS REPRESENTED.

ALONSO, King of Naples.
SEBASTIAN, his brother.
PROSPERO, the rightful Duke of Milan.
ANTONIO, his brother, the usurping Duke of Milan.
Ferdinand, son to the King of Naples.
GONZALO, an honest old Counsellor of Naples.
ADRIAN, Francisco, Lords.
CALIBAN, a savage and deformed Slave.
STEFANO, a drunken Butler.
Master of a Ship, Boatswain, and Mariners.

MIRANDA, Daughter to Prospero.

ARIEL, an airy Spirit.
IRIS, CAINS.
JUNO, Nymphs.
OTHER Spirits attending on Prospero.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—On a ship at sea.

A Storm with thunder and lightning.

Enter A Ship-master and a Boatswain.

Master. Boatswain,—

Boats. Here, master; what cheer?

Master. Good. Speak to the mariners: fall to't yarely, or we run ourselves aground; beseech, beseech.

[Exit.]

Enter Mariner.

Boats. Heigh, my hearts; cheerly, cheerly, my hearts; yare, yare: Take in the top-sail; Tend to the master's whistle.—Blow till thou burst thy wind, if room enough!

Enter Alonso, Sebastian, Antonio, Ferdinand, Gonzalo, and others.

Alon. Good boaterman, have care. Where's the master? Play the men.

Boats. I pray now, keep below.

Ant. Where is the master, boatswain?

Boats. Do you not hear him? You mar our labor! keep your cabins: you do assist the storm.

Gon. Nay, good, be patient.

Boats. When the sea is, Hence! What care these roaring for the name of king? To cabins: silence: Trouble us not.

Gon. Good; yet remember whom thou hast aboard.

Boats. None that I more love than myself. You are a counsellor; if you can command these elements to silence, and work the peace of the present, we will not hand a rope more; use your authority; If you cannot, give thanks you have lived so long, and make yourself ready in your cabin for the mischance of the hour, if it so hap—Cheerly, good hearts.—Out of our way, I say.

[Exit.]

Gon. I have great comfort from this fellow; methinks he hath no crowning mark upon him: his complexion is perfect health. Stand fast, good fate to his hanging! make the rope of his destiny our cable, for our own doth little advantage! If he be not born to be hanged, our case is miserable.

[Readily.]

[Exit.]

Re-enter Boatswain.

Boats. Down with the top-mast; yare; lower, lower; bring her to try with main course. [A cry within.] A plague upon this howling! they are louder than the weather, or our office.—

Re-enter Sebastian, Antonio, and Gonzalo.

Yet again! what do you here? shall we give o'er and drown? Have you a mind to sink?

Seb. A pox o' your throat! you bawling, blasphemous, uncharitable dog!

Boats. Work you, then.

Ant. Hang, cur, hang! you whoreson, insolent noise-maker, we are less afraid to be drowned than thou art.

Gon. I'll warrant him from drowning; though the ship were no stronger than a nut-shell, and as leaky as an unstaunched wench.

Boats. Lay her a-hold, a-hold: set her two courses; off to sea again, lay her off.

Enter Mariner, wel.

Mor. All lost! to prayers, to prayers! all lost! [Exit.

Boats. What, must our mouths be cold?

Gon. The king and prince at prayers! let us assist them.

For our case is as theirs.

Seb. I am out of patience.

Ant. We are merey cheated of our lives by drunkards.

This wide-chapped rascal; —Would thou mightest lie drowning

The washing of ten tides!

Gon. He'll be hanged yet.

Though every drop of water swear against it,
And gape at wid'st to glut him.

[Exit.]

[Other Spirits attending.] Mercy on us!—We split, we split! Farewell, my wife and children!—Farewell, brother!—We split, we split, we split. —

Incontinent. Absolutely.
TEMPEST.

Aut. Let's all sink with the king.
Sch. Let's take leave of him.

[Exit.]

Gon. Now would I give a thousand furlongs of soil for an acre of barren ground; long heath, brown furze, and all that springs above he done; but I would fain die a dry death.

[Exit.]

SCENE II.—The island: before the cell of Un prosper. Enter Prospero and Miranda.

Mir. If by your art, my dearest father, you have put the wild waters in this roar, allay them: the sky, it seems, would pour down standing pitch, but that the air, mounting to the weaks' check, dashes the fire out. O, I have suffer'd

With those that I saw suffer! a brave vessel, who had no doubt some noble creatures in her, Dives'd to the bottom; the cry did check

Against my very heart! Poor souls! they perish'd.

Had I been any god of power, I would

Have sunk the sea within the earth, or e'er

Of anything the image tell me, that

Thou hast'd, and yet, which thou saw'st sink.

Sit down; For thou must now know further.

Pro. How so? You have often

Begun to tell me what I am; but stopp'd

And left me to a bootless inquisition;

Concluding, Stay, not yet.—

But, by your leave. The hour's now come; The minute bids thee ope thine ear; Obey, and be attentive. Canst thou remember

A time before we came unto this cell? did not thou canst; for then thou wast not

Out three years old.

Mir. Certainly, sir, I can.

Pro. Why, what? by any other house, or person? Or anything the image tell me, that Hath kept with thy remembrance.

Mir. Tis far off, and rather like a dream than an assurance, That my remembrance warrants: had I not

Four or five women once, that tended me?

Pro. Thou hast, and more, Miranda: but how

That this lives in thy mind? What scents else in

The dark backward and abysm of time?

If thou remember'st anath, ere thou canst'st here, How thou canst't here, thou may'st'st.

Mir. But that I do not. Pro. Twelve years since, Miranda, twelve years since, thy father was

The duke of Milun, in a prince's power. Art, sir, are not thy father?

Pro. Thy mother was a piece of virtue, and she said—thou wast my daughter: and thy father Was duke of Milun; and his only heir

A princess — no worse issued.

Mir. O, the heavens! What foul play had we, that we came from thence! Or blessed wast we did! Both, both, my girl.

By foul play, as thou say'st, were we heaved thence, that blessedly holp bither.

[Quite.]

Mir. O, my heart bleeds To think o' the teen that I have turn'd you to, Which is from my remembrance! Please you further.

Pro. My son, the wise, and thy uncle, call'd Antonio, I pray thee, mark me,—that a brother should Be so peribional!—be whom, next thyself, Of all the world I lov'd, and to him put The manage of my toil; as, at that period, Through all the signiories it was the first, And Prospero the prime duke; being so reputed In dignity, and, for the liberal arts, Without comparison; hence being all my study, The government I cast upon my brother, And to my state grew stranger, being transported And wrap't in secret studies. Thy false uncle— Dost thou attend me?

Mir. Sir, most heedfully.

Pro. Being once perfected how to grant suits, How to deny them; whom to advance, and whom To trade; for over-doping; new created The creatures that were mine; I say, or chang'd them,

Or else new-formed them: having both the key Of officer and office, set all hearts To what tune please'd his ear; that now he was The ivy, which had hid my princely trunk, And shone, how verdate out on't.—Thou attend'st, not:

I pray thee mark me.

Mir. O good sir, I do.

Pro. I thus neglecting worldly, all did dedicate To closeness, and the bettering of my mind

With that, which, but by being so retir'd, O'er-priz'd all popular rate, in my false brother Awak'd an evil nature: and my trust, Like a good parent, did begot of him A falsehood, in its contrary as great As my trust was; which had, indeed, no limit, A confidence sens'd. He being thus herd Not only with what my revenue yielded, But what my power might else exact,—like one Who, having unto truth, by telling of it, Made such a name of his name, that

To credit his own lie,—he did believe He was the duke; out of the substitution, And executing the outward face of royalty, With all prevarication,—hence his ambition Growing,—dost hear?

Mir. O the heavens! A year's tale, sir, would cure deafness Pro. To have no screen between this part he play'd

And him he play'd it for, he needs will be Absolute Milan: Me, poor man!—my library Was done away; of those enough; of temporal royalties He thinks me now incapable: considerates (So dry he was for sway) with the king of Naples, To give him annual tribute, do him homage; Subject all, to whom he, that crown, and head The dukedom, yet unbod' (aas, poor Milan?) To most ignoble stooping.

Mir. O the heavens! Pro. Mark his condition, and the event; then tell me, If this might be a brother.

Mir. I should sin To think but nobly of my grandmother; Good wows have borne bad sons.

Pro. Now the condition. This king of Naples, being an enemy To me inveterate, hearkens my brother's suit; Which was, that he be in lieu o the promises,— Of homage, and I know not how much tribute— Should presently extinguish me and mine; Out of the dukedom, and confer fair Milan, With all the honors, on my brother, Whereas, A treacherous army leaved, one midnight Fled to the purpose; and, as the time, Antonio of the Gates of Milan; and I the dead of darkness, The ministers for the purpose hurri'd thence Me, and thy crying self.

Mir. Alack, for pity! I, not remembering how I cried out then, Will cry it o'er again, it is a hint, That wings mine eyes.

Pro. Hear a little further, And then I'll bring thee to the present business Which now's upon us; without the which, this story Sorrow.

Cut away.
We're most impartial.

_Thou_. Wherefore did they not
That hour destroy us?

_Pro_. Well demanded, wench; My tale provokes that question. Dear, they durst not;

(Whose love my heart so sore bore) nor set A mark so bloody on a bone. nor face With furs fair painted their foul ends. In furs, they hurried us aboard a bark, lone seas to sea; where they prepar'd A deathly carcass of a boat, not rig'd. nor tackle, sail, nor mast; the very rats Instinctively had quit it; there they hoist us, To cry to the sea that roar'd to us; to sigh To have the pity, whose pity, sighing back again, Did us but wrong.

_Miri_. Alack! what trouble

_Was_ I then to you?

_Pro_. Of a cherubim
Thou wast, that did preserve me! Thou didst smile,
Infused with a fortitude from heaven,
When I have decked the sea with drops full salt;
Under my burden ground; which rais'd in me
An undergoing stomach, to bear up
Against what ensue.

_How came we ashore?_

_Pro_. By Providence divine.

_Some food_ we had, and some fresh water, that Artub's, I believe, most marvel, Gonzalo;
Out of his charity (who being then appointed Master of this design) did give us; with rich garments, linens, stuffs, and necessaries, Which since have staid much; so, or his gentle-

_Knowing I love'd my books, he furnished me, From my own library, with volumes that I prize above my life's domin.

_Miri_. Would it might
But ever see that man?

_Pro_. Now I arise:
Sit still, and hear the last of our sea-sorrow. Here in this island we arriv'd; and here Have I, thy schoolmaster, made thee more profit Than other princes can, that have hard use For valiant hours, and tutors not so careful.

_Miri_. Heaven's thanks you for it; and now I pray you, sir,
(For still in beating in my mind,) your reason For raising this storm?

_Pro_. Know thus far forth. —
By accident most strange, bountiful fortune, Nor thou forget'st. This damned witch's sorcery
Brought to this shore: and by my presence
I find my zenith doth depend upon
A most auspicious star; whose influence
If ever I court not, but my fortunes
Will ever after droop; — Here cease more questions,
Thou art inclined to sleep; 'tis a good dulness,
And give it way; — I know thou cannot choose.

[MIRNA SLEEPS.

Came away, servant, come: I am ready now: Approach, my Ariel; come.

_Enter Ariel._

_Ari_. All hail, great master! grave sir, hail! I come To answer thy best pleasure; be't to fly, To swim, to dive into the fire, to ride On the curl'd clouds; to thy strong bidding, Task and all his quality. Hast thou, spirit, Perform'd to point the tempest that I bade thee?

_Ari_. To every article, I boarded the king's ship; now on the deck, Now in the waist, the deck, in every cabin, I flamed amazement: Sometimes I'd divide, And burn in many places; on the top-mast, The yards, and bowsprit, I would flame distinctly, Then meet, and join: Jove's lightnings, the precursors Of the dread thunderbolts, more momentary And sight-outrushing were not: The fire, and cracks Of sulphurous roaring, the most mighty Neptune Seem'd to besiege, and make his bold waves tremble.

*Stubborn resolution. *The minutest article.

_Yea, his dread trident shake.

_Pro_. My brave spirit!

_Who_ was so firm, so constant, that this coil Would not infect his reason?

_Ari_. Not a soul But felt a fever of the mind, and play'd Some tricks of desperation: All, but mariners, There'd in the boiling brine, and quitted the vessel, They all a-dire with me: the king's son, Ferdinand, With hair up-staurne, (then like reeds, not hair,) Was the first man that I'd cried; he's cal'd, Heli, is easily, and all the deities are here.

_Pro_. Why, that's my spirit!

_But was not this high shore?_

_Ari_. Close by, my master.

_Pro_. But are they, Ariel, safe?_

_Ari_. Not a hair perish'd; On their sustaining garments not a blemish, But fresh and gayer than before, and, as thou hast me, In troops I have dispers'd them 'bout the isle: The king's son I have landed by himself;

_Whom I left cooling of the air with sighs, In an old angle of the isle, and sitting,
His arms in this sad knot.

_Pro_. Of the king's ship, The mariners, say, how thou hast dispos'd,
And all the rest of the fleet?

_Ari_. Safely in harbor
Is the king's ship; in the deep nook, where one Thou call'dst set me up at midnight to turn new
From the sea, she'd Bermuthes, there she's hid: The mariners all under hatches stow'd; Whom, with a charm join'd to their suffer'd labor, I have left asleep: and for the rest o' the fleet, Which I dispers'd, they all have met again: And are upon the Mediterranean Noise found sadly home for Naples;

_Supposing that they find the king's ship wreck'd,
And his great person perish.

_Pro_. Ariel, thy charge
Exactly is perform'd; but there's more work:
What is the time o' the day?

_Past the mid season._

_Pro_. At least two glasses: The time 'twixt six and
And now,
Must by this be spent most preciously.

_Ari_. Is there more told! since thou dost give me pain?

_Let me remember thee what thou hast promis'd, Which is not yet perform'd.

_Pro_. How now! moody?

_What is't thou canst demand?_

_Ari_. My liberty;

_Pro_. Before the time be out! no more.

_Ari_. I pray thee Remember, I have done thee worthy service;
'Tild thee no lies, made no mistsakings, used
Without a grudge or grumblings; thou didst promise
To hate me a full year."

_Dost thou forget_

_From what a torment I did free thee?_

_Ari_. No.

_Pro_. Thou dost; and think'st it
If much, to tread the ozone of the salt deep;
To run upon the sharp wind of the north;
To do me business in the veins o' the earth,
When it is bak'd with frost.

_Ari_. I do not.

_Pro_. Thou liest, malignant thing! Hast thou forgot

_The foul witch Syrvarox, who, with age and envy,
Was grown into a hoop! hast thou forget her?_

_Ari_. No, sir.

_Pro_. Thou hast; where was she born?

_Ari_. In Argier."

_Thou know'st, was banish'd; for one thing she did,
They would not take her life: is not this true!_

_Ari_. Ay, sir.

_Pro_. This blue-ey'd har was hither brought with child,
And here was left by the sailors: Thou, my slave,

_Ari_. Bunte, Buntant. 9 Bermuda. 3 Wave. 4 Algiers.
As thou report'st thyself, was then her servant:
And, for thou wast a spirit too delicate
To act her earthly and abhor'd commands,
Relieving her grandest, she did confine thee,
By help of her more potent ministers,
And in her most immovable rage,
Into a cloven pine; within which rift
Imprison'd, thou diest painfully remain
A hundred years; within which space she died,
And left thee there; where thou diest, vent thy groans,
As fast as quarter wheels strike: Then was this island
(Save for the son that she did litter here,
A freckled whelp, hail-born) not honor'd with
A human shape.

Art. Yes; Caliban her son.

Pro. Full thing, I say so; he, that Caliban,
Whom now I keep in service. Thou best know'st
What torment I did thee in: thy groans
Dio name the biggest, and pedantic the breasts
Of ever-angry bears: it was a torment
To lay upon the dam'd, which Sycox
Could not again undo; it was mine art,
When I arriv'd, and heard thee, that made gape
The pine, and let thee out.

Art. I thank thee, master.

Pro. If thou more murmurf st, I will rend an oak,
And pluck thee in his knotty entrails, till
Thou hast howl'd away twelve winters.

Art. pardon, master.

Pro. I will be correspondent to command,
And do my springing gently.

Pro. I will discharge thee.

Art. That's my noble master!

What shall I do? say, what? what shall I do?

Pro. Go make thyself like to a nymph of the sea;
Be subject to no sight but mine; invisible
To every eye-ball else. Go take this shape,
And hinder come in't; hence, with diligence.

[Exit Ariel.

Ariel. Awake, dear heart, awake! thou hast slept well; Awake! Wilt it be the strangeness of thy story put Heaviness in me.

Pro. Shake it off! Come on, we will visit Caliban, my slave, who never yields us kind answers.

Wilt: 'Tis a villain, sir, I do not love to look on.

Pro. But, as 'tis, we cannot miss him: he does make our fire, pitch in our wood; and serves in others That pressure us. What he! slave! Caliban, Thou earth, thou! sneak.

Cal. Within. There's wood enough within.

Pro. Come forth, I say: there's other business.

Come forth, thou tortoise! when?

Re-enter Ariel, like a water-nymph.

Fine apparition! my quaint Ariel,
Hark in thine ear.

Art. My lord, it shall be done. [Exit.]

Pro. Thou poisonous slave, got by the devil himself
Upon thy wicked dam, come forth!

Enter Caliban.

Cal. As wicked dew do e'er my mother brush'd
With raven's feather from unhonorable fen.
Drop on you both! a south-west blow on ye,
And beat both you away, and out, out, out.

Pro. For this, be sure, to-night thou shalt have cramps,
Side-stitches that shall pen thy breath up; arches
Shall, for that vast of night that they may work,
All exercise on thee: thou shalt be pinch'd
As thick as honey-combs, each pinch more stinging
Than bees that made them. This island's mine, by Sycoxus, my mother, Which thou hast tak'st from me. When thou cam'st
Whither, thou strokest me, and mad'st much of me;
Whilst give me Water with berries in 't; and teach me how
To lay the biggest, and pedantic the breasts
That burn by day and night; and then I loved thee, [Commands, and show'd thee all the qualities of the isle.

The fresh springs, brine pits, barren place, and fertile;

Cursed be I that did so; — all the charms

Of Sycoxus, honey, bees, hats, light on you!

For I am all the subjects that you have,
Which first was mine own king; and here you sty me
In this hard rock, whiles you do keep for me
The rest of the island.

Pro. Thou most lyng slave, Whom stripes may move, not kindness! I have us'd
Fithest as thou art, with human care; and lodg'd thee
In mine own cell, till thou did'st seek to violate
The honor of my child.

Cal. Who, ho! ho! — would it had been done!

Thou didst prevent me; I had peoples else
This isle with Calibans.

Pro. Abhorr'd slave;

Which any print of goodness will not take,

Being capable of all ill! I pitied thee,

Took pains to make thee speak, taught thee each hour
One thing or other: when thou didst not, savage,

Know there one meaning, but wouldst gabble like

A thing most brutish, I endow'd thy purposes

With words that made them known: But thy vile

Though thou didst learn, had that in't which good natures

Could not abide to be with; therefore wast thou

Deservedly confind't into this rock,

Who hadst deserv'd more than a prison.

Cal. Thou taught me language; and my profit on't
Is, I know how to ensnare: the red plague rid you,

For learning me your language!

Pro. Hag-seed, hence! Fetch us in fuel: and be quick, thou wilt best,

To answer other business. Shrug'st thou, majestie? If thou neglect st, or dost unwillingly

What I command, I'll rack thee with old cramps;

Fill all thy bowels with aches; make thee roar,

That beast shall tremble at thy din.

Cal. No, 'tis not, pray thee! —

I must obey: his art is of such power

It would control my clam's god, Selenus,

And make a vassal of him.

Pro. So, slave; hence!

[Exit Caliban.

Re-enter Ariel, incredible, playing and singing:

Ferdinand following him.

Ariel's Song.

Come unto these yellow sands
And then take hands:
Court'sisied when you here, and kiss'd,
(The yeld staves whitey,
Free it freely here and there:
And, sweet sprites, the burden bear,
Hark, hark!
Burr, bow-th, wow-th,
[Dispersedly
The watch-bows bark:
Burr, bow-th, wow-th,
Dispersedly.
Hark, hark!
The strata of strutting chantaclers
Cru, cock-a-doodle-do.

Per. Where should this music be? if the air, or the earth?

It sounds no more: — and sure, it waits upon
Some god of the island. Sitting on a bank,
Weeping again the king my father's wretch,
This music crept by me upon the waters:
And slavish, in his fury, and my passion,
With its sweet air: thence I have follow'd it,
Or it hath drawn me rather: — but 'tis gone.
No it begins again.

Ariel sings.

Full fathom five thy father lies:
If his bones are coral made;
Those are pearls, that were his eyes:
Nothing of him that doth fade,
But doth suffer a sea-change
Into something rich and strange.

Sea-nymphs hourly ring his knell:
Hark! now I hear them — ding-dong, bell [Burden.]

Per. The ditty does remember my drown'd
Father:

*Destroy.

*Being stilled, silenced.
ACT II.

SCENE I. — Another part of the Island.

Enter Alonso, Sebastian, Antonio, Gonzalo, Adrian, Francisco, and others.

Gon. Beseech you, sir, be merry; you have cause (So have we all) of joy; for our escape Is much beyond our loss: our hint of woe Is common; no, woe; every day some sailor’s wife, Have just our theme of woe: but for the miracle, I mean our preservation, few in millions Can speak like us: then wisely, good sir, weigh Our sorrow with our comfort.

Mira. There’s nothing ill I can dwell in such a temple:
If the ill spirit have so fair an hause,
Good things will strive to dwell with’t.

Mira. No, as I am a man.

Fer. Follow me. — [To Ferau.]

Ferau. Speak not you for him: he’s a traitor. — Come. I’II muzzle thy neck and feet together;
Sea-water shalt thou drink, thy food shall be
The fresh-brook muscles, wither’d roots, and humus.

Mira. Wherein the acorn cradled: Follow.

Mira. No; I will resist such entertainment, till Mine enemy has more power. — [He draws.

Mira. Beseech you, father!

Mira. Make not too rash a trial of him, for He’s gentle, and not fearful.

Ferau. What, I say,
My foot my tutor! — Put thy sword up, traitor;
Who makst a show, but darst not strike, thy conscience
Is so possessed with guilt: come from thy wand;
For I can here disarm thee with this staff,
And make thy weapon drop.

Mira. Beseech you, father!

Mira. Hence; hang not on my garments.

Mira. Sir, have pity; I’ll be his surety.

Mira. Silence: one word more Shall make me chide thee, if not hate thee. What! An advocate for an impostor! bash! Thou think’st at this are no more such shapes as he, Having seen but him and Caliban: Foolish wench! To the most of men this is a Caliban, And they to him are angels.

Mira. My affections Are then most humble; I have no ambition To see a goodlier man.

Mira. Come on; obey: — [To Feru.

Ferau. Thy nerves are in their infancy again,
And have no vigor in them.

Ferau. So they are:
My spirits, as in a dream, are all bound up.
My father’s loss, the weakness which I feel,
The wreck of all my friends, or this man’s threats,
To whom I am subdu’d, are but light to me,
Might I but through my prison once a day
Behold this maid: all corners else o’ the earth
Let liberty make use of; space enough
Have I in such a prison.

Ferau. It works: — Come on.— Thou hast done well, fine Ariel! — Follow me. — [To Feru. and Mira.

Mira. That is the queen of Naples!

Ferau. Soft, sir, one word more. —

Ferau. They are both in either’s powers; but this swift business
I must uneasy make, lest too light winning [Aside.

Ferau. Make the prize light. — One word more; I charge thee,
That thou attend me: thou dost here usurp
The name thou ow’st not; and hast put thyself
Upon this island, as a spy to win it
From me, the lord on’t.

Fer. No, as I am a man.

From me, the lord on’t.
Seb. You have taken it wiser than I meant you should.

Gon. Therefore, my lord,—

Aur. Vee, what a spendthrift is he of his tongue! —

Seb. I pray you, see her. O then mine heir
Of Naples and of Milan, what strange fish
Hath made his meal on thee!

Sir, he may live:
I saw him beat the surges under him,
And ride upon their backs; he trod the water,
Whose enmity he flung aside, and breasted
The rage of storms that met him; he had bold head
'Love the contemptuous waves he kept, and o'ert
Himself with his good arms in lusty stroke
To the shore, that o'er his wave-worn basis bowed,
As soothing to relieving him; I not doubt,
He came alive to land.

Alon. No, no, he's gone.

Seb. Sir, you may thank yourself for this great
That would not bless our Europe with your daughter,
But rather lose her to an African;
Where she, at least, is balsam'd from your eye,
Who hath cause to weep the grief on't.

Alon. F'rythee, peace.

Seb. You were kneel'd to, and importun'd otherwise
By all of us; and the fair soul herself
Weigh'd, between lothness and obedience, at Which much it was seem'd bow. We have lost your son.

I fear, forever: Milan and Naples have
More widows in them of this business' making,
That to bring men to comfort them: The faith
Your own.

Alon. So is the dearest of the loss.

Gon. My lord Sebastian,
The truth you speak doth lack some gentleness,
And time to speak it in: you rub the sore,
When you should bring the plaster.

Seb. Very well.

Alon. And most chirrurgical.

Gon. It is foul weather in us all, good sir,
When you are cloudy.

Seb. Foul weather!

Alon. Very foul.

Gon. Had a plantation of this isle, my lord,—

Aur. He'd sow it with nettle-seed.

Seb. Or docks, or mallows.

Gon. And were the king of it, what would I do!

Seb. 'Scapes being drunk for want of wine.

Gon. If the commonwealth I would by contraries
Exercise all things for no kind of practice.
Would I admit; no name of magistrate;
Letters should not be known; no use of service,
Of riches or of poverty; no contracts,
Succession; none of land, title, vineyard, none,
No use of metal, corn, or wine, or oil:
No occupation; all men idle, all;
And women, too; but innocent and pure:
No sore grievance: —

Seb. And yet he would be king on't.

Aur. The latter end of his commonwealth forgets the beginning.

Gon. All things in common nature should produce.
Without sweat or endeavor: treason, felony,
Sword, pike, knife, gun, or need of any engine,
Would I not have: but nature should bring forth,
Of its own kind, all fosson't, all abundance,
To feed my innocent people.

Seb. No marriage among his subjects?

Aur. None, man; all idle; whores and knaves,
Gon. I would with such perfection govern, sir,
To excel the golden age.

Seb. 'Save his majesty!

Aur. Long live Gonzalo!

Gon. And, do you mark me, sir? —

Aur. F'rythee, no more: thou dost talk nothing to me.

Gon. I do well believe your highness; and did it to minister occasion to these gentlemen, who are of such sensible and nimble lungs, that they always use to laugh at nothing.

Aur. 'Twas you laugh'd at.

Gon. Who, in this kind of merry fooling, am nothing so; you may continue, and laugh at nothing still.

Plenty.
Scene II. TEMPEST.

Ant. What a blow was there given!

Seb. An it had not fallen flat-long.

Gonz. You are gentlemen of brave metal; you would fill the moon out of her sphere, if she would continue in it five weeks without changing.

Enter Ariel invisible, playing solemn music.

Ant. We would so, and then go a bat-fowling.

Seb. Nay, good my lord, we are not yet

Gonz. No, I warrant you; I will not adventure my discretion so weakly. Will you laugh me asleep, for I am very heavy.

Ant. Go sleep, and hear us.

Ant. What, all so soon asleep! I wish mine eyes

Would, with themselves, shut up my thoughts! I find

They are inclined to do so.

Seb. Please you, sir,

Do not omit the heavy offer of it;

It seldom visits sorrow; when it doth,

It is a comforter.

Ant. We two, my lord,

Will guard your person, while you take your rest,

And watch your safety.

Alov. Thank you; wondrous heavy.

[Alack! sleep. Exit Alov.

Seb. What a strange drowsiness possesses them! Ant. It is the quality of the climate.

Why did it not then our eyelids sink? I find not Myself disposed to sleep; it is strange.

Ant. Nor I; my spirits are nimble.

They fell together all, as by consent;

They drop'd as by a thunder-stroke. What might,

Worthy Sebastian!—0, what might!—No more:

And yet, methinks, I see it in thy face,

What thou shouldst be: the occasion speaks thee;

And my strong imagination sees a crown

Dropping upon thy head.

Ant. What, art thou wak'n?

Seb. Do you not hear me speak?

Ant. I do; and surely, it

Is a sleepy language; and thou speak'st

Out of thy sleep: What is it thou didst say?

This is a strange repose, to be asleep

With eyes wide open; standing, speaking, moving,

And yet so fast asleep.

Ant. Noble Sebastian,

Thou let'st thy fortune sleep—die rather; wink'st

While thou art waking?

Seb. Thou dost snore distinctly;

There's meaning in thy snores.

Ant. I am more serious than my custom: you

Must be so too, if heed me; which to do,

Trebles thee o'er.

Seb. Well; I am standing water.

Ant. I'll teach you how to flow.

Seb. Do so: to ebb,

Hereafter sloth instructs me.

Ant. If you knew how, why do you purpose cherish,

Whiles thou mock'st it! haw, in strapping it,

You more invest it! Ebbing men, indeed,

Most often do so near the bottom run,

By their own fear, or sloth.

Seb. Pr'ythee, say on:

The setting of thine eye, and cheek, preclude

A matter from thee; and a birth, indeed,

Which threes thee much to yield. Thus, sir,

Although this lord of weak remembrance, this,

(Who shall be of as little memory,

When he is earth'd,) hath here almost persuaded

(For he's a spirit of persuasion only)

The king his son's alive; 'tis as impossible

That he's undrown'd, as he that sleeps here swims.

Seb. I have no hope

That he's undrown'd.

Ant. O, out of that no hope.

What great hope have you! no hope, that way, is Another way so high a hope, that even

Ambition cannot pierce a wink beyond,

But doubts discovery there. Will you grant, with me?

That Ferdinand is drown'd?

Seb. He's gone.

Ant. Then, tell me,

Who's the next heir of Naples?

Seb. Claribel.

Ant. She is that queen of Tunis; she that dwells

Ten leagues beyond man's life; she that from

Naples

Can have no note, unless the sun were post,

(The man the moon's too slow) till new-born chins

Be rough and rasonable she, from whom

We were a wary swallow'd, though some cast again;

And, by that, destined to perform an act.

Whereof what's past is poleogue; what to come,

In yours and my discourse.

Ant. What stuff is this?—How say you!

'Tis true, my brother's daughter's queen of Tunis;

So is she heir of Naples; 'twixt which regions

There is some space.

A space whose every cubit

Seems to cry out, How shall that Claribel

Measure us back to Naples?—Keep in Tunis,

And let Sebastian wake!—Say, this were death

That now hath seiz'd them; why, they were no worse

Than now they are: there be, that can rule Naples

As well as he that sleeps; lords, that can prate

As amply, and unnecessarily,

As this Gonzalo! I myself could make

A thought of as deep chat. O, that you here

The mind, that I do! what a sleep were this?

For your advancement! Do you understand me!

Seb. Methinks I do.

Ant. And how does your content

Tender your own good fortune! I remember,

You did supplant your brother Prospero.

Seb. True.

Ant. And, look how well my garments sit upon me;

Much fatter than before: My brother's servants

Were then my fellows, now they are my men.

Seb. But, for your conscience

Ant. Ay, sir, where lies that if it were a kxe

'Twould put me to my slipper; but I feel not

This deity in my bosom: twenty consciences,

That stand twixt me and Milan, careful they be,

To rear our prince: Here lie our brotlers.

No better than the earth the lie bes,

If he were that now he's like: Whom I,

With this obedient steel, three inches of it,

Can lay to bed for ever: whiles you, doing thus,

To the perpetual wink for any might put

This ancient morsel, this sir Erude,

Who should not applaud our course. For all the rest,

They'll take suggestion, as a cat laps milk;

They'll tell the clock to any business that

We say belts the hour.

Seb. Thy case, dear friend,

Shall be my precedent: as thou go'st Milan,

I'll come by Naples. Draw thy sword: one stroke

Shall free thee from the tribute which thou pay'st;

And the king shall love thee.

Ant. Draw together;

And when I rear my hand do you the like,

To fall it on Gonzalo.

Seb. O, but one word!

[They converse apart

Music. Re-enter Ariel invisible.

Ari. My master through his art forces the danger

That these, his friends, are in; and sends me forth,

(For else his project dies,) to keep them living.

[Noses in Gonzalo's ear.

While you here do savoring live,

Open-ear'd confidence,

His tune doth take:

If of life you keep a care,

Shut not thy senses, and beware:

Breke! Breke!—

Ant. Then let us both be sudden.

Gonz. Now, good angels, preserve the king!

[Then wake.

Alov. Why how now, ho! awake! Why are you drawn!

Wherefore this ghastly looking?

Gonz. What's the matter

Seb. While we stood here securing your repos,

Even now, we heard how low burst ofellowing

Like bulls, or rather lions: did it not wake you?

It struck mine ear most terribly.

A bird of the jackdaw kind.
Alon. I heard nothing.

Act. 0. 'twas a day to fright a monster's ear;
To make an earthquake! sure it was the roar
Of a whole herd of horses.

Alon. I heard you this, Gonzalo!

Gon. Upon mine honor, I do save a humming'd noise
That amongst a thousand, which did awake me:
I shak'd you, sir, and cry'd: as mine eyes open'd,
I saw their weapons drawn: — there was a noise,
That lack'd no certainty: there stood upon our guard;
Or that we quit this place: let's draw our weapons.

Alon. Lead of this ground; and let's make further search
For my poor brother.

Gon. Heaven's keep him from these beasts!
For he is, sure, the island.

Alon. Lead away.

Act. Prospero, my lord, shall know what I have done:
So, king, go safely on to seek thy son.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. — Another part of the Island.

Enter Caliban, with a burden of wood.

A noise of thunder heard.

Cal. All the infections that the sun sucks up
From logs, fens, flats, on Prospero fall, and make him
By infection a disease! His spirits hear me,
And yet I needs must curse. But they'll nor pinch,
Fright me with urchin shows, pinch me 'tis the mere,
Nor lead me, like a fire-brand, in the dark
Out of my way: unless I bid them; but
For every trifle are they set upon me:
Sometimes like apes that make and chatter at me,
And after, bite me; then like hedge-hogs, which
I left bare-footed on a mount of their pricks at my foot-fall: sometime am
All wound with adders, who, with cloven tongues,
Do hiss me into madness: — Lo! now! lo!

Enter Trinculo.

Here comes a spirit of his; and to torment me,
For I was bold in school: I fall flat; —
Perchance, he will not unmake me.

Trin. Here's neither bush nor shrub, to hear off
Any weather at all, and another storm brewing; —
I hear it sing! the wind: you'd come black cloud, you'd huge one, looks like a foul bombard that Would shed his liquor. If it should thunder, as it Did before, I know not where to hide my head:
you'd come cloud cannot choose but fall by painfuls,
What have we here! a man or a fish? dead or alive? —
A fish: he smells like a fish: a very ancient and Fishlike smell; — and kind of, of the newest, poor John, a strange fish! Were I in England now, (as Once I was,) and had but this fish painted, not
A holiday-fair there but would give a piece of silver; there
Monsieur makes a curious any strange
Beast there makes a man: when they will not give
A dot to relieve a lame beggar, they will buy out ten to see a dead Indian. — Leez'd a man! and His lines like arms? Warm, o' my truth! I do now
Let loose my opinion, hold it no longer: this is no
Fish, but an islander, that hath lately suffer'd by a Thunder-bolt. [Thunder.] Also! the storm is coming amain: my best way is to creep under his barberdines: there is no other shelter hereabout: Misery acquaints a man with strange bedfellows. I will hire shroud, till the dregs of the storm be past.

Enter Stephano, singing; a bottle in his hand.

Ste. I shall no more in sea, in sea,
Gone 'tis suffered for me now.

[Drinks.

This is a very curious tune to sing at a man's funeral:
Well, here's my comfort.

TH. murder, the swabber, the bedswab, and I,
Shall be sworn: — we'll be sworn.

Leed'Mall, Meg, and Marin, and Margery,
But none of us cared for Kate: —
For she had a tongue with a limb,
Taught ev'ry to a sailor, to bow.
She bore not the swear of tar or of pitch,
Yet a latter might scratch her where'er she did
Then to sea, boys, and let her go hang.

[Drinks.

Then to sea, boys, and let her go hang.

* Make soups. A black jack of leather to hold beer.
* The flook of a peasant.

Ste. This is a very curious tune: but here's my comfort.

Cal. Do not torment me: oh!

Ste. What's the matter? have we devils here?
Do you put tracks upon us with savages, and men of

Ste. This is some monster of the isle with four legs; who hath got, as I take it, an auge: Where there, as I believe, he shall learn our language: I will give him some relief, if it be for that: If I can recover him, and keep him tame, and get to Naples with him, he's a present for any emperor that ever made an honest leather.

Cal. Do not torment me, pr'ythee;
I'll bring my wood home faster.

Ste. He's in his fit now; and does not talk after the wisest. He shall taste of my bottle: if he have never drunk wine afore, it will go near to remove his fit: I'll recover him, and keep him tame, I will not take too much for him: he shall pay for him that hath him, and that soundly.

Cal. Thou dost me yet but little hurt; thou wilt
Anon, I know it by thy trembling:

Ste. How's your hand upon thee.

Ste. Come on your ways: open your mouth;
Here is that which will give language to you, cat;
open your mouth: this will shake your shakings, I can't pronounce, and that soundly: which I cannot tell who's your friend: open your chaps apace.

Trin. I should know that voice: it should be —
But he is drowned; and these are devils: O! do enter.

Ste. Four legs, and two voices; a most delicate monster! His forward voice now is to speak of his friend; his backward voice is to utter foul speeches and detraction: If all the wine in my bottle will recover him, I will help his auge: Come,
Amen! I will pour some in thy other mouth.

Ste. Enter the three.

Ste. Both thy other mouth call me! Mercy! mercy!
This is a devil, and no monster! I will leave him; I have no long spoon.

Ste. Stephano! — if thou beest Stephano, touch me, and speak to me; for I am Trinculo: — be not afraid, — thy good friend Trinculo.

Ste. If thou beest Trinculo, come forth; I'll pull thee by the lesser legs: if any be Trinculo's legs, these are they. Thou art very Trinculo, indeed, How can'st thou be the siege of this moon-calf?
Can he went Trinculos? —

Ste. Stephano! — Gilgumis shall be killed with a thunderstroke; — but art thou not drowned, Stephano? I hope thou art not drowned. Is the storm overblown? I hid me under the dead moon-calf's cacque for fear of the storm and the living, Stephano! O Stephano, two Neapolitans escape'd!

Ste. 'Tis my brother, turn not me about, my stomach is not constant.

Cal. These be fine things, an if they be not sprites.

That's a brave god, and bears celestial liquor:
I will kuee him to it.

Ste. How didst thou 'scape? how can'st thou hither? swear by this bottle, how can'st thou hither? I came in a cloud, a cloud, on a cloud of sack, which the sailors heaved overboard, by this bottle! which I made of the bark of a tree, with mine own hands; since
I was cast ashore.

Cal. I'll swear, upon that bottle, to be thy True subject; for the liquor is not earthly.

Ste. Here; swear then how thou escap'st.

Ste. Stephano, this straw, man, like a duck; I could never live, I'll be sworn.

Ste. Here, kiss the book: Though thou canst swim like a duck, thou art made like a reese.

Ste. The whole butt, man; my cark is in a rock by the sea-side, where my wine is hid. How now, moon-calf? how does thine age now?

Ste. I hope thou not dropped from heaven?

Ste. Out of the moon, I do assure thee; I was the man in the moon, when time was.
Act III. Scene 1.

Enter Ferdinand, bearing a log.

Ferd. There be some sports are painful; but their labor
Delight in them sets off; some kinds of baseness
Are nobly undergone; and most poor matters
Fondly their ends. This my mean task would be
As heavy to me, as 'tis odious; but
The mistress, which I serve, quickens what's dead,
And makes my labors pleasures: 0, she is
Ten times more gentle than her father's crabbed;
And he's composed of harshness. I must remove
Some thousands of these logs, and pile them up,
Upon a sore injunction: My sweet mistress
Wears when she sees me work; and says, such baseness
Had never like executor. I forget:
But these sweet thoughts do even refresh my labors;
Most busy-less, when I do it.

Enter Miranda; and Prospero at a distance.

Mir. Alas, now! pray you work not so hard; I would the lightning had Burnt up those logs, that you are enjoined to pile! pray set them down, and rest you: when this burns,
Twice I cudgeled for having wearied you: my father
Is hard at study; pray now rest yourself;
He's safe for these three hours.

Ferd. 0 most dear mistress,
The sun will set, before I shall discharge
What I must strive to do.

Mir. If you'll sit down,
I'll bear your logs the while: Pray, give me that;
I'll carry it to the pile.

Ferd. No, precious creature;
I had rather crack my sinews, break my back,
Than be enjoined such dishonour undergo,
While I sit lazy by.

Mir. It would become me
As well as it does you; and I should do it
With much more ease; for my good will is to it,
And yours against.

Pros. Poor worm! thou art infected;
This visitation shows it.

Mir. So too; you look weary.

Ferd. No, noble mistress; 'tis fresh morning with me,
When you are at night. I do beseech you,
(Cheerfully, that I might set it in my prayers,
What is your name?

Trin. A most ridiculous monster! to make a wonder of a poor drunkard.

Mir. I pr'ythee, let me bring thee where crabs grow!
And I with my long nails will clize thee pigs-net.
Show thee a jay's nest, and instruct thee how
To snare theumble marmozet; I'll bring thee
To cluse ring fiblers, and sometimes I'll get thee Young sea-nets; from the rock; Wilt thou go with me?

Pros. I pr'ythee now lead the way, without any more talking. — Trinculo, the king and all our company else being drowned, we will inherit here. —
Here; bear my bottle. Fellow Trinculo, we'll fill him by and by again.

Ferd. Farewell, master; farewell, farewell.

[Scenes drunkenly.

Trin. A howling monster; a drunken monster.

Pros. No more damn I'll make for fish!
Nor fright in firing
Of requiring, nor scrape trenching, nor wash dish.

Has a new master — Get a new man.

Freedom, hey-day! hey-day, freedom! freedom, hey-day, freedom!

Pros. O brave monster! I lead the way.

[Exit.

Act III.
Mira. At mine unworthiness, that dare not
Of what I desire to give; and much less take,
What I shall die to want: but this is tripping;
And all the more it seeks to hide itself,
The bigger bulk it shows. Hence, base, cunningful
And most unmanly fear, and holy innocence.
I am thy wife, if you will marry me;
If not, I'll die your maid: to be your fellow
You may deny me: but I'll be your servant,
Whether you will or no.

Fer. My mistress, dearest,
And I thus humble ever.
Mira. My husband then?
Fer. Ay, with a heart as willing
As bondage e'er of freedom: here's my hand.
Mira. And mine, with my heart in't: And now
Till half an hour hence.

Pro. So glad of this as they, I cannot be,
Who are surprised with all: but my rejoicing
At nothing can be more. I'll to my book;
For yet ere supper-time, must I perform
Much labor appertaining. [Exit.

SCENE II. — Another part of the Island.

Enter Stephano and Trinculo; Caliban following with a bottle.

Ste. Tell me not: — when the butt is out, we
Will drink water; not a drop before: therefore bear up
And board 'em: Servant-monster, drink to me.

Tri. Servant-monster! the folly of this island!
They say, there's but five upon this isle; we are Three of them; if the other two be brained like us,
The state totters.

Ste. Drink, servant monster, when I bid thee;
your eyes are almost set in thy head.

Tri. Where should they be set else? he was a brave monster indeed, if they were set in his tail.
Ste. My man-monster hath drowned his tongue in sack: for my part, the sea cannot drown me: I swen, ere I could recover the shore, five-and-thirty leagues, off and on, by this light. — Thou shalt be my lieutenant, monster, or my standard.

Tri. Your lieutenant, if you list; he's no standard.

Ste. Will not run, monsieur monster.

Tri. Nor go neither: but you'll lie, like dogs;
and yet say nothing neither.

Ste. Moon-cal, speak once in thy life, if thou hast a good moon-cal.

Col. How doth thy honor? Let me lick thy shoe:
I'll not serve him, — he's not valiant.

Tri. Thou liest, most ignorant monster: I am in my right mind: a constable! Why, thou desehest fish thou, was there ever a man a coward, that hath drunk so much sack as I today? Will thou tell a monstrous lie, being but half a fish, and half a monster!

Col. Lo, how he mocks me! wilt thou let him, my lord?

Tri. Lord, quoth he! — that a monster should be such a natural!

Col. Lo, lo, again! bite him to death, I pr'ythee.

Ste. Trinculo, keep a good tongue in your head;
if you prove a mutineer, the next tree—The very monster's my subject, and he shall not suffer indifferently.

Col. Thank my noble lord. Will thou be pleased
To hear me once again the suit I made thee?

Tri. Marry wilt I; kneel, and repeat it; I will stand, and so shall Trinculo.

Enter Ariel, invisible.

Col. As I told thee
Before, I am subject to a tyrant;
A soarer, that by his cunning hath Chid me of this island. Thou hast.

Ari. Thou liest, thou jesting monster, thou;
I thought thy valiant master would destroy thee: I do not lie.

Ste. Trinculo, if you trouble him any more in his talk, by this hand, I will supplant some of your teeth.

*Debouched.

Tri. Why, I said nothing.

Ste. Mum then, and no more. — [To Caliban] Proceed.

Cal. I say, by sorcery he got this isle;
From me he got it. If thy greatness will Revenge it on him — for, I know, thou dar'st
But thou dost not, I say, and most provest him.

Ste. That's most certain.

Tri. Thou shalt be lord of it, and I'll serve thee.

Ste. How now shall this be compassed? Canst thou bring me to the party?

Tri. Yea, yea, my lord: I'll yield him thee asleep,
Whether thou may'st knock a nail into his head.

Ari. Thou liest, thou canst not.

Cal. What a pitiful nay'st this? Thou scurvy patch!
I do beseech thy greatness, give him blows,
And take some bottle from him: when that's gone,
He shall drink nought but brine; for I'll not show

Tri. Where the quick freshest are.

Ste. Trinculo, run into no further danger: interrupt the monster one word further, and, by this hand, I'll turn my mercy out of doors, and make a stock-fish of thee.

Tri. What, what did I? I did nothing; I'll go further off.

Ste. Didst thou not say, he lied?

Ari. Thou liest.

Tri. Do, take thou that. [Strikes him.] As you like this, give me the like another time.

Tri. I did not give the he: — out o' thy wits, and hearing too! — A pox o' thy bottle! this can suck and drinking do. — A murrain on your monster, and the devil take your fingers!

Ste. Ha, ha, ha!

Ari. Now, forward with your tale. Pr'ythee! shal

Cal. Beat him enough: after a little time,
I'll beat him too.

Ste. Stand farther. — Come, proceed.

Cal. Why, as I told thee, 'tis a custom with him the afternoon to sleep: there thou may'st brain him.

Ari. Having seen se'ed his books; or with a log Batter his skull, or paunch him with a stake, or cut his wazards with thy knife: Remember,
First to possess his books; for without them
He's but a set, as I am, nor hath not
One spirit to command: They all do hate him,
As rootedly as I; [Burn his books;]
He has brave utensils, (for so he calls them.)
When he has a house, he'll deck within.
And that most deeply to consider, is
The beauty of his daughter; he himself
Calls her a nonpareil: I ne'er saw woman,
But only Sycorax my dam and she;
But she as far surpasseth Sycorax,
As greatest does least.

Ste. Is it so brave a lass?

Ari. Ay, my lord: she will become thy lady, warrant.
And bring thee forth brave brood.

Ste. Monster, I will kill this man: his daughter and I will be king and queen: (save our grace!) and Trinculo and thyself shall be viceroys: — Dost thou like the plot, Trinculo?

Tri. Excellent.

Ste. Give me thy hand: I am sorry I beat thee;
but while thou livest, keep a good tongue in thy head.

Cal. Within this half hour will he be asleep.
Wilt thou destroy him then?

Ste. Ay, on mine honor.

Ari. This will I tell my master.

Cal. Thou mak'st me merry: I am full of pleasure:
Let us be jocund: Will you toll the catch
You taught me but while ere?

Ste. And by request, monster, I will do reason, any reason: Come on, Trinculo, let us sing. [Sings
Flout 'em, and shant 'em, and shant 'em, and shant 'em:
Thought be free.]

Cal. That's not the tune.

[Ariel plays the tune on a lutor and pipe.

*Alluding to Trinculo's party-colored dress.
Springs. The Coat.
Scene III.

Tempest.

Set. What is this same?

Friar. This is the tune of our catch, played by the picture of No-body.

Set. If thou beest a man, show thyself in thy likeness if you beest a devil, tak't as thou hast.

Friar. 0, forgive me my sins!

Set. He that dies, pays all debts: I devise thee:—

Mercy upon us!

Curtain. Thou afraid?

Set. No, master, not I.

Curt. Be not afraid; the isle is full of noises, Sounds and sweet airs, that give delight and hurt not.

Sometimes a thousand twangling instruments Will hum about mine ears; and sometimes voices, That, if I then had wak'd after long sleep, Will make me sleep again; and then, in dreaming, The clouds methought would open, and show riches Ready to drop upon me; that, when I wake'd, I cried to dream again.

This will prove a brave kingdom to me, where I shall have my music for nothing.

Curt. When Prospero is destroyed.

Set. That shall be by and by: I remember the staff.

Friar. The sound is going away: let's follow it, and after, do our work.

Set. Lead, monster; we'll follow. — I would I could sec the sorcerer: he lays it on.

Friar. Wilt come? I'll follow, Stephano. [Exit.]

Scene III. — Another part of the Island.

Enter Alonso, Sebastian, Antonio, Gonzalo, Adrian, Francisco, and others.

Gon. By'r lakin', I can go no further, sir; My old bones ache: here's a maze trod, indeed, Through forthright and, meanders! by your patience, I needs must rest me.

Alon. (Old lord, I cannot blame thee, Who am myself attach'd with weakness, To the doing of my spirits: sit down, and rest. Even here I will not leave my hope, and keep It no longer for my flatterer: he is drown'd, Whom we thus stray to find; and the sea mocks Our fruitless search on this land: well, let him go.

Ant. I am right glad that he's so out of hope. [Aside to Sebastian.

Set. Do not, for one repulse, forgo the purpose That you resolve'd to effect.

Alon. The next advantage Will we take thoroughly.

Set. Let it be to-night.

Friar. For now they are oppress'd with travel, They will not, nor cannot, use such vigilance, As when they are fresh.

Seb. I say, to-night: no more.

Solemn and strange music: and Prospero stirs.

Enter several strange shapes, breathing in a haggard; they dance abroad if with gentle actions of saturation: and, inviting the King, &c. to eat, they depart.

Alon. What harmony is this? my good friends, hard!

Gon. Marvelous sweet music?

Alon. Give us kind keepers, heavens! What were these?

Set. A living drodery. — Now I will believe, That those are unicorns: that in Arabia There is one tree, the phrenix throne; one phrenix At this hour reigning there.

Alon. I'll believe both;

And what does else want credit, come to me,

And I'll be sworn 'tis true: Travellers ne'er did lie, Though fools at home condemn them.

Gon. If in Naples I should report this now, would they believe me? If I should say I saw such islands, (For, certes, these are people of the Island,) Who, though they are of monstrous sizes, yet, note, Their manners are more gentle-kind, than of Our human generation you shall find Many, may, almost any.

Friar. Honest lord,

Thou hast said well: for some of you there present Are worse than devils. [Aside.

Alon. I cannot too much muse. Such shapes, such gestures, and such sound, expressing (Although they want the use of tongue) a kind Of excellent dumb discourse.

Pro. Praise in departing.

Friar. They vanish'd strangely.

Seb. No matter, since They have left their viands behind; for we have stomachs —

Will't please you taste of what is here!

Alon. Not I.

Friar. Good, sir; you need not fear: When we were boys,

Who would believe that there were mountaineers, Dew-lapped and brow'd bulls, whose threats and hangings at the wall,

Wallets of flesh! or that there were such men, Whose heads stood in their breasts? which now we find,

Each puffer-out on five for one, will bring us Good warrant of.

Alon. I will stand to, and feed, Although my last: no matter, since I feel The best is past: — brother, my lord the duke, Stand to, and do as we.

Thunder and lightning. Enter Ariel like a harpy; claps his wings upon the table, and, with a quaint dexterity, the banquet disperses.

Ari. You are three men of sin, whom destiny (That hath to instrument this lower world, And what is in't, the never-surfeited sea) Hath caused to bech up; and on this island Where man doth not inhabit; you monstrous men Being most unfit to live. I have made you mad: [Seeing Alon., Seb., &c. draw their swords.

And even with such like valor, men bang and draw.

Their proper selves. You fools! and I and my fellows Are ministers of fate; the elements Of whom your swords are temper'd, may as well Wound the thinking winds, and with such a staff. Kill the still-closing waters, as diminish One dowel that's in my plume; my fellow-ministers Are like invulnerable: if you could hurt, Your swords are now too nasey for your strengths,

And will not be uplifted: But remember, (For that's my business to you,) that you three

From Milan did supplant good Prospero; Expos'd his innocent son, to whom I gave,

His, and his innocent child; for which foul deed The powers, delaying, not forgetting, have Incens'd the seas and shores, yea, all the creatures, Against your peace: This is a berth! of the son, Alonso, They have bereft! and do pronounce by me, Linzering perfidy (worser than any death Can be at once; shall step by step attend You, and all your ways; whose wrath to guard you from (Which here, in this most desolate isle, else falls Upon your brows, is nothing, but heart's sorrow, And a clear peace ensuing.

He vanishes in thunder: then, to soft music, enter the Shapes again, and dance with maps and moves, and carry out the table.

Pro. [Aside, Bravely the figure of this harpy hast thou

Performed! — Ariel! a grace it bad, devouing: Of my instruction hast thou nothing 'bated, In what thou hast to say: so, with good life, And observation strange, my master ministers Their several kinds have done my high charms work;

And these, mine enemies, are all knit up In their distractions: they now are in my power; And in these ways I leave them. While I visit Young Ferdinand, (whom they suppose is drown'd,) And his and my lord's darling.

Alon. I the name of something holy, sir, why stand you

In this strange state?

Aron. O, it is monstrous! monstrous! Methought the billows spoke, and told me of it; The winds did sing it to me; and the thunder, Down.

Set. Pure, blameless.
SCENE I.—Before Prospero's Cell.

Enter Prospero, Ferdinand, and Miranda.

Pro. If I have too earnestly punished you, Your compensation makes amends; for I Have given you here a thread of mine own life, Or that for which I live; whom once again I tender to thy hand; all thy vexations Were but my trials of thy love, and thou Hast strongly stood the test: here, afore heaven, I study this my rich gift. O Ferdinand, Do not smile at me, that I boast her off, For thou shalt find she will outstrip all praise, And make it hard behind her. I do believe it, Against an oracle.

Pro. Then, as my gift, and thine own acquisition Worth a great country, for my daughter. But If thou dost break her virgin knot before All sanctimonious ceremonies may With fault and holy rites be minister'd, No sweet aspersions shall the heavens let fall To make this contract grow; but barren hate, Sour-cvd disdain, and discord, shall bestrew The nuptial of your bed, with woods so heartily, That you shall hate it both: therefore, take heed, As Hymen's lamps shall light you.

Pro. As I hope for quiet days, fair issue, and long life, With such love as 'tis now; the markest den. The most opportune place, the strongest suggestion Our worser Genius can, shall never melt Mine honor into lust; to take away The edge of that day's celebration, When I shall think, or Phœbus' steeds are bound.[Or night kept chair'd below.

Pro. Fairly spoke: sit then, and talk with her, she is thine own. What, Ariel; my industrious servant Ariel!

Enter Ariel.

Ari. What would my potent master? here I am.

Pro. Thou and thy ne'er contented fellow your last service Did worthy perform; and I must use you In such another trick: go, bring the riddle, Of whom I give thee power, here to this place: Insist them to quick notion; for I must Besow upon the eyes of this young couple Some vanity of mine art: it is my promise, And they expect it from me.

Ari. Presently!

Pro. Ay, with a twinkle.

Ari. Before you can say, come, and go, And breathe twice; and cry, so, so.

Each one tripping on his toe,

Will be here with mop and mopew;

Do you love me, master! no.

Pro. Descry, my delicate Ariel: do not approach, Till thou dost hear me call.

Ari. Well I conceive. [Exit.

Pro. Look, thou be true; do not give dalliance Too much the vein; the strong'st winds are straw To the fire; the blood: be more abstemious, Or else, good night, your vow!

Pro. I warrant you, sir;

The white-cold virgin snow upon my heart Abates the ardor of my liver.

sprinkling.

Gon. All three of them are desperate; their great guilt Like poison given to work a great time after, Now gins to bite the spirits: I do beseech you That are of supper joints, follow them swiftly, And hinder them from what this ecstasy May now provoke them to.

Ade. Follow, I pray you. [Exeunt.
Cer. Earth's increase, and fowings plenty;
Barns, and garners never empty;
Vines with clustering bunches growing;
Plants, with golden budding leaves.
Spring come to you, at the lastest,
In the very end of harvest!
Scarcely and want shall you see;
Till you drink the cup of joy.

Per. This is a most majestic vision,
And harmonious charming; May I be bold
To think these spirits?
Pro. Spirits, which by mine art
I have from their confines called to exact
My present fancies.
Per. Let me live here ever:
So rare a wonder!
Ceres and Prospero, and a wife,
Make this place paradise.

[Junio and Ceres whisper, and send Juno on employment.]

Pro. Sweet now, silence:
Junio and Ceres whisper seriously;
There's something else to do: bush, and be mute,
Or else I'll leave the mask.
Iris. You nymphs, call'd Naiaus, of the wand'ring brooks,
With their slack'd crowns, and ever harmless looks,
Leave your crisp channels, and on this green land
Answer your summons; Juno does command:
Come, temperate nymphs, and help to celebrate
A contract of true love; be not too late.

Enter certain Nymphs.

You sunburn'd sicklemen, of August weary,
Come hither from the furrow to and be merry;
Make holy-day: your eye-straw hats put on,
And these fresh nymphs encounter every one
In country footing.

Enter certain Reapers, properly habited: they join to the Nymphs in graceful dance;
Toward the end whereof Prospero starts suddenly and speaks; after which, to a strange, hollow, and Confused noifer, they heavily mount.
Pro. [Aside.] I had forgot that foul conspiracy
Of the beast Caliban, and his confederates,
Against my life; the minute of their plot
Is almost come. — [To the Spirits.] Well done;
avoid; no more.
Per. This is most strange: your father's in some Passion that works him strongly.
Mist and sleight, er'd child, do never till this day,
Saw I him touch'd with anger so dis tempered.
Pro. You do look, my son, in a mov'd sort,
As if you were dismay'd: be cheerful, sir:
Our roads of renown are ended: these our actors,
As I for told you, were all sport, and
Are melted into air, into thin air;
And, like the fleshy fabric of this vision,
The cloud-capp'd towers, the gnomical palaces,
The solemn temples, the great globe itself,
Yea, all that it inheret, shall dissolve;
And, like this insubstantial pageant faded,
Leave not a rack behind: We are such stuff
As dreams are made on, and our little life
Is round'd with sleep. — Sir, I am vex'd:
Bear with my weakness: my old brain is troubled.
Be not disturb'd: I take my infirmity:
If you be pleas'd, retire into my cell,
And there repose: a turn or two I'll walk,
To still my beating mind.

Per. Mira. We wish you peace.
[Exeunt.
Pro. Come with a thought: — I thank you:
[Aside.] Alcmeone.

Enter Ariel.

Ari. Thy thoughts I cleave to; What's thy pleasure?

Pro. Spirit,
We must prepare to meet with Caliban.
Ari. Ay, my commandeur: when I presented
Trinculo, I thought to have told thee of it; but I fear'd,
Lest I might anger thee.
Pro. Say again, where didst thou leave these

*Abundance.

Ari. I told you, sir, they were red hot with drinking:

So full of valor, that they smote the air
For breathing in the labour; beat the ground
For kissing of their feet; yet always bending
Toward their project: Then I beat my tabor,
At which, like uncleak'd cobs, they prick'd their ears,
Alvare's'd their bless'd lids,brand'd up their noses.
As they smelt music; so I charm'd their ear,
That, call-like, they my bowling follow'd, through Tooth'd briars, sharp furze, prickig goss, and their nose. Which enter'd their frail shins; at last I left them
I' the filthy mantled pool beyond your cell.
There dashing up to the chin, that the fool lake
O'erstuck their feet.

Pro. This was well done, my bird.
Thy shape invisible retain thou still:
The triumph in my house, do bring it hither,
For sake to catch these thieves.
Ari. I go, I go. [Exit.

Pro. A devil, a born devil, on whose nature
Nurture can never stick; on whom my pains,
Humane taken, all, all lost, quite lost;
And as, with age, his body ushers grows,
So his mind eanksers: I will plague them all,
Re-enter Ariel, laden with glistening apparel,
&c.

Even to roaring: — Come, hang them on this line.
Prospero and Ariel remain invisible. Enter Caliban, Trinculo, and Stephano, all wea.

Cal. Pray you, tread softly, that the blind mole
May not
Hear a foot fall; we now are near his cell.
Ste. Monster, your fairy, which, you say, is
A harmless fairy, has done little better than play'd
The pranks with us.
Trin. Monster, I do smell all horse-piss, at which your fancy's grow, and all your end, Ste. So is mine. Do you hear, monster? If I should take a displeasure against you; look you, —
Trin. Thou went but a lost monster.
Cal. Gasps, to my lord, give me you still Shall hood-wink this mischance: therefore, speak softly.
All's business as midnight yet.

Trin. Ay, but to lose our bottles in the pool, —
Ste. There's not only disgrace and dishonor in that, but an infinite loss.

Trin. But this is none to me more than my wetting: yet this is your harmless fairy, monster.
Ste. I will fetch off my bottle, though I be o'er care for my labor.
Cal. Pray, let my king, be quiet; Swest thou here,
This is the mouth of the cell: no noise, and enter:
Do that good mischief, which may make this island
Thine own for ever, and I, thy Caliban,
For thee, to his father.
Ste. Give me thy hand: I do begin to have bloody thoughts.

Trin. O king Stephano! O peer! O worthy Stephano! Look, what a wharf's here is for thee!
Cal. Let it alone, thou fool; it is but trash.

Trin. O, ho, monster; we know what belongs to A slippery loggerhead, Stephano!

Ste. Pit of hell, I own it, Trinculo; by this hand,
I'll have that gown.

Trin. Thy grace shall have it.
Cal. The dropsy drown this fool! what do you mean.
To doat thus on such luggage! Let's along
And do the murder first: it is awake,
From toe to crown he'll fill all our skins with pinches;
Make us strange stuff.
Ste. Be you quiet, monster. — Misstress line,
This is not my jerkin. Now is the jerkin under the line: now, jerkin, you are like to lose your hair,
And prove a bauld jerkin.

Trin. O, do: we steal by line and level, a'th' like your grace.

Ste. I know the line for that set: here's a garment for it: we shall not go unwarded, whiles I am king c of this country: skant line evel bet' st, is an excellent pass of pace; there's another garment of for.

Bait.

Education.

Jack with a lantern.

* A shop for sale of old clothes.
Act V.

SCENE I. — Before the Cell of Prospero.

Enter Prospero in his magic robes, and Ariel.

Pros. Now does my project gather to a head:
My charms crack not; my spirits obey; and time
Goes upright with his carriage. How's the day?

Ari. On the sixth hour; at which time, my lord,
You said our work should cease.

Pros. When first I raised the tempest. Say, my spirit,
How fares the king and his

Ari. Confid'nt together
In the same fashion as you gave in charge;
Just as you left them, sir; all prisoners
In the lime-grove which weather-fends your cell;
They cannot budge, till you release. The king,
His brother, and yours, abide all three distracted;
And the remainder mourning over them,
Have not one care to keep them, or else
To fight for the rest of them. Hence, sir,
Him you term'd, sir. The good old lord, Gonzalo;
His tears run down his beard, like winter's drops
From eaves of reeds; your charm so strongly works upon
That if you now beheld them, your affections
Would become tender.

Ari. Dost thou think so, sir? I prithee
Pros. And mine shall.

Hast thou, what art but air, a touch, a feeling
Of their afflictions? and I shall not myself,
Our charm to re-shield, that rest all as sharply
Passion as they, be kindler mov'd than thou art?
Though with their high wrongs I am struck to the Quick.
Yet, with my nobler reason, 'gainst my fury
Do I take part: the rarer action
Is in virtue when in vengeance: they being penitent,
The sole drift of my purpose doth extend
Not a brow further: Go, release them, Ariel;
My charms I'll break, their senses I'll restore,
And they shall be themselves.

Ari. I'll fetch them, sir. [Exit.]

Pros. Ye elves of hills, brooks, standing lakes, and groves;
And ye, that on the sands with printless foot
Do chase the ebbing Neptune, and do fly him,
When he comes back; ye demi-puppets, that
By moon-shine do the green-sour midnight's sleep make,
Whereof the eaves no notities; and you, whose pastime
Is to make midnight-mushrooms; that rejoice
To hear the solemn curfew: by whose aid
(Weak masters though you be) I have been divin'd
The timbrel's jingling, and the images of winds,
And twixt the green sea and the azur'd vault
Set roaring war: to the dread rattling thunder
Have I given fire, and rifted Jove's oak hall
With his own heel: the strong-bosomed promontory
Have I made shake; and by the spurs phuck'd up
The pine, and cedar: graves, at my command,
Have I made shake, processions going on: and Left them forth
By my so potent art: But this rough magic
I here abjure: and, when I have requir'd
Some heavenly music, (which even now I do,)

Birds:

To work mine end upon their senses, that
This airy charm is for, I'll break my staff,
Fury it certain lethems in the earth,
And deeper than did ever plummet sound,
I'll drown my book. [Solemn Music.]

Reciter Ariel: after him Alonso, with a frantic gesture, attended by Gonzalo; Sebastian and Antonio in the manner attended by Adrian and Gonzalo. They all enter the circle which Prospero hath made, and there stand charmed; which Prospero observing, speaks.

A solemn air, and the best comforter
To an unsettled fancy, cure thy brains,
Now useless, boiled within thy skull! There stand, For you are spell-stopp'd.

Holy Gonzalo, honorable man,
Mine eyes, even sociable to the shew of thine,
Fall swiftly, enforce the charm dissolves space
And as the morning steals upon the night.
Meltling the darkness, so their rising senses
Begin to chase the ignorant fumes that mantle
Their clearer reason. O my good Gonzalo,
My true preserver, and a loyal air
To him thou follow'st; I will pay thy graces
Home both in word and deed. Most cruelly
Didst thou, Alonso, use me and my daughter.
Thy brother was a furtherer in the act;
Thou'rt pinch'd for't now, Sebastian. — Flesh and blood,
You brought strange, that entertain'd ambition,
Expell'd remorse; and nature; who, with Sebastian,
(Whose inward pinches therefore are most strong,) Would here have kill'd your king; I do forgive thee,
Free natural though thou art! — Their understanding
Becins to swell; and the approaching tide
Will shortly fill the reasonable shores,
That now lie foul and muddy. Not one of them,
That yet looks on me, or would know me: — Ariel,
Fetch me the hat and rapier in my cell;

Ariel. I will dis-case me, and my self present,
As I was sometime Milan: — quickly, spirit:
Thou shalt ere long be free.

Ariel recovers, singing, and helps to allure Prospero.

Ari. Where the bee sucks, there suck I;
In a cowslip's bell I lie;
There I catch when owls do cry.
On the bull's back I fly,
After summer merrily.
Merry, merrily, shall I live now,
Under the blossom that hangs on the bough.

Pros. Why that's my dainty Ariel; I shall miss thee.

But ye shall have freedom; so, so, so.
To the king's ship, invisible as thou art:
There shalt thou find the mariners asleep
Under the hatchets; the master and the boatswain,
Drinking and singing songs: — and so to this place;
And presently, I pr'ythee.

Ari. I drink the air before me, and return
Or e'er your pulse twice beat. [Exit Ariel]

Leopard.

Fly or tenderness of heart.
Scene I. TEMPEST.

Gon. All torment, trouble, wonder, and amazement
Inhabits here: some heavenly power guide us
Out of this fearful country!
Pros. Behold, sir king,
The wrong'd duke of Milan, Prospero;
For more assurance that a living prince
Does now speak to thee, I embrace thy body:
And to thee, and thy company, I bid
A hearty welcome.
Alon. Wilt thou beest he or, no,
Or have enchanted tribe to abuse me,
As late I have been, I do not know: thy pulse
Beats, as of flesh and blood; and since I saw thee,
The affliction of my mind amends, with which,
I am a kindred field, for this: this must crave
(As if this be all) a most strange story.
Thy dukedom I resign; and do entreat
Thou pardon me my wrongs: — But how should Prospero
Be living and be here!
Pros. First, noble friend,
Let me embrace thine age; whose honour cannot be measured, or confin'd.
Gon. Whether this be,
Or be not, I'll not swear.
Alon. You do yet taste
Some subtleties of the isle, that will not let you
Believe things certain: — Welcome, my friends all:
But you, my brace of lords, were I so minded,
[Aside to Sar. and Ant.]
I here could pluck his height's from upon you,
And justly you tradest; at this time
I'll tell no tales.
Pros. The devil speaks in him. [Aside]
Pros. For you, most wicked sir, whom to call brother
Would even infect my mouth, I do forgive
Thy rankest fault; all of them; and require
My dukedom of thee, which, perforce, I know,
Thou must restore.
Alon. If thou beest Prospero,
Give us particulars of thy preservation:
How thou hast met us here, who three hours since
Were wreck'd upon this shore; where I have lost
How sharp the point of this remembrance is!
My dear son Ferdinand.
Pros. Irreparable is the loss; and Patience
Says, it is past her cure.
Alon. I rather think,
You have not sought her help; of whose soft grace,
For the like loss, I have her sovereign aid,
And rest my self content.
Alon. You the like loss!
Pros. As great to me, as to you, and portable,
To make the dear loss, have I a means much weaker
Than you may call to comfort you: for I
Have lost my daughter.
Alon. A daughter?
O heavens! that they were living both in Naples,
The king and queen there! that they were, I wish
Myself were madded in that oozy bed
Where my son lies. When did you lose your daughter?
Pros. In this last tempest. I perceive, these lords
At this encounter do so much admire.
Thus they devour their reason, and scarce
Think their eyes do offices of truth, their words
Are natural breath; but howsoever you have Been justled from your senses, know for certain,
That I am Prospero, and that very duke
Which was thrust forth of Milan; who most strangely
Upon this shore, where you were wreck'd, was landed.
To be the lord on'. No more yet of this;
For 'tis a chronicle of day by day,
Not a relation for a breakfast, nor
Being the third meeting. Welcome, sir;
This cell's my court: here have I few attendants,
And subjects none abroad: pray you look in.
My dukedom since you have given me again,
I will require you with as good a thing;
At least, bring forth a wonder, to content ye
As much as me my dukedom.
The entrance of the cell opens, and discourses Ferｄｉｎａｎｄ and Mｉｒａｎｄａ playing at chess.
Mira. Sweet lord, you play me false.
Fer. No, my dearest love, I would not for the world.
Mira. Yes, for a score of kingdoms you should wangle.
And I would call it fair play.
Alon. If this prove
A vision of the island, one dear son
Shall I twice lose.
Fer. A most high miracle!
Fer. Tho' the seas threaten, they are merciful;
I have cured them without cause.
Fer. Now all the blessings
Of a glad father compass thee about!
Alon. Ares, and say thou canst sit here!
Mira. O! wonder! How many goodly creatures are there here!
How beauteous mankind is! O brave new world,
That has such people in it!
Fer. Tis new to thee.
Alon. What is this maid, with whom thou wast at play?
Your old acquaintance cannot be three hours:
Is she the goddess that hath sev'rd us,
And brought us thus together:
Fer. Sir, she's mortal;
But, by immortal Providence, she's mine:
I chose her, when I could not ask my father
For his advice; nor thought I had one: she
Is daughter to this famous duke of Milan,
Of whom so often I have heard renown,
But never saw before; of whom I have Received a second life, and second father.
This lady makes him to me.
Alon. I am hers:
But O, how oddly will it sound, that Must ask my child forgiveness!
Fer. There, sir, stop:
Let us not burden our remembrances
With a heaviness that's gone.
Gon. I have inly wept.
Or should have spoke ere this. Look down, you gods,
And on this couple drop a blessed crown;
For it is you, that have chal'd forth the way
Which brought us hither!
Alon. I say, Amen, Gonzalo!
Gon. Was Milan thrust from Milan, that his issue
Should become kings of Naples! O, rejoice
Beyond a common joy, and set my heart
With gold on lasting pillars: In one voyage
Did Charibell her husband find at Tunis;
And Ferdinand, her brother, found a wife,
Where be himself was lost: Prospero his dukedom
In a poor isle; and all of us, ourselves,
When no man was his own.
Alon. Give me your hands:
[To Fer. and Mira.
Let grief and sorrow still embrace his heart,
That daith not wish you joy!
Gon. Be't so! Amen!
Re-enter Ariel, with the Master and Boatswain amaz'dly following.
O look, sir, look, sir; here are more of us!
I prophesied, if a gullows were on land,
This fellow could not drown: — Now, blasphemy,
That swears' grace o'erboard, no! to an oath on shore!
Hast thou no mouth by land! What is the news?
Boats. The best news, is, that we have safely found
Our king, and company: the next our ship, —
Which, but three glasses since, we gave out split,
Is tight and strong, and bravely rigg'd, as when
We first put out to sea.
Ari. Sir, all this service
Have I done since I went.
[Aside.
Pros. My tricksy spirit!
Alon. These are not natural events; they strengthen
From strange to stranger: — Say, how came you hither?
Boats. Sir, I did think, sir, I were well awake,
I'd strive to tell you. We were dead of sleep.
And (how, we know not) all clapp'd under hatches, [Realy.
Cleve, atroit.
Where, but even now, with strange and several noises
Of roaring, shrieking, howling, grinning chains,
And more diversity of sounds, all horrible.
We were awak'd; straightway, at liberty:
Where we, in all her trim, freshly beheld
Our royal, good, and gallant ship; our master
Capturing to eye her: On a truce, so please you,
Even in a dream, were we divided from them,
And were brought moping,ilter.

Art. Was't well done?

Pro. Bravely, my diligence. Thou shall, y'please.

Alon. This is as strange a maze as e'er men trod;
And there is in this business more than nature
Was ever conduct of: some oracle
Must rectify our knowledge.

Pro. Sir, my liege,
Do not infect your mind with beating on
The strangeness of this business: at pick'd leisure,
Which shall be shortly, single I'll resolve you
(Which to you shall seem probable) of every
These happen'd accidents: till when, be cheerful,
And think of each thing well. — Come, hitler,
spirit;
Set Caliban and his companions free:
Unite the spell. [Exit ARIEL.] How fares my gracious sir?
There are yet missing of your company
Some few odd lads, that you remember not.

Re-enter ARIEL, driving in CALIBAN, STEFANO, and TRINCULO, in their stolen apparel.

Str. Every man shift for all the rest, and let no man take care for himself; for all is but fortune: —
Coragio, bully-monster, Coragio!

Trin. If these be true spics which I wear in my head, here's a goodly sight.

Cal. O, Tetchos, these be brave spirits, indeed! How fine my master is! I am afraid
He will chastise me.

Pro. Ha, ha;
What things are these, my lord Antonio?
Will money buy them?

Art. Very like, one of them
Is a plain fish, and, no doubt, marketable.

Pro. Mark but the badges of these men, my lords,
Then say if they be true: —This mis-shapen knave,
His mother was a witch; and one so strong
That could control the moon, make flows and ebbs,
And deal in her command, without her power:
These three have rob'd me; and this demi-devil
(For he's a bastard one) had plotted with them
To take my life: two of these fellows you

Must know, and own; this thing of darkness!

Acknowledging mine.

Cal. I shall be pinch'd to death.

Alon. Is not this Stephano, my drunken butler?

Seb. He is drunk now; Where had he wine?

Alon. And Trinculo is reeling ripe: Where should they

Find these strange and horrid that hath gild them?

How can'st thou in this pickle?

Trin. I have been in such a pickle, since I saw you last, that, I fear me, will never out of my bones; I shall not mope, I'll go.

Seb. Why, how now, Stephano?

Sev. O, touch me not; I am not Stephano, but a cripple.

Pro. You'd be king of the isle, sirrah?

Seb. I should have been a sore one then.

Alon. This is as strange a thing as e'er I look'd

On.

Pointing to CALIBAN.

Pro. He is as disproportion'd in his manners,
As in his shape: —Go, sirrah, to my cell;
Take with you your companions; as you look,
To have my pardon, trim it handsomely.

Cal. Ay, that I will; and I'll be wise hereafter,
And seek for grace: What a three-bottomed ass
Was I, to take this drunkard for a god,
And worship this daff fool? — Go to;

Pro. Go to; away!

Alon. Hence, and bestow your luggage where you found it.

Seb. Or stole it, rather.

[Exeunt CAL. STEP. and TRIN.

Pro. Sir, I invite your lustiness, and your train,
To my private cell: where you shall take your rest
For this one night; which (part of it) I'll waste
With such discourse, as, I not doubt, shall make it
Go quick away: the story of my life,
And those particular accidents gone by,
Since I came to this isle; And in the morn,
I'll bring you to your ship, and so to Naples,
Where I have hope to see the mutines
Of these our dear beloved solomoniz'd;
And thence retire me to my Milan, where
Every third thought shall be my grave.

Alon. I long to hear the story of your life, which must Take the ear strangely.

Pro. I'll deliver all; And promise you calm seas, auspicious gales,
And sail so expeditious, that shall catch
Your royal fleet far off. — My Ariel; — chick,
That is thy charge; 'tis then to the elements
Be free, and fare thou well! —[Aside.] Please you draw near.

[Exit.

EPILOGUE. — Spoken by PROSPERO.

Now my charms are all o'erthrown,
And what strength I have's mine own;
Which is most faint; now, 'tis true,
I must be here confined by you,
Or sent to Naples? Let me not,
Since I have my dukedom got,
And pardon'd th'一一eever, dwell
In this bare island, by your spell;
But release me from my bonds,
With the help of your good hands.

Conductor. Honest.

*Applause; noise was supposed to dissolve a spell.

Gentle breath of yours my soul
Most fill, or else my project fails.
Which was to please: None I want
Sprits to enforce, art to enchain;
And my ending is despair,
Unless I be releav'd by proper;
Which pieces so, that it assaults
Mercy herself, and frees all faults.
As you from whence i'would pardon'd be,
Let your indulgence set me free.
TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA.

PERSONS REPRESENTED.

DUKE of MILAN, Father to Silvia.

VALENTINE, Gentleman of Verona.

PROTEUS, Ant. Father to Proteus.

ANTONIO, Father to Proteus.

BRANDON, Foolish Friend to Valentine.

EGLAMOUR, Agent for Silvia in her Escape.

SPEED, a clamish Servant to Valentine.

LAUNCE, Servant to Proteus.

PANTINO, Servant to Antonio.

HOST where Julia lodges in Milan.

OUTLAWES.

JULIA, a Lady of Verona, beloved by Proteus.

SILVIA, the Duke's Daughter, beloved by Valentine.

LUCETTA, Wanting-woman to Julia.

Servants, Musicians.

SCENE, sometimes in Verona; sometimes in Milan; and on the Frontiers of Mantua.

ACT I.

SCENE I. — An open Place in Verona.

Enter Valentine and Proteus.

Val. Cease to persuade, my loving Proteus; Home-keeping youth have ever homely wits: We're not alljection chains thy tender days To the sweet chances of thy homed love, I rather would entreat thy company, To see the wonders of the world abroad, Than living dully shaggy'd at home. Wear out thy youth with shapeless idleness, But, since thou livest, love still, and thrive therein, Even as I would, when I to love began. Will thou hence now? Sweet Valentine, adieu! Think on thy Proteus, when thou, haply, seest Some rare note-worthy object in thy travel: Wish me partaker in thy happiness, When thou dost meet good hap; and, on thy danger, If ever danger do environ thee. Command the grievance to my holy prayers, For I will be thy head-shad-man, Valentine. Val. And on a love-book pray for my success. Pro. I pen some book I love, I'll pray for thee. Val. That's on some shallow story of deep love, How young Leander cross'd the Hellespont. Pro. That's a deep story of a deeper love; For he was more than over shoes in love. Val. 'Tis true: for you are ever boots in love, And yet you never swim the Hellespont. Pro. (Over the boots? May I, give me not the boots.) Val. No, I'll not, for it boots thee not. Pro. What? Val. To be In love, where scorn is bought with groans: coy looks, With heart-sore sighs; one fading moment's mirth, With twenty watchful, weary, tedious nights: If haply won, perhaps, a hapless gain; If lost, why then a grievous labor won; However, but a folly bought with wit, Or else a wit by folly vanquished. Pro. So by your circumstance, you call me fool. Val. So, by your circumstance, I fear, you'll prove. Pro. 'Tis love you cavil at; I am not Love. Val. I love is your master, for he masters you: And he that is so yoked by a fool, — A humorous punishment at harvest-home feasts, &c.

Methinks should not be chronicled for wise.

Pro. Yet writers say, As in the sweetest bud The eating canker dwells, so eating love Inhabits in the fairest wits of all. Val. And writers say, As the most forward bud Is eaten by the canker ere it blow, Even so by love the young and tender wit Is turn'd to folly; blasting in the bud, Losing its verdure, even in the prime, And all the fair effects of future hopes. But when once waste I time to counsel thee, That art a votary to fond desire? Once more adieu: my father at the road Expects my coming, there to see me shipp'd. Pro. And thither I will bring thee, Valentine. Val. Sweet Proteus, no; now let us take our leave. At Milan let me hear from thee by letters, Of thy success in love, and what news else Betold here in absence of thy friend; And I likewise will visit thee with mine. Pro. All happiness bearance to thee in Milan! Val. As much to you at home! and so farewell! [Exit Valentine.

Pro. He after honor hunts. I after love: He leaves his friends to dignity them more; I leave myself, my friends, and all for love. Thou, Julia, thou hast metamorphos'd me; Made me neglect my studies, lose my time, War with good counsel, set the world at nought; Made wit with wasting weak, heart sick with thought. Enter Speed.

Speed. Sir Proteus, save you: saw you my master! Pro. But now he parted hence, to embark for Milan. Speed. Twenty to one then he is shipp'd already; And I have play'd the sheep in losing him. Pro. Indeed a sheep doth very often stray, And if the shepherd be awhile away Speed. You conclude that my master is a shepherd then, and I a sheep! Pro. I do. Speed. Why then my horns are his horns, whether I wake or sleep. Uro. A silly answer, and fitting well a sheep.

TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA.

Act I.

Luc. Please you, repeat their names, I'll show my mind.

According to my shallow simple skill,

Jul. What think'st thou of the fair Sir Pekham? —

Luc. He is a knight, well spoken, and pale.

But were I you, he never should be mine.

Jul. What think'st thou of the rich Mercatio?

Luc. Well of his wealth; but of himself, so, as

Jul. What think'st thou of the gentle Proteus?

Luc. Lord, lord! to see what silly rejoins us.

Jul. How now! what means this passion at his name?

Luc. Fair, dear madam; 'tis a passing shame,

That I, unworthy body as I am,

Should censure thus on lovely gentlemen.

Jul. Why not on Proteus, as of all the rest?

Luc. To thus,—as of many good I think him best.

Jul. Your reason?

Luc. Wouldst not expect from Proteus another but a woman's reason? I think him so, because I think him so.

Jul. And wouldst thou have me cast my love on him?

Luc. Ay, if you thought your love not cast away.

Jul. Why, he of all the rest, hath never mov'd me.

Luc. Yet he of all the rest, I think, best loves ye.

Jul. His little speaking shows his love but small.

Luc. Fire, that is best kept, burns most of all.

Jul. They do not love, that do not show their love.

Luc. O, they love least, that let men know their love.

Jul. I would I knew his mind.

Luc. Peruse this paper, madam.

Jul. To Julia,—Say, from whom?

Luc. That the contents will show,

Jul. Say, say; what have it there?

Luc. Sir Valentine's page; and sent, I think, from Proteus:

He would have given you, but I, being in the way,

Did in your stead receive it; pardon the fault, I pray.

Jul. Now, by my modesty, a goodly buyer.

Dare you presume to harbor wanton lines?

To whisper and encompass against my youth?

Now, trust me, 'tis an office of great worth,

And you an officer fit for the place;

There, take the paper, see it he return'd,

Or else return no more into my sick.

Luc. To plead for love deserves more fea than hate.

Jul. Will you become?

Luc. That you may ruminate, [Exit Luc.]

Jul. And yet, I would I had o'ertook'd the letter.

It were a shame to call her back again,

And pray her to a fault for which I chid her.

That she begins to see, that I am a madam,

And would not force the letter to my view?

Since maids, in modesty, say No, to that

Which they would have the proflerer construe, Ay, fie, fie! he wayward is this foolish wish.

That, like a testy babe, will scratch the nurse,

And presently, all humbled, kiss the rod.

How hurriedly had Lucetta been,

When willingly I would have had her here!

How angrily I taught my brow to frown,

When inward joy enforc'd my heart to smile!

My pen is to, call Lucetta back,

And ask remission for my folly past:—

What ho! Lucetta!

Re-enter Lucetta.

Luc. What would your ladyship! —

Jul. Is it near dinner time? —

Luc. I would it were;

That you might kill your stomach on your meal,

And not upon your maid.

Jul. What is't you took up

So gingerly? —

Luc. Nothing.

Jul. Why didst thou stop then?

Luc. To take a paper up that I let fall.

Jul. And is that paper nothing?

Luc. Nothing concerning me.

Jul. Then let it lie for those that it concerns.

Luc. Madam, it will not lie where it concerns,

Unless it have that false interpreter.

Jul. Some love of yours hath writ to you in rhyme.
LUC. That I might sing it, madam, to a tune:
Give me a note; your ladyship can set.
JUL. As little by such toys as may be possible;
Bear me to it of Light withal. 8. 2.
LUC. It is too heavy for so light a tune.
JUL. Heavy! believe it hath some burden, then.
LUC. Ay; and melodious it were, if you would sing it.
JUL. And why not you?
LUC. I cannot reach so high.
JUL. Let’s see your song:—How now, minion! You have not taken your time too2
LUC. Nor yet, my lady: in my achievement I was cut out:
And yet, methinks, I do not like this tune.
JUL. You do not!?
LUC. No, madam; it is too sharp.
JUL. Nay, now you are too flat,
And mar the concord with too harsh a descent.
There wanteth a mean’t to fill your song.
JUL. The mirths are drown’d with our unruly base.
LUC. Indeed I did the base for Proteus.
JUL. This bubble shall not henceforth trouble me.
Here is a coil with protestation!
[Teares the letter.]
Go, get you gone; and let the papers lie:
You would be fingering them, to anger me.
LUC. She makes it strange; but she would be best pleased
To be so anger’d with another letter. [Exit.
JUL. Nay, would I were so anger’d with the same.
O hateful hands, to tear such lovely words!
Injurious wasps! to feed on such sweet honey,
And kill the bees, that yield it, with your stings!
I’ll kiss each paper for amends.
And well and well, kind Julia! and well, Julia!
As in revenge of thy ingratitude.
I throw thy name against the bruising stones,
Trampling contemptuously on thy disdain.
Look here is writ—Lor Cupid’s arrow Proteus:—
Poor wounded name! my bosom as a bed,
Shall lodge thee till thy wound be thoroughly heal’d:—
And thus I search it with a sovereign kiss.
But twine, or thrice, was Proteus written down!
He calm, good wind, blow not a word away,
Till I have found each letter in the letter,
Except mine own name; that some wild wind hear
The ragged, fearful, haggard, lashing words;
And throw it thence into the raging sea!—
Lo, here in one line is his name twice writ,—
Poor forlorn Proteus, passionate Proteus,
To thee sweet Julia:—that I’ll tear away;—
And yet I will not, sith so prettily
He couples it to his complaining names;
Thus will I fold them one upon another;
Now kiss, embrac’d, embrace, do what you will.

Retreat Lucetta.
LUC. Madam, dinner’s ready, and your father
JUL. Well, let us go.
LUC. What, shall these papers lie like tell-tales here?
JUL. If you respect them, best to take them up.
LUC. Nay, I was taken up for laying them down:
Yet here they shall not lie, for catching cold.
JUL. I see you have a month’s mind to them.
LUC. Ay, madam, you may say what sights you see;
I see things too, although you judge I wink.
JUL. Come, come, will you please you go! [Exeunt.

Scene III.—The same. A room in Antonio’s house.

Enter Antonio and Panthino.
ANT. Tell me, Panthino, what salt talk was that,
Wherein thy brother held you in the cloister!
PANT. ’Twas of his nephew Proteus, your son.
ANT. Why, what of him?
PANT. He wonder’d that your ladyship
Would suffer him to wound your heart so soon;
While other men, of slender reputation,
Put forth their sons to seek preeminence out:
Some, to the wars, to try their fortune there;
Some, to discovery islands far away;
Some, to the studious universities.
For any, or for all these exercises,
A term in music.
A challenge.
Serious.
He said, that Proteus, your son, was meet;
And did request me to importune you.
To let him spend his time no more at home,
Which is now become a great impeachments to his age,
In having known no travel in his youth.
ANT. Nor need’st thou much importune me to that.
Whereon this month I have been hammering.
I have consider’d well his loss of time;
And how he cannot be a perfect man,
Not being try’d and tutor’d in the world:
Nay, and his counsel by interest set out:
And perfected by the swift course of time;
Then, tell me, whither were I best to send him?
PANT. I think, your lordship is not ignorant;
How his companion, youthful Valentine,
Attends the empress in her royal court.
ANT. I know it well.
PANT. I were good, I think, your lordship sent
There shall be practise tilts and tournaments.
Hear sweet discourse, converse with noblemen;
And be in eye of every exercise.
Worthy his youth and nobleness of birth.
ANT. I like thy counsel; well hast thou advis’d
And that thou mayst perceive how well I like it,
The execution of it shall make known;
With the speediest of his execution
I will dispatch him to the empress’s court.
PANT. To-morrow, may it please you, Don Alphonso,
With other gentlemen of good esteem,
Are journeying to salute the emperor,
And to commend their service to his will.
ANT. Good company; with them shall Proteus go;
And, in good time—how will we break with him.

Enter Proteus.
PRO. Sweet love! sweet lines! sweet life!
Here is her hand the agent of her heart;—
Here is her oath for love, her honor’s pawn:—
O, that our fathers would applauded our loves,
To seal our happiness with their consents!—
I over hear Julia’s love.
ANT. How now! what letter are you reading there;
PRO. Nay, please your lordship, ’tis a word or two.
Of commendation sent from Valentine,
Deliver’d by a friend that came from him.
ANT. Send me the letter; let me see what news.
PRO. There is no news, my lord; but that he writes
How happily he lives, how well belov’d,
And daily grace’d by the emperor.
Wishing me with him, partner of his fortune.
ANT. And how stand you affected to his wish?
PRO. As one relying on your lordship’s wish,
And not depending on this friendly promotion.
ANT. My will is something sorted with his wish:—
Muse’st not I thus suddenly proceed;
For what I will, I will, and there an end.
I am resolved, that thou shalt spend some time
With Valentines in the emperor’s court;
What maintenance he from his friends receiveth,
Like exhibitions thou shalt have from me.
To-morrow be in readiness to go.
Excuse it not, for I am peremptory.
PRO. My lord, I cannot he so soon provided;
Please you, deliberate a day or two.
ANT. Mark, what thou w’st sent be shall be sent after thee:
No more of stay; to-morrow thou must go.—
Come on, Panthino; you shall be employ’d
To hasten on his expedition.
[Exeunt ANT. and PANT.
PRO. Thus have I shunn’d the fire, for fear of burning;
And drown’d me in the sea, where I am drown’d;
I fear’d to show my father Julia’s letter,
Lest he should take exceptions to my love;
And with the vantage of mine own excuse
Hath he excepted most against my love.
O, how this spring of love resembleth
The uncertain glory of an April day;
Which now shows all the beauty of the sun,
And by and by a cloud takes all away!—
Repr. [Repr.]
Break the matter to him.
Wonder.
Allowance.
ACT II.

Enter Valentine and Speed.

Val. Sir Proteus, your father calls for you; he is in haste, therefore, I pray you, go.

Speed. If you love her, you cannot see her.

Val. Why?

Speed. Because love is blind. O, that you had mine eyes; or your own had the lights they were wont to have, when you chatted with sir Proteus for going unattended.

Val. What should I see then?

Speed. Your own present folly, and her passing deformity: for he, being in love, could not see to gather his rose; and you, being in love, cannot see to put on your hose.

Val. Belike, boy, then you are in love; for last morning you could not see to wipe your shoes.

Speed. Nor, sir; I was in love with my bed; I thank you, you swung me for my love, which makes me the bolder to chide you for yours.

Val. In conclusion, I stand affected to her.

Speed. I could you were set; so, your affliction would cease.

Val. Last night she enjoined me to write some lines to one she loves.

Speed. And have you?

Val. I have.

Speed. Are they not lamely writ?

Val. No, boy, but as well as I can do them:—Peace, here she comes to.

Enter Silvia.

Speed. O excellent motion! O exceeding puppet! I will be interpreter to her.

Val. Madam and mistress, a thousand good-morrows.

Speed. O, give you good even! here's a million of manners. [Aside.]

Sil. Sir Valentine and servant, to you two thousand.

Speed. He should give her interest; and she gives it him. [Aside.]

Val. As you enjoin'd me, I have writ your letter, unto the secret nameless friend of yours;

Speed. Which I was much unwilling to proceed in, but for my duty to your ladyship.

Sil. I thank you, gentle servant, 'tis very dexterly done.

Val. Now, trust me, madam, it came hardly off; for being ignorant to whom it goes, I writ at random, very doubtfully.

Sil. Perchance you think too much of so much pains!

Val. No, madam; so it stead you, I will write, Please you command, a thousand times as much: And yet——

Sil. A pretty period! Well, I guess the sequel; And yet I will not name it: — and yet I care not; And take this again; — and yet I thank you; Meaning henceforth to trouble you no more.

Speed. And yet you will; and yet another yet. [Aside.]

Sil. What means your ladyship? do you not know?

Sil. Yes, yes; the lines are very quaintly writ, But since unwillingly, take them again; Nay, take them.

Sil. They are for you.

Val. Ay, ay; you writ them, sir, at my request: But I will none of them; they are for you: I would have had them writ more movingly.

Val. Please you, I will write your ladyship another.

Sil. And, when it's writ, for my sake read it over; And if it please you, so; if not, why, so.

Val. If it please me, madam? what then?

Sil. Why, if it please you, take it for your labor; And so good-morrow, servant. [Exit Silvia.

* Like a scholar.
As a nose on a man's face, or a weathercock on a steeple!

My master says to her; and she hath taught her to say,
He being her pupil, to become her tutor.

An excellent device! was there ever heard a better?

That my master, being scribe, to himself should write the letter?

Speech. Nay, I was rhyming; 'tis you that have the reason.

Val. To do what?

Speech. To be a spokesman from madam Silvia.

Val. To whom?

Speech. To yourself: why, she weos you by a figure.

Val. What figure!

Speech. By a letter, I should say.

Val. Why, she hath not writ to me.

Speech. But did that need she, when she hath made you write to yourself? Why, do you not perceive the jest?

Val. No, believe me.

Speech. No believing you, indeed, sir: But did you perceive her earnest?

Val. She gave me none, except an angry word.

Speech. Why, she hath given you a letter.

Val. That's the letter I writ to her friend.

Speech. And that letter hath she delivered, and there an end.

Val. I would it were no worse.

Speech. I'll warrant you, 'tis as well.

For often you have writ to her; and she, in mo-

Or else for want of idle time, could not again reply;

Or fearing else some messenger, that might her mind discover.

Herself hath taught her love himself to write unto her lover.

All this I speak in print; for in print I found it,—

Why muse you sir! 'tis dinner-time.

Val. I have dined.

Speech. Ay, but hearken, sir: though the chameleon love can feed on the air, I am one that am nourished by my victuals, and would fain have meat;

0, be not like your mistress; be moved, be moved.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—Verona. A room in Julia's house.

Enter Proteus and Julia.

Pro. Have patience, gentle Julia.

Julia. I must, where is no remedy.

Enter. When possibly I can, I will return.

Julia. If you turn not, you will return the sooner:

Keep this remembrance for thy Julia's sake.

[Aside.]

Pro. Why then will we make exchange; here take you this.

Julia. And seal the bargain with a holy kiss.

Pro. Here is my hand for my true constancy;

And this that hour orpicks me in the day,

Wherein I sigh not, Julia, for thy sake,

The next ensuing hour some foul miscarriage

Torment me for my love's forgetfulness!

My father stays my coming: answer not;

That tide is now: may, not the tide of tears;

That tide will stay me longer than I should;

[Aside.]

Julia, farewell.

What! gone without a word!

Ay, so true love should do; it cannot speak;

For truth hath better deeds, than words, to grace it.

[Exeunt.]

Enter Proteus, Sir Proteus, you are said for.

Pro. Go; I come, I come;—

Alas! this parting strikes poor lovers dumb.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The same. A street.

Enter Launce, leading a dog.

Laun. Nay, it will be this hour ere I have done weeping: all the kind of the Launcestres have this very fault: I have received my proportion, like the prodigious son, and am going with sir Proteus to the imperial's court. I think, Crab my dog be the soundest natured dog that lives: my mother weeping,

*Kindred.

my father wailing, my sister crying, our maid howling, our cat wringing her hands, and all our house in a great perplexity, yet did not this cruel-hearted our shed one tear; he is a stone, a very pebble-stone, and in no more pity in him than a dog: a Jew would have wept to have seen our parting; why, my grandam having no eyes, look you, wept herself blind at my parting. Nay, I'll show you the manner of it. This shoe is my father;—no this left shoe is my father;—no, not, this left shoe is my mother;—nay, that cannot be so neither:—yes, it is so; it is so; it hath the worse sole: This shoe, with the hole in it, is my mother, and this my father: A vengeance on it! tieve: now, sir, this staff is my sister; for, look you, she is as white as a lily, and as small as a wand: this lat is Nan, our maid; I am the dog;—no, the dog is himself; and I am the dog:—O, the dog is me, and I am myself; ay, so, so. Now come I to my father; Father, your blessing: now should not the shoe speak a word for weeping: now should I kiss my father; well, he weeps on; now come I to my mother, (0, that she could speak now;) like a wood' woman;—well, I kiss her;—why there 'ts; here's my mother's breath up and down; now come I to my sister; mark the moon she makes; now the dog all this while sheds not a tear, nor speaks a word; but see how I lay the dust with my tears.

Enter Pantning.

Pant. Launce, away, away, aboard; thy master is slipped, and thou art to post after with ears. What's the matter? why weepest thou, man? Away, ass; you will lose the tide, if you hurry any longer.

Julia. I know not of the matter: it is the ty'd dog: it frets: for it is the unkindest ty'd that ever man ty'd.

Pant. What's the unkindest tide?

Laun. Why, he's ty'd here; Crab, my dog.

Pant. If any ty to the matter, I mean thou'll lose the flood:

And, in losing the flood, lose thy voyage; and, in losing thy voyage, lose thy master; and, in losing thy master, lose thy service; and in losing thy service,—why didst thou lay up my mouth?

Laun. For fear thou shouldst lose thy tongue.

Pant. Where should I lose my tongue?

Laun. In thy tallow.

Pant. In thy tallow.

Laun. Lose the tide, and the voyage, and the master, and the service! Be ty’d!—Why, man, if the river were dry, I am able to fill it with my tears; if the wind were down, I could drive the bolt with my sighs.

Pant. Come, come away, man; I was sent to call thee.

Laun. Sir, call me what thou darest.

Pant. Will thou go?

Laun. Well, I will go.

[Exeunt.]

Enter Valentine, Silvia, Thurio, and Speed.

Sitt. Servant—

Val. Mistress?

Speed. Master, sir Thurio frowns on you.

Val. Ay, boy, it's for love.

Speech. Not of you.

Val. Of my mistress then.

Speech. T'were good, you knock'd him.

Sitt. Servant, you are sad.

Val. Indeed, madam, I seem so.

Thur. Seen you that you are not?

Val. I do, I do.

Thur. So do counterfeit.

Val. So do you.

Thur. What seem I that I am not?

Val. What, sir?

Thur. What instance of the contrary?

Val. Your folly.

Thur. And how quote you my folly?

Val. Quote me in your jerkin.

Thur. My jerkin is a doublet.

Val. Well, then, I'll double your folly.

Thur. How?

Val. What, sir, angry, sir Thurio? do you change color?

Val. Give him leave, madam; he is a kind of chameler—

*Crazy, distracted.

Serious.

*Note, obscure.
Duke. Now, daughter Silvia, you are here betid.
Valentine, your father's in good health:
What say you to a letter from your friends Of much good news?

Val. My lord, I will be thankful To any happy messenger from thence.

Duke. Know you Lord Antonio, your countryman?

Val. Ay, my good lord, I know the gentleman To be of worth, and worthy estimation, And without desert so well reputed.

Duke. Hath he not a son?

Val. Ay, my good lord: a son that well deserves The honor and regard of such a father.

Duke. You know him well?

Val. I knew him as myself; for from our infancy We have conversed and spent our hours together; And though myself have been an idle truant, Consuming the sweet benefit of time, To clothe mine age with angel-like perfection; Yet hath sir Proteus, for that's his name, Made use and fair advantage of his days; His years but young, but his experience old; His head unmanhood'd, but his judgment ripe; And, in a word, (for far behind his worth Come all the praises that I now bestow,) He is complete in feature, and in mind, With all good grace to grace a gentleman.

Duke. Beshrew me, sir, but if he make this good, He'll make a worthy for an emperor's heir, As meet to be an emperor's counsellor.

Val. Well, sir; this gentleman is come to me, With commendation from great potentates; And I am glad to spend his visits here; I think, 'tis no unwelcome news to you.

Val. Should I have wish'd a thing, it had been he.

Duke. Welcome him then according to his worth.

Val. You know, sir, that I have done, or seem'd to do,

Duke. For Valentine, I need not e'en him to it:
I'll send him hither to you presently.

Val. This is the gentleman, I told your household, Had come along with me, but that his mistress Did hold his eyes lock'd in her crystal locks,

Val. That she now hath e'en enrich'd him With some other pawn for fealty.

Duke. 'Tis sure, I think she holds them prisoners still.

Val. Nay, then he should be blind; and being blind How could he see his way to seek out you?

Val. Why, lady, love hath twenty pair of eyes,

Val. They say that love hath not an eye at all,

Val. To see your looks, Thuro, as yourself; Upon a homely object love can wink.

Proteus.

Silv. Have done, have done; here comes the gentleman.

Val. Welcome, dear Proteus! — Mistresses, I beseech you, Confirm his welcome with some special favor.

Sil. His worth is warrant for his welcome hither, If this be true you oft wish'd to hear from.

Val. Mistresses, it is: sweet lady, entertain him

Indie.

To be my fellow-servant to your ladyship,

Sil. Too low a mistress for so high a servant.

Pro. Not so, sweet lady; but too mean a servant To have a look of such a worthy mistress.

Lad. I have off discourse of disability; —

Sweet lady, entertain him for your servant.

Pro. My duty will I boast of, nothing else.

Sil. And duty never yet did want his meed;

Servants are welcome none to a woman's mistress.

Pro. I'll die on him that says so, but yourself.

Sil. That you are welcome!

Pro. No; that you are worthless.

Enter Servant.

Ser. Madam, my lord your father would speak with you.

Sil. I'll wait upon his pleasure.

[Exit Servant.

Come, sir Thurio.

Go with me:—Once more, new servant, welcome:
I'll leave you to your own home-affairs;
When you have done, we will look to hear from you.

Pro. We'll both attend upon your ladyship.

[Exit Silvia, Thurio, and Speed.

Val. Now, tell me, how do all from whence you came?

Pro. Your friends are well, and have them much commended.

Val. And how do yours?

Pro. I left them all in health.

Val. How does your lady! and how thrives your love?

Pro. My lady's love were wont to wear you;
I know you joy not in a love-discourse.

Val. Ay, Proteus, but that life is alter'd now;
I have done penance for contemning love;
Whose most impious thoughts have punish'd me With bitter fits, with pentential groans,
With nightingall, and daily heart-sore sighs;
For in the edge of my contempt of love,
Love hath enthrall'd me from my established eyes,
And made them watchers of mine own heart's sorrow.

Pro. O, gentle Proteus, what a mighty lord!
And hath so humbled me, as I confess,
There is no woe to his correction,
Nor to his service, no such joy on earth!
Now, no discourse, except it be of love;
Now can I break my fast, dine, sup, and sleep,
Upon the very naked name of love.

Pro. Enough; I read your fortune in your eye:
Was this the idol that you worship so?

Val. Even she; and is she not a heavenly saint?

Pro. No; but she is an earthly paragon.

Val. Call her divine.

Pro. I will not flatter her.

Val. O, flatter me; for love delights in praises.

Pro. When I was sick, you gave me bitter pills;
And I must minister the like to you.

Val. Then speak the truth by her; if not divine,
Yet let her be a principality,
Sovereign to all the creatures on the earth.

Pro. Except my mistress.

Val. Sweet, except not any; Except thou wilt except against my love.

Pro. Have I not reason to prefer mine own?

Val. And I will help thee to prefer her too; She shall be dignified with this high honor, —
To bear my lady's train; lest the base earth Should from her vesture chance to steal a kiss, And, or so great a favor a growing pride,
Disheath to root the summer-swell'd flower,
And make rough winter everlasting.

Pro. Why, Valentine, what bragguardism is this?

Val. Pardon me, Proteus; all I can, is nothing To her, whose worth makes other worthies nothing;
She is alone.

Pro. Not then let her alone.

Val. Not for the world: why, man, she is mine own;
And I as rich in having such a jewel, As true as theirs, if their sun and moon were pearl, The water nectar, and the rocks pure gold,
Forgive me, that I do not dream on thee.
Because thou seest me dote upon my love, My foolish rival, that for her father's sake, Only for his possessions are so huge,
Is gone with her along; and I must after, For love, thou know'st is, full of jealousy.

Pro. But she loves you?
TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA.

Val. Ay, and we are betroth'd.
Nay, more, our marriage hour,
With all the cunning manner of our light,
Determined how to build a chimney-window;
The ladder made of cords; and all the means
Plotted, and 'greed on, for my happiness.
Good Proteus, go with me to my chamber,
In the same aid, and I will speak to thee.
Pro. Go on before: I shall inquire you forth:
I must unto the road, to disembark
Some necessaries that I needs must use.
And then I'll presently attend you.
Val. Will you make haste?
Pro. I will.
[Exit Val.]

Even as one heat another heat expels,
Or as one nail by strength drive out another,
So the remembrance of my former love
Is by a newer object quite forgotten.
Is it mine eye, or Valentine's praise,
That true perfection, or my false transgression,
That makes me reasonless, to reason thus!
She's fair: and so is Julia, that I love:—
That I did love, for a soul my love had;—
Which, like a waver ing image against a fire,
Bears no impression of the thing it was.
Methinks, my zeal to Valentine is cold;
And that I love him not, as I was wont:
O, but I love his lady fair, and much:
And that's the reason I love him so little.
How shall I dole on her with more advice,
That thus without advise begin to love her?
That her picture I have yet to paint,
And that hath dazzled my reason's light;
But when I look on her perfections,
There is no reason but I shall be blind.
If I can check my own, and love, I love,
If not, to compass her I'll use my skill.

SCENE VII. — The same. A street.

Enter SPEED and LAUNCE.

Speed. Love, love! by mine honesty, welcome to Milan.
Laun. Forswear not thyself, sweet youth; for I am a welcome balsam to thine eyes—that a man is never unloved, till he be hated: nor never welcome to a place, till some certain shot be paid, and the hostess say welcome.

Speed. Come, come, you madcap, I'll be the housekeeper with you presently; where, for one shot of five-pence, thou shalt have five thousand welcomes. But, saugh, how did thy master part with matter with maid Julia?
Laun. Marry, after they closed in earnest, they parted very finely in jest.

Speed. But shall she marry him?
Laun. No.
Speed. How then? shall he marry her?
Laun. No, neither.
Speed. What, are they broken?
Laun. No, they are not broken.
Speed. Why then, how stands the matter with them?
Laun. Marry thus; when it stands well with him, it stands well with her.
Speed. What an ass art thou! I understand thee not.

Laun. Why, what a block art thou, that thou canst not? My staff understands me.
Speed. What thou say'st!
Laun. Ay, and what I do too: look thee, I'll but lean, and my staff understandeth thee indeed.
Speed. What stands under and understand is all one.
Laun. Speed, wilt thou tell me true, will'st thou be a match?

Ask my dog: if he say, ay, it will; if he say, no, it will; if he shake his tail, and say nothing, it will.

Speed. The conclusion is then, that it will.

Laun. Thou shalt never get such a secret from me, but by a parable.

Speed. Tis well that I get it so. But, Launce, hast thou, that my master has become a notable lover?
Laun. I never knew him otherwise.

Speed. Than hove?
Laun. A notable lubber, as thou reportest him to be.

[On further knowledge.

Speed. Why, thou whoreson ass, thou mistakest me.

Laun. Why, fool, I meant not thee; I meant that master.

Speed. I tell thee, my master is become a hot lover.
Laun. Why, I tell thee. I care not though he burn himself in love. If thou wilt go with me to the alehouse, I will show thee an alehouse, and not worth the name of a Christian.

Speed. Why!

Laun. Because thou hast not so much charity in thee, as to go to the alehouse with a Christian. Will thou go?

Speed. At thy service.

SCENE VI. — The same. An Apartment in the Palace.

Enter Proteus.

Pro. To leave my Julia, shall I be forsworn; To love fair Valentine shall I be forsworn; To wrong my friend, shall I be much forsworn; And that even power, which save me first my oath, Provokes me to this threefold perjury.

Speed. Love bade me swear, and love bade me forswear: O sweet-suggesting love, if thou hast so said,

Teach me, thy tempted subject, to excuse it. At first I did adore a twinkling star,
But now I worship not the beam,
Unheedful vows may heedfully be broken;
And he that wants wit, that wants resolved will
To learn his wit to exchange the bad for better.

Fie, fie, unpardonable—art thou a fool?

Whose sovereignty so oft hast prefer'd
With twenty thousand soul-confirming oaths,
I cannot leave to love, and yet I do;
But there I have to leave, where I should love,
Julia I love, and Valentine I love.

If I keep them, I needs must lose myself;
If I lose them, thus I find by my loss,
For Valentine, myself; for Julia, Satan.

To myself and all dearer than a friend;
For love is still more precious in itself,
And Silvia, witness heaven, that made her fair
Thou dost not love, but the thy Ethelme.
I will forget that Julia is alive;
Remembrance that my love to her is dead;
And Valentine I will hold an enemy.

Ami'ng at Silvia as a sweeter friend,
I cannot now prove constant to myself;
Without some trucevery used to Valentine;
This night he meaneth with a corded ladder
To clamber in the ladder, Julia's chamber-window;
Myself in counsel, his competitor;
Now presently I'll give her father notice
Of their dissembling, and pretended flight:
Who all things need, will haunt Silvia's chamber,
For Tho'to, he intends, shall wed her daughter;
But Valentine being gone, I'll quickly cross,
By some sly trick, blunt Tho'to's double proceeding.
Love, love, love, thou that art to make my match,
As thou hast lent me wit to plot this drift! [Exit.]

SCENE VII. — Verona. A room in Julia's House.

Enter JULIUS and LUCETTA.

Jul. Counsel, Lucetta; gentle girl, assist me!
And, even in kind love, I do conjure thee,—
Who art the table wherein all my thoughts
Are visibly chartered and engraved,—
To lesson me; and tell me some good mean,
How, with my honor, I may undertake
A journey to my loving Proteus.

Luc. Alas! the way is weary, and long.

Jul. A true devoted pilgrim is not weary
To measure kingdoms with his feeble steps:
Much less shall she, that hath love's wings to fly
And when the flight is made to so dear,
Of such divine perfection, as in Proteus,
Luc. Better forbear, till Proteus make return.

Jul. O, know'st thou not, his looks are my soul's food?

Luc. Pity that strength which I have pined in.

Jul. For loving for that food so long a time.
But didst thou know but the joyous touch of love,

Thou wouldst at so soon knead fire for snow,
As seek to quench the fire of love with words.

Jul. I do not seek to quench your love's hot fire;
But qualify the fire's extreme rage.
Lest it should burn above the bounds of reason.

Jul. The more that thou dost it up, the more it burns;

The current, that with gentle murmurs stirs,

Thou know'st, being stopp'd, impatiently doth rage;

But, when its fair course is not hindered,

He makes sweet music with the channel'd stones,

Giving the gentle kiss to every sedge

He overtaketh in his pilgrimage;

And so by many winding nooks he strays,

With willing sport to the wild ocean.

Then let me go, and hinder not my course:

I'll be as patient as a gentle stream,

And make a pasteume of each weary step,

Till the last step have brought me to my love;

And there I'll rest, as, after turn'd,

A blessed soul doth in Elysium.

Luc. But in what habit will you go along?

Jul. Not like a woman; for I would prevent

The look that, even in the most stancie countenance

Gentle Lucetta, fit me with such weeds

As may beseeem some well-reputed page.

Luc. Why, then, your ladyship must wear your hair.

Jul. No, girl; I'll knot it up in silken strings,

With twenty odd-conceited true-love knots:

To be fantastic may become a youth

Of greater time than I shall show to be.

Luc. What fashion, madam, shall I make your breeches?

Jul. That fits as well, as — "tell me, good my lord,

What compass will you wear your farthingale?

"Why, even that fashion thou most listst, Lucetta.

Luc. You must needs have them with a caduceus

Of my invention, and shall be ill-favor'd.

Luc. A round hose, madam, now's not worth a pin,

Unless you have a cod-piece to stick pins on.

Jul. Lucetta, as thou lov'st me, let me have

What thou think'st best meet, and is most mannerly:

But tell me, wench, how will the world repute me,

For undertaking so unstaide a journey!

I fear me, it will make me scandaliz'd.

Luc. I think so, too, and yet stay at home, and go not.

Jul. Nay, that I will not.

Luc. Then never dream on infernity, but go.

If Proteus like your journey, when you come,

No matter who's displeas'd, when you are gone:

I fear me, he will scarce be pleas'd withal.

Jul. That is the least, Lucetta, of my fear:

A thousand oaths, an ocean of his tears,

And my love, that ever I did love of love,

Warrant me welcome to my Proteus.

Luc. All these are servants to deceitful men.

Jul. Base men that use them to so base effect!

But true and honest hearts do govern Proteus' birth;

His words are bonds, his oaths are oracles;

His love sincere, his thoughts immutabile;

His tears pure messengers sent from his heart;

His heart as far from fraud, as heaven from earth.

Luc. Pray heaven, he prove so, when you come to him!

Jul. Now, as thou lov'st me, do him not that wrong,

To bear a hard opinion of his truth:

Only deserve my love, by loving him;

And presently go with me to my chamber.

To take a note of what I stand in need of,

To furnish me upon my longings journey.

All that is mine I leave at thy dispose,

My goods, my lands, my reputation;

Only in lieu thereof, dispatch me hence;

Come, answer not, but to it presently;

I am impatient of my tarryance.

[Exeunt.]
TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA.

Scene I.

Should have been cherished by her child-like duty,
I now am full resolved to take a wife,
And turn her out to who will take her in:
Then kill her beauty be her wedding dowry:
For me and my possessions she esteem's not.

Val. What would your grace have me do to this?

Duke. There is a lady, sir, in Milan here,
With whom I affect; but she is now alone,
And must esteem my aged eloquence:
Now, therefore, would I have thee to my tutor,
For long ago I have forgot to court;
Besides, the fashion of the time is change'd.
How, and which way, I must bestow myself,
To be regarded in her sun-bright eye.

Val. Win her with gifts, if she receives not words;
Duchess jewels often, in their silent kind,
More than quick words, do move a woman's mind.

Duke. This she did scorn a present that I sent her.

Val. A woman sometimes scorches what best contains her:
Send her another; never give her nay:
For scorn at first makes after-love the more.
If she do frown, 'tis not in hate of you,
But rather to beget more love in you:
If she do chide, 'tis not to have you gone;
For she's the fool, if she be gone.
Take no repulse, whatever she doth say;
For, get you gone, she doth not mean away;
Flatter, and praise, commend, exalt her grace;
That so she may blush, if she take the lace.
That man that hath a tongue, I say, is, no man,
It with his tongue he cannot win a woman.

Duke. But she, I mean, is promis'd by her friends
Unto a youthful gentleman of wonder;
And kept severely from resort of men,
That no man hath access by day to her.

Val. Why then I would resort to her by night.

Duke. Ay, but the doors be lock'd, and keys kept safe,
That no man hath recourse to her by night.

Val. What he's, but one may enter at her window!
A ladder, which her chamber is aloft, far from the ground;
And build so shelving, that one cannot climb it
Without apparent hazard of his life.

Val. Why then, a ladder, quietly made of cords,
To cast up with a pair of anchoring hooks,
Would serve to scale another Hero's tower,
So bold Leander would adventure it.

Duke. Now, as thou art a gentleman of blood,
Advise me where I may have such a ladder.

Val. When would you use it? pray, sir, tell me that.

Duke. This very night; for love is like a child,
That loves for everything that he can come by.

Val. By seven o'clock I'll get you such a ladder.

Duke. But, hark thee; I will go to her alone;
Her chamber is, I'll ask; another chamber.

Val. It will be light, my lord, that you may bear it
Under a cloak, that is of any length.

Duke. A cloak so long as thine will serve the turn.

Val. Ay, my good lord.

Duke. Then let me see thy cloak; I'll get me one of such another length.

Val. Why, any cloak will serve the turn, my lord.

Duke. How shall I fashion me to wear a cloak?
I pray thee, let me feel the cloak upon me—
What letter is this same? What's here! —To Silvia.
And here an engine fit for my proceeding; I'll be so bold to break the seal for once.

[Reads.]

My thoughts do harbor with my Silvia nightly;
My life, I come, I come, I come to thee,
O, could their master come and so as light?
Himself would lodge where senseless they are lying,
My hasty thoughts in thy pure bosom rest them;
White, their king, that father them imparture.

Val. What is your news? What is your news?

Duke. What is your news? What is your news?

[Exit Duke.]

Val. And why not death rather than live in torment?
To die, is to be banish'd from myself;
And Silvia is myself; banish'd from her, is self from self; a deadly banishment!
What light is light, if Silvia be not seen?
What joy is joy, if Silvia be not by?
Unless it be to think that she is by,
And feed upon the shadow of perfection.
Exeunt. But I by Silvia in the night.

Val. There is no music in the everlasting darkness;
But I look on Silvia in the day.
There is no day for me to look upon:
She is my essence; I and leave to be,
If I be not by her face appearances,
Silvia, and that evening kept alive.
I fly not death, to fly his deadly doom;
Tarry I here, but attend on death;
But, by I hence, I fly away from life.

Enter Protesilaus and Lucentio.}

So much of bad already hath possess'd them.
Pro. Then is drum and silence will not serve mine,
For they are harsh, un mutable, and bad.

Val. Is Silvia dead? Pro. No, Valentine. Val. No Valentine, indeed, for sacred Silvia! — hath she forsworn me?

Pro. No, Valentine. Pro. No Valentine, if Silvia have forsworn me! — What is your news? Pro. Sir, there's a proclamation that you are banish'd.

Pro. That thou art banish'd, 0, that's the news; From hence to hence Silvia, and from me thy friend.

Val. 0, I have fed upon this woes already,
And now excess of it will make me sure.
Both Silvia know that I am banish'd.

Pro. Ay, and she shall not refer to the door,
(Which, unrecover'd, stands in effectual force.)
A sea of melting pearl, which some call tears; Those at her father's church feet she tender'd; With the tears, and upon her knees, her humble self; Wrang'ing her hands, whose whiteness so became them.

Val. As if but now they waxed pale for woe; But neither buried knives, nor blunt bands hold up, Sad sighs, deep groans, nor silver-shedding tears, Could penetrate her uncompassionate sire;
But Valentine, if he be that, must die.
Besides, her intercession had bid me stay;
When she for thy repeal was supplicat, That to close prison he commanded her,
With many bitter threats of holding there.
TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA.

Act III.

Thou more; unless the next word that thou speakst
Have some mightier power upon my life:
If so, I pray thee, breathe it in mine ear,
As ending anthem of my endless dolor.

Pros. To ease to lament for thou canst not help,
And I can say the thing which is uppermost in my heart.
Time is the nurse and breeder of all good.
Here if thou stay, thou canst not see thy love;
Besides, thy staying will abridge thy life.
Hope is a lover's staff: willst thou hence with that,
And manance it against despairing thoughts.
Thy letters may be here, though thou art hence:
Whitch, being writ to me, shall be deliver'd Evermore, the milks-worm of thy love.
The time now serves not to expostulate:
Come, I'll convey thee through the city gate;
And, ere I part with thee, confer at large,
Of all that may concern thy love affairs.
As thou lovest Silvia, though not for thyself,
Recond thy danger, and along with me.
I pray thee, Laurence, an' thou seest my boy,
But let's make haste, and meet thee at the north gate.

Pros. (Go, sirrah, find him out). Come, Valentine.

Tut. O my dear Silvia! hapless Valentine!

Laun. I am but a fool, look you; and yet I have the wit to think my master is a kind of a knave:
but that's all one, if he be but one knave. He lives not a whole life to be in love: yet I am in love;
but a team of horse shall not pluck that from me;
nor who 'ts I love, and yet 'ts a woman: but what woman, I will not tell my self: and yet 'ts a man. This is not a madman: he hath had goings:
yet 'tis a maid, for she is her master's maid, and serves for wages.
She hath more qualities than a water spaniel,—which is much in a low brastian. Here is the catalogue (pulling out a paper) of her conditions. Imprisons, She can fetch and carry. Why, a horse can do no more: nay, a horse cannot fetch, but only carry; therefore, is she better than a pale. She can milk: look you, a sweet virtue in a maid with clean hands.

Enter Speed.

Speed. How now, signior Laurence? what news with your mastership?

Laun. With my master's ship? why, it is at sea.

Speed. Well, your old vice still: mistake the word: What news then in your paper?

Laun. The blackest news, that ever thou heardst.

Speed. Why, man, how black?

Laun. Why, as black as ink.

Speed. Let me read thee.

Laun. Fear thee, heed-hast; thou canst not read.

Speed. Thou hast best, I can.

Laun. I will try thee; tell me this: who begot thee?

Speed. Marry, the son of my grandfather.

Laun. O illiterate knave! it was thy son of thy grandmother: this proves, that thou canst not read.

Speed. Come, fool, come; try me in thy paper.

Laun. There: and Saint Nicholas be thy speed!

Speed. Imprisons, She can milk.

Laun. Ay, that she can.

Speed. She can brew good ale.

Laun. And thereof comes the proverb,—Bless-ing of your heart, you brew good ale.

Speed. She can see.

Laun. That's as much as to say, Can she so?

Speed. She can knit.

Laun. What need a man care for a stock with a wench, when she can knit him a stock?

Speed. She can sing. She can make a sweet shift.

Laun. A special virtue; for then she need not be washed and scoured.

Speed. She can spin.

Laun. That's the world on wheels when she can spin for her living.

Speed. She can make many necesario virtues.

Laun. But thou shalt not say, bastard virtues; that, indeed, know not their fathers, and therefore have no names.

Speed. Here follow her virtues.

Laun. Close at the heels of her virtues.

2° Saint Nicholas presided over young scholars.

Speed. Item. She is not to be kissed, fasting, in respect of her breath.

Laun. What that fault may be mended with a breakfast: read on.

Speed. Item. She hath a sweet mouth.

Laun. That makes amends for her sour breath.

Speed. She can talk in her sleep.

Laun. It's no matter for that, so she sleep not in her talk.

Speed. Item. She is slow in words.

Laun. That, that set this down among her vices! To be slow in words, is a woman's only virtue: I pray thee, out with it; and place it for her chief virtue.

Speed. Item. She is proud.

Laun. Out with that to; it was Eve's legacy, and cannot be ta'en from her.

Speed. Item. She hath no teeth.

Laun. I care not for that matter, because I love erusts.

Speed. Item. She is curst.

Laun. Well; the best is, she hath no teeth to bite.

Speed. Item. She will often praise her liquor.

Laun. If her liquor be good, she shall: if she will not, I will: for good things should be praised.

Speed. Item. She is too liberal.

Laun. Of her tongue she cannot; for that's writ down she is slow o't; of her purse she shall not; for that I'll keep shut: now, of another thing she may, and that is, cannot fields. Well, proceed.

Speed. Item. She hath more hair than wit, and more faults than hairs, and more wealth than faults.

Laun. Stop there; I'll have her; she was mine, and not mine, twice or thrice in that last article: rehearse that once more.

Speed. Item. She hath more hair than wit.

Laun. More hair than wit,—it may be; I'll prove it: the cover of the salt hides the salt, and therefore it is more than the salt; the hair that covers the wit, is more than the wit; for the greater hides the less. What's next?

Speed. And more faults than hairs.

Laun. That's monstrous; 0, that that were out!

Speed. And more wealth than faults.

Laun. Why, that word makes the faults gracious: Well, I'll have her; and if it be a match, as nothing is impossible—

Speed. And the third?

Laun. Why, then I will tell thee,—that thy master stays for thee at the north gate.

Speed. Item. She hath more hair than wit.

Laun. For thee? ay; who art thou? he hath shied for a better man than thee.

Speed. And must I go to him?

Laun. Yes; must run to him, for thou hast staid so long, that going will scarce serve the turn.

Speed. Why didst not tell me sooner? 'pox of your love-letters.

Laun. Well, thou wilt be swinge'd for reading my letter: An unmannerly slave, that will thrust himself into secrets!—I'll alter, to reprove in the boy's correction.

Enter Duke and Thurio; Proteus behind.

Duke. Sir Thurio, fear not, but that she will love you,
Now Valentine is banish'd from her sight.

Thur. That his exile she hath deepened me most, Foreswore me to every one and null a while, That I am desperate of obtaining her.

Duke. This weak impress of love is as a figure Trenched in ice; which with an hour's head Dissolves to water and doth lose his form.

A little time will melt her frozen thoughts, And worthless Valentine shall be forgot.—

How now, sir Proteus! Is your countryman, According to our maxims, gone away?

Pro. Gone, my good lord.

Duke. My daughter takes his going grievously, Pro. Foe, as my lord, will kill that grief.

Duke. So I believe; but Thurio thinks not so.

Pro. Proteus, the good conceit I hold of thee
(For thou hast shown some sign of good desert)
Makes me the better to confer with thee.

Act IV. Scene I.

TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA. 37

... But yet I slew him manfully in flight,
Without false vantage, or base treachery.

1 Out. Why, ne'er repent it, if it were done so:
but were you banish'd for so small a fault?

Val. I will, and hold me glad at such a doom.

1 Out. Have you the tongues?

Val. My youthful travel thence made me happy;
or else I often had been miserable.

3 Out. By the bare scalp of Isham Hood's fat friar,
This fellow were a king for our wild faction.

2 Out. We'll have him: sirs, a word.

Speel. Master, be one of them;
It is an honorable kind of thievery.

Val. Peace, villain!

2 Out. Tell us this: have you anything to take?

Val. Nothing, but my fortune.

3 Out. Know then, that some of us are gentlemen,
Such as the fury of unconquered youth
Hurst from their caves, courting of all men:
Myself was from Verona banished,
For practising to steal away a lady,
An heir, and near allies unto the duke.

2 Out. From Milan, a gentleman,
Whom, in my mood, I stabbe'd unto the heart.

1 Out. And, for such like petty crimes as these,
But to the purpose,—for we cite our faults,
Not that they may hold examples of our lawless lives,
And, partly, seeing you are beleaguered
With a wide shape: and, by your own report
A linesman; and a man of such pretension,
As we do, and our quality much want:

2 Out. Indeed, because you are a banish'd man.
Therefore, above the rest, we parley to you:
Are you content to be our general?

[Exeunt.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I. — A Forest near Mantua.

Enter certain Out-laws.

1 Out. Fellows, stand fast; I see a passenger.

2 Out. [to Pro.]. There be ten, strick not, but down with 'em.

Enter VALENTINE and SPEED.

3 Out. Stand, sir, and throw us that you have about you;
If not, we'll make you sit, and ride you.

SPEE. Sir, we are undone! these are the villains,
That all the travelers do fear so much.

Val. My friends —

1 Out. That's not so, sir; we are your enemies.

2 Out. Peace, sir; we'll hear him.

3 Out. Ay, by my beard, will we;
For he's a proper man.

Val. Then know that I have little wealth to lose;
A man, I mean, crooked of all men:
My riches are these poor habiliments,
Of which if you should here disfigure me.
You take the sum and substance that I have,

2 Out. Val. Who's that travel you?

3 Out. To Verona.

1 Out. Whence came you?

Val. From Milan.

2 Out. What did you bring sojournd there?

Val. Some sixteen months; and longer might have stood,
If crooked fortune had not thwarted me.

1 Out. What were you banish'd therefor?

Val. I was.

2 Out. For what offense?

Val. For that which now entempts me to rehearse;
I kill'd a man, whose death I much repent;

Val. Well looking.

ACT IV.
To make a virtue of necessity,
And live, as we do, in this wilderness?
2 Okt. What say'st thou? will thou be of our consort?
Say, ay, and be the captain of us all:
We'll do thee homage, and be rul'd by thee,
Love thee as our commander, and our kit:
1 Out. But if thou scor'n our courtesy, thou diest,
2 Out. Thou shalt not live to brag what we have offer'd.

Vol. I take your offer, and will live with you;
Provided that you do no outrage
On silly women, or poor passengers.
3 Out. No more, we detest such vile base practices,
Come, go with us, we'll bring thee to our crew;
And show thee all the treasure we have got;
Which, with ourselves, all rest at thy dispose.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II. — Milan. Court of the Palace.

Enter Proteus.

Pro. Already have I been false to Valentine,
And now I must be as unjust to Thurio,
Under the color of commending him,
I have access my own love to prefer;
But Silvia is too fair, too true, too holy,
To be corrupted with my worthless goods.
When I protest true fealty to her,
She twits me with my falsehood to my friend:
When to her beauty I commend my vows,
She bids me think, how I was once beforesworn
In breaking faith with Julia whom I love.
And, notwithstanding all her sudden quirks,
The least whereof would quell a lover's hope,
Yet, as the dawn that like the more she spurns my love,
The more it grows and fawneth on her still.
But here comes Thurio: now must we to her window,
And give some evening music to her ear.

Enter Thurio and Musicians.

Thur. How now, sir Proteus, are you crept before us?
Pro. Ay, gentle Thurio; for you know now, that love
Will creep in service where it cannot go.
Thur. Ay, but I hope, sir, that you love not here.
Pro. Sir, but I do; or else I would be hence.
Thur. Whom? Silvia!
Pro. Ay, Silvia, — for your sake.
Thur. I thank you for your own. Now, gentlemen,
Let's tune, and to it lustily a while.

Enter Host, at a distance; and Julia in boy's clothes.

Host. Now, my young guest! methinks you're all anlycholy; I pray you, why is it?
Jul. Marry, mine host, because I cannot be merry.
Host. Come, we'll have you merry: I'll bring you in, sir, shall bear music, and see the gentleman that you ask'd for.
Jul. But shall I hear him speak?
Host. Ay, that you shall.
Jul. That will be music.

[Music plays.

Host. Hark! hark!
Jul. Is he among these?
Host. Ay, but please, let's hear 'em.

SONG.

Who is Silvia? What is she?
Tell all our cousins commend her?
Holy, fair, and wise is she;
The heavens such grace did lend her,
That she might admired be.
Is she kind, as she is fair?
For beauty lives with kindness:
Love doth to her even repair.
To help him of his burdens;
And, being help'd, inhabits there.
Then to Silvia let us sing,
That Silvia is creating;
She careless all mortal things.
Upon the dull earth dwelling;
To her let us garlands bring.

Host. How now! are you slander than you were before!
How do you, man! the music likes you not.

[Passionate reproaches.

Jul. You mistake; the musician likes me not.
Host. Why, my pretty youth!
Jul. He praise, father.
Host. How! is it tune on the strings?
Jul. Not so; but yet so false that he grieves my very heart-strings.
Host. He will have a quick ear.
Jul. Ay, I would be deaf! it makes me have a sior heart.
Host. I perceive you delight not in music.
Jul. Not at all, when it jars so in my ear!
Host. Hark, what fine change is in the music!
Jul. Ay; that change is the spire.
Host. You would have them always play but one thing.
Jul. I would always have one play but one thing.
But, host, doth this sir Proteus, that we talk on,
Often resort unto this gentlewoman!
Host. I tell you what Launce, his man, told me,
He loved her out of all nick.

Jul. Where is Launce!
Host. Gone to seek his dog; which, to-morrow, by his master's command, he must carry for a present to his lady.
Jul. Peace! stand aside! the company parts.
Pro. Silvia, hear you not! I will so plead,
That you shall say, my cunning drunk excels.
Thur. Where meet we!
Pro. At saint Gregory's well.
Thur. Farewell.

[Exeunt Thurstio and Musicians.

Silvia appears above, at her window.

Sil. Madam, good even to your ladyship.
Sil. I thank you for your music, gentlemen:
Who is that, that spake?
Pro. One lady, if you knew his pure heart's truth,
You'd quickly learn to know him by his voice.
Sil. Sir Proteus, as I take it.
Pro. Sir Proteus, gentle lady, and your servant,
Sil. What is your will!
Pro. That I may compass yours,
Sil. You have your wish; my will is even this,—
That presently you hie you home to bed.
Thou subtle, perjur'd, false, disdainful man!
Think'st thou, I am so shallow, so conceitless,
To be seduced by thy flattery,
That hast deceived so many with thy vows!
Return, return, and make thy love amends.
For me,— by this pale queen of night I swear,
I can so far from granting thy request,
That I despise thee for thy wrongful suit;
And by and by intend to chide myself,
Even for this time I spend in talking to thee.
Pros. — My dear, sweet love, that I did love a lady,
But she is dead.
Jul. Twere false, if I should speak it;
For I am sure she is not buried.
[Saside.
Sil. Sir, she that she be; yet Valentine, thy friend,
Survives; to whom, thyself art witness,
I am betrothed: and art thou not ashamed
To wrong him with thy importunity!
Pros. — I Beside thee, what, Valentine is dead!
Sil. And so, suppose, am I; for in his grave
Assure thyself, my love is buried.
Pros. Sweet lady, let us take it from the earth.
Sil. Go to thy lady's grave, and call her thence;
Or, at the least, in her sepulchre thinke.
Jul. He heard not that.
[Aside.
Sil. Madam, if our heart be so obdurate,
Vouchsafe me yet your picture for my love;
The picture that is hanging in your chamber;
To that I'll speak, to that I'll sigh and weep;
For since the substance is of our perfect self
Is else devoted, I am but a shadow;
And to your shadow, I will make true love.
Jul. If here a substance, you would, sure, decease her.
And make it but a shadow, as I am.
Jul. I am very both to be your idol, sir;
But, since your falsehood shall become you well
To worship shadows, and adore false hopes,
Send to me in the morning, and I'll send it;
And so good rest.
Pros. — As wretches have o'er night,
That wait for execution in the morn.
[Exeunt Proteus, and Silvia from above.

[Beyond all reckoning.
Scene IV.

TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA.

JUL. Host, will you go?

Host. By my halloam, I was fast asleep.

JUL. Pray you, let me have the dog.

Host. Marry, at my house: Trust me, I think 'tis almost day.

JUL. No; but it hath been the longest night
That e'er I watch'd, and the most heaviest. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.

The same.

Enter Eglamour.

Egl. This is the hour that madam Silvia

Entreated me to call and know her mind;

There's some great matter she'd employ me in.—

Madam, madam!

Silvia appears above, at her window.

Sir. Who calls?

Egl. Your servant, and your friend;

One that attends your ladyship's command.

Sir. Sir Eglamour, a thousand times good-morrow.

Egl. As many, worthy lady, to yourself.

According to your ladyship's import, I

Am thus early come, to know what service
It is your pleasure to command me in.

Sir. Sir Eglamour, thou art a gentle gentleman (Think not I flatter, for I swear I do not.)

Valiant, wise, remorseful, well accomplished.

Thou art not ignorant, what dear good will

I have in the name of Valentine.

Nor how my father would enforce me marry

Vain Thurio, whom my very soul abhorreth.

Thyself hast said; and I have heretofore say'd,

Nothing but such as thou hast said of her,

As when thy lady and thy true love died,

Upon whose grave thou vow'dst pure chastity.

Sir Eglamour, I would to Valentine,

To Marsup, where, I hear, he makes abode;

And, for the ways are dangerous to pass,

I do desire thy worthy company,

Upon whose faith and honour I repose.

Not yet my father's anger, Eglamour,

But think upon my grief, a lady's grief;

And on the justice of my flying hence,

To keep me from a most unhappy match,

Which heaven and fortune still reward with plagues.

I do desire thee, even from a heart

As full of sorrows as the sea of sands

To bear me company, and go with me;

Not to hide what I have said to thee,

That I may venture to depart alone.

Egl. Madam, I pity much your grievance;

Whereof I know they will virtuous place,

I give consent to go along with you;

Recking as little what betideth me,

As much I wish all good befell you.

When will you go?

Sil. This evening coming.

Egl. Where shall I meet you?

Sil. At fair Patrick's cell.

Egl. Where I intend holy confession.

Sil. I will not fail your ladyship:

Good-morrow, gentle lady.

Sil. Good-morrow, kind sir Eglamour. [Exeunt.]

Scene IV.

The same.

Enter Launce, with his dog.

When a man's servant shall play the cur with him, look, you go hard: one that I brought up of a puppy; one that I saved from drowning when they threw a hound's hair on him. My master and his sisters were fond to it! I have taught him—even as one would say precisely, Thus I would teach a dog. I was sent to deliver him, as a present to mistress Silvia, from my master and his sisters, and I put his name into the dining-chamber, but he stepped me to her trencher, and steals her capon's leg. O, 'tis a foul thing when a cur cannot keep himself in all companies! I was sent to deliver him, one would take upon him to be a dog indeed, to be, as it were, a dog at all things. If I had not had more wit than he, to take a fault upon me that he did, I think not he had been a greater thief. As I love, he had suffered for it; you shall judge. He thrusts me himself into the company of three or four gentleman-like

Holy dame, blessed lady.

Injunction, command, Compassionate.

*Caring.

Beast, dogs, under the duke's table; he had not been there (bless the mark!) a passing while; but all the chamber, says one; What cur is that? says another; Whimp him out, says the third; Hang him up, says the duke, I, having been acquainted with a smell betimes, knew it was Crab; and goes me to the fellow that whips the dogs: Friend, quoth I, you mean to whip the dog? Ay, marry, do I, quoth he. You do him the more wrong, quoth I. And I said the thickest of all. He makes me no more ado, but whips me out of the chamber. How many masters would do this for their servant! Nay, I'll be sworn, I have sat in the stocks for piddling he hath stolen, otherwise he had been executed: I have stood on the pillory for gree he hath killed, otherwise he had suffered for it: 'tis think not of this now! — Nay, I look upon the man serves now, when I look my leave of madam Silvia; did not I bid thee still mark me, and do as I do? When didst thou see me heave up my leg, and make water against a gentlewoman's tartangale? didst thou ever see me do such a trick?

Enter Proteus and Julia.

Pro. Sebastian is thy name? I like thee well,

And will employ thee in some service presently. I will never make thee afraid.—

JUL. Sir, I will, sir; I will.

Pro. I hope thou wilt.—How now, you whoreson peasant! [To Launce.]

Where have you been these two days hindered?

Lau. Nay, sir, I carried mistress Silvia

The dog you bade me.

Pro. And what says she to my little jewel!

Lau. Sir, she says, your dog was a cur;

And tells you, curish thanks is good enough for such a present.

Pro. But she received my dog?

Lau. No, indeed; she did not: here have I brought him back again.

Pro. What, didst thou offer her this from me?

Lau. Ay, sir; the other squrell was stolen from me by the harsmann's boys in the street: and then I entered her mine own; who is a dog as big as ten of yours, and therefore the gift the greater.

Pro. Go, get thee hence, and find my dog again,

Or else return again into my sight.

Away, I say: stay at thon to vex me here!

A slave, that, still an end, turns me to shame. [Exit Launce.]

Sebastian. I have entertained thee,

Partly, that I have need of such a youth,

That can with some discretion do my business,

For 'tis no trusting to you foolish boy:

But, cherish him, and make good and honest behavior;

Which (if my anger deceive me not)

Witness good bringing up, fortune, and truth:

Therefore know thou, for this I entertain thee.

Go present and take this ring with thee,

Deliver it to madam Silvia:

She loved me well, deliver it to me.

Jul. It seems you loved her not, to leave her thus, and like, belike.

Pro. Not so; I think, she lives.

Jul. Alas! Why dost thou cry, alas?

Pro. I cannot choose but pity her.

Pro. Wherefore shouldst thou pity her?

Jul. Because, methinks, that she lov'd you as well

As you do love your hand between your sisters and Silvia;

She dreams on him, that has forgot her love;

You dote on her, that cares not for your love;

_Tis pity, love should be so contrary;

And thinking on it makes me cry, alas!

Pro. Well, give her that ring, and therewithal

This letter; — That's her chamber.—Tell my lady

I claim the promise for her proper heavenly picture.

Your servant done, he went unhappily to chambers,

Where thou shalt find me sad and solitery. [Exit Proteus.]

Jul. How many women would do such a message! Alas, poor Proteus! I am not a strong heart;

A fox to be the shepherd of thy fawns: Alas, poor fool! why do I pity him?

That with his very heart despeareth me

Because he loves her, he despiseth me; —

_So ends the play._
ACT V.

SCENE I.—The same. An Abbey.

Enter Eglanour.

Egl. The sun begins to glide the western sky;
And now, it is about the very hour
That Silvia, at Patrick's cell, should meet me.
She will not fail; for hours break not hours,
Unless it be to come before their time;
So much they spur their expedition

Enter Sitein.

Site. See, where she comes! Lady, a happy evening!

Sil. Amen, amen! go on, good Eglanour!
Out at the postern by the abbey wall;
I fear I am attended by some spies.

Egl. Fear not: the forest is not three leagues off;
If we recover that, we are sure enough. [Exeunt.

Jul. She hath been fairest, madam, than she is:
When did I think my master loved her well,
She, in my judgment, was as fair as you?
But since she did neglect her looking-glass,
And threw her sun-expelling mask away,
The rose-buds with the roses in her cheeks,
And pinch'd the fly-ittance of her face,
That now she is become as black as I.
Jul. How tall was she?
Jul. About my stature: for at Pentecost,
When all our paucants of delight were play'd,
Our youth got me to play the woman's part,
And I was trimm'd in madam Julia's gown;
And Whelp served me as the fit, by all men's judgment.
As if the garment had been made for me:
Therefore I know she is about my height.
And, at that time, I made her weep a good,
For I did play a lamentable part:
Madam, twas Arinade, passioning
For Thesuc's perfurjy, and unjust right;
Which I so lively acted with my tears,
That my poor mistress, moved therewithal,
Wept bitterly; and, would I might be dead,
If in my thought felt not her very sorrow!
Sil. She is behelthen to thee, gentle youth!—
Alas, poor lady! desolate and lost!
I weep myself to think upon thy words.
Here, youth, there is my purse; I give thee this
For the sweet mistress sake, because thou lov'st her.
Farewell. [Exit SILVIA.

Jul. And she shall thank you for it, if ever you know her.—
A virtuous gentlemwoman, mild, and beautiful,
I hope my master's suit will be but cold,
Since she respects my mistress' love so much.
Alas, how love can trouble with itself!
Here is her picture: Let me see; I think,
If I had such a face, this face of mine
Were full as lovely as is this of hers;
And yet the painter flatter'd her a little,
Unless I flatter with myself too much.
Her hair is auburn, mine is perfect yellow:
If that be all the difference in his love,
I'll get me such a color'd periwig,
Her eyes are grey as glass; and so are mine:
Ay, but her forehead low, and mine as high.
What should it be, that he respects in her,
But I can make respective in myself,
If this fond love were not a blinded god?
Come, shadow, come, and take this shadow up,
For 'tis thy rival. O thou senseless form,
Then shall the world be sad, thy beauty
And, were there sense in his dultery,
My substance should be stature in thy stead.
I'll use thee kindling mistress' sake,
That used me so; or else, by love I vow,
I should have scratch'd out your unseeing eyes,
To make my master out of love with thee. [Exit.
Scene IV.
TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA.

For I had rather wink than look on them. [Aside.

Pro. Ill, when you talk of war.

That. But well, when I discourse of love, and peace.

Jul. But better, indeed, when you hold your peace.

That. What says she to my valor?

Pro. O, sir, she makes no doubt of that.

Jul. She needs not, when she knows it cowardice.

That. What says she to my birth?

Pro. That you are well derived.

Jul. True; from a gentleman to a fool. [Aside.

That. Considers she my possessions!

Pro. O, ay; and pities them.

That. Wherefore?

Jul. That such an ass should own them. [Aside.

That. That they are out by lease.

Jul. Here comes the duke.

Enter Duke.

Duke. How now, sir Proteus? how now, Thurbio? Which of you saw sir Eglamour of late?

That. Not I.

Duke. Nor I.

Pro. Duke. Saw you my daughter?

Pro. Duke. Why, then, she's fled unto that peasant Valentine.

And Eglamour is in her company.

'Tis true; for faire Laurence met them both.
As he in penance wand'ring through the forest:
He him knew well, and guessed that it was she;
But, being mask'd, he was not sure of it:
Besides, she did intend confession.
At Patrick's cell this even; and there she was not:
Those likelihoods confirm her flight from hence.
Therefore, I pray you, stand not to discourse,
But mount you presently; and meet with me
Upon the rising of the mountain foot
That leads towards Mantua, where they are fled:
Dread not, sweet gentlewomen, and follow me. [Exit.

Thy. Why, this it is to be a peevish girl,
That thieves fortune when it follows her:
I'll alter, more to be revenged on Eglamour,
Than for the love of reckless Silvia. [Exit.

Pro. And I will follow, more for Silvia's love,
Than hate of Eglamour, that goes with her. [Exit.

Jul. And I will follow, more to cross that love,
Than hate for Silvia, that is gone for love. [Exit.

Scene III.—Frontiers of Mantua. The Forest.

Enter Silvia and Outlaws.

Out. Come, come;
Be patient, we must bring you to our captain.

1 Out. A thousand more mischances than this one
Have learn'd me how to brook this patiency.

2 Out. Come, bring her away.

1 Out. Where is the gentleman that was with her?

3 Out. Being nimble-fisted, he hath out-run us,
But Moyse, and Valerian, follow him.

Go thou with her to the west end of the wood,
There is our captain; we'll follow that's fled:
The licent is best, he cannot escape.

1 Out. Come, I must bring you to our captain's cave;
Fear not; he bears an honorable mind,
And will not use a woman lawlessly.

Sil. O Valentine, this endure for thee! [Exeunt.

Scene IV.—Another part of the Forest.

Enter Valentine.

Val. How use doth breed a habit in a man!
This shadowy desert, unpeopled woods,
I better brook than flourishing populous towns;
Here can I sit alone, unseen of any,
And, to the nightingale's melodious notes,
These my despatching, and record my woes,
O thou that dost inhabit in my breast,
Leave not the mansion so long vacantless;
Lest, growing runious, the building fall,
And leave no memory at what it was,
Repair me with thy presence, Silvia;
Thou gentle nymph, cherish thy forlorn swain—
What building, and what stir this to-day?

[Own. 'Carolus.

Sing.

These are my mates, that make their wills their law,
Have some unhappy passenger in chase:
Tell I love well, you have much to do,
To keep them from uncivil outzises.
Withdraw thee, Valentine: who's this cometh here! [Stops aside.

Enter Proteus, Silvia, and Julia.

Pro. Madam, this service I have done for you,
(Though you respect not aught your servant doth)
To hazard life, and rescue you from him
That would have forc'd your honor and your love
You weree made for my service but one fair look;
A smaller boon than this I cannot he.
And less than this, I am sure, you cannot give.
Val. How like a dream is this I see and hear!
Love, lend me patience to forbear a while. [Aside.
Sil. O miserable, unhappy that I am!

Pro. Unhappy were you, madam, ere I came;
But, by my coming, I have made you happy.
Sil. By thy approach thou mak'st me most unhappy.

Jul. And me, when he approacheth to your presence.

[Aside.

Sil. Had I been seized by a hungry lion,
I would have been a breakfast to the beast,
Rather than have false Proteus rescue me.

Heaven be the judge bow I love Valentine,
Whose Life's as tender to me as my soul;
And full as much (for more there cannot be)
I do detest false perch'd Proteus,
Therefore be gone, solicited me no more.

Pro. What dangerous action, stood it next to death,
Would I not undergo for one calm look?
'Tis for the curse in love, and still approv'd.
When women cannot love where they're behold;

Sil. When Proteus cannot love where he's behold.

Read over, Joel's heart, thy first best love,
For whose dear sake thou didst then rend thy faith
Into a thousand oaths; and all those oaths
Descended into perjury, to love me.
Thou hast no faith left now, unless thou hast two,
And that's far worse than none; better have none
Than plural faith, which is too much by one: Thou countercustomed to thy true friend!

In love,
Who respects friend?

Sil. All men but Proteus.

Pro. Nay, if the gentle spirit of moving words
Can no way change you to a mild form,
I'll woo you like a soldier, at arms' end;
And love you against the nature of love, force you.
Sil. O heaven! [Aside.

Pro. I'll force thee yield to my desire.
Val. Ruffian, let go that rude uncivil touch;
Thou friend of an ill fashion!

Pro. Valentine!

Val. Thou common friend, that's without faith or love,
(For such is a friend now,) treacherous man!
Thou hast bezold'd my hopes; though but mine eye
Could have persuaded me: Now I dare not say
I have one friend alive; thou wouldst disprove me.
Who should be trusted now, when one's right hand
Is perjurd to the bosom! Proteus, I am sorry
I must never trust thee more.

But count the world a stranger for thy sake.
The private wounding is deepest: O time, most cruel!
Mongst all the foes, that a friend should be the worst!

Pro. My shame and guilt confound me.
Forgive me, Valentine: if hearty sorrow
Be a sufficient ransom for offence,
I tender thee there: I do as truly suffer,
As ever I did commit.

Val. Then I am paid.

And once again I do receive thee honest:—
Who by reproof is not satisfied,
Is nor of heaven, nor earth; for these are plea'd;
By penitence the Eternal's wrath's appeas'd:—
And, that my love may appear plain and free,
That was mine in Silvia, I give thee.

Sil. O unhappy! [Faints.

Pro. Look to the boy.

Val. Why, boy! why, wag! how now? what is the matter?

[Exit Proteus with Silvia

Sed. Felt, experienced.
TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA.

Act V.

Look up! speak.

Jul. O good sir, my master charg'd me
To deliver a ring to madam Silvia;
Which, out of my neglect, was never done.

Pro. Where is that ring, boy?

Jul. Here 'tis: this is it. [Gives a ring.

Pro. How! let me see;
Why this is the ring I gave to Julia.
Jul. O, cry your mercy, sir; I have mistook;
This is the ring you sent to Silvia.

Pro. But, how came'st thou by this ring? at my depart, I gave this unto Julia,

Jul. And Julia herself did give it me;
And Julia herself hath brought it hither.

Pro. How? Julia!

Jul. Behold her that gave aim to all thy oaths,
And entertain'd them deeply in her heart:
How oft hast thou with perjury cleat the root?
O Proteus, let this habit make thee blush!
Be thou ashamed, that I have took upon me
Such an inofficious raiment; if shame live
In a disguise of love:
It is the lesser blot, modesty finds,

Women to change their shapes, than men their minds.

Pro. Than men their minds! 'tis true: O heaven!

But constant, he was perfect: that one error
Fills him with faults; makes him run through all sins;

Inconstancy falls off, ere it begins:
What is in Silvia's face, but I may spy
More fresh in Julia's with a constant eye?

Vlt. Come, come, a hand from either:
Let me be best to make this happy close;
'Twere pity two such friends should be long foes.

Pro. Bear witness, heaven, I have my wish for ever.

Jul. And I have mine.

Enter Outlaws, with Duke and Thurio.

Out. A prize, a prize, a prize!

Vlt. Forbear, I say; it is my lord the duke.
Your grace is welcome to a man disgrac'd;

Banish'd Valentine.

Duke. Sir Valentine!

Thur. Yonder is Silvia; and Silvia's mine.

Vlt. Thurio, give back, or else embrace thy death;

[Exit.

An allusion to cleaving the pin in archery.

Come not within the measure of my wrath;
Do not name Silvia thine; if once again,
Milan shall not behold thee. Here she stands
Take but possession of her with a touch;—
I dare thee but to breathe upon my love,—

Thu. Sir Valentine, I care not for her, I;
I hold him but a fool, that will endanger
His body for a girl that loves him not.
I claim her not, and therefore she is thine.

Duke. The more degenerate and base a'thou,
To make such means for her as thou hast done,
And leave her on such slight conditions.—
Now, by the honor of my ancestry,
I appeal thy spirit, Valentine,
And think thee worthy of an empress' love.
Know then, I here forget all former griefs,
Cancel all grudge, repel thee home again.—
Plead a new state in thy unrivall'd merit,
To which I thus subscribe,—sir Valentine,
Thou art a gentleman, and well deriv'd;
Take thou thy Silvia, for thou hast deserved her.

Vlt. I thank your grace; the gift hath made me happy.

I now beseech you, for your daughter's sake,
To grant one boon that I shall ask of you.

Duke. I grant it, for thine own, whatever it be.

Vlt. These banish'd men, that I have kept withal,
Are men endued with worthy qualities;
Forbear them what they have committed here,
And let them be recall'd from their exile:
They are reformed, civil, full of good,
And fit for great employment, worthy lord.

Duke. Thou hast prevail'd: I pardon them, and thee;
Dispose of them, as thou know'st their deserts.
Come, let us go; we will include all jars
With triumphs, mirth, and rare solemnity.

Vlt. And, as we walk along, I dare be bold,
With our discourse to make your grace to smile:
What think you of this page, my lord?

Duke. I think the boy hath grace in him: he blushes.

Vlt. I warrant you, my lord; more grace than boy.

Duke. What mean you by that saying?

Vlt. Please you, I'll tell you as we pass along,
That you will wonder what hath forsworn;—
Come, Proteus; 'tis your penance, but to hear
The story of your loves discovered:
That done, our day of marriage shall be yours;
One feast, one house, one mutual happiness.

[Exeunt.
MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR.

PERSONS REPRESENTED.

Sir John Falstaff.
Fenton.
Shallow, a country Justice.
Slender, cousin to Shallow.
Mr. Ford;
Mr. Page;
William Page, a Boy, son to Mr. Page.
Sir Hugh Evans, a Welsh Parson.
Dr. Caius, a French Physician.
Host of the Garter Inn.
Bartholomew Pistol.
Nym;
Followers of Falstaff.

SCENE, Windsor; and the parts adjacent.

ACT I.

Enter Justice Shallow, Slender, and Sir Hugh Evans.

Shal. Sir Hugh, persuade me not; I will make a Star-chamber matter of it; if he were twenty su John Falstaffs, he shall not abuse Robert Shallow, esquire.

Sten. In the county of Gloster, justice of peace and coroner.

Shal. Ay, cousin Slender, and Custos Rotulorum, 2

Sten. Ay, and radulatorum too; and a gentleman born, master person; who writes himself armigerous in any bill, warrant, quittance, or obligation, armigerus.

Shal. Ay, that we do: and have done any time those three hundred years.

Sten. All his successors, gone before him, have done; and all his ancestors, that came after him, may: they may give the dozen white laces in their cloak.

Shal. It is an old cloak.

Eva. The dozen white laces do become an old cloth well; it agrees well, passant; it is a familiar beast to man, and signifies — love.

Sten. The lace is the fresh fish; the salt fish is an old cloth.

Shal. I may quarter, coz!

Shal. You may, by marrying.

Eva. It is marrying indeed, if he quarter it.

Shal. Not a whit.

Eva. Yes, my lady; if he has a quarter of your cloth, there is but three skirts for himself, in my simple conjecture; but this is all one: if Sir

John Falstaff have committed disapprobations unto, I am of the church, and will be glad to do my benevolence, to make atonements and compromises between you.

Shal. The Council shall hear it; it is a riot.

1 A title formerly appropriated to chaplains.

2 Custos Rotulorum.

3 By our.

Eva. It is not meet the Council hear a riot; there is no fear of God in a riot; the Council, look you, shall desire to hear the fear of God, and not to hear a riot; take your vainments in that.

Shal. Ha! o’ my life, if I were young again, the sword should end it.

Eva. It is better that friends is the sword, and end it; and there is also another device in my pram, which, peradventure, prings good discretions with it:

There is Anne Page, which is daughter to master George Page, which is pretty virginity.

Shen. Mistress Anne Page! She has brown hair, and speaks small like a woman.

Eva. It is that very person for all the world, as just as you will desire: and seven hundred pounds of monies, and gold, and silver, is her grandis, upon his death’s bed (God deliver to a joyful resur-estion!) gave, when she is able to overtake seventeen years old: it were a good motion, if we leave our prickles and prubbles, and desire a marriage between master Abraham and mistress Anne Page.

Shal. Dull her grandis, leave her seven hundred pounds!

Eva. Ay, and her father is make her a better penny.

Shal. I know the young gentlewoman; she has good gifts.

Eva. Seven hundred pounds, and possibilities, is good gifts.

Shal. Well, let us see honest master Page: Is Falstaff there?

Eva. Shall I tell you a lie? I do despise a liar, as I do despise one that is false; or as I despise one that is not true. The knight, sir John, is there;

and, I beseech you, be ruled by your well-willers.

I will pate the door (knocks) for master Page.

What, hoa! press your house here!

Enter Page.

Page. Who’s there?

Eva. Hero is God’s blessing, and your friend,

* Advisement.
and justice Shallow; and here young master Slender; that peradventures shall tell you another tale, if matters grow to your likings.

Fal. And glad to see your worshhips well: I thank you for your venison, master Shallow.

Shaft. Master Page, I am glad to see you; Much good venison is your good hand! I wish'd your venison better; it was ill-killed;—How doth good master Slender Page!— and I love you always with my heart; ha, with my heart.

Fal. Sir, I thank you.

Shaft. Sir, I thank you; by yea and no, I do. I am glad to see you, good master Slender.

Fal. It could not be judged, sir.

Stenn. You'll not confess, you'll not confess; That he will not;—his you fault;— This is a good dog.

Fal. A cur, sir.

Stenn. Sir, he's a good dog, and a fair dog: Can there be more said! he is good, and fair.— Is sir John Falstaff here?

Fal. Sir, he is within; and I would I could do a good business between you.

Shaft. It is spoken as a Christian ought to speak. A gentleman hath wrong'd me, master Page.

Stenn. Sir, he deth in some sort confesses it.

Shaft. If he be confess'd, it is not redress'd; is not that the way?— and be the heath right me;—indeed, he hath;—at a word, he hath,—believe me;—Robert Shallow, esquire, saith, he is wrong'd.

Enter Sir John Falstaff, Bardolph, Nym, and Pistol.

Fal. Now, master Shallow; you'll complain of me to the king?

Shaft. Knight, you have beaten my men, killed my deer, and broke open my house; and against you came the most mischievous rascal, Bardolph, Nym, and Pistol. They carried me to the tavern, and made me drunk, and afterwards picked my pocket.

Bard. Youバンバリーの食べ物。

Stenn. Ay, it is no matter.

Pist. How now, now, Mephostophilus?

Stenn. Ay, it is no matter.

Nym. Slic:e, I say, pautco, puce; slice—that's my humor.

Stenn. Where's Simple, my man!—can you tell, cousin?

Eva. Peace! I pray you! Now let us understand: There is three umpires in this matter as I understand; that is—master Page, Frelleth, master Page; and there is myself, Frellet myself; and the three party is, lastly and finally, mine host of the Garter.

Fal. Page. We three, to hear it, and end it between them.

Eva. Very good: I will make a brief of it in my note-book; and we will afterwards 'ork upon the cause, with as great discreetly as we can.

Fal. Pistol. He hears with ears.

Eva. The devil and his tam! what phrase is this, he hears with ear? Why, it is affectations.

Fal. Pistol, did you pick master Slender's purse?

Hoods, these gloves, did he, (or I would I might never come in mine own great chamber again else,) of seven groats in muff-sixpences, and two Edward shovell-cordier that rost me two shillings and two pieces twenty-pieces of do. brothers, by these gloves.

Eva. Cotswold in Gloucestershire.

* Words was the ancient name of all the rubbish kind.

* Sharpens.

* Nothing but paring!

* The name of an evil spirit.

* King Edward's shilling used in the game of shuffle-board.

Fal. Is this true, Pistol?

Eva. No; it is false, if it is a pick-purse.

Fal. Ha, thou mountain-foreigner?—Sir John, I combat challenge of this laten hitto:

Word of denial in the tabras here;

Word of denial: fresh and scum, then fistic.

Stenn. Nam. Be advised, sir, and pass good humors: I will say, marry, trap, with you if you run the not-hom, and be one. that is the very note of it.

Stenn. By the hand, then he in the bed had it foi: though I cannot remember what I did when you made me drunk, yet I am not altogether an ass.

Fal. Why, sir, saith you, it is not a piece of Scarlet and bar.

Stenn. Why, sir, for my part, I say, the gentleman had drunk himself out of his five sentences.

Eva. It is his five senses: he, what the ignorance.

Stenn. And being fap, sir, as they say, cashier'd; and so conclusions pass'd the careness.

Stenn. Ay, you speak in Latin then too; but its no matter: I'll never be drunk whilst I live again but in honest, civil, godly company, for this trick; if I be drunk, I'll be drunk with those that have the fear of God, and not with drunken knives.

Fal. Page. Wife, bid these gentleman welcome:—

Come, we have a hot venison pasty to dinner; come, gentlemen, I hope we shall drink down all mistrice.

Fal. Page. Enter all but Shal, Slender, and Evan.

Stenn. I had rather than forty shillings, I had my book of songs and Sonnets here:—

Enter Simple.

Jailor. Now, simple! where have you been! I must wait on myself, must I? You have not The Book of Ribbles about you, have you?

Eva. Sir, was I, sir, Sir Ribby not? why, did you not lend it to Alice Shortcake upon Allhallowmas last, a fortnight afore Michaelmas!?

Stenn. shall, come, ooz, come; ooz; we stay for you. A word of you, ooz; ooz, marry, this ooz; There is, as were a tender, a kind of tender, made afar off by sir Hugh here;—Do you understand me?

Stenn. Ay, sir, you shall find me reasonable; if it be so, I shall do that is reason.

Stenn. Nay, but understand me.

Stenn. So I do, sir.

Eva. Give ear to his motions, master Slender: I will inform the matter to you, if you be capacity of it.

Stenn. Nay, I will do as my cousin Shallow says: I pray you, pardon me; he's a justice of peace in his county all simple though I stand here.

Eva. But this is not the question; the question is concerning your marriage.

Shallow. You're the right point, sir.

Eva. Marry, is it; the very point of it; to mistress Anne Page.

Stenn. Why, if it be so, I will marry her, upon any reasonable demands.

Eva. But can you affectation the 'oman? Let us command to know that of your mouth, or of your lips; for divers philosophers hold, that the lips is parted, the heart is not. Therefore, precisely, can you carry your good will to the maid?

Shall. Cousin Abraham Slender, can you love her?

Eva. Nay, I hope, sir,—I will do, as it shall become one that would do reason.

Eva. Nay, God's lords and his ladies! you must

* Blade as thin as a latch.

* Lips.

* If you say I am a thief.

* Drink.

House, which is the way: and there dwells one mistresse (Queen), by which is the manner of his nurse, or his dry nurse, or his cook, or his Laundry, his washer, and his wringer.

Sir. Well, sirs.

Earl. Nay, now it is better yet:—give her this letter; for it is a token in that altogether's acquaintance with mistresse Anne Page; and the letter is to desire and to require her to solicit your master's desires to mistresse Anne Page; I pray you become: I will make an end of my dinner; there's pippins and chelse to come.

[Exeunt.]

scene iii.—A Room in the Garter Inn.

Enter Falstaff, Host, Bardolph, Nym, Pistol, and Robin.

Fal. Mine host of the Garter.—

Host. What says my bully-rook?—Speak soberly, and wisely.

Fal. Truly, mine host, I must turn away some of my followers.

Host. Discard, bully Hercules; cashier: let them was: trot, trot.

Fal. I sit at ten pounds a week.

Host. Thou art an emperor, a Caesar, Keiser, and Phæazar. I will entertain Bardolph; he shall draw, he shall tap: say I well, bully Hector!—

Fal. Do as good mine host.

Host. I have spoke; let him follow: Let me see thine froth, and hine: I am at a word, follow. [Exit Host.]

Fal. Bardolph, follow him; a tapster is a good trade; an old choker makes a new perkin; a wherered serving-man, a fresh tapster; Go, adum.

Bar. It is a life that I have desired; I will thrive.

Host. [Exit Host.]

Pist. O base Gongarian! what! wilt thou the spirit yield?—

Nym. He was drunk in drink; is not the humor conceited? His mind is not heroic, and there's the humor of it.

Fal. I am glad I am so acquitt of this under-bix: his threats were too open: his foolish was like an unskillful singer, he kept not time.

Nym. The good humor is, so to speak at a minute's rest.

Pist. Convoy, the wise it call: Steel! foll, a face for the phrase!

Host. Well, sirs, I am almost out at heels.

Pist. Why then let knaves ensue.

Fal. There is no remedy; I must coven-catch; I must shift.

Pist. Young ravens must have food.

Host. Which of you know Ford of this town?—

Pist. I ken of them; it is a bad hun-tance good. My honest lads, I will tell you what I am about.

Fal. Two yards and more.

Nym. No quips now, Pistol; indeed I am in the waist two yards about; but I am now about no waste: I am about thrift. Briefly, I do mean to make love to Ford's wife; I spy entertainment in her; she discourses, she carves, she gives the lieu of invitation; I can construe the action of her familiar style; and the hardest voice of her behavior, to be English'd rightly, is, I am Sir John Falstaff.]

Pist. He hath studied her well, and translated her well; out of honesty into English.

Nym. The anchor is deep; will that humor pass?

Fal. Now, to prepare goes, she has all the rule of her husband's purse; she hath legions of angels.

Pist. As many devils entertain; and, To her, ban, say not. Nym. The humor rises; it is good: humor me the angels.

Fal. I have writ me here a letter to her: and here another to Page's wife: who ever so good ever examined my parts with most judicious evilsh: sometimes the beam of her view girded my foot, sometimes my porky belly.

Pist. Then did the sun on dunghill shine.

Nym. I thank thee for that humor.

Fal. O, she did so course o'er my exteriors with such a greedy intention, that the appetite of her eye did seem to stretch me up like a burning-chest! Here's another letter to her: she bears the purse too; she is a region in Guinea, all gold and bounty. I will, therefore, betheir both, and they shall be exchequers to me; they shall be my East and West Indies, and I will trade to them both. Go, bear this letter to mistress Page; and then this to mistress Warren, for I shall will thrive, lady, we will thrive.

[For Hungarian.  ① Fig.  ② Gold Coin.  ③ Eyes]

Psal. Shall I or Pandarus of Troy become, And by my side wear stee! then, Lucifer take all!

_Nya._ I will run no base honor; here, take the letter; I will keep the favor of reputation.

_Pat._ Hold, sirrah; [To ROB._ bear you these letters tightly?

Sail like ye pinnaces on these golden shores— Reigns, herds, dominions! vanish like haut-stools, go; Trudge, plod away, o' the hoof; seek shelter, pack! Falstaff will learn the humor of this age, French thrift, you know myself, and skirted page.

[Exeunt Falstaff and Robin.

_Pat._ Let vultures grape thy guts! for gourd and fullman hold, And high and low beside the rich and poor; Tester I'll have in pouch, when thou shalt lack, Base Thyrian Turk!

_Nya._ I have operations in my head, which be honors of revenge.

_Pat._ Wilt thou revenge?

_Nya._ By welling, and her star!

_Pat._ With wit, or steel, My master will be in both the honors. I: I will discuss the humor of this love to Page. And I to Ford shall e'ee unhold, How Falstaff, varlet vile, To the dove will prove, his gold will hold, And his soft couch define.

_Nya._ My humor shall not cool: I will incense Page to deal with poison; I will possess him with Yellowness, for the recoil of men is dangerous; that is my true humor.

_Pat._ Thou art the Mars of malcontents; I second thee; troop on.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV. — A Room in Dr. Caius' House.

_Enter Mrs. QUICKLY, SIMELE, and RUGBY._

Quick. What? John Rugby! — I pray thee, go to the casement, and see if you can see my master, master doctor Caius, coming: if he do, I'll tell him, and find any body in the house, here will be an old abasing of God's patience, and the king's English.

Rug. I'll go watch.

_Earl Rugby._

_Quick._ Go; and we'll have a posset for 't soon at night, at the latter end of a sea-coal fire. An honest, willing, kind fellow, as ever servent shall come in a house, and he is, I warrant you, no tell-tale, nor no breed-bate: his worst fault is, that he is given to prayer; he is something pecuniad that way; but nobody but has his fault; — but let that pass. Peter Simple, you say you, vif, and named peace.

_Sim._ Ay, for fault of a better.

Quick. And master Sheldrake's your master?

_Sim._ Ay, forsooth.

Quick. Does he not wear a great round beard, like a grover's paring knife?

_Sim._ No, forsooth; he hath but a little wee face, with a little yellow beard; a Cano-colored beard.

_Quick._ He is a preened-man, is he not?

_Sim._ Ay, forsooth, he is as tall a man of his hands, as any is between this and his head; he hath a hand in a warreight.

Quick. How say you? — O, I should remember him; does he not hold up his head, as it were! and strut in his gait?

_Sim._ Yes, and does he.

Quick. Well, heaven send Anne Page no worse fortune. Tell master parson Evans, I will do what I can for your master; Anne is a good girl, and I wish —

_Re-enter Rugby._

Rug. Out, alas! here comes my master.

Quick. Well, shall we be short? Run in here,

_Escaphour, an officer in the Exchequer.

_Cleverly.

_Skipper._ I will have in pocket.

_Instigate.

_Hoodey.

_Quick._ Brave.

good young man; go into this closet. [Shut's Simple to the closet.] He will not stay long here. What, John Rugby! John, what, John? I say! — Go, John, go enquire for my master; I doubt he be not well, for he comes not home: and down, down, down, away, away, &c. [Sings.

_Enter Doctor CAIUS._

_Caius._ Vat is you sing! I do not like these toys; Pray you, go, and vetch me in my closet un bother vird; a box, a green-a box; Do intend vat I speak! a green-a box.

_Quick._ Ay forsooth, I'll fetch it you. I am glad he went not in himself; if he had found the young man, he would have horn-mad. [Aside.

_Caius._ Fers, fers, fers! me foi, I 'sall fort chalk. Je m'en vais a la cour, — in grande aquare.

_Quick._ Is it this, sir? _Caius._ It's not in my own pocket; Diptyche quiedy,— Verre is dat knave Rugby? _Quick._ What, John Rugby! John! _Rug._ Here, sir. _Caius._ You are John Rugby, and you are Jack Rugby; Come, take-a your rapier, and come after my heel to de court.

_Rug._ 'Tis ready, sir, here in the porch. _Caius._ Yes, but, sir; I larry too long. Off's me! Qu' appel ombre? dere is some simples in my closet, dat I vill not for the vorld I shall leave behind. _Quick._ Ah me! he'll find the young man there, and be folke aile.

_Caius._ O diable, diable! vat is in my closet? — Villany! laron! [Putting Simple out.] Rugby, my rapiers.

_Quick._ Good master, be content. _Caius._ Verefore shall I be content-a.

_Quick._ The young man is an honest man. _Caius._ Vat shall de honest man do in my closet? dere is de honest man dat shall come in my closet. _Quick._ I beseech you, be not so legomettac; bear the truth of it. He came of an errand to me from parson Humfrey. _Caius._ Very well.

_Quick._ Ay, forsooth, to desire her to — _Caius._ Peace, sir, I pray you.

_Quick._ Be not in your tortunge,—Speak-a your tale.

_Quick._ To desire this honest gentlewoman, your maid, to speak a good word to mistress Anne Page for my master, in the way of marriage.

_Quick._ This is all, indeed, ba; but I'll never put my fingers in the fire, and need not.

_Caius._ Sir Hugh send-a you? — Rugby, baiitez me some paper; — Tarry you a little while.

_Writes._

_Quick._ I am glad he is so quiet: if he had been thoroughly moved, you should have heard him so loud, and so melancholy: — but notwithstanding, — but notwithstanding, — but notwithstanding, — but notwithstanding. If I can drink the very yea and the no is, the French doctor, my master,—I may call him my master, look you, for I keep his house; and I wash, wring, sew, bake, scour, dress meat and drink, make the beds, and do all myself; —

_Sim._ 'Tis a great charge, to come under one body's hand.

_Quick._ Are you avis'd o' that? you shall find it a great charge: and to be up early and down late: — but notwithstanding, (to tell you in your ear, I would not take it) my master himself is in love with mistress Anne Page; but notwithstanding that,—I know Anne's mind,—that's neither here nor there.

_Caius._ Be not a jack-nape; give dis letter to sir Hugh; by gar, it is a challenge; I will cut his throat in de park; and I will teach a scurry jack-a-nape priest to meddle or make: — you may be gone: it is not good you tarry here: — by gar, I will cut all his two stones; by gar, he shall not have one to trow at his dog.

_Earl Simple._

_Quick._ Ah, he speaks but for his friend.

_Sim._ What, no matter-a for dat; — do not you tell me dat I shall have Anne Page for myself? — by gar, I will kill de jack priest; and I have appointment with the head of de Jarderse to be our weapon: — by gar, I will myself have Anne Page.

_Quick._ Sir, the maid loves you, and all shall be well: we must give folks leave to prate: What, the good things?

_Solded, reprimanded.

_The goulcer, what the pox!"
ACT II.  SCENE I.  MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR.

Cadiz.  Ruby, come to the court vit me;—by gar, if I have not Anne Page, I shall turn your head out of my door;—Follow my heels, Ruby, Excuse Cadiz and Ruby.

Quick.  You shall have an fools-head (for your own.  No, I know Anne's mind for that; never a woman in Windsor knows more of Anne's mind than I do; nor can do more than I do with her, I thank heaven.

Fent.  [Within.]  Who's within there, ho?

Quick.  Who's there, I trow! Come near the house, I pray you.

Enter Fenton.

Fent.  How now, good woman; how dost thou?

Quick.  The better, that it pleases your good lordship to ask.

Fent.  What news? how does pretty mistress Anne?

Quick.  In truth, sir, and she is pretty, and honest, and gentle; and one that is your friend I can tell you that by the way; I praise heaven for it.

Fent.  Shall I do any good, thinkest thou?  Shall I not lose my suit?

Quick.  Truth, sir, all is in his hands above; but notwithstanding, master Fenton, I'll be sworn on a book she loves you:—Have not your worship a wart above your eye?

Fent.  Yes, marry, have I; what of that!

Quick.  Well, thereby hangs a tale;—good faith, it is such another Nan; but, I detect, an honest maid as ever broke bread:—We had an hour's talk of that wart;—I shall never laugh but in that maid's company!—But, indeed, she is given too much to a hooligan and musing; but for you—

Well, go to.

Fent.  Well, I shall see her to-day: Hold, there's money for thee; let me have thy voice in my behalf;—if thou seest her before me, commend me —

Quick.  Will I! faith, that we will; and I will tell your worship more of the wart, or of that woman, the next time we have confidence; and of other wores.

Fent.  Well, farewell; I am in great haste now.

Quick.  Farewell to your worship.—Truly, an honest gentleman; but Anne loves him not: for I know Anne's mind as well as another does:—Out upon it! what have I forgot?

[Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Before Page's House.

Enter Mistress Page, with a letter.

Mrs. Page.  What! have I escaped love-letters in the holy-day time of my beauty, and am I now a subject to them? Let me see.

[Reads.

Ask me no reason why I love you; for though love use reason for his praisers, he admits him not for his counsellor.  You are not young; no more an I; go to them, there's sympathy you are weary, so am I.  But, ho! There's more sympathy; you love sick, and so do I.  Would you ^scribe better sympathy? Let it suffice thee, mistress Page; (at the least, if the love of a soldier can suffice) that I love thee, I will not say, pity me. 'Tis not a solitarie phrase; but I say, love me.

By me,

Thrice own true knight,

By day or night,

Of any kind of light,

With all his might,

For this brief flight,

John Falstaff.

What a Herold of Jewry is this!—0 wicked, wicked world!—one that is well nigh worn to pieces with age, to show himself a young gallant! What unweighted behavior hath this English drunkard picked (with the devil's name) out of my conversation, that he dares in this manner assay me!—Why, he hath not been thrice in my company;—What should I say to him?—I was then drunk of my mirth:—heaven forgive me!—Why, I'll exhibit a bill in the parliament for the putting down of men. How shall I be revenge'd on him! for revenge I will be, as sure as his guts are made of puddings.

Enter Mistress Ford.

Mrs. Ford.  Mrs. Page! trust me, I was going to your house.

Mrs. Page.  And trust me, I was coming to you.

You look very ill.

Mrs. Ford.  Nay, I'll never believe that; I have to show to the contrary.

Mrs. Page.  'Faith, but you do, in my mind.

Mrs. Ford.  Well, I do then; yet, I say, I could show you to the contrary: O, mistress Page, give me some counsel!

Mrs. Page.  What's the matter, woman?

Mrs. Ford.  O, woman, if it were not for one trilling respect, I could come to such honor!

Mrs. Page.  Hang the tridge, woman:—take the his intent towards our wives, are a yoke of his discruelled men; very rogues, now they be out of service.

Ford. Were they his men?

Page. Marry, were they.

Ford. I would never the better for that.—Does he lie at the Garter?

Page. Ay, marry, does he. If he should intend this voyage towards my wife, I would turn her loose here and set him get more of her than sharp words, let it lie on my head.

Ford. I do not misdoubt my wife; but I would be loath to turn them together: A man may be too confident. I would have nothing lie on my head:

I cannot be thus satisfied.

Page. Look where my ranting host of the Garter comes: there is either liquor in his purse, or money in his purse, when he looks so merrily.—How now, mine host?

Enter Host and Shallow.

Host. How now, bully-rook! thou'rt a gentleman:

cavalero-justice, I say.

Shal. I follow, mine host, I follow.—Good even and twenty, good master Page! Master Page, will you go with us? we have sport in hand.

Host. Tell him, cavalero-justice; tell him, bully-rook.

Shal. Sir, there is a fray to be fought, between sir Hugh the Welsh priest, and Caius the French doctor.

Ford. Good mine host of the Garter, a word with you.

Host. What say'st thou, bully-rook?

[They go aside.

Shal. Will you to Page] go with us to behold it?

my merry host hath had the measure of their weapons: and, I think, he hath appointed them

contrary places: for, believe me, I hear, the person is no pest. Hark, I will tell you what our sport shall be.

Host. Hast thou no suit against my knight, my guest-cavalier?

Ford. None, I protest: but I'll give you a bottle of burnt sack to give me recourse to him, and tell him, his name is Brook; only for a jest.

Ho! My hand, bully; thou shalt have eases and regress; and I well, and thy name shall be brook: It is a merry knight.—Will you go on, hearts?

Shal. Have with you, mine host.

Page. I have heard the Frenchman hath good skill in his rapier.

Shal. True, sir, I could have told you more! In these times you stand on distance, your passes, strokes, and I know not what: 'tis the heart, master Page; 'tis here, 'tis here. I have seen the time, with my long sword, I would have made you two fellows skip like rats.

Host. Here, boys, here, here! shall we way?

Page. Hast with you:—I had rather hear them cold than fight.

[Exeunt Host, Shallow, and Page.

Ford. Though page be a secure fool, and standso brave on his wife's frailty, yet I cannot put of my opinion so easily: she was in his company at

Page's house; and what they made there, I know not. Well, I will look further into it; and I have a discussion with Falstaff. If I find her honest, I lose not my labor; but she be otherwise, 'tis labor

well bestowed.

[Exit.

SCENE II.—A Room in the Garter Inn.

Enter Falstaff and Pistol.

Fal. I will not lend thee a penny.

Pist. Nay, by heaven the world's mine oyster,

Which I with sword will open.—

I will retort the sum in equipage.

Fal. Not a penny. I have been content, sir, you should have maintenance to pay. I have grazed upon my good friends for three reprieves for you and your coach-fellow Nyum; or else you had looked through the grate like a gemmy of baboons.

I am dammed in hell, for swearing to conventions

my friends, you were good soldiers, and tall fellows:

1 Pay you again in stolen goods.

2 Draws along with you.

Fal. Not I, I assure thee; setting the attraction of my good parts aside, I have no other charms.

Quick. Blessing on your heart for!

Fal. But, I pray thee, tell me this: has Ford's wife, and Page's wife, acquainted each other how they love me?

Quick. That were a jest, indeed! — they have not so little grace. I hope: — that were a trick, indeed! But mistress Page would desire you to send her your little page, of all loves; her husband has a marvellous infection to the little page: and, truly, master Ford, is an honest man. So will Windsor leads a better life than she does; do what she will, say what she will, take all, pay all, go to bed when she list, rise when she list, is as she list, and she describes it; for if there be a kind woman in Windsor, she is one. You must send her your page; no remedy.

Fal. Why, will I.

Quick. What will you do so then; and, look you, he may come and go between you both; and, in any case, have a may-word, that you may know one another's mind, and the boy never need to understand any thing; for it is not good that children should know any wickedness: old folks, you know, have discretion, as they say, and know the world.

Fal. Fare thee well; commend me to them both: there's my page; I do not yet thy devoir, for I am, along with this woman. — This news distresses me.

[Exeunt QUICKLY and Robin.]

Pist. This punk is one of Cupid's creatures. Clap on more sails; pursue, up with your height; Give fire; she is my prize, or ocean witheth them all! —

[Exit PISTOL.]

Fal. Say'st thou so, old Jack! go thy ways; I'll make more of thy old body than I have done. Will they yet look after thee! Wilt thou, after the expense of so much money, be now a gamer! Good body, I thank thee! Let them say, 'tis grossly done; so it be fairly done, no matter.

Enter BARDOLE.

Bar. Sir John, there's one master Brook below would fain speak with you, and be acquainted with you; and hath sent your worship a morning's draught of sack.

Fal. Brook, is his name!

Bar. Ay, sir.

Fal. Call him in. [Exit BARDOLE.] Such Brooks are welcome to me, that o'erflow such liquor. Ah! ha! mistress Ford and mistress Page, have I encompassed you! go to; ete.

Re-enter BARDOLE with FORD disguised.

Fal. bless you, sir.

Fal. and you, sir; Would you speak with me! Ford. I made bold, to press with so little preparation upon you.

Fal. You're welcome; What's your will? Give us leave, drawer.

[Exit BARDOLE.

Ford. Sir, I am a gentleman that have spent much; my name is Brook.

Fal. master Brook, I desire more acquaintance of you.

Ford. Good sir John, I sue for yours: not to charge you; for I must let you understand. I think you did me some wrong, at first in having a light for a lende book of — the which hath something embolden'd me to this unseason'd intrusion: for they say, if money go before, all ways do lie open.

* Pestful, provish
* By all means
* A watch word
* A cant phrase of excitation.
Fal. Money is a good soldier, sir, and Will on. Ford. Truth, and I have a bag of money here troubles me; if you will help me to bear it, sir John, take all, or half, for easing me of the carriage. Fal. sir, I know not how I may deserve to be your porter. Fal. I will tell you, sir, if you will give me the hearing. Fal. Speak, good master Brook; I shall be glad to be your servant. Sir Nin. Shrift you are a scholar,—I will be brief with you:— and you have been a man long known to me, though I had never so good means, as desire, to make myself acquainted with you. I shall desire you, coming to you, wherein I most very much lay open mine own imperfections; but, good Sir John, as you have one eye upon my follies, as you hear them unfolded, turn another into the region of your own; that I may pass with a reproof the easier, saith you yourself know, how easy it is to be such an offender. Fal. Very well, sir; proceed. Ford. There is a gentlewoman in this town, her husband's name is Ford. Fal. Well, sir. Ford. I have long loved her, and I protest to your honor, she has loved me; for I found her with a following observance; engrossed opportunities to meet her: she dined slight occasion, that could but niggardly give me sight of her; not only bought many pictures for to love her, but have given largely to many, to know what she would have given; briefly, I have pursued her, as love hath pursued me: which hath been on the wing of all occasions. But what I am more particularized, either in name, or in my means, I merit, I am sure, I have received none; unless experience be a Jewel: that I have purchases all at an infinite rate: and that hath taught me this:—

Love like a shadow flies, when substance love pursues; Pursuing that flies, and flying what pursues.

Fal. Have you received no promise of satisfaction at her hands? Ford. Never. Fal. Have you importuned her to such a purpose? Ford. Never. Fal. Of what quality was your love then? Ford. Like a fair house, built upon another man's greatness; and that I have lost my collicy, by mistaking the place where I erected it. Fal. To what purpose have you unfolked this to me? Ford. When I have told you that, I have told you all. Some say, that, though she appear honest to me; yet, in other places, she enlargeth her mirth so far, that there is shrewd construction made of her virtue. But this here is the heart of my purpose: You are a gentleman of excellent breeding, admirable discourse, of great admittance, in your person and place, generally allowed for your many wadles, courtly, and learned preparations.

Fal. O sir. Ford. Believe it, for you know it.—There is money; spend it, spend it; spend more; spend all I have; only give me so much of your time in exchange of it, as to lay an amiable seizce to the honor of my good wife; use your art of wooing, win her to consent to you; if any man may, you may as soon as any. Fal. Would it apply well to the venereity of your purpose? you tell me I should win what you would enjoy? Methinks you prescribe to yourself very preposterously.

Ford. O, understand my drift! she swells so secretly that the fulness of her heart, the fullness of my soul doth not present itself; she is too bright to be looked against. Now, could I come to her with any detection in my hand, my desires had in my power to command to accomplish themselves; could drive her then from the ward of her purity, her reputation, her marriage-vow, and a thousand other her defenses, which now are too strongly embattled against me: What say you to, sir John! Fal. Master Brook, I will first make bold with your money; next, give me your hand; and last, as

I am a gentleman, you shall, if you will, enjoy Ford's wife.

Ford. O a good sir! Fal. What say you, sir John, I say you shall.

Ford. Want no money, sir John, you shall want none.

Fal. If no mistress Ford, master brook, you shall want none; I shall be with you hereafter by your own appointment; even as you came in to me, her assistant, or go-between, parted from me: I say, I shall be with her between ten and eleven, ten and seven. The jealous, rascally knave, her husband, will be forth. Come you to me at night; you shall know how I speed.

Ford. I am blest in your acquaintance. Do you know how I am blest?

Fal. Hang him, poor cuckoldly knave! I know him not:—yet I wrong him to call him poor; they, the jealous wittily knave hath masses of money; for which the wife seems to be well-favored, I will use her as the key of the cuckoldly rogue's cotter; and there's my harvest-home. Ford. I would you knew Ford, sir; that you might avoid him, if you saw him.

Fal. Hang him, mechanical salt butter rogue! I will scare him out of his wife; I will awe him with my looks; it shall name like a maccot o'er the cuckold's horns: master Brook, thou shalt know, I will predominate over the peasan, and thou shalt lie with his wife. Come to me soon at night:— Ford's a knave, and I will aggravate his stile; thou, master Brook, shalt know him for a knave and cuckold:—come to me soon at night. [Exit. Ford. What a damned Epicurean rascal is this!— My heart is ready to crack with astonishment. Who says this is improper jealousy? My wife hath sent to him, the hour is fixed, the match is made. Would any one have thought this!—See the bell of a false woman! my eye at the breach, Page is an ass, a secure ass; he will trust his wife, he will not be jealous: I will rather trust a Fleming with my butter, parson Hugh the Welchman with my wife; I am a true scholar with my aqua-vite bottle, or a thief to walk my ambling gelding, than my wife with herself: then she plots, then she rummages, then she devises: and what they think in their hearts and minds, they may express to the effect, the hearts but they will effect. Heaven be praised for my jealousy!—Eleven o'clock the hour;—I will prevent this, detect my wife, be enraged on Falstaff, and rage on. The bell rings three hours too soon, than a minute too late. If, fie, tie! cuckold! cuckold! cuckold! [Exit.]

Scene III.—Windsor Park.

Enter Caits and Reyny.

Caits. What is de clock, Jack? Rug. 'Tis past the hour, sir, that sir Hugh promised to meet. Caits. Jey gar, he has save his soul, dat he is no come; ob you, Bobbee Vile, dat he is no come: by gar, Jack Rugby, he is dead already, if he be come. Rug. He is wise, sir; he knew your worship would look him, if he came. Caits. By gar, de herring is no dead, as I vill kill him. Take your rapier, Jack; I will tell you how I will kill him.

Enter Host, Shallow, Slender, and Page.

* Add to his titles.  Contested Cuckold
ACT III.

SCENE I.—A Field near Frogmore.

Enter Sir Hugh Evans and Sim.

Evans. I pray you now, good master Slender's serving man, and friend to me, you may speak by your name, which way have you looked for Master Caius, that calls himself Doctor of Physic?

Sim. Marry, sir, the city-ward, the park-ward, every way, old Windsor way, and every way but the town way.

Evans. I most cheemely desire you, you will also look that way.

Sim. I will, sir.

Evans. 'Plliness my soul! how full of cholers I am, and trembling of mind!—I shall be glad, if he have deceived me:—how melancholies I am!—I will know his winds about his knave's costard, when I have good opportunities for the ork:—'pless my soul! [Stays.

To shallow rivers, to whose falls
Metulous birds sing melodiously;
There we will make our pids of rows,
And a thousand fragrant posies.

To shallow—

Mercy on me! I have a great dispositions to cry.

Metulous birds sing melodiously;
When as I sat in Fuglham,
And a thousand vragrant posies.
To shallow—

Sim. Yonder he coming, this way, sir Hugh.

Evans. He's welcome:—

To shallow rivers, to whose falls—

Heaven prosper the right!—What weapons is he? Sim. No weapons, sir; There comes my master.

*To the Town in Fencing.

Host. Muck-water, in our English tongue, is valor, bully.

Caius. By gar, then I have as much muck-water as de Englishman:—scurry Jack-dog priest! by gar, me will cut his ears.

Host. He will clapper-claw thee tightly, bully.

Caius. Clapper-de-claw! vat is dat?

Host. That is, he will make thee amends.

Caius. By gar, me do look, he shall clapper-de-claw me; for by gar, me will have it.

Host. And I will provoke him to it, or let him wag.

Caius. Where's you for dat.

Host. And moreover, bully.—But first, master guest, and master Page, and the cavalier, slander go you through the town to Frogmore.

Page. Sir Hugh is there, is he!

Host. He is there; see what humor he is in; and I will bring the doctor about by the fields: will it do well?

Shal. We will do it.

Caius. By gar, me will kill de priest; for he speak for a jack-an'ape to Anne Page.

Host. Let him die: but, first, sheath thy impudence; throw cold water on thy cholers: go about the fields with me through Frogmore: I will brine thee where Mrs. Anne Page is, at a farm-house, a feasting; and then shall woo her: Cry'd game, sir, am I.

Caius. By gar, me tank you for dat; by gar, I love you; and I shall procure a you de good guest, de cart, de knight, de lords, de gentlemen, my patients.

Host. For which, I will be thy adversary towards Anne Page; and I well!

Page. By gar, 'ts good; well said.

Host. Let us wag then.

Caius. Come at my heels, Jack Rugby. [Exeunt.

ACT III.
Page.

I warrant you he’s the man should fight with him.

Slen. O, sweet Anne Page!

Shal. It appears so by his weapons;—Keep them asunder;—here comes doctor Carsio.

Enter Host, CAIUS, and RUGBY.

Page. Nay, good master parson, keep in your weapon.

Shal. So do you, good master doctor.

Host. Disman and them, and let them question; let them keep their hands whole, and hack our English.

Caius. I pray you, let-a me speak a word vit your ear; verdone will you not meet-a me!

Ford. PrCCCCCCa!—it’s boy’s good time.

Caius. By gar, you are de coward, de Jack dog, John ape.

Eva. Pray you, let us not be laughin’-stogs to other man’s humors; I desire you in friendship, and I will one way or other make you amend; and I will knock your uncles about your knave’s coigecomb, for missing your meetings and appointments.

Caius. Diable!—Jack Rugby,—mine Host de Jarterre, have I not stay for him, to kill him? have I not, at de place I did appoint?

As. As I am a Christian soul, now, look you, this is the place appointed; I’ll be judgment by mine host of the Garter.

Host. Peace, I say, Guailila and Gaul French and Welsh; soul-ener and body-ener.

Caius. Ay, dat is very good! excellent.

Host. Peace, I say; hear mine host of the Garter.

Am I politic! am I subtle! am I a Machiavel! Shall I lose my doctor? no; he gives me the potions, and the modes. Shall I lose my parson? my priest! my sir Hugh! no; he gives me the projects and the noverges.—Give me thy hand, terrestrial; so:—Give me thy hand, celestial; so:

Boys of art, I have deceived you both; I have directed you to wrong places: your hearts are magic, and your brains are wicked, and I have made you my wife.

Shal. I have used my good-will, father Page.

Page. You have, master slander; I stand wholly for you:—but my wife, master doctor, is for you altogether.

Caius. By gar; and de mad is love-a-me; my mirth-a quicken tell me so much.

Host. What say you to young master Fenton? he capers, he dances, he has eyes of youth, he writes verses, he speaks holyday’s a holiday. April and May he will carry’t, he will carry’t; ‘tis in his buttoms; he will carry t.

Page. Not by my consent, I promise you. The gentleman is of no having: he kept company with the wild Prince and Page; he is of too high a region, he knows too much. No, he shall not kno a knot to meet with fortune with the fashion of my substance: if he take her, let him take her simply; the wealth I have, waits on my consent, and my consent goes not that way.

Ford. I beseech you, heartily, some of you go home with me to dinner: besides your cheer, you shall have sport; I will show you a monster.—Master doctor, you shall go;—so shall you, master Page;—and you, sir Hugh.

Shal. Well, fare you well;—we shall have the freer woeing at master Page’s.

Enter Ford, SHALLOW and SLENDER.

Caius. Go home, John Rugby; I come anon.

Exit RUGBY.

Host. Farewell, my hearts: I will to my honest knight Falstaff, and drink candy with him.

Exit Host.

Ford. [Aside.] I think, I shall drink in pipe-wine first with him; I’ll make him dance. Will you go, gentle souls?

All. Have with you, to see this monster. [Exit Host.

SCENE III.— A Room in Ford’s House.

Enter Mrs Ford and Mrs Page.

Mrs. Ford. What, John! what, Robert?

Mrs Page. Quickly, quickly; is the busk-basket—

Mrs. Page. Come, come, come.

Shall encourage. Out of the common style.
Mrs. Ford. Here, set it down.

Mrs. Page. Give your men the charge; we must be brisk.

Mrs. Ford. Merry, as I told you before, John and Robert, be ready here hard by in the briew-house when I shall call you, come forth, and (without any pause, or staggerring) take this basket on your shoulders: that done, trudge with it in all haste, and carry it among the whiskers in Datchet-road, and there commit it in the muddy ditch, close by the Thames-side.

Mrs. Page. You will do it!

Mrs. Ford. I have told them over and over; they lack no direction: Before, and come when you are called.

[Exit Servants.

Mrs. Page. Here comes little Robin.

Enter Robin.

Mrs. Ford. How now, my eye-musket? what news with you?

Rob. My master, sir John, is come in at your back-door, mistress Ford; and requests your company.

Mrs. Page. You little Jack-a-lent, have you been true to us.

I'll be sworn: My master knows not of your being here; and hath threatened to put me into everlasting liberty, if I tell you of it; for, he swears, he'll turn me away.

This is a good hoy: this secrecy of thine shall be a tailor to thee, and shall make thee a new doublet and hose.—I'll go hide me.

Mrs. Ford. Do so.—Go tell my master, I am about. Mistress Page, remember you are in the country.

[Mrs. Page enters to disguise herself.

Enter Falstaff.

Fal. Have I caught thee, my heavenly jewel! Why, now let me die, for I have lived long enough: this is the period of my ambition: O this blessed hour!

Mrs. Ford. O sweet Sir John!

Fal. Mistress Ford, I cannot cog. I cannot prate, mistress Ford. Now shall I sin in my wish: I would thy husband were dead; I'll speak it before the best lord, I would make thee my lady.

Mrs. Ford. I thy lady, Sir John! alas, I should be a pitiful lady.

Fal. Let the court of France show me such another: I see how thine eye would emulate the diamond: Thou hast the right arched biet of the brow, that becomes the ship-tire, the -ev-cantel, or any tire of Venetian diamond.

Mrs. Ford. A plain kerchief, sir John; my brows become nothing else; nor that well neither.

Fal. Thou art a traitor to say so: thou would make an absolute countess; and the firm fixture of thy foot would give an excellent motion to thy gait, in a semi-circled farthingale. I see what thou wert, if fortune thy toe were not; nature is thy friend: Coque, thou cannot hide it.

Mrs. Ford. Believe me, there's no such thing in me.

Fal. What made me love thee? let that persuade thee, there's something extraordinary in thee.—Come, I cannot cog, and say, thou art this that, like a many of these hisping haw-thorn buds, that come like wench in men's apparel you, smell like Bucklers-burry in simple-time; I cannot: but I love thee; none but thee; and thou deservest it.

Mrs. Ford. Do not betray me, sir; I fear, you love me mislike.

Fal. Thou mightest as well say, I love to walk by the Counter-gate; which is as hateful to me as the neck of a lime-kim.

Mrs. Ford. Well heaven knows, how I love you; and you shall one day find it.

Fal. Keep in that mind; I'll deserve it.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, I must tell you, so you do; or else I cannot be in that mind.

Rob. [within] Mistress Ford, mistress Ford!

Mrs. Ford. Why, what have you to do with her? she's a very tattling woman.—[Falstaff hides himself.]

Enter Mrs. Page and Robin.

Mrs. Page. Why the matter? how now?

Mrs. Ford. O mistress Ford, what have you done? You're shinned, you are overthrown; you are undone for ever.

Mrs. Ford. What's the matter, good mistress Page?

Mrs. Page. O well-a-day, mistress Ford! having an honest man to your husband, to give him such cause of suspicion!

Mrs. Ford. What cause of suspicion?

Mrs. Page. What cause of suspicion! — Out upon you! how am I mistaken in you!

Mrs. Ford. Why, alas! what's the matter!

Mrs. Page. Your husband's coming hither, woman, with all the officers in Windsor, to search for a gentleman, that, he says, is here, in the house, but that he may take an ill advantage of his absence; you are undone.

Mrs. Ford. Speak louder. [Aside]—Tis not so, I hope.

Mrs. Page. Pray heaven it be not so, that you have such a man here; but 'tis most certain your husband's coming with half Windsor at his heels, to search for such a one. I come before to tell you: If you know how to save yourself, why am I glad of it? but if you have a friend here, convey, convey him out—tis not amaz'd: call all your senses to you: defend your reputation, or bid farewell to your good life.

Mrs. Ford. What shall I do?—There is a gentleman, my dear friend: and I fear not mine own shame, so much as his peril: I had rather than a thousand you were out of the house.

Mrs. Page. For shame, never stand you had rather, and you had rather: your husband's here at hand, thank you of some conveyance: in the house you must not hide him.—O, how have you deceived me!—Look, here is a basket: if he be or any reasonable stature, he may creep in here; and throw toss linen upon him, as if it were going to bucking: Or, it is whiting-time, send him by your two men to Datchet-mead.

Mrs. Ford. He's too big to go in there: What shall I do?

Re-enter Falstaff.

Fal. Let me sec! let me see! O let me sec! I'll in, I'll in;—follow your friend's counsel;—I'll in.

Mrs. Page. What! sir John Falstaff! Are these your letters, knight?

Fal. I love thee, and none but thee; help me away: let me creep in here; I'll never — (He goes into the basket; they cover him with foul linen)

Mrs. Page. Help to cover your master, boy: Call your men, mistress Ford:—You dissimulating knight!

Mrs. Ford. What, John, Robert, John! [Exit Robin, Re-enter Servants.] Go, take up these clothes as quickly. Where's the cow-staff? look, how you drumble; carry them to the laundress in Datchet-mead; quickly, come.

Enter Ford, Page, Caius, and Sir Itham Evans.

Ford. Pray you, come near; if I suspect without cause, why then make sport at me, then let me be your jest; I deserve it.—How now! whither bear you this Serv. To the laundress, forthwith.

Mrs. Ford. Why, what have you to do whether they hear it? You were best meddle with buck-washing.

Ford. Buck! I would I could wash myself of the buck! Buck, buck, buck! Ay, buck; I warrant you, buck; and of the season too, it shall appear.

[Exit Servants with the baskets.]

[Aside]—

Buck.

A staff for carrying a large tub or basket.

Buck,
I have dreamed to-night: I'll tell you my dream. Here, here, here be my keys: ascend my chambers, search, seek, find out: I know not which fox — Let me stop this way first:— So now uncapped.

Prince. Good Master Ford, be contented: you wrong yourself too much.

Ford. True, Master Page. — Up, gentleman; you shall see sport anon: follow me, gentleman. [Exeunt.]

This is very fantastical humours, and jealousies.

Caust. By gar, 'tis no de fashion of France: it is not jealous in France.

Page. Nay, follow him, gentleman; see the issue of his search. [Exeunt Evans, Page, and Caust.]

Mrs. Page. Is there not a double excellency in this?

Mrs. Ford. I knew not which pleased me better, that my husband is deceived, or sir John.

Mrs. Page. What a taking was he in, when your husband asked who was in the basket!

Mrs. Ford. I am half afraid he will have need of washing; so throwing him into the water will do him a benefit.

Mrs. Page. Hang him, dishonest rascal! I would, all the same strain were in the same distress.

Mrs. Ford. I thank my husband hath some special suspicion of Falstaff's being here: for I never saw him so gross in his jealousy till now.

Mrs. Page. I will lay a plot to try that: and we will yet have more tricks with Falstaff: his disolute disease will scarce obey this medicine.

Mrs. Ford. Shall we send that foolish carion, namely, to follow him, and excuse his throwing into the water; and give him another hope, to betray him into another punishment?

Mrs. Page. We'll do it; let him be sent to-morrow night o'clock, to have amends.

Re-enter Ford, Page, Caust, and Sir Hugh Evans.

Ford. I cannot find him: may be the knave bragg'd of that he could not compass.

Mrs. Page. Heard you that?

Mrs. Ford. Ay, ay, peace: — you use me well, master Ford, do you you?

Ford. Ay, I do so.

Mrs. Ford. Heaven make you better than your thoughts!

Ford. Amen.

Mrs. Page. You do yourself mighty wrong, master Ford.

Ford. Ay, ay: I must bear it.

Mrs. Page. Think you not it be proper in the house, and in the chambers, and in the coifers, and in the presses, heaven forgive my sins at the day of judgment!

Caust. By, gar, nor I too: dere is no bodies.

Mrs. Ford. Who is master Ford? are you ashamed? What spirit, what devil suggests this imagination? I would not have your distemper in this kind, for the wealth of Windsor Castle.

Ford. 'Tis my fault, master Page: I suffer for it.

Even. You suffer for a bad conscience; your wife is as honest a woman, as I will desires among five thousand, and five hundred too.

Caust. By gar, I see 'tis an honest woman.

Ford. Well; — I promised you a dinner: — Come, come, walk in the park: I pray you, pardon me. I never, before, having known to you, why I have done this. Come, wife: — come mistress Page: I pray you pardon me; pray heartily, pardon me.

Page. Let's go in, gentleman; but trust me, we'll mock him. I do invite you to-morrow morning to my house to breakfast; after, we'll a birding together: I have a fine hawk for the bash: Shall it be Ford?

Ford. Any thing.

Even. If there is one, I shall make two in the company.

Caust. If there be one or two, I shall make a third.

Even. In your teeth: for shame.

Ford. Pray you, go, master Page.

Even. I pray you now, remembrance to-morrow on the lousy knife, mine host.

Caust. Dat be good: by gar, vit all my heart. — Unbag the fox.

Eva. A lousy knife; to have his gibes and his mockey.

SCENE IV. — A Room in Page's House.

Enter Fenton and Mistress Anne Page.

Fent. I see, I cannot get thy father's love:

Therefore, no more turn me to him, sweet Nan.

Anne. Alas! how can I do it?

Fent. Why, thou must be thyself.

He doth object, I am too great of birth;

And that, my state being gaff'd with my expense, seek to heal it only by my wealth:

Besides these, other bars he lays before me,

— My riots past, my wild societies;

And tells me, 'tis a thing impossible

I should love thee, but as a proper one.

Anne. May be, he tells you true.

Fent. No, heaven so speed me in my time to come:

Albeit, I do confess, thy father's wealth

Was the first motive that I would thee, Anne:

Yet, woeing thee, I found thee of more value

Than stamps in gold, or sums in sealed bags;

And in the very riches of thyself

That now I aim at.

Anne. Gentle master Fenton,

Yet seek my father's love; still seek it, sir;

If opportunity and heart alert out.

Cannot attain it, why then — Hark you hither.

[They converse apart.

Enter SHALLOW, SLENDER, and MRS. QUICKLY.

Shal. Break their talk, Mrs. Quickly; my kinsman shall speak for himself.

Sec. He'll make a shaft or a bolt on't: a slip, 'tis venturing.

Shal. Be not dismay'd.

Sec. No, she shall not dismay me: I care not for that — but that I am afraid.

Quick. Hark ye; master Slender would speak a word with you.

Anne. I come to him. — This is my father's choice.

O, what a world of vile ill-favor'd faults

Looks handsome in three hundred pounds a year!

[Aside.

Quick. And how does good master Fenton? Pray you, a word with you.

Shal. She's coming; to her, coz. O boy, thou hast a father, Anne.

Sec. I had a father, mistress Anne: — my uncle can tell you good jests of him: — Pray you, uncle, tell mistress Anne the jest, how my father stole two good horses, and bought a good uncle.

Shal. Mistress Anne, my cousin loves you.

Sec. Ay, that I do; as well as I love any woman in Gloucestershire.

Shal. And let not my cousin maintain you like a gentleman.

Sec. Ay, that I will, come out and long-tall, under the degree of a squire.

Shal. He will make you a hundred and fifty pounds a year.

Anne. Good master Shallow, let him woo for himself.

Shal. Marry, I thank you for it: I thank you for that good comfort. She calls you, coz: I'll leave you.

Anne. Now, master Shallow.

Sec. Now, to good mistress Anne.

Sec. What is your will?

Shal. My will! of their heartings, that's a pretty jest indeed! I ne'er made my will yet, I thank heaven: I am not such a sickly creature. I give heaven praise.

Shal. I mean, master Shallow, what would you with me?

Sec. Truly, for mine own part, I would little or nothing with you: Your father, and my uncle, have made motions: if it be my luck, so: if not, happy man be his dole! They can tell you things a lot better than you may ask your father; here he comes.

Page. Now, master Slender: — Lovelorn, daughter Anne.—

Shal. A proverb — a shaft was a long arrow, and a bolt a thick short one.

Lett.
Merry wives of windsor.

Why, how now! what does master fenton here? you wrong me, sir, thus still to haunt my house: i told you, sir, my daughter is dispos'd of. fret. nay, master farse, be not impatient.

Mrs. Page. good master fenton, come not to my child.

Page. she is no match for you. fret. sir, will you hear me?

Page. no, good master fenton come, master shallow; come, son slender; in: - knowing my mind, you wrong me, master fenton.

[Exeunt page, shallow, and slender.

Quick. speck! step, and knock at the page.

Fent. good mistress page, for that i love your daughter

In such a righteous fashion as i do,

Perforce, against all kinds of rebukes, and manners,

I must advance the colors of my love,

And more: - let me have your good will.

Anne. good mother, do not marry me to yond' fool.

Mrs. Page. i mean it not; i seek you a better husband.

Quick. that's my master, master doctor.

Anne. alas, i had rather be set quick' i the earth,

And howl to deal with turnips.

Mrs. Page. come, trouble not yourself:

Good fellow, i will not be your friend, nor enemy:

My daughter will i question how she loves you,

And as i lead her, so am i affected;

Till then, farewell, sir: - she must needs go in;

Her father will be angry.

[Exeunt Mrs. Page and Anne.

Fent. farewell, gentle mistress; farewell, Nan. quick. this is my doing now: - say, and i, will you cast away your child on a fool, and a physician? look on master fenton: - this is my doing.

Fent. i thank thee; and i pray thee, once to-night

Give my sweet Nan this ring: there's for thy pains.

Quick. now heaven send thee good fortune! a kind heart he hat' a woman would run through fire and water for such a kind heart. but yet, i would my master had master anne; or i would master slender had her; or, in sooth, i would master fenton had her: i will do what i can for them all three; for so i have promised, and i'll be as good as my word; but specially for master fenton.

Well, i must own, another entreat to sir john falstaff from my two mistresses: what a beast am i to shack it.

Scene v. - a room in the garter inn.

Enter falstaff and bartholomew.

Fal. bartholomew, i say, -

Bar. Here, sir.

Fal. fetch me a quart of sack; put a toast in it.

[Exit Bartholomew.

Have i lived to be caried in a basket, like a barrow of butcher's offal! and to be thrown into the thames! well; if i be served such another trick, i'll have my brains on an out and battered, and give them to a dog for a new year's gift. the rogues snitched me into the river with as little remorse as they would have drowned a dog to gete bags; i am as sorry as they; and you may know by my nose, that i have a kind of alteration in sucking; if the bottom were as deep as hell, i should down. i had been drowned, but that the shore was as rough and shallow: a dead man i abode for; for the water swells a man; and what a thing should i have been, when i had been swallowed! i should have been a mountain of mummy.

Re-enter Bartholomew, with the wine.

Bar. here's mistress quickly, sir; to speak with you.

Fal. come, let me pour in some sack to the thames water; for my belly's as cold, as if i had swallowed snow-balls for pills to cool the reins. -

Come in.

Bar. come in, woman.

Enter Mrs. Quickly.

Quickly. by your leave; i cry you mercy: give your worship good-morrow.

quickly.

Fal. take away these chafices. go brew me a potter of sack thinly.

Bar. with eggs, sir?

Quick. simple of itself; i'll no pullet-prim in my browsage. - [Exit Bartholomew.] i have my belly full of ford.

Quick. marry, sir, i come to your worship from mistress ford.

Fent. mistress ford! i have had ford enough: i was thrown into the lord: i have my belly full of ford.

Quick. alas the day; good heart, that was not her fault; she does so take on with her men; they must thank the devils.

Fent. so did i mine, to build upon a foolish woman's promise.

Quick. she laments, sir, for that, it would ye your heart to see it. her husband goes this morning a birding; she desires you once more to come to her between eight and nine: i must carry her word quickly; she'll make you amends, i warrant you.

Fal. well, i will visit her: tell her so; and bid her think, what a man is; let her consider his frailty, and then judge of my merit.

Quick. i will tell her.

Fent. do so. between nine and ten, say'st thou!

Quick. eight and nine, sir.

Fent. master fenton, i will not miss her.

Quick. peace be with you, sir.

[Exit.

Fal. i marre, i hear not of master brook; he sent me word to stay within: i like his money well. o, here he comes.

Enter Ford.

Ford. bless you, sir!

Fal. now, master brook! you come to know what hath passed between me and ford's wife!

Ford. that, indeed, sir john, is my business.

Fal. master brook, i will not lie to you, i was at her house the hour she appointed me.

Ford. and how sped you, sir?

Quick. very ill-favouredly, master brook.

Ford. how so, sir? did she change her determination?

Quick. no, master brook; but the peaking cornuto, her husband, master brook, dwelling in a continual 'tromat of jealousy, comes me in the instant of our encounter, after we had embraced, kissed, protested, and, as it were, spoke the produce of our comedy, and at his heels a rabble of his company, that i rather provoked and instigated by his dissembler, and, forsooth, to search his house for his wife's love.

Ford. what, while you were there!

Fal. while i was there.

Ford. and did he search for you, and could not find you?

Fal. you shall hear. as good luck would have it, comes in one mistress page; gives intelligence of ford's approach; and, by her invention, and ford's wife's distraction, they conveyed me into a buck-basket.

Ford. a buck-basket!

Fal. by the lord, a buck-basket: rammed me in with foul shirts and smocks, socks, foul stockings, and greasy clothes. i was, that master brook, there was the rankest compound of villainous smell, that ever offended nostril.

Ford. and how long lay you there?

Fal. now, sir, you shall hear, master brook, what i have suffered to bring this woman to evil for your good. being thus crammed in the basket, a couple of ford's knives, his hired replacements (two, i think), that master brook, were carried me in the name of foul clothes to date-seit lane: they took me on their shoulders; not the jealous knife their master in the door; they brought replaced once or twice in their basket; i quaked for fear, lest the furiate knife would have searched it; but fate, ordaining he should be a cuckold, held his hand.

out, sir; out of my reach, and away went i in foul clothes. but mark the sequel, master brook: i suffered the pangs of several deaths: first, an intolerable fright, to be detected with a jealous rotten-beef'd eye; next, to be compassed like a good bindo, in the circumference of a peak, lilt to point, heel to head: and then, to be stopped in,

[Exit.

[More to the best blades are made.]
Like a strong distillation, with stinking clothes that foetted in their own greese: think of that,—a man of my kidney, think of that; that am as subject to heat as bull's; a man of continual dissolution and that, I saw a miracle to 'scape suffocation. And in the height of this bath, when I was more than half stewed in grease, like a Dutch dish, to be thrown into the Thames, and cooled, glowing hot, in that sauce, like a horse-shoe; think of that;—finishing hot—think of that, master Brook.

Ford. In good sadness, sir, I am sorry that for my sake you have suffered all this. My suit then is deserv'd: you must undertake it no more.

Fal. Master Brook, I will be thrown into the Thames, as I have been into Thames, ere I will leave her hands. Her husband is this morning come a birding: I have received from her another embassy of meeting in; 'twixt eight and nine the hour, master Brook.

Ford. It's past eight already, sir.

Fal. Is it? I will then address me to your appointment.

Come to me at your convenient leisure, and you shall know how I speed; and the conclusion shall be crowned with your enjoying her: Adieu, you shall have her, master Brook: master Brook, you shall cuckold Ford. [Exit.]

Ford. Hum! ha! is this a vision! is this a dream? do I sleep? Master Ford, awake; awake, master Ford; there's a hole made in your best coat, master Ford. This 'tis to be married! this 'tis to have linen and buck-baskets!—Well, I will proclaim myself what I am: I will now take the lecher; he is at my house: he cannot 'scape me; 'tis impossible he can: I will drive him into a hand-penny purse, nor into a pepper-box: but, lest the devil that guides him should aid him, I will search impossible places. Though what I am I cannot avoid, yet to be what I would not to take me tame: if I have horns to make one mad, let the proverb go with me, I'll be horn mad.

*Exit.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The Street.

Enter Mrs. Page, Mrs. Quickly, and William.

Mrs. Page. Is he at master Ford's already, think'st thou?

Quick. Sure he is by this; but will be presently: but truly, he is very courageous mad, about his throw into the water. Mistress Ford desires you come to yourself.

Mrs. Page. I'll be with her by and by; I'll but bring my young man here to school: look, where his master comes; 'tis a playing-day, I see.

Enter Sir Hugh Evans.

How now, sir Hugh? no school to-day?

Eva. No; master Slicer is let the boys leave to play.

Quick. Blessing of his heart!

Mrs. Page. Sir Hugh, my husband says, my son profits nothing in the world at his book; I pray you, ask him some questions in his absence.

Eva. Come hither, William; hold up your head, come.

Mrs. Page. Come on, sirrah; hold up your head; answer your master, be not afraid.

Eva. William, how many numbers is in a noun?

Will. Two.

Quick. Truly, I thought there had been one number more; because they say, of a noun.

Eva. Peace your tattlings. What is fair, William.

Will. Pullet.

Quick. Poulcets! there are fairer things than poulets, sure.

Eva. You are a very simplicity 'oman: I pray you, peace. What is lapis, William?

Will. A stone.

Eva. And what is a stone, William?

Will. A pebble.

Eva. No, it is lapis; I pray you remember in your prunt.

Will. I. Lapis.

Eva. That is good William. What is he, William, that does learn articles?

Will. Articles are borrowed of the pronoun; and he that declaims, Singulariter, nominatives, hic, hie, hoc. Em. Nominative, hic, ha! ha! hoc: pray you, mark; genitives, bijus: Well, what is your accusative case?

Will. Accusativo, hic.

Eva. I pray you, have your remembrance, child:

Accusativo, hinc, hang, boa.

Quick. Hang boa is Latin for bacon, I warrant you.

Eva. Leave your prattles, 'oman. What is the feminine case, William?

Will. 0—Vocativo, 0.

Eva. Remember, William; feminicule is care.

Quick. And that is good root.

Eva. 'Oman, forbear.

Mrs. Page. Peace. 1

*Outrageous.

Eva. What is your genitive case, plural, William?

Will. Genitive case?

Eva. Ay.

Will. Hominis—hominis, hominis, hominis.

Quick. Vengeance of Jenny's case! tie on her!—never name her, child, if she be a whore.

Eva. For shame, man.

Quick. You do ill to teach the child such words: he teaches him to kick and to hack, which they'd do fast enough of themselves: and to call hominis—tie upon you!

Eva. Brick, art thou lunatic? hast thou no understandings for thy cases, and the numbers of thee, the genders? Thou art as foolish Christian creatures as I would desire.

Mrs. Page. Pray thee, hold thy peace.

Eva. Show me now, William, some declensions of thy pronouns.

Will. Forswore, I have forgot.

Eva. It is ki, ke, coo; if you forget your kiis, your kis, and your ends, you must be preeches.

Go your ways, and play, go.

Mrs. Page. He is a better scholar than I thought he was.

Eva. He is a good sprig's memory. Farewell, mistress Page.

Mrs. Page. Adieu, good sir Hugh. [Exit Sir Hugh.] Get you home, boy.—Come, we stay too long.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—A Room in Ford's House.

Enter Falstaff and Mrs. Ford.

Fal. Mistress Ford, your sorrow hath eaten up my suffrance: I see you are obsequious in your love, and I profess requital to a hair's breadth, not only, mistresse Ford, in the simple office of love, but in all the accomtrement, complement, and ceremony of it. But are you sure of your husband now?

Mrs. Ford. He's a husband, sweet sir John.

Mrs. Page. [Within.] What hoa! gossip Ford! what hoa!

Mrs. Ford. Step into the chamber, sir John. [Exit Falstaff.]

Enter Mrs. Page.

Mrs. Page. How now, sweetheart! who's at home besides yourself?

Mrs. Ford. Why, none but mine own people.

Mrs. Page. Indeed?

Mrs. Ford. No, certainly:—speak louder! [Aside.]

Mrs. Page. Truly, I am so glad you have nobody here.

Mrs. Ford. Why, sweetheart?

Mrs. Page. Why, woman, your husband is in his old lunes again: he so takes on yonder with my husband; so rails against all married mankind; so curses all wives' daughters, of whose countenance he's so ever; and so nobly rubs himself on the forehead, crying Peer out, peer out! that any madness I ever yet beheld seemed but tameness, civility, and patience, * breeched, i. e. flogged. Apt to learn. 1 Mad flu.
to this his distemper he is in now: I am glad the faith knavish is not here.
Mrs. Ford. Why, does he talk of him?
Mrs. Page. Of none but him; and sworn, he was carried out, the last time he was home; in a bassin' to my husban' and me is now here;
and hath drawn him and the rest of their company from their sport, to make another experiment of his suspicion; but I am glad the knight is not here now:
now shall see his own folly.
Mrs. Ford. How near is he, mistress Page?
Mrs. Page. Hard by; at street end; he will be here anon.
Mrs. Ford. I am undone! — the knight is here.
Mrs. Page. Why, then you are utterly sham'd, and he's but a dead man. What a woman are you!
Away with him, away with him; better shame than murder.
Mrs. Ford. Which way should he go? how should I bestow him? Shall I put him into the basket again?
Reciter Falstaff.
Pat. No, I'll come no more to the basket: May I not go out ere he come?
Mrs. Page. Alas, three of master Ford's brothers watch the door with pistols, that none shall issue out; otherwise you might slip away cre he came,
and But what make you here!
Pat. What shall I do! — I'll creep up into the chimney.
Mrs. Ford. There they always use to discharge their birdie pieces; creep into the klin-hole.
Pat. What is this? —
Mrs. Ford. He will seek there on my word.
Neither press, coffer, chest, trunk, well, vault, but he hath an abstract for the remembrance of such places, and goes to them by his note. There is no hiding you in the house.
Pat. I'll go out then.
Mrs. Page. If you go out in your own semblance, you die, sir John the basket, I say.
Mrs. Ford. How might we disguise him?
Mrs. Page. Alas the day, I know not. There is no woman's gown big enough for him; or wise, he might put on a hat, a madder, and a kerchief, and so escape.
Pat. Good hearts, devise something: any extremity rather than a mischief.
Mrs. Ford. My maid's aunt, the fat woman of Brentford, has a gown above.
Mrs. Page. On my word, it will serve him; she's as big as he is, and the other shrunk'd and her imparted too, by sir John.
Mrs. Ford. Go, go, sweet sir John; mistress
Page and I will look some linen for your head.
Mrs. Page. Quick, quick, we'Il come dress you straight: put on the gown the while. [Exit Fal.]
Mrs. Ford. I would my husband would meet him in this shape: he cannot abide the old woman of Brentford; he swears she's a witch; forbade her my house, and hath threatened to beat her.
Mrs. Page. Heaven guide him to thy husband's cuckold; and the devil guide his cuckold afterwards!
Mrs. Ford. But is my husband coming?
Mrs. Page. Ay, in good suddens is he; and talks of the basket too, howsoever he hath had intelligence.
Mrs. Ford. Well try that; for I'll appoint my men to carry the basket again, to meet him at the do or with it, as they did last time.
Mrs. Page. Nay, but he'll be here presently;
let's go dress him like the witch of Brentford.
Mrs. Ford. I'll first direct my men, what they shall do with the basket. Go up, I'll bring linen for him straight. [Exit.]
Mrs. Page. Hane him, dishonest varlet! we cannot misuse him enough.
We'll leave a proof, by that which we will do,
We may be merry, and yet honest too.
We do not set, that often jest and laugh,
'Tis old but true, Still swine eat all the draft. [Exit.]
Mrs. Ford. We'll go, take the basket again on your shoulders; your master is hard at door; if he but set it down, obey him; quickly, dispatch.
[Exit Ford.
Mrs. Ford, with two servants.
Mrs. Ford. Come, come, take it up.
Mrs. Page. Pray heaven, it be not full of the knight again.
Mrs. Page. I hope not; I had as lief bear so much lead.
Enter Ford, Page, Shallow, Candle; and Sir
Hugh Evans.
Ford. Ay, but if it prove true, master Page, have you any way then to know the catastrophe of the basket, what man it be? — somebody call my wife:
You, youth in a basket, come out here! — O, you panderer rascal! there's a knot, a gang, a pack, a conspiracy about you: Now shall the devil be slammed. What ! wife, I say, come forth; behold what honest clothes you send forth to bleaching.
Page. Why, this passes! Master Ford, you are do not to go loose any longer: you must be pinioned.
Evans. Why, this is lunatics! this is mad as a mad dog.
Shal. Indeed, master Ford, this is not well; indeed.
Enter Mrs. Ford.
Ford. So say I too, sir,— Come hither, mistress
Ford; mistress Ford, the honest woman, the modest wife, the virtuous creature, that hath the jealous fool to her husband! — I suspect without cause, mistress, do it!
Mrs. Ford. Heaven be my witness, you do, if you suspect me in any dishonesty.
Ford. Well said, brazen-face; hold it out. — Come forth, and squeeze it! — [Pulls the clothes out of the basket. Page. This passes!
Mrs. Ford. Are you not ashamed! let the clothes alone.
Ford. I shall find you anon.
Evans. 'Tis unreasonable! Will you take up your wife's clothes! Come away.
Ford. Embrace the basket, I say.
Mrs. Ford. Why, man, why.—
Ford. Master Page, as I am a man, there was one conveyed out of one of my houses in this basket: — Why may not he be there again! In my house I am sure he is: my intelligence is true; my jealousy is reasonable: Place me out all the linen.
Mrs. Ford. If you find a man there, he shall die a fires death.
Page. Here's no man.
Shal. By my fidelity, this is not well, master
Ford; the wight ye.
Evans. Master Ford, you must pray, and not follow the imaginations of your own heart: this is jealousies.
Ford. Well, he's not here I seek for.
Page. No, nor nowhere else, but in your brain.
Ford. Help to search my house this one time: if I find not what I seek, show no color for my, jealousy, let me forever be your table-sport; let them say of me, As jealous as Ford, that search'd a hollow walnut for his wife's leman. Satisfy me once more: once more search with me.
Mrs. Ford. What box, mistress Page! come you, and the old woman down: my husband will come into the chamber.
Ford. Old woman! What old woman's that?
Mrs. Ford. Why, it is my maid's aunt of Brentford.
Ford. A witch, a quack, an old coining quack!
Have I not forbid her my house! She comes of rascals, does she? We are simple men; we do not know what's bought to pass under the profession of fortune-tellers. She works by charms, by spells, by the hazard, and such daubery as this is; beyond our element; we know nothing. — Come down, you witch, you hang, you; come down, I say.
Mrs. Ford. Nay, good, sweet husband; — good gentlemen, let him not strike the old woman.
Enter Falstaff in woman's clothes, led by Mrs.
Page.
Mrs. Page. Come, mother Pratt, come, give me your hand.
Ford. I'll prest her: — out of my door, you witch! [beats him], you rag, you luggage, you Lover.
pole-cat, you ronyon! out! out! I'll confound you, I'll burn down all the devils in him, that he should not come, methinks his flesh is punished, he shall have no desires.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, he will do it:—'Tis a goodly credit for you.

Ford. Hang her, witch!

Eva. By yea and no, I think, the 'oman is a witch indeed: I like not when a 'oman has a great power to say a great word under her mother.

Ford. Will you follow, gentlemen! I beseech you, follow; see but the issue of my jealousy; if I cry out thus upon no trial, never trust me when I speak again.

Page. Lets obey his humor a little further: Come, gentlemen.

[Exeunt Page, Ford, Shallow, and Evans.

Mrs. Page. Trust me, he beat him most pitifully.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, by the mass, that he did not; he beat him most mispitifully, methought.

Mrs. Page. I'll have the cudgel balledows, and hang o'er the altar; it hath done meritorious service.

Mrs. Ford. What think you? May we, with the waste of womankind, and the witness of a good conscience, pursue him with any further revenge?

Mrs. Page. The spirit of wantonness is sure, secently, the devil will have him if we kill not in just, simple, with fine and recovery, he will never, I think, in the way of waste, attempt us again.

Mrs. Ford. Shall we tell our husbands how we have served him?

Mrs. Page. Yes, by all means; if it be but to scrape the figures out of your husband's brains. If they can find in their hearts, the poor unvirtuous fat knaves, when they are further afflicted, we two will still be the ministers.

Mrs. Ford. I' ll warrant, they'll have him publicly shamed: and methinks, there would be no period to the jest, should he not be publicly shamed.

Mrs. Page. Come, to the forge with it then, shape it; I would not have things cool.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III. — A Room in the Garder Inn.

Enter Host and Barnwell.

Bar. Sir, the Germans desire to have three of your horses; the duke himself will be to-morrow at court, and they are going to meet him.

Host. What duke should that be, comes so secretly! I hear not of him in the court; Let me speak with the gentleman; they speak English! I'll call them to the Host.

Host. They shall have your horses; but I'll make them pay, I'll shame them; they have had my houses a week at command; I have turned away my other guests; they must come off; I'll shame them: Come.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV. — A Room in Ford's House.

Enter Page, Ford, Mrs. Page, Mrs. Ford, and Sir Hugh Evans.

Eva. 'Tis one of the pest discretions of a 'oman as ever I did look upon.

Page. And did he send you both these letters at an instant?

Mrs. Page. Within a quarter of an hour.

Ford. Pardon me, wife: Henceforth do what thou wilt: I rather will suspect the sun with cold, Than thee with wantonness: now do thy honor stand,

In him that was of late an heretic, As from an oath.

Page. 'Tis well, 'tis well; no more.

Be not as extrem in submission, As in offence; But our plot go forward: Let our wives Yet once again, to make us public sport.

Appoint a meeting with this old fat fellow. Where we may take him and disgrace him for it.

Ford. There is no better way than that they spake of.

Page. How? to send him word they'll meet him in the park at midnight? he, the, he'll never come.

Eva. You say, he has been thrown in the rivers—

Page. and has been grievously peaten, as an old 'oman; then methinks he should have him. That he should not come, methinks his flesh is punished, he shall have no desires.

Page. So think I too.

Mrs. Ford. Devise how but you'll use him when he comes,

And let us two devise to bring him thither.

Mrs. Page. There is a old tale goes, that Herne the Hunter, in a most haggard and dreadful manner; You have heard of such a spirit, and well you know, The superstitious idle-headed chaps Received, and did deliver to our age, this tale of Herne the hunter for a truth.

Page. Why, yet there want not many, that do fear

In deep of night to walk by this Herne's oak: But what of this?

Mrs. Ford. Marry, this is our device; That Falstaff at that oak shall meet with us, Disguise'd like Herne, with base horns on his head.

Ford. If it be not to be doubted but he'll come, And in this shape: When you have brought him thither,

What shall you do with him? what is your plot?

Mrs. Page. That likewise have we thought upon, and thus:

Nan Page my daughter, and my little son And three the honest, in the measure of their growth, we'll dress Like urchins, ouphes, and fairies, green and white, With round of waxen tapers on their heads, And riddles in their hands; upon a sudden, As Falstaff, she, and I, are new made, Let them from forth a saw-pit rush at once, With some diffused song; upon their sight We two in great amazement will fly; Then let them all encircle him about, And, fairy-like, to pinch the unclean knight; And ask him why, that hour of fairy-revel, In their so sacred path he dares to tread, In shape profane!

Mrs. Ford. And till he tell the truth, Let the supposed fairies pinch him sound, And burn him with their tapers.

Mrs. Page. The truth being known, We'll all present ourselves; dis-born the spirit, And mock him home to Windsor.

Ford. The children must Be practiced well to this, or they'll never do't.

Eva. I will teach the children their behaviors; and I will be like a jack-anapes also, to burn the knight with her her.

Ford. That will be excellent! I'll go buy them vizards.

Mrs. Page. My Nan shall be the queen of all the fairies, Finely attired in a robe of white.

Page. That silk will I go buy: — and in that time shall master Slender steal my Nan away. [Aside. And marry her at Elton. — Go, send to Falstaff straight.

Ford. Nay, I'll to him again in name of Brook: He'll do his part to serve his purpose; Sun and moon.

Mrs. Page. Fear not you that: Go, get us properties, And tricking for our fairies.

Eva. Let us about it! it is admirable pleasures, and very honest knaveries.

[Exeunt Page, Ford, and Evans.

Mrs. Page. Go, mistress Ford, Send quickly to sir John, to know his mind.

[Exeunt Mrs. Ford.

I'll to the doctor; he hath my good will, And I'll go hither to marry with Nan Page, That Slender, though well landed, is an idiot; And he my husband best of all effects; The doctor is well money'd, and his friends Potent: he done but he, shall have her, Though twenty thousand worshiper come to erave her.

[Exeunt.
Enter Host and Simple.

Host. What wouldst thou have, boor? what, thin-skinned? speak, breathe, discuss; brief, short, quick, jump.

Sir. Mary, sir, I come to speak with sir John Falstaff from master Slender.

Host. Th'ere's his chamber, his house, his estate; the old woman, gone up into his chamber; he'll be so bold as stay, sir, till she come down; I come to speak with him, indeed.

Host. Hal! a fat woman! the knight must be robbed: I'll blame bully, boisterous sir John! from thy thin military: Art thou there? it is thin host, thin Ephesian, calls.

Fal. [aside] How now, mine host? Host. Here's a bohemian—Partar tarrying the coming down of thy fat woman; let her descend, bully, let her descend; my chambers are honorable: Fye! privacy! fye! fye!

Enter Falstaff.

Fal. There was mine host, an old fat woman even now with me; but she's gone up.

Sir. Pray you, sir, was't not the wise woman of Brentford?

Fal. Ay, marry, was it, muscle-shell; what wouldst thou have with him?

Sir. My master, sir, my master Slender, sent to her, seeing her go through the streets, to know, sir, whether any Nyne, sir, that beguiled him of a chain, hath the chain, or no?

Fal. I spake with the old woman about it.

Sir. And what says she, I pray, sir?

Fal. Mary, she says, that the very same man, that beguiled master slender of his chain, cozened him of it.

Sir. I would, I could have spoken with the woman herself; I had other things to have spoken with her too, from him.

Fal. What are they? let us know.

Host. Ay, come; quick.

Sir. I may not conceal them, sir.

Host. Conceal them, or thou diest.

Sir. Why, sir, they were nothing but about mistress Anne Page; to know, if it were my master's fortune to have her, or no.

Fal. 'Tis, 'tis his fortune.

Sir. What, sir?

Fal. To have her,—or no: Go; say, the woman told me so.

Sir. May I be so bold to say so, sir?

Fal. Ay, sir Tike; who more bold!

Sir. I thank your worship: I shall make my master glad with these tidings.

[Exit Simple.

Host. Thou art clerkly, thou art clerkly, sir John. Was there a wise woman with thee?

Fal. Ay, that there was, mine host; one, that hath taugh me more wit than ever I learned before in my life: and paid nothing for it neither, but was paid for my learning.

Enter Bardolph.

Bar. Out, alas, sir! cozenage! mere cozenage! Host. Where be my horses? speak well of them, varietie.

Bar. Run away with the cozeners; for so soon as I came beyond Eton, they threw me off, from behind one of them, in a shloge of mire; and set spurs, and away, like three German devils, three Doctor Faustuses.

Host. They are gone but to meet the duke, villain: do not say, they be dead; Germans are honest men.
Her mother ever strong against that match,
And turn for doctor Cains, hath appointed
That she shall likewise shall her away,
While other sports are tasking of their minds,
And at the dearness, where a priest attends,
Marry sent her; to this her mother's plot
She hath obediently, if she hath
Made promise to the doctor: — Now, thus it rests;
Her father means she shall be all in white;
And when that half, when Slenher sees his time
To take her by the hand, and bid her go,
She shall go with him: her mother hath intended,
The better to denote her to the doctor.
(Enter Falstaff and Mrs. Quickly.)
That, quaint in green, she shall be loose enough,
With ribands pendant, flattering 'bout her head:
And when the doctor spies his vantage ripe,
To pinch her by the hand and on that token,
The maid hath given consent to go with him.
Host. Which means she do to deceive? father or mother?
Ford. Both, my good host, to go along with me:
And here it rests,—that you'll procure the vicar
To stay for me at church; 'twixt twelve and one,
And, in the lawful name of marriage,
To keep the shouldered ceremonies.
Host. Well, husband your device; I'll to the vicar;
Bring you the maid, you shall not lack a priest.
Ford. So shall I, I evermore be bound to thee;
Besides, I'll make a present recompense. [Exit.

ACT V.

SCENE I. — A Room in the Garter Inn.

Enter Falstaff and Mrs. Quickly.

Fal. Pr'ythee, no more prattling: — go. — I'll hold you.
This is the third time; I hope good luck lies in odd numbers. Away, go; they say, there is divinity in odd numbers, either in majesty, chance, or death. — Away.

Mrs. Quic. I'll provide you a chair; and I'll do what I can to get ten a pair of horns.

Fal. Away, I say; time wears: hold up your head, and mince. [Exit Mrs. Quickly.

Enter Ford.

Now how, master Brook! master Brook, the matter which you have to night, or never. Be you in the Park about midnight, at Herne's oak, and you shall see wonders.

Ford. Went you not to her yesterday, sir, as you told me you had appointed?

Fal. I went to her, master Brook, as you see, like a poor old man: but I came from her, master Brook, like a poor old woman. That same knave, Ford, her husband, hath the finest mad devil of jealousy in him, master Brook, that ever governed frenzy. I will tell you:—He beat me grievously, in the shape of a woman: for in the shape of man, master Brook, I fear not what you think of my beaver's beam; because I know also, he is a shuttle. I am in haste; go along with me: I'll tell you all master Brook. Since I plucked green, played truant, and with what I knew not what it was to be beaten till lately. Follow me: I'll tell you strange things of this knave Ford: on whom to-night I will be revenged, and I will deliver his wife into your hand.

Follow: Strange things in hand, master Brook! follow. [Exit.

SCENE II. — Windsor Park.

Enter Page, Shallow, and Slender.

Page. Come, come; we'll cough it the castle-ditch, till we see the light of our fairies. — Remember, son Slender, my daughter.

Sho. Ay, forsooth: I have spoke with her, and we have a may-word: how to know another. I come to her white, and cry may; she cries back to me; and by that we know one another.

Slend. That's good too: But what needs either your may or your back? the white will decipher her well enough. — It hath struck ten o'clock.

Page. The night is dark; and light and spirits will become it well. Heaven prosper our sport! No man means evil but the devil, and we shall know him by his horns. Let's away; — follow me. [Exit.

SCENE III. — The Street in Windsor.

Enter Mrs. Page, Mrs. Ford, and Dr. Caius.

Mrs. Page. Master doctor, my daughter is in green: when you see your time, take her by the hand, away with her to the deanery, and despatch it quickly: Go before m'io the park; we two must go together.

[Keep to the time.

Mrs. Ford. I know vat I have to do; Adieu, Page. Fare you well, sir. [Exeunt. Caius. My husband will not rejoice so much at the absence of Falstaff, as he will chafe at the doctor's marrying my daughter; but 'tis no matter; better a little chiding than to see her married to a heart-break.

Mrs. Ford. Where is Nan now, and her troop of fairies! and the Welsh devil, Hugh?

Mrs. Page. They are all couched in a pit hard by Herne's oak, with obscured lights: which at the very instant of Falstaff's and our meeting, they will at once display to the night.

Mrs. Ford. That cannot choose but amaze him. Mrs. Page. If he be not amazed, he will be mocked; if he be amazed, he will every way he mocked.

Mrs. Ford. We'll betray him finely.

Mrs. Page. Against such lewdsters, and their lechery,
Those that betray them do no treachery.

Mrs. Ford. The hour draws on; to the oak, to the oak!

[Exit.

SCENE IV. — Windsor Park.

Enter Sir Hugh Evans, and Fairies.

Evans. Are we there? fares, fairies; come and remember your parts: be polished, for such follower into the pit; and when I give the watch 'ords, do as I bid you; Come, come; trib, trib. [Exit.

SCENE V. — Another Part of the Park.

Enter Falstaff disguised, with a buck's head on.

Fal. The Windsor bell hath struck twelve; the minute draws on: Now, the hot-blooded gods assist me!—Remember, Jove, thou wast a bull for thy Europe; love set on thy horns—0 powerful Jove! that, in some respects, makes a beast a man; in some other, a man a beast. — You were also, Jupiter, and for the love of Leda; O, omnipotent Jove! how near the god drew to the complexion of a cow! — A fault done first in the form of a beast; — O Jove, a beastly fault! and then another fault in the semblance of a towl; think 'tis not, Jove, a foul fault.—When gods have hot backs, what shall poor men do? For me, I am here a Windsor stag; and the fatter, I think, I forecast: send me a cool rut-time, love, or who can blame me to pass my tallow! Who comes here? my doe!

Enter Mrs. Ford and Mrs. Page.

Mrs. Ford. Sir John! art thou there, my dear; my male deer!

Fal. My doe with the black spot! — Let the shy ram potatoes; let it thunder to the tune of Green Sleeves; let his goose dress comfits, and snow crumps; let there come a tempest of invocatation, I will shelter me here. [Embracing her.

Mrs. Ford. Mistress Page is come with me, sweet-heart.

Fal. Divide me like a bride-g buck, each a bannch: — I will keep my sides to myself, my shoulders for the fellow of this walk, and my horns I beseech your husbands. Am I a woodman? hit? Speak I like Herne the hunter!— Why, now is Cupid a child of conscience; he makes restitution. As I am a true spirit, welcome. [Noise without.

Enter Sir Hugh Evans like a satyr; Mrs. Quick- ly and Ford: Anne Page as the Fairy Queen, attended by her brother and others, dressed like fairies, with waxen tears on their heads.

Quick. Fairies, black, grey, green and white, You moon-shine revellers, and shades of night, You enchain heirs of fixed destiny, Attend your office and your quality. — Crier Hoggoblin, make the fairy o-yes.

Fist. Elves, list your names; silence, you airy toys. Cricket, to Windsor chimney shall thou leap; Where fires thou find'st unak'd, and hearth's unswept. There pinch the maids as blue as bilberry: Our radiant Queen bates shut and shanty. Fal. They are fairies; be, that speaks to them, shall die: I'll wink and cough: No man their works must eye.

Eva. Where's Peto? — Go you, and where you find a maid, That, ere she sleep, has thrice her prayers said, Raise, and ring to the organs of her fancy, Sleep she as sound as careless infancy: But those as sleep, and think not on their sins, Pinch them, arms, legs, backs, shoulders, sides, and shins.

Quick. About, about: Search Windsor Castle, elves, within and without, Strew good luck, ophues, on every sacred room, That it may stand till the perpetual doom, In state as wassail, as in state 'tis fit; Worthy the owner, and the owner it. The several chairs of order look you scour With juice of balm, and every precious flower; Each fair instrument, coat, and several crest, With royal blaze, evermore be blis! And nightly, meadow-fairies, look you sing, In praise of the Garter's compass, in a ring: The expression that it bears, green let it be, More fertile-fresh than all the field to see; And, Many soul qui nitat a pace, write, In blazon, tuffs, flowers purple, blue and white; Like sapphire, pearl, and rich embroidery, Buckled below fair knighthood's hunting knee: Fairies use flowers for their character. As when, dispersive: But, till 'tis o'clock, Our dance of custom, round about the oak Of Herne the hunter, let us not forget.

Eva. Pray you, lock hand in hand; yourselves in order set: And twenty glow-worms shall our lanterns be, To guide our measure round about the tree. But, stay! I smell a man of middle age. Fal. Heavens defend me from that Welsh fairy! lest he transform me to a piece of cheese! Pist. Were him, thou wast o'erlook'd even in thy birth.

Quick. With trial-fire touch me his finger-end: If he be chaste, the flame will back descend, And turn him to no pain: but if he start, It is the flesh of a corrupted heart.

Pist. A trial, come.

Eva. Come, will this wood take fire? Fal. Oh, oh, oh! [They burn him with their tears.

Quick. Correct, corrupt, and tainted in desire! About him, fairies: sing a scornful rhyme: And, as you trip, still pinch him to your time.

Fist. It is right; indeed he is full of lecheries and misquity.

SONG.

Fye on sinful fantasy! Fye on lust and luxury Lust is but a bloody fire, Kindled with unchaste desire,

Fed in heart; whose flames aspire, As thoughts do blow them, higher and higher. Pinch him, fairies, mutually;

Pinch him, and burn him, and turn him about, Till candles, and starlight, and moonshine be out.

[During this song, the fairies pinch Falstaff. Doctor Caius comes out way, and steals away a fairy in great; slender another way, and takes off a fairy in white; and Falstaff comes, and steals away Mrs. Anne Page. A noise of hunting is made within. All the fairies run away. Falstaff pulls off his buck's head, and rises.]

Enter Page, Ford, Mrs. Page, and Mrs. Ford. They lay hold on him.

Page. Nay, do not fly; I think we have watch'd you now;

Will none but Herne the hunter serve your turn? Mrs. Page. I pray you, come; hold up the jest no further.

Now, good Sir John, how like you Windsor wives? See you these, husband? do not these fair yokes Become the forest better than the town?

Ford. Now, sir, who's a cuckold now! — Master Brookes, Falstaff, I have a new jest for you: here are his horns, master Brookes: And, master Brookes, he hath enjoyed nothing of Ford's but his buck-basket, his cudgel, and twenty pounds of money; which must bring me to master Brookes; his horses are arrested for it, master Brookes.

Mrs. Ford. Sir John, we have had ill luck: we could never meet; I will never like you for my love again, but I will always count you my dear.

Fal. I do begin to perceive that I am made an ass.

Ford. Ay, and an ox too; both the proofs are exact.

Fal. And these are not fairies? I was three or four times in the thought, they were not fairies: and yet the guiltiness of my mind, the sudden surprise of my powers, drove the grossness of the spirit into a received belief, in despite of the teeth of all rhyme and reason, that they were fairies. See now, how wit may be made a jack-a-lent, when it's upon ill employment.

Eva. Sir John Falstaff, serve Got, and leave your desires, and fairies will not pine you.

Ford. We'll say, Fairy Huck.

Eva. And leave you your jealousies too, I pray you.

Ford. I will never mistrust my wife again, till then art able to serve her good as well.

Fal. Have I laid my brain in the sun, and dried it, that it wants matter to prevent so gross der- reaching as this! And I riddin with a Welsh goat too! Shall I be too cold tocole? 'tis my time I were choked with a piece of toasted cheese.

Eva. Sence is not good to give putter; your belly is all putter.

Fal. Sence and putter! Have I lived to stand at the taunt of one that makes fitters of English! This is enough to be the decay of idle-walking through the realm.

Mrs. Page. Why, sir John, do you think, though we would have thrust virtue out of our hearts by the head and shoulders, and have given ourselves without scruple to hell, thence to the devil could have made you our delight?

Ford. What, a hodg-pudding! a bag of dax! Mrs. Page. A pulled man!

Pace. Old, cold, withered, and of intolerable entreats.

Ford. And one that is as sanderson as Satan! Pace. And as poor as Job! Ford. And as a cuckold as his wife? Eva. And given to fornications, and to taverns, and saek, and wine, and methenig, and to drinkings, and swearings, and sturings, prubbles and prubbles! Eva. Well, I am your theme: you have the start of me: I am dejected; I am not able to answer the Welsh funnel; ignorance itself is a plummct o'yer me; use me as you will.

Ford. Marry, sir, we'll bring you to Windsor, to one master Broook, that you have cozened of money

* Horns which Falstaff had.

* A fool's cap of Welsh materials.
to whom you should have been a powder; over and above that you have suffered, I think to repay that money will be a bitting affliction.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, husband, let that go to make amends.

For this sum, and so we'll all be friends.

Ford. Well, here's my hand; all's forgiven at last.

Page. Yet be cheerful, knight: thou shalt eat a posset to-night at my house; where I will desire thee to laugh to tears at my wife that now laughs at thee: Tell her, master Slender hath married her daughter.

Mrs. Page. Doctors doubt that: — If Anne Page be my daughter, she is, by this, doctor Caius's wife.

[Aside.

Enter Slender.

Slender. Whoa, ho! ho! father Page!

Page. Son! how now! how now, son! have you despatched?

Slender. Despatched — I'll make the best in Gloucestershire know on't; would I were hanged, ha, else.

Slender. I came yonder at Elton to marry mistress Anne Page, and she's a great lubberly boy: If it had not been for the church, I would have swunged him, or he should have swunged me. If I did not think it had been Anne Page, would I might never stir, and 'tis a post-master's boy.

Page. Upon my life, then, you took the wrong.

Slender. What need you tell me that? I think so, when I took a boy for a girl: If I had been married to him, for all he was in woman's apparel, I would not have had him.

Page. Why, this is your own folly. Did not I tell you, how you should know your daughter's garments?

Slender. I went to her in white, and cried mum, and she cry'd budget, as Anne and I had appointed; and yet it was not Anne, but a post-master's boy.

Eva. Joshu! Master Slender, cannot you see but marry boys?

Page. O, I am vexed at heart: What shall I do?

Mrs. Page. Good George, be not angry: I knew of your purpose; turned my daughter into green; and, indeed, she is now with the doctor at deanery, and there married.

[Aside.

Enter Caius.

Caius. Vere is mistress Page! By gar, I am cozened; I ha' married an garcon, a boy; an pawn,
TWELFTH NIGHT:

OR,

WHAT YOU WILL.

PERSONS REPRESENTED.

O'RSINO, Duke of Illyria.
SEBASTIAN, a young Gentleman, Brother to Viola.
ANTOIN, a Sea Captain, Friend to Sebastian.
A Sea-CAPTAIN, Friend to Viola.
VALENTINE, Gentlemen attending on the Duke.
CURIO, Sir JOSY BELCH, Uncle of Olivia.
SIR ANDREW AGUE-CHEEK.
MALVIOLO, Steward to Olivia.

FABIAN, Servants to Olivia.
CLOWN,
OLIVIA, a rich Countess.
VIOLA, in love with the Duke.
MARIA, Olivia's woman.

Lords, Priests, Sailors, Officers, Musicians, and other Attendants.

SCENE, a city in Illyria; and the Sea-Coast near it.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—An Apartment in the Duke's palace.

Enter Duke, Curio, Lords; Musicians attending.

Duke. If music be the food of love, play on,
Give me excess of it; that surfeiting,
The appetite may sicken, and so die.
That strain again;—it had a dying fall:
O, it came o'er my ear like the sweet south,
That breathes upon a bank of violets,
Stealing from the sweet unaccorded air,
And on the plumpest petticoat of June
That it alone is high-fantastical.

Cur. Will you go hunt, my lord?

Duke. What, Curio?

Cur. The hart.

Duke. Why, so I do, the noblest that I have:
O, when mine eyes did see Olivia first,
Methought she pur'd the air of pestilence;
That instant was I turned into a hart;
And my desires, like fell and cruel hounds,
E'er since pursue me.—How now! what news from her?

Enter Valentine.

Val. So please my lord, I might not be admitted,
But from her handmaid do return this answer:
The element itself, till seven years' heat,
Shall not behold her face at ample view;
But, like a cloister, she will veiled walk,
And water once a day her chamber round
With eye offending bribe: all this, to season
A brother's dead love, which she would keep fresh
And lasting, in her sad remembrance.

Duke. O, she, that hath a heart of that fine frame,
To pay this debt of love but to a brother,
How will she love, when the rich golden shaft
Hath kill'd the flock of all affections else?
That live in her! when liver, brain, and heart,
These sovereign thrones, are all supplied, and fill'd
(Her sweet perfections) with one self king!—
Away before me to sweet beds of flowers;
Love-thoughts lie rich, when canopied with beads.

[Execut.]
TWELFTH NIGHT:
Act I.

Cap.
A noble duke, in nature,
As in his name.

Vio.
What is his name?

Cap.
Cap.

Vio.
Orsino! I have heard my father name him!
He was a bachelor then.

Cap.
And so is now,
Orsino so very late; for but a month,
Ago I went from hence; and then 'twas fresh
In murmurs, as (you know, what great ones do,
The less will prattle of) that he did seek
The hand of fair Olivia.

Vio.
What's she?

Cap.
A virtuous maid, the daughter of a count
That died some twelvemonth since; then leaving her
In the protection of his son, her brother,
Who shortly also died: for whose dear love,
They say, she hath adjured the company
And sight of men.

Vio.
O, that I served that lady;
And might not be delivered to the world,
Till I had made mine own occasion mellow,
What my estate is.

Cap.
That were hard to compass;
Because she will admit no kind of suit,
Not of the duke's.

Vio.
There is a fair behavior in thee, captain;
And though that nature with a beauteous wall
Doth oft close in pollution, yet of thee
I will believe, thou hast a mind that suits
With this thy fair and outward character.
I pray thee, and I'll pay thee bounteously,
Concerning me what I am: and be my aid.
For such disagree as, haply, shall become
The form of my intent. I'll serve this duke;
Thou shalt present me as a cuckoo to him:
It is not worth thy purse; for I can sing,
And speak to him in many sorts of music,
That will allow me very worth his service.
What else may hap, to time I will commit;
Only the shape yet silence to my wit.

Cap.
Be you his counsellor, and your mate will be:
When my tongue blubs, let mine eyes not see!
Vio.
I thank thee, lead me on.
[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A Room in Olivia's House.

Enter Sir Toby Belch, and Maria.

Sir To.
What a plague means my niece, to take
The death of her brother thus! I am sure care's an enemy to life.

Mar.
By troth, sir Toby, you must come in ear-er' o' nights; your cousin, my lady, takes great exceptions to your ill hours.

Sir To.
Ay, let her except before excepted.

Mar.
Ay, but you must confine yourself within
The modest limits of order.

Sir To.
Confine! I'll confine myself no finer than
These clothes are good enough to drink in, and so be these boots too; an' they be not, let them hang themselves in their own strips.

Mar.
That quaffing and drinking will undo you.
I heard my lady talk of it yesterday; and of a foolish knight, that you brought in one night here, to be her waker.

Sir To.
Woo! Sir Andrew Ague-cheek!

Mar.
Ay, he.

Sir To.
He's as tall a man as any's in Illyria.

Mar.
What's that to the purpose?

Sir To.
Why, he has three thousand ducats a year.

Mar.
Ay, but he'll have but a year in all these ducats; he's a very fool, and a prodigal.

Sir To.
Why, you'll say so: he plays o' the viol-de-ccambro, and speaks three or four languages word for word without book, and hath all the good gifts of nature.

Mar.
He hath, indeed,—almost natural: for, besides that he's a fool, he's a great quarreler; and but that he hath the gift of a coward to allay the gift of a quarreler. 'Is the weight among the prudent, he would quickly have the gift of a grave.

Sir To.
By this hand, they soundstrels, and substractors, that say so of him. Who are they?

Mar.
They add moreover, he's a drunkard nightly in your company.

Sir To.
With drinking healths to my niece; I'll drink to her, as long as there's a passage in my throat, and drink in Illyria: He's a coward, and a Scene V.  OR.  WHAT YOU WILL.

Sir And.  Faith, I can cut a caper.
Sir Tro.  And I can cut the mantua too.
Sir And.  And I think, I have the back-trick, simply as strong as any man in Illyria.
Sir Tro.  Wherefore are these things hid? whereas I have these gifts a curtain before them? are they like to take dust, like mistress Mall's picture? Why dost thou not go to church in a galliard, and case thy body in thy adornment? My very walk should be a rig; I would not so much as make water, but in a sink-a-pace. What dost thou mean? is it a world to hide virtues in? I did think, by the excellent constitution of thy leg, it was formed under the star of a galliard.
Sir And.  Ay, 'tis strong, and it does indifferent well in a flame-colored stock. Shall we set about some revels?
Sir Tro.  What shall we do else? were we not born under Taurus?
Sir And.  Taurus! that's sides and heart.
Sir Tro.  Yes, thou art a man! - Damsel's lip. Let me see thee caper! ha! higher! ha! ha! excellent! [Exeunt.

Scene IV.—A Room in the Duke's Palace.

Enter Valentine and Viola in man's attire.

Val.  If the duke continue these favors towards you, Cesario, you are like to be made advanced in any of his or her acquaintance, even by the very man that has known you but three days, and already you are no stranger.

Val.  You neither hear his humor, or my negligence, that you call in question the continuance of his love; is he inconstant, sir, in his favors?
Val.  No, believe me.

Enter Duke, Curio, and Attendants.

Duke.  Who saw Cesario, ho?
Viola.  On your attendance, my lord; here.
Duke.  Stand you awhile aloof.  Cesario, thou know'st no less but all; I have unclasp'd to thee the book even of my secret soul: This morning, thou, with thy tricks, art thy gait unto her; Be not deny'd access, stand at her doors, and tell them, there thy fixed foot shall grow, Till they have audience.

Duke.  Your noble lord, Sir, be he so abandon'd to her sorrow As it is spoke, she never will admit me.
Duke.  Be chaster, and leap all civil bounds, Rather than thou unprocted get upon the stage.

Viola.  Say, I do speak with her, my lord: What then?

Duke.  Ah, then unfold the passion of my love, and I will stand by her discourse of my dear faith: It shall become thee well to act my woes; She will attend it better in thy youth, Than in a manner of grave aspect.

Duke.  I think not so, my lord.

Duke.  Duke.  Dear lad, believe it; For they shall yet believe thy happy years That say, thou art a man; Damsel's lip. Is not more smooth and robust; thy small pipe Is as the maiden's organ, shrill, and sound, And all its sensibility a woman's part. I know, thy constellatio is right apt For this affairs:—Some four, or five, attend him; All, if you will; for I myself am best. When least in company,—Prosper well in this, And wisely live as freely as thy lord, To call his fortunes thine.

Duke.  Thou hast, I'll do my best To thy lady: yet, [Aside, a barbarous strife! Who'er I woo, myself would be his wife. [Exeunt.

Scene V.—A Room in Olivia's House.

Enter Maria and Clown.

Maria.  Nay, either tell me where thou hast been, or I will not open my lips so wide as a bristle may enter, or in any way of thy excuse: my lady will hang thee for thy absence.

CLOWN.  Let her hang me: that, he is well-hanged in this world, needs to fear no colors.

Maria.  Make that good.

CLOWN.  He shall see none to fear.* Cloth, the name of a dance.  Stocking.  Full of impediments.

Maria.  A good lenient answer: I can tell thee where that saying was born, of; I fear no colors.

CLOWN.  Wherefore, or thou wilt press a Mary? Maria.  In the wars; and that may you be bold to say in your folly.

CLOWN.  Would thou strengthen them wisdom, that have it; and those that are fools, let them use their talents.
Maria.  Yet you will be hanged, for being so long absent; or, be turned away; is not that as good as a hanging?
CLOWN.  Many a good hanging prevents a bad marriage; and, for turning away, let summer beat it out.

Maria.  You are resolute then!

CLOWN.  Not so neither; but I am resolved on two points.

Maria.  That, if one break, the other will hold; or, if both break, your gaskins fall.

CLOWN.  Ah, thou good fellow! very apt! Well, go thy way; if sir Toby would leave drinking, thou wert as witty a piece of Eve's flesh as any in Illyria.

Maria.  Peace, you rogue, no more of that; here comes my lady: make your excuse wiscely, you were best. [Exit.

Enter Olivia, and Malvolio.

CLOWN.  Wit, and be th' thy will put me into good fooling? Those wits, that think they have thee, do very oft prove fools; and I, that am sure I lack thee, may pass for a wise man: For what says Quinapalus? "He that wields the fool, than a foolish wit."—God bless thee, lady!
Olivia.  Take the fool away.

CLOWN.  Do you not hear, fellows? Take away the lady.

Olivia.  Go to, you are a dry fool! I'll have none of your besides, you know dishonest.

CLOWN.  Two faults, madonna;—that drink and good counsel will amend: for give the dry fool drink, then is the fool not dry; but the dishonest man mend himself; if he mend, he is no longer dishonest; if he cannot, let the bawd, him mend; anything, that's mended, but patched; say, that those graces, is but patched with sin; and sin, that анд аиds, is but patched with virtue:—if that this simple soliloquy will serve, so; if it will not, what remedy? As there is no true cuckold but calumny, so beauty's a flower:—the lady bade take away the fool; therefore, I say again, take her away.

Olivia.  Sir, I bade them take you away.

CLOWN.  Misprision in the highest degree!—Lady, Caelitus non fideliam monarchi; that's as much as to say, I wear not motley in my brain. Good madonna, give me leave to prove you a fool.

CLOWN.  Can I do it?

CLOWN.  Dexterously, good madonna.

CLOWN.  Make your proof.

CLOWN.  I must catch this for you, madonna; good my nose of virtue, answer me.

Olivia.  Well, sir, for want of other idleness, I'll take your proof.

CLOWN.  Good madonna, why mourn'at thou?

Olivia.  Good fool, for my brother's death.

CLOWN.  I think his soul is in hell, madonna.

Olivia.  I know his soul is in heaven, fool.

CLOWN.  The more fool you, madonna, to mourn for your brother's soul being in heaven.—Take away the fool, gentleman.

Olivia.  What think you of this fool, Malvolio? doth he not meet your liking?

Malvolio.  Yes; and shall do, till the pangs of death shake him. Infamy, that decays the wise, doth ever make the better fool.

CLOWN.  God send you, sir, a speedy infamy, for the better increasing your folly! Sir Toby will be sworn, that I am no fox; but he will not pass his wont for two pence that are no fool.

Olivia.  How say you to that, Malvolio?

Malvolio.  I marvel your ladyship takes delight in such a barren race; I saw him put down the other two, with an happy foil, that has no more brain than a stone. Look you now, he's out of his guard already; unless you laugh and minister occasion to him, he's gagged. Protest, I take these wise men, that can play at these set kind of fools, no better than the fools zounds.*

Olivia.  O, you are sick of self-love, Malvolio, and

* Short and spare.  Italian, mistress, dame.  Fools, buffoons.

[304]
Taste with a distempered appetite. To be generous, guiltless, and of free disposition, is to take those things for hard-boiled, that you deem cannon-bullets: There is no slander in an allowed fool, though he do nothing but tell; nor no railing in a known discerning man, that is not an hundred times more. Now Mercury endure thee with laughing, for thou speakest well of fools.

Re-enter MARIAN.

Mar. Madam, there is at the gate a young gentleman, much desires to speak with you.

O. From the Count Orsowo, is it?

Mar. I know not, madam; 'tis a fair young man and well attended.

Oft. Who of my people hold him in debt?

Mar. Sir Toby, madam, your kinsman.

Oft. Fetch him off, I pray you; he speaks nothing but madman: Fye on him! [Exit MARIAN.] Go you, Malvolio; if it be a suit from the count, I am seek, or not at home; what you will, to dismiss it.
[Exit MALVOLIO] Now you see, sir, how your fooling grows old, and people dislike it.

O. Thou hast spoke too, madam, as if thy children should be a fool: whose skill rave enam with brains, for here comes one of thy kin, has a most weak head matter.

Enter Sir Toby Belch.

Oft. By mine honor, half drunk.—What is he e at the gate, cousin?

Sir T. A gentleman.

O. Gentlemen! What gentleman?
Sir T. This gentleman here.—A plague o'these pickle-herrings, now new, now old.

Oft. Good Sir Toby.

O. Cousin, cousin, how have you come so early by this lechery?

Sir T. Lechery! I defy lechery: there's one at the gate.

Oft. Ay, marry; what is he?

Sir T. Let him be the devil, an he will, I care not; go to bed, girls, say I. Well, it's all one. [Exit.

Oft. What a drunken man like, fool?

Sir T. Like a drown'd man, a fool, and a madman:
one drench'd above heat makes him a fool; the second is the end of a third drown'd him.

Oft. Go to, and seek the coroner, and let him sit out my coat; for he's in the third degree of drink, he's drown'd; go, look after him.

Sir T. He is bat mad yea, madam; and the fool shall look to the madman. [Exit Clown.

Re-enter MALVOLIO.

Mal. Madam, yond' young fellow swears he will speak with you. I told him you were sick; he takes on him to understand so much, and therefore comes to speak with you: I told him you were asleep: be seems to have a fore-knowledge of that too, and therefore comes to speak with you. What is to be said to him, lady? he's fortiied against an en-}

O. Tell him, he shall not speak with me.

Mal. He has been told so; and he says, he'll stand at your door like a shar'd post, and be the supporter of a bench, but he'll speak with you.

O. What kind of a man is he?

Mal. Why, of man kind.

O. What manner of man?

Mal. Of very ill manner; he'll speak with you,
will you or no.

O. Of what personage, and years, is he?

Mal. Not yet old enough for a man, nor young enough for a boy: as a squash is before 'tis a peasc or a cooling when 'tis almost an apple; 'tis with him en standing water, between boy and man. He is very well favored, and he speaks very shrewdly; one would think, his mother's milk were scarce out of him.

O. Let him approach. Call in my gentlewomen.

Mal. Gentlewomen, my lady calls. [Exit.

Re-enter MARIAN.

Oft. Give me my veil: come, throw it over myace;

We'll once more hear Orsino's embassy.

Enter VIOLA.

Vio. The honourable lady of the house, which is she!

[Short arrows. Lying. The cover of the brain.

Oft. Speak to me, I shall answer for her. Your voice will be a voice.

Vio. Most radiant, exquisite, and unmatchable beauty,—I pray you, tell me, if this be the lady of the house, for I never saw her: I would be loth to speak before her, for besides that it is excelleently well penned, I have taken great pains to con
it. Good beauties, let me sustain no scorn: I am very comptible, even to the least sinister usage.

Oft. Whither came you, sir?

Vio. I can say little more than I have studied, and that question's out of my part. Good gente one, give me modest assurance, if you be the lady of the house, you shall begin to speak, and for besides that it is excellent well pen'd, I have taken great pains to con it. Good beauties, let me sustain no cern; I am very comptible, even to the least sinister usage.

Oft. Are you a comedian?

Vio. No, my profound heart: and yet, by the very fangs of malice, I swear, I am not that I play.

Oft. Who gave you this poem?

Vio. Most certain, if you are she, you do surp yourself; for what is yours to bestow, is not yours to reserve. But this is from my commission: I will on with my speech in your praise, and then show you the heart of my message.

Oft. Come to what is important in't: I forgive you the praise.

Vio. Alas, I took great pains to study it, and it's poetical.

O. It is the more like to be feigned: I pray you, keep it in. I heard, you were saucy at my gates; and allowed your approach, rather to wonder at you than to hear you. If you be not mad, he good; for, by the reason, he is to be not that time of moon with me, to make one in so skipping a dialogue.

Mar. Will you hold sail, sir? here lies your way.

Vio. Good swabber; I am to hull here a little longer.—Some mollification for your giant, sweet lady.

O. Tell me your mind.

Vio. I am a messenger.

O. Sure, you have some hideous matter to deliver, when the courtesy of it is so fearful. Speak your office.

Vio. It alone concerns your ear. I bring no overture of war, no taxation of homage; I hold the chive in my hand: my words are as full of peace as matter.

Oft. Yet you began rudely. What are you?
what would you?

Vio. The rudeness, that hath appeald in me, have I learn'd from my entertainment. What I am and who I am, are as secret as maidshead:
to your ears, divinity; to any other's, propagation.

Oft. Give us the place alone: we will hear this divinity. [Exit MARIAN.] Now, sir, what 's your

Vio. Most sweet lady.

O. A comfortable doctrine, and much may be said of it. Where lies your text?

Vio. In Orsino's bosom.

Oft. In his bosom? In what chapter of his bosom?

Vio. To answer by the method, in the first of his heart.

Oft. Have I read it; it is honey. Have you no more to say?

Vio. Good madam, let me see your face.

Oft. Have you any commission from your lord to negotiate with my face? you are now out of your text: but we will draw the curtain, and show you the picture. Look you, sir, such a one as I was told: it is not well done! [Unmask.

Vio. Excellently done, if God did all.

Oft. Tis in grain, sir; 'twill endure wind and weather.

Vio. 'Tis beauty truly blent, whose red and white
Nature's own sweet and cunning hand laid on:
Lady, you are the cruell'st she alive,
If you will read these graces to the grave,
And change the world no more.

Oft. O, sir, I will not be so hard-hearted; I will give out divers schedules of my beauty. It shall be invisible; and every particle, and uses, is labelled to my will: as, item, two lips indifferent red;
item, two grey eyes, with lids to them; item,

Accountable.

Vio. It appears from several parts of this play that the original actress of Maria was very short.

Oft. Presents.
Act II. Scene II. OR, WHAT YOU WILL.

one neck, one chin, and so forth. Were you sent lither to 'praise me'? Vi. I see you what you are; you are too proud;
But, if you were the devil, you are fair.
My lord and master loves you; 0, such love
Could be but requited, though you were crowned
The nonpareil of beauty!
Oh. How does he love me?
Via. With adoration, with fertile tears,
With grarms that thunder love, with sighs of fire.
Oh. Your lord does know my mind, I cannot love him:
Yet I suppose him virtuous, know him noble,
Of great estate, of fresh and stainless youth;
But some might well deserve to be held valiant,
And, in dimension, and the shape of nature.
A gracious person; but yet I cannot love him;
He might have took his answer long ago.
Via. If it did love you in my master's flame,
With such suffering, such a deadly life,
In your denial I would find no cause,
I would not understand it.
Via. Why, what would you?
Via. Make me a willow cabin at your gate,
And call upon my soul within the house
Via. O, the wantonness of contemned love,
And sing them loud even in the dead of night;
Hold your name to the reverberate hills,
And make the babbling gossip of the air
Cry out, Olivia! O, you should not rest
Between the elements of air and earth,
But you should pity me.
Via. You might do much: What is your parentage?
Via. Above my fortunes, yet my state is well:
I am a gentleman.
Via. Get you to your lord;

ACT II.

SCENE I. — The Sea-coast.

Enter Antonio and Sebastian.

Ant. Will you stay no longer? nor will you not, that I go with you?
Seb. By your patience, no: my stars shine darkly over me: the maid many of my fate might, perhaps, distress you: therefore I shall crave of you leave, that I may bear my evils alone: It was a bad recom pense for your love, to lay any of them on you.
Ant. Let me know of you whither you are bound.
Seb. No, smooth, sir; my determinate voyage is never extraneous. But I perceive in you so excellent a touch of modesty, that you will not extort from me what I am willing to keep in: therefore it charges me in manners the rather to express my self.
You must know of me then. Yukon, my name is Sebastian, which I called Rodrigo: My father was that Sebastian of Messalline, whom, I know, you have heard of: he left behind him, myself, and a sister, both born in an hour. If the heavens had been peaceful, we had so ended! but you, sir, after it:
for, some hour before you took me from the breach of the sea, was my sister drowned.
Ant. Alas, the day!
Seb. A lady, sir, though it was said she much resembled me, was yet of many accounted beautiful:
but, the lady less married, with such estimable wonder, o'er fast I will boldly publish her, she bore a mind that envy could not but call fair: she is drowned already, sir, with salt water, though I seem to draw her remembrance again with more.
Ant. Pardon me, sir, your bad entertainment.
Seb. This good Antonio, forgive your trouble.
Ant. If you will not murder me for my love, let me be your servant.
Seb. If you will not undo what you have done,

I cannot love him: let him send no more;
Unless, perchance, you come to me again.
To tell me how he takes it. Fare you well:
I thank you for your pains; spend this for me.
Via. I am no fool'd post, lady: keep your purse;
My master, not myself, lacks recompense.
Love make his heart of thine, that you shall love;
And let your favor, hence, my master bring.
Place'd in contempt! Farewell, fair cruelty.
[Exit.
Via. What is your parentage?
Above my fortunes, yet my state is well:
I am a gentleman. — I'll be sworn thou art;
Thy tongue, thy face, thy limbs, actions, and spirit,
Do give thee five-fold blazon: — Not too fast:

Reenter Malvolio.

Mal. Here, madam, at your service.
Via. Run after that same provish messenger,
The country's man: he left this ring behind him,
Would I, or not; tell him, I'll not send it. Desire him not to flutter with his lord,
Nor hold him up with hopes: I am not for him.
If the country man will come this way to morrow,
I'll give him reasons for't. He, thee, Malvolio.
Via. Mal. Madam, I will.
Mal. In a thousand fortunes, yet my state is well:
I am a gentleman: — We ourselves do not
What is decreed, must be; and be this so!
[Exit.

SCENE II. — A Street.

Enter Viola; Malvolio following.

Mal. Were not you even now with the countess Olivia?
Via. No, sir; I never was so close with her.
Mal. She returns this ring to you, sir: you might have saved me many pains, to have taken it away yourself. She adds, moreover, that you should put your lord into a desperate assurance she will none of him: And one thing more; that you be never so hardly to come again in his ears, unless you do to report your lord's taking of this. Receive it so.
Via. She took the ring of me; I'll none of it.
Mal. Come, sir, you peevishly throw it to her;
and she would be so returned: if it be worth stopping for, there it lies in your eye; if not, be not his that finds it.
[Exit.
Via. I left no ring with her: What means this

Fortune forbid, my outside have not charm'd her!
She made a good view of me; indeed, so much.
That sure, most thought, her eyes had lost her tongue.
For she did speak in starts distantly.
She loves me, sure; the cunning of her passion
Invites me in this churchful messenger.
None of my lord's ring? why, she sent none.
I am the man;—If it be so, (as 'tis),
Poor lady, she were better love a dream,
Disguise, I see, thou art a wickedness,
What this preposterous enigma does much,
How easy it is, for the proper-raise,
In women's waxen hearts to set their forms!
Alas, our faculty is the cause, not we;
For, such as we made of, such she be.
How will this fadge? I! My master loves her deadly;
And, I, poor monster, fond as much on him;
And she, mistaken, seems to do on me:
What will become of this? As I am man,
My state is desperate for my master's love;
As I am woman, now alas the day!
What thriftless sighs shall poor time breathe!
O, this misfortune! but not I;
It is too hard a knot for me to untie.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—A Room in Olivia's House.

Enter Sir Toby Belch, and Sir Andrew Ague-cheek.

Sir To. Approach, sir Andrew: not to be a bed;
after midnight, is to be up betimes; and disturb surgeons, thou know'st.

Sir And. Nay, by my troth, I know not: but I know, to be up late, is to be up late.

Sir To. A true conclusion: I think it as an unfilled can: To be up after midnight, and to go to bed then, is early; so that, to go to bed after midnight, is to go to bed betimes. Do not our lives consist of four elements?

Sir And. Faith, so they say; but, I think, it rather consists of eating and drinking,
Sir To. Thou art a sober man: let us therefore eat and drink.—Maria, say!—a stout of wine.

Enter Clown.

Sir And. Here comes the fool.

Clo. How now, my hearts! Did you never see the picture of we three?

Sir To. Pardon, Welcome, as. Now let's have a catch.

Sir And. By my troth, the fool has an excellent breast. I had rather than forty shillings I had such a leg: and so sweet a breath to sing, as the Pea has. In sooth, thou want in so very graceful tooling last night, when thou spokest of Piergroonmait, of the Vapans passing, the equinatio of squeakens; I was very good, a man. I sent thee thence for thy leman: hadst it?

Clo. I did impertinently thy gratuity; for Malvolio's nose is no wimpock; my lady has a white hand, and the grandsons are no wimpock-houses.

Sir And. Excellent! Why, this is the best tooling, when all is done. Now a song.

Sir To. Come on; there is a dance for you:
let's have song.

Sir And. There's a testril of me too; if one knight gives a—

Clo. Would you have a love-song, a song of good?—

Sir To. A love-song, a love-song.

Sir And. Ay, ay, I care not for good life.

SONG.

Clo. O mistress mine, where are you roaming?
O stay and hear; your true love's coming:
O say, why from our meeting you have flown?
Since last we saw, but little has been shown.

Sir And. Excellent good, I' faith!

Sir To. Good, good.

Clo. What is love? 'tis not hereof,
Present wirth hath present laughter;
What's to come, to still unsure;
In death there be no pity;
Then come kiss me, sweet-and-twenty,
Youth's a stuff will not endure.

Sir And. A mellifluous voice, as I am true knight.

Sir To. A contagious breath
Swarthy and sweet and contagious, I' faith.

Sir To. To hear by the nose, it is dulcet in contagion.
But shall we make the wekken dance in
And rouse the nightingale on a catch, they will draw three souls out of one weaver! Shall we do that?

Sir And. An you love me, let's do't; I am dog at a catch.

Clo. By'r lady, sir, and some dogs will catchwell Sir And. Most certain: let our catch be, That's knave.

Clo. Hold thy peace, thou knave, knight! I shall be constrain'd not to call thee knave, knight.

Sir And. I must be; and I have constrain'd one to call me knave. Begin, fools; it begins, Hold thy peace.

Clo. I shall never begin, if I hold my peace.
Sir And. Good, I' faith! Come, begin,
[They sing a catch.]

Enter Maria.

Mar. What a caterwauling do you keep here? If my lady have not called up her steward, Malvolio, and not called you out of doors, I never trust one
Sir To. My lady's Catana, we are politicians:
Malvolo's a Peg-a-Ramsey, and there's merry men we be. Am not I consanguineous? I am not of her blood! Tilly-valley, lady! There dwelt a man in Babylon, lady, lady!

Singing.

Clo. Beshrew me, the knight's in admirable fool-

Sir And. Ay, he does well enough, if he be disposed, and so do I too; he does it with a better grace, but I do it more natural.

Sir To. O, the twelfth day of December,—Sing-

Mar. For the love of God, peace.

Enter Malvolio.

Mal. My masters, are you mad! or what are you? Have you gone out, mauners; let me therefore eat and drink.—Maria, say!—a stout of wine.

Enter Clown.

Sir And. Here comes the fool.

Clo. His eyes do show his dogs are almost done.
Mal. Is it even so!

Sir To. But I will not ver die.

Sir To. Sir Toby, there you lie.

Mal. This is much cred to you.

Sir To. Shall I bid him go?

Singing.

Clo. What an if you do?

Clo. Shall I bid him go, and spare not?

Clo. No, no, no, no, you dare not.

Sir To. Out o' time! sir, ye lie.—Art any more than a steward! Dost thou think, because thou art virtuous, there shall be no more cakes and ale!

Mal. Yes, by saint Anne; and ginger shall be hot, the mouth too.

Sir To. Thou'rt in the right.—Go, sir, rub your chan with crums;—A stoop of wine, Maria!

Mal. If you priced my lady's favor at any thing more than contempt, you would not give means for this uncivild rule; she shall know of it, by this hand.

Mal. Art ill to choose your ears.

Sir And. There were so good a deed as to drink when a man's a hungry, to challenge him to the field; and then to break promise with him, and make a fool of him.

Sir To. Do, knight; I' will write thee a challenge; or, I' will deliver my indigination to him by word of mouth.

Mar. Sweet sir Toby, be patient for to-night; since the youth of the count's was too-day with my lady, she is much out of quiet. For meanour Mal-voi, let me alone with him; if I do not gall him into a nay-word, and make him a common recreation, do not think I have wit enought to be straight in my bed: I know I can do it Remarces.

Name of an old song.

Humble.

Hang yourself.

Bye-word.
SCENE IV. OR, WHAT YOU WILL.

Sir To. Possess us, possess us; tell us something of him.

Mrs. Marry, sir, sometimes he is a kind of Puritan.

Sir And. O, if I thought that, I 'll beat him like a dog.

Sir To. What, for being a Puritan? thy exquisite reason, dear knight?

Sir And. I have no exquisite reason for't, but I have reason good enough.

Sir. The devil a Puritan that he is, or any thing constantly but a time-pleaser; an affected ass, that cons state without book, and utters it by great swarts; tis the best persuaded of himself, so crammed he thinks, with excellencies, that it is his ground of faith, that all, that look on him, love him; and on that vice in him will my revenge find notable cause to work.

Sir To. What wilt thou do?

Sir. I will drop in his way some obscure epistles of love; wherein by the color of his heard, the shape of his leg, the manner of his gait, the expressiveness of his eye, forehead, and complexion, he shall find himself most feelingly persomated; I can write very like my lady, your niece; on a forgotten matter we can hardly make distinction of our hands.

Sir To. Excellent! I smell a device.

Sir And. I have 't in my nose too.

Sir. He shall think, by the letters that thou wilt send, that they come from my niece, and that she is in love with him.

Sir. My purpose is, indeed, a horse of that color.

Sir And. And your horse now would make him an ass.

Sir. Ass, I doubt not.

Sir And. O, 'twill be admirable.

Sir. Sport royal, I warrant you: I know, my physic will work with him. I will plant you two, and let the fool make a third, where he shall find the letter; observe his construction of the event. For this night, to bed; and I dream on the even. Farewell. [Exit Sir To.]

Sir And. Good night, Penitulous.

Sir To. Before me, she's a good wench.

Sir To. She's a beggar, true bred, and one that adores me: What o'that?

Sir And. I was adored once too.

Sir To. Let's to bed, knight—Thou hast need send for more money.

Sir And. If I cannot recover your niece, I am a foul way out.

Sir To. Send for money, knight; if thou hast her, not 't the end, call me Cut.

Sir And. If I do not, never trust me, take it how you will.

Sir To. Come, come; I'll go burn some sack, 'tis too late to go to bed now: come, knight, come, knight.

[Exit Sir And.]

SCENE IV.—A Room in the Duke's Palace.

Enter Duke, Viola, Curio, and others.

Duke. Give me some music: Now, good morrow, friends.

Now, good Cesario, but that piece of song, That old and antique song we heard last night; Methought, it did relieve my passion much; More than light airs and recollected terms Of these most brisk and giddy-paced times:—

Come, but one verse.

Cur. He is not here, so please your lordship, that should sing it.

Duke. Who was it?

Cur. Feste, the jester, your lord; a fool, that the lady Olivia, or that lover took much delight in; he is about the house.

Duke. Seek him out, and play the tune the while.

[Exit Cur. Enter Cesario.—Music.

Come hither, boy: If ever thou shalt love,
In the sweet pangs of it, remember me:
For, such as I am, all true lovers are:
Unfed and skittish, amorous else,
Save, in that constant image of the creature
That is belov'd.—How dost thou like this tune?
Viola. It gives a very echo to the seat
Where love is thine own.

Duke. Thou dost speak masterly:
My life upon't, young though thou art, thine eye

[Music.

Hath stay'd upon some favor that it loves;
Hath it not, boy! A little, by your favor.

Duke. What kind of woman 'st thou?

Viola. Of your complexion.

Duke. She is not worth thee, then. What years, i' faith?

Viola. About your years, my lord.

Duke. Too old, by heaven; Let still the woman take
An elder than herself; so wars she to him, So sways she level in her husband's heart.

For, boy, however we do praise ourselves,
Our fortunes are more giddy and infirm,
More longing, wavering, sooner lost and worn,
Then woman's are.

Viola. If I think it well, my lord.

Duke. Then let thy love be younger than thyself,
Or thy affection cannot hold the bent;
For women are as roses; whose fair flower,

Being once display'd, doth fall that very hour.

Viola. And so they are: alas, that they are so;
To die, even when to perfection grow.

Recuer Curio and Clown.

Duke. O, fellow, come, the song we had last night:
Mark it, Cesario; it is old, and plain:
The spinners and the knitters in the sun,
And the free maids that weave their thread with bones,

Do use to chant it; it is silly sooth;
And dailles with the innocence of love,
Like the old age.

Clown. Are you ready, sir?

Duke. Ay; pr'ythee, sing

[Music.

SONG.

Clown. Come away, come away, death,
And in sad express lies be laid;
Fly away, fly away, breath;
I am blown by a fair cruel maid.
My shroud of white, stuck all with you,
O prepare it;
My part of death, no one so true Bel share it.

Not a flower, not a flower sweet,
On my black caffin let there be strown;
Not a friend, not a friend greet
My poor corpse, where my bones shall be thrown.
A thousand thousand sighs to save,
Lay me, O where
Sad true lover never find my grave,
To weep there.

Duke. There's for thy pains.

Clown. No pains, sir; I take pleasure in singing, sir.

Duke. I'll pay thy pleasure, then.

Clown. Truly, sir, and pleasure will be paid, one time or another.

Duke. Give me now leave to leave thee.

Clown. Now, the melancholy god protect thee; and the tailor make thy doublet of changable stuffs, for thy mind is a very opeal; I would have men of such constancy put to sea, that their business might be every thing, and their intent every where; for that's it, that always makes a good voyage of anything.—Farewell.

[Exit Clown.]

Duke. Let all the rest give place.—

[Exit Curio and Attendants.

Curio. Once more, Cesario,
Get thee to yon same sovereign cruelty:
Tell her, my love, more noble than the world,
Prizes not quantity of dirty lands;
The parts that fortune hath bestowed upon her,
Tell her, I hold as giddily as fortune;
But 'tis that miracle, and queen of gems,
That nature pranks her in, attracts my soul.

Duke. But, if she cannot love you, sir?

Duke. I cannot be so answer'd.

Viola. Sooth, but you must.

Say, that some lady, as, perhaps, there is,
Hath for your love as great a pang of heart
As you have for Olivia: you cannot love her;
You tell her so; Must she not then be answer'd?

Duke. There's no woman's sides

Can hide the beating of so strong a passion
As love doth give my heart: no woman's heart
So big, to hold so much; they lack retention.

[Simple truth.

Duke. Decks.
Alas, their love may be call'd appetite,—
No motion of the liver, but the palate;
The tender surfeit, and the drink
But mine is all as hungry as the sea,
And can digest as much: make no compa—

Sir To. To what then, man can bear ne—
And that I owe Olivia.

Vio. Ay, but I know,—

Duke. What dost thou know!—

Sir To. To what then, man can bear ne—

And what's her history?—

Vio. A blank, my lord; she never told her love,
But let conceit, like a worm i' the bud,
Forth from her damask cheek she push'd in thought:
And, with a green and yellow melancholy,
She sat like patience on a monument,
Smiling at grief. Was not this love, indeed!
We men may say more, swear more: but, indeed,
Our shows are more than will; for still we prove
Much in our vows, but little in our love.

Duke. But died thy sister of her love, my boy!—

Vio. I am all the daughters of my father's house.
And all the brothers too,—and yet I know not:—
Sir, shall I to this lady!—

Duke. Ay, that's the theme.
To her in haste; give her this jewel; say, My love can give no place, bide no denial.

[Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Olivia's Garden.

Enter Sir Toby Belch, Sir Andrew Ague-cheek, and Fabian.

Sir To. Come th' ways, signior Fabian.

Fab. Nay, I' ll come; if I have a scrap of this sport, let me be lod'd to death with melancholy.

Sir To. Would'st thou not be glad to have the magnificently rascally sheep gaping, by some notable change?

Fab. I would exult, man: you know, he brought me out of favor with my lady, about a bear-baiting here.

Sir To. To anger him, we'll have the bear again; and we will feed him black and blue:—Shall we not, sir Andrew?

Sir And. An we do not, it is pity of our lives.

Enter Maria.

Sir To. Here comes the little villain:—How now, my bottle of India?

Mar. Get ye all three into the box-tree; Malvolio's coming down this walk; he has been yonder i' th' sun, practising behavior to his own shadow, this half hour; observe him, for the love of mockery, or I know, this letter will make a contemplative idiot of him. Close, in the name of jesting! [The men hide themselves.] Lie thou there! [Throws down a letter,] for here comes the trout that must be caught with ticking.

[Exit Maria.

Enter Malvolio.

Mal. 'Tis but fortune; all is fortune. Maria once told me, she did affect me; and I have heard herself come thus near, that, should she fancy, it should be one of my complexion. Besides, she uses me more with respect than one else that follows her. What should I think out?

Sir To. Here's an overweening rogue!

Fab. O, peace! Contemplation makes a rascally-cook of him, how he jets under his advanced plumes?

Sir And. Slight, I could so beat the rogue:—

Fab. O, peace! Contemplation makes a rascally-cook of him, how he jets under his advanced plumes?

Sir To. Ah, rogue!—

Sir And. Pistol him, pistol him.

Sir To. Peace, peace, peace!—

Mal. There is example forth; the lady of the stracony married the yeoman of the wardrobe.

Sir And. Be on him, Jeedle!—

Fab. O, peace! Jeedle!—

How he's deeply in, look, how imagination blows him.

Mal. Having been three months married to her, sitting in my state,—

* Denil.

Struts.

Sir To. O, for a stone-how, to hit him in the eye!—

Mal. Calling my officers about me, in my branched velvet gown; having come from a day-bed, where I left Olivia sleeping.

Sir To. Fire and brimstone!—

Fab. O, peace, peace, peace! now, now.

Mal. Seven of my people, with an obstinate start, make out for him; I brown the whole; and, perchance, wind up my watch, or play with some rich jewel. Toby approaches; court'sy there to me:—

Sir To. Shall this fellow live?

Fab. Then, our silence be drawn from us with cars, yet peace.

Mal. I extend my hand to him thus, quenching my familiar smile with an austere regard of control;—

Sir To. And does not Toby take you a blow of the lips then?

Mal. Saying, cousin Toby, my fortunes having cast me on your notice, give me this prerogative of speech:—

Sir To. What, what?

Mal. You must amend your drunkenness.

Sir And. Out, scab!—

Fab. Nay, patience, or we break the sinews of our plot.

Mal. Besides, you waste the treasure of your time with a foolish knight;—

Sir And. That's me, I warrant you.

Mal. One Sir Andrew;—

Sir And. I knew, twas; for many do call me fool.

Mal. What employment have we here?

Sir To. [Taking up the letter.] Now is the woodcock near us;—

Mal. Sir To. O, peace! and the spirit of honors intimate reading aloud to him!

Mal. By my life, this is my lady's hand: these be her usual--[Reads,] her Us's, and thus makes she her great Ps's. It is, in contempt of question her hand.

Sir And. Her ts, her Us's, and her T's;—Why that?

Mal. [Reads.] To the unknown beloved, this and my good wishes; her very phrases!—By your leave, wax,—Soil!-- and the impression her Lucrece, with which she used to seal; 'tis my lady: To whom should this be?

Fab. This wins him, live and all.

Mal. [Reads.] Jove knows, I love;—

Sir To. But who?

Mal. Lady Venus more, No man must know.

[Reads.] No man must know. What follows? the numbers altered!—No man must know:—if this should be thee, Malvolio!—

Sir To. Marry, hang thee, brook!—

Mal. I may command, where I adore;—

Sir To. With bloodless stroke my heart doth goe;—

Fab. A fistian riddle!

Sir To. Excellent wench, say 1.

Mal. Maria, A, I, doth sway my life,—

Fab. But let me see.—

Mal. That being a vrille, I may speak.

Fab. What a dish of poison hath she dressed him?—

Sir To. And with what wing the stammy-checker in the air.

Mal. I may command where I adore;—

Sir To. Why, she may command me; I serve her, she is my lady. Why, this is evident to any formal capacity. There is no man to mend it in this:—

Fab. That should as alphabetical position portend? If I could make that resemble something in me,—

Mal. Sir And. Peter, Peter, Pete, Peter, Pete, Peter, Peter, Pete, Pete, Peter, Peter, Pete, Peter, Peter, Pete, Peter.

Sir To. O, I make up that;—he is now at a cold scent.

Fab. Sawter'll cry upon't for all this, though it be a mere虚构.

Mal. M—Malvolio;—M—why, that begins my name.

* Badger.

* Hawk.

* Flies at it.

* Name of a bound.
Scene I.—Olivia’s Garden.

Enter Viola, and Clown with a labor.

Vio. Save thee, friend, and thy music: Dost thou live by thy labor?

Clo. Yes, sir; I live by the church.

Vio. Art thou a churchman?

Clo. No such matter, sir; I do live by the church: for I do live at my house, and my house doth stand by the church.

Vio. So thou mayst say, the king lies by a beggar, if a beggar dwell near him: or, the church stands by thy labor, if thy labor stand by the church.

Clo. You have said, sir.—To see this age! A sentence is but a cheverel ¹ glove to a good wit: How quickly the wrong side may be turned outward! Viol. Nay, that’s the fashion in this world, that daily nice with words may quickly make them wanton.

Clo. I would, therefore, my sister had no name, sir.

Vio. Why, man?

Clo. Why, sir, her name’s a word; and to dally with that word, might make my sister wanton: But, indeed, words are very scalable, since bonds disgrace them.

Vio. Thy reason, man?

Clo. Troth, sir, I can yield you none without words; and words are grown so false, I loath to prove it.

Vio. I warrant thou art a merry fellow, and carest for nothing.

Clo. Not so, sir. I do care for something: but in my conscience, sir: I do not care for you; if that be to care for nothing, sir, I would it would make you invisible.

Enter Fabio, and a post-carrier.

Fáb. Did not I say, he would work it out? the ear is excellent at limbs.

Mal. M. D.—But then there is no consonancy in the sequel: that sufferers under probation: A follow, but O does.

Fáb. And O shall end, I hope.

Sir To. Ay, or I’ll cudgel him, and make him cry, O.

Mal. And then, I comes behind;—

Fáb. Ay, an you had an eye behind you, you might see more distraction at your heels, than fortunes before you.

Mal. M. D. I. — This simulation is not as the former, and yet, to crush this a little, it would bow to me, for every one of these letters are in my name. Soft, here follows prose:—If this fall into thy power, Sir Viola. In my stars I am above thee, but be not afraid of greatness: Some are born great, some achieve greatness, and some have greatness thrust upon them. Thy fates open their hands, let thy blood and spirit embrace them. And, to inquire myself to what thou art like to be, cast thy humble strength and appear fresh. Be opposite with a kinsman, early with servants; let thy tongue and arguments of state; put thyself into the trick of singularly; she thus advises thee, that sights for thee. Remember who commended thy yellow stockings, and what they said to thee, these cross-gartered: I say, remember. Go to, thou art mode, if thou desirest to be so; if not, let me see thee a sternard still, the fellow of servants, and not worthy to touch fortunes: Farewell. She that would defer services with thee, The fortunate and unwise. Day-light and champion ² discovers not more: this is open. It will be proud. I will read politic authors. I will have babies. I will wash off gross acquaintance. I will be bent-de-vice, the very man. I do not now fool myself, to let imagination jade me; for every reason extols to this, that my lady loves me. Sir, I’ll commend myself in yellow stockings, and, in this she manifests herself to my love, and, with a kind of injunction, drives me to these habits of her liking. I thank my stars. I am happy. I will be strange, stout, in yellow stockings, and cross-gartered, even with the swiftness of putting on. Jove, and my stars, be praised!—Here is yet a postscript. Don’t read but chose and placate whoever I am. If thou entertainest my love, let it appear in thy smiling; thy smiles become thee well: therefore in my presence, still smile, dear my sweet. I will do every thing that thou wilt have me. [Exit.

Fab. I will not give my part of this sport for a pension of thousands to be paid from the sophy.

Sir To. I could marry this wench for this device.

Sir Andr. So could I too.

Vio. Yet seek no other dowry with her, but such another jest.

Enter Maria.

Sir Andr. Not nor I neither.

Fáb. Here comes my noble pullatcher.

Sir To. Wilt thou set thy foot my neck?

Sir Andr. Or mine either!

Sir To. Shall I play my freedom at tray-trip, and become thy bond slave?

Sir Andr. I faith, or I either.

Sir To. Why, thou hast put him in such a dream that, when the image of it leaves him, he must run mad.

Marc. Nay, but say true; does it work upon him?

Sir To. Like aqua-vite with a midwife.

Marc. If you will then see the fruits of the sport, mark his first approach before my lady: he will come to her in yellow stockings, and ‘tis a color she abhors; and cross-gartered, a fashion she detests; and he will be so unsuitable to her disposition, being added to a melancholy as she is, that it cannot but turn him into a notable contempt; if you will see it, follow me.

Sir To. To the gates of Tartar, thou most excellent devil of wit!

Sir Andr. I’ll make one too. [Exit.

ACT III.
That comes before his eye. This is a practice, As full of labor as a wise man's art. For folly, that he wisely shows, is fit; But wise men, folly-fallen, quite taint their wit.

Enter Sir Toby Belch and Sir Andrew Ague-Creek.

_Sir To._ Save you, gentleman.

_Vio._ And you, sir.

_Sir And._ Duruns garde, monsieur.

_Vio._ Et vous aussi; votre serviteur.

Sir And._ I hope, sir, you are; and I am yours.

_Sir To._ Will you encounter the house? My niece is desirous you should enter, if your trade be her.

_Vio._ I am bound to your niece, sir; I mean, she is the mistress of my voyages.

Sir To. Taste your legs, sir, put them to motion.

_Vio._ My legs do better understand me, sir, than I understand what you mean by bidding me taste no legs.

Sir To. I mean, to go, sir, to enter.

_Vio._ I will answer you with guilt and entrance: but we are prevented.

Enter Olivia and Maria.

Most excellent accomplished lady, the heavens rain odors on you! And then, that youth's a rare courtier! Rain odors! well.

_Vio._ My master hath no voice, hole, but to your own mouth, and would unloose it.

_Sir And._ Ogros, pregnant, and vouchsafed;—I'll get 'em all three ready.

_Ol._ Let the garden door be shut, and leave me to my hearing.

[Exeunt Sir Toby, Sir Andrew, and Maria.

_Give me your hand, sir._

_Vio._ My duty, madam, and most humble service.

_Ol._ What is your name?

_Vio._ Cesario is your servant's name, fair princess.

_Ol._ My servant, sir! 'Twas never merry world since lowly writing was called compliment.

_You are the servant to the count Orsino._

_Vio._ And he is yours, and his must needs be yours:

_Are you the servant's servant, madam._

_Ol._ For him, I think not on him: for his thoughts.

"Would they were blanks, rather than fill'd with me!"

_Vio._ Madam, I come to what your gentle thoughts

_On his behalf._

_Ol._ O, by your leave, I pray you; I bade you never speak again of him;

_But would you undertake another suit, I have no fear you to select that, than _Nause from the sciences._

_Vio._ Dear lady,—

_Ol._ Give me leave. I beseech you, if you did send, And the last enchantment you did use, A ring in chase of you; so did I _Myself, my servant, and, I fear me, you:_

_Under your hard construction must I sit, I

_T was, and much science._

_Vio._ Which you knew none of yours: What naughty you think?

_Have you not set mine honor at the stake, And baited it with all the unmolested thoughts

_That tyrannical heart can think? To one of your receiving._

_Enough is shown; a cyrus, not a bosom, Hides my poor heart: so let me hear you speak._

_Vio._ I pay you.

_Ol._ That's a degree to love,

_Vio._ No, not a grace; for 'tis a vulgar proof,

_That very oft we pity enemies._

_Ol._ Why, then, methinks, 'tis time to smile again,

_O world, how apt the poor are to be proud!

_If one should be a prey, how much the better
_T to fall before the lion than the wolf! [Clock strikes._

_Thy youth is strong, with the waste of time, Be not afraid, good youth, I will not have you:

_And yet, when wit and youth is come to harvest,

_Your wife is like to reap a proper man:

_The lies your way, the west._

_Vio._ Then westward-ho;

_Grace and good disposition lend your hydship! You it nothing, madam, to my lord by me!*

_Ol._ Stay:

_I pray you, tell me, what thou thinkst of me._

_Vio._ To do think you do not what you are.

_Ol._ If I think so, I think the same of you.

_Vio._ Then think you right: I am not what I am. Olt. The world would have me as I would have you be! _Vio._ Would it be better, madam, than I am, I wish it might; for now I am your fool.

_Ol._ 'O what a deal of scorn looks beautiful In the face of one and danger of his heart! A mordant rush!_glows! not itself more _Than love that would seen hid: love's night is noon.

_Cesario, by the roses of the spring._

_But, rather reason thus with reason fetter;

_Love sought is good, but given unsought is better._

_Vio._ By innocence I swear, and by my youth, I have one heart, one bosom, and one truth.

_And that no woman has; nor never none

_Shall mistress be of it, save I alone._

_Or rather, good madam; never more

_With I my master's tears to you deplore._

_Ol._ Yet once again: for thou, perhaps, mayst _move That heart, which now abhors, to like his love._

[_Exeunt._

SCENE II.—A Room in Olivia’s House.

Enter Sir Toby Belch, Sir Andrew Ague-Creek, and Fabian.

_Sir And._ No, faith, I'll not stay a jot longer.

_Sir To._ Thy reason, dear venom, give thy reason.

_Fab._ You must needs yield your reason, sir _Andrew._

_Sir And._ Marry, I saw your niece do more favors to the count's serving man, than ever she bestowed upon the melancholy, honest and loathsome or the orchard.

_Sir To._ Did she see thee the white, old hoy! tell me that.

_Sir And._ As plain as I see you now.

_Fab._ This was a great argument of love in her towards you.

_Sir And._ 'Slight! will you make an ass o' me? _Fab._ I will prove it legitimate, sir, upon the oath of heaven and reason.

_Sir And._ And they have been grand jury-men, since before Noah was a sailor.

_Fab._ I am much pleased to have favor to the youth in your sight, only to exasperate you, to awake your dormant valor, to put fire in your heart, and brimstone in your liver: You should then have accosted her; and given her some excellent jests, and made her laugh from the mint, you should have banged the youth into dumness. This was looked for at your hand, and this was baffled: the double gift of this opportunity you let time wash off, and you are now ended into the north of my lady's opinion; where you will hang like an icle on a Dutchman's head, unless you do redeem it by some laudable attempt either of valor, or policy.

_Sir And._ And't be any way, it must be with valor; for policy I hate: I had as lief be a Brown-nist, as I.

_Sir To._ Why then, build me thy fortunes upon the basis of valor. Challenge me the count's youth to fight with him; hurt him in eleven places; my niece shallkee he note of it; and assure thyself there is no love broker in the world can more prevail in man's commination with woman, than report of valor.

_Fab._ There is no way but this, sir _Andrew._

_Sir And._ Will either of you bear me a challenge to him?

_Sir To._ Go, write it in a martial hand; be cursé and bline: it is no matter how witty so it be eloquent, and full of invention: taunt him with the licence of ink: if thou hast'd him some thrice, it shall not be accursed; and as many lines as will stand in thy sheet of paper, although the sheet were big enough for the bed of Ware in England, set 'em down; go, about it. Let there be gaud enough in thy ink: though thou write with a goose-pen, no matter: About it.

Sir And. Where shall I find you?
Sir To. We'll call thee at the cubiculo: Go.
[Exit Sir Andrew.
Fab. This is a dear manikin to you, sir Toby.
Sir To. I have been dear to him, lad; some two thousand strong, or so.
Fab. We shall have a rare letter from him: but you will not deliver it?
Sir To. Never trust me then; and by all means stir on the youth to an answer. I think, oxen and wain roes cannot have them together. For Andrew, if he were opened, and you find so much blood in his liver, will drag the foot of a lie, I'll eat the rest of the anatomy.
Fab. And his opposite, the youth, bears in his visage no great presage of cruelty.

Enter Maria.

Sir To. Look, where the youngest wren of nine comes.
Mar. If you desire the spleen, and will laugh yourselves into stitches follow me; you shall Malvolio Sebastian, what might a very travel, or for there is no christian, that means to be saved by believing rightly, can ever believe such impossible passages of grossness, He's in yellow stockings.
Sir To. And cross-gartered!
Mar. Most villainously; like a pedant that keeps a school in the church,—I have dogged him, like his murderer: He does obey every point of the letter that spied him to betray him, He does smile his face into more lines, than are in the new map, with the augmentation of the Indies: you have not seen such a thing as this: I can hardly forbear hurrying things at this time, I, the lady will strike him; if she do, he'll smile, and take it for a great favor.
Sir To. Come, bring us where he is.

[Exeunt.

Scene IV. OR, Olivia's Garden.

Enter Olivia and Maria.

Oli. If I have sent him after him? He says, he'll come: How shall I treat him? what bestow on him? For youth is bought more oft than begg'd, or borrow'd.
I speak too loud—

Where is Malvolio?—he is sad, and civil, And suits well for a servant with my fortunes;—
Where is Malvolio?
Mar. He's coming, madam;
Or in strange manner. He is sure possessed.'
Oli. Why, what's the matter? does he rave?
Mar. No, madam,
He does nothing but smile; your ladyship
Were best have guard about you if he come;
For, sure, the man is tainted in his wits.

Oli. Go call him hither. I'm as mad as he, If sad and merry madacies equal be—

Enter Malvolio.

How now, Malvolio!

Mar. Sweet lady, ho, ho. [Smiles fantastically Oli. Smile's thou?
I sent for thee upon a said occasion.
Mar. Sad, lady! I could be said; This does make some obstruction in the blood, this cross-gartering: But what of that, if it please the eye of one, it is with me as the very true sonnet is: Please one, and please all.
Oli. Why, how dost thou, man? what is the matter with thee?
Mar. Not black in my mind, though yellow in my looks: It did come to his limbs, and commands shall be executed. I think we do know the sweet Roman hand.

Oli. Will thou go to bed, Malvolio?
Mar. To bed? ay, sweet-heart: and I'll come to thee.

Oli. God comfort thee! Why dost thou smile so, and kiss thy hand so oft?
Mar. How do you, Malvolio?

Oli. At your request! Yes; Nightingales answer dawn.

Mar. Why appear you with this ridiculous boldness before my lady?
Mar. Be not afraid of greatness: 'Twas well writ;
Oli. What meanest thou by that, Malvolio?
Mar. Some are born great—
Oli. Ha!
Mar. Some achieve greatness;—
Oli. What say'st thou?
Mar. And some have greatness thrust upon them.
Oli. Heaven restore thee!
Mar. Remember who commend'd thy yellow stockings?
Mar. Thy yellow stockings?
Mar. And wished to see thee cross-gartered.
Oli. Cross-gartered!
Mar. Go to: thou art made, if thou dost not to be so:
Oli. Am I made?
Mar. If not, let me see thee a servant still.
Oli. Why, this is very midsummer madness.

Enter Servant.
Sere. Madam, the young gentleman of the count Orsino's is returned; I could hardly entreat him back: he attends your ladyship's pleasure.
Oli. I'll come to him. [Exit servant.

Good Maria, let this fellow be looked to. Where's my cousin Toby? Let some of my people have a special care of him; I would not have him miscarry for the half of my dowry.

[Exeunt Olivia and Maria.

Mar. Oh ho! do you come near me now? no worse man than sir Toby to look to me! This concurs directly with the letter: she sends him on

*Chamber. *Caught.

Grave.
purpose, that I may appear stubborn to him; for she invites me to that in the letter. Cast thy humane voice, says she; be opposite not a kinsman or with serjeants,—let thy tongue long with arguments of state,—put thyself into the track of singularly;—and, consequently, sets down the manner in which thou hast, as a ruin'd carriage, a slow tongue, in the habit of some sir of note, and so forth. I have him here; but it is Jose's doing, and Jove's reward; and, when she was away now, Let this fellow be looked to! Fellow! not Malvolio, nor after my degree, but fellow. Why, every thing adheres together; that no grum of the scruple, no scruple of a scruple, no obstacle, no incredulous or unwise circumstance,—What can be said! Nothing, that can be, can come between me and the full prospect of my hopes. Well, Jove, not 1, is the door of this, and he is to be thanked.

Re-enter Maria, with Sir Toby Belch, and Fabian.

Sir To. Which way is he, in the name of sanctity? If all the devils in hell be drawn in little, and Lezon himself possessed him, yet I'll speak to him. Fab. Here he is, here he is;—How is't with you, sir? have you seen him, man? Mal. Go off! I discard you, let me enjoy my private; go off.

Mal. Lo, how hollow the fiend speaks within him, not I tell you!—Sir Toby, my lady prays you to have a care of him.

Mal. Ah, ha! does she so?

Sir To. Go, go to; peace, peace, we must deal grave, I say, grave and grave; let me see, Malvolio! how is't with you? What, man! did the devil; consider he's an enemy to mankind. Mal. Do you know what you say? Sir To. You, an you speak ill of the devil, how he takes it at heart! Fray god, he be not bewitched! Fab. Carry his water to the wise woman.

Mal. And it shall be done to-morrow morning, if I live. My lady would not lose him for more than I shall say.

Mal. How now, mistress?

Mal. O lord! Sir To. Prythee, hold thy peace: this is not the way: Do you not see, you move him? let me alone with him.

Fab. No way but gentleness; gently, gently: the fiend is rough, and will not be roughly used.

Sir To. Why, how now, my bawcock? how dost thou, cluck?

Mal. Sir?

Sir To. Ay, Biddy, come with me. What man! 'tis not for gravity to play at cherry-pit with Satan; Maria, thou fool collier! Mal. Get him to say his prayers;—Sir Toby, get him to pray.

Mal. My prayers, minx?

Mal. No, I warrant you, he will not hear of godliness.

Mal. Go bring yourselves all you are idle shallow things: I am not of your element; you shall know more hereafter. [Exit.]

Sir To. Is't possible?

Fab. If this were played upon a stage now, I could condemn it as an implicable figure.

Sir To. His very genius hath taken the infection of the device, man.

Mal. Nay, pursue him now; lest the device take air, and lose it, and so will the device.

Fab. Why, we shall make him mad, indeed.

Mal. The house will be the quieter.

Sir To. Come, we'll have him in a dark room, and make him mad. My piece is already in the heat, but he is mad: we may carry it thus, for our pleasure, and his penance, till our very pastime, tired out of breath, presently to send him forth again: meanwhile we will bring the device to the bar, and crown thee for a finder of madmen. But see, see, see.

Enter Sir Andrew Ague-Creek.

Fab. More matter for a May morning.

Sir And. Here's the challenge, read it; I warrant, there's vinegar and pepper in it. [Reads.]—Jolly cock, bear and eag. Fab. Is't so saucy!

Sir And. Ay, is it, I warrant him; do but read. Sir To. Give me, [Reads.] Youth, whatsoever thou art, thou art a hollow fellow. Fab. Good and valiant.

Sir To. Wonder not many a morrow in thy mind, why do I call thee so, for I will show thee no reason forsooth.

Fab. A good note: that keeps you from the blow of the law.

Sir To. I come to the lady Olivia, and in my sight she uses thee kindly: but thou best in thy throat, that is not the matter I challenge thee for. Fab. Very brief, and exceeding good sense-less.

Sir To. I will way-lay thee going home, where if I be thy chance to kill me,——

Fab. Good.

Sir To. Thou bittest me like a rogue and a villain.

Fab. Still you keep o' the windy side of the law: Good.

Sir To. Fare thee well: And God have mercy upon one of our souls! He may have mercy upon none; but my hope is better, and so look to thyself. Thy friend, as thou usest. [Reads.]—Andrew Ague-Creek.

Sir To. If this letter move him not, his legs cannot: I'll give him.

Mal. You may have very fit occasion for; he is now in some commerce with my lady, and will by and by depart.

Sir To. Go, Sir Andrew; scout me for him at the corner; a cherry-pit, like a cherry-pit; so soon as ever thou seest him, draw; and, as thou drawest, swear horrible; for it comes to pass oft, that so, with a swaggering accent sharply twanged off, gives manhood more approbation than ever proof itself would have earned him. Away.

Sir And. Nay, let me alone for swearing. [Exit.] Sir To. Now will I not deliver his letter: for the behavior of the young gentleman gives him out to be of good capacity and breeding; his employment between both lord, and my niece confirms no less; therefore this letter, being so excellently ignorant, will breed no terror in the youth; he will find it comes from a cholopel. But, sir, I will deliver his challenge by word of mouth; set upon Ague-Creek a notable report of valor; and drive the gentleman, (as, I know, this youth will aptly receive it,) into a most hideous opinion of his race, skill, turn, and impetuosity. This will so frighten them both, that they will kill one another by the look, like cockatrices.

Enter Olivia and Viola. Fab. Here he comes with your niece; give them way, till he take leave, and presently after him.

Sir To. I will meditate the while upon some horrid means for a child to be challenge.

[Exeunt Sir Toby, Fabian and Maria.]

Oli. I have said too much unto a heart of stone, and laid mine honor too uncharily out: There's something in me, that reproves my fault; but such a headstrong potent fault it is, That it but mocks reproof.

Vio. With the same behavior that your passion bears.

Sir To. I will acquit you. [Exit.]

Oli. Well, come again to morrow: Fare thee well; A fiend, like thee, might bear my soul to hell.

[Exit.]
Scene IV. OR, WHAT YOU WILL.

I know not; but thy interceper, full of despight, bloody as the hunter, attends thee at the orchard end; dismount thy yoke, be yare in thy preparation: thy ascendant is quick, skilful, and deathly.

Vio. You mistake, Sir: I am sure, no man hath any quarrel to me; my remembrance is very free and clear from any image of offence done to any man I know.

Sir To. You'll find it otherwise, I assure you: therefore, if you hold your life at any price, betake you to your guard; for your opposite hath in him wit, will, strength, skill, and wraft, to furnish man withal.

Vio. I pray you, sir, what is he?

Sir To. He is knight, double, unhawked, redcloath of high coat, and carpet consideration; but he is a devil in private brawl: souls and bodies hath he divorced three; and his imprisonment at this moment is not implaid by any body. You shall, therefore, on, or strip your sword stark naked: for meddle you must, that's certain, or forswear to wear iron about you.

Vio. This is uncivil, as strange. I beseech you, do me this courteous office, as to know of the knight what my offence to him is: it is something of my negligence, nothing of my purpose.

Sir To. I see, Sir Fabian, stay you by this gentleman till my return. [Exit Sir Toby.]

Vio. I pray you, sir, do you know of this matter?

Fab. I know the knight is incensed against you, even to a mortal abstinence; but nothing of the circumstance more.

Vio. I beseech you, what manner of man is he?

Fab. Nothing of that wonderful promise, to read him by this form, as you are like to find him in the proof of his valor. He is, indeed, sir, the most skilful, bloody, and fatal opposite that you possibly have found in any part of Illyria. Will you walk towards him? I will manage with your peace, if I can.

Vio. I shall be much bound to you for't: I am one, that was rather for my own private knight: I care not who knows so much of my mettle. [Exit.

Re-enter Sir Toby with Sir Andrew.

Sir To. Why, man, he's a very devil; I have not seen such a vizard. I had a pass with him, rapier, scabard, and all, and he gives me the stroke in with such a mortal action, that it is inevitable; and on the answer, he pays you as surely as your feet bit the ground they step on: They say he has been fencer to the Snag.

Sir And. Pox on 't, I'll not meddle with him.

Sir To. Ay, but he will not now be pacified: Fabian can scarce hold him yonder.

Sir And. Plague on 't; an I thought he had been valiant, and so cunning in fence, I'd have seen him dashed ere I had challenged him. Let him let the matter slip, and I'll give him my horse, grey Capulet.

Sir To. I'll make the motion: Stand here, make a good show on't; this shall end without the peril of the souls.

Sir And. Mariy, I'll ride your horse as I ride you. [Aside.

Re-enter Fabian and Viola.

I have his horse [To Fab.] to take up the quarrel; I have persuaded him, the youth's prevision.

Fab. He is as horribly concotted of him, and pants, and looks pale, as if a bear were at his heels.

Sir To. There's no remedy, sir; he will fight with you. I think he is better he's so; he thought him of his quarell, and he finds that now scarce to be worth talking of: therefore draw, for thus the supputation of his vow: he protests, he will not hurt you.

Tob. Pray God defend me! A little thing would make me tell them how much I lack a man.

[Aside.

Fab. Give ground, if you see him furious.

Sir To. Come, come, Sir Andrew, there's no remedy; the gentleman will, for his honor's sake, have one with you: he cannot by the duello avoid it: but he has promised me, as he is a gentleman and a soldier, he will not hurt you. Come on; tot.

Sir And. Pray God, he keep his oath! [Draws.

Enter Antonio.

Vio. I do assure you, 'tis against my will;
Dress, Ant. Put up your sword,—if this young gentleman have done offence, I take the fault on me;
If you offend him, I for him defy you. [Drawing.

Sir To. You forget, what are you?
Ant. One, sir, that for his love dares yet do more Than you have heard him braze to you he will.
Sir To. Nay, if you be an undertaker, I am for you. [Draws.

Enter Two Officers.

Fab. O good sir Toby, hold; here come the officers.
Sir To. I'll be with you anon. [To Antonio.

Vio. Pray, sir, put up your sword, if you please.

Sir And. Marty, will I, sir, and, for that I promised you, I'll be as good as my word: He will bear you easily, and rens well.

1 Off. This is the man, do thy office.
2 Off. Antonio, I arrest thee at the suit Of Count Orsino.

Ant. You do make me, sir.

Off. No, sir, no jot; I know your favor well, Though now you have no sea-cap on your head.

Take him away; he knows, I know him well.

Ant. I must obey. This comes with seeking you, But there's no remedy; I shall answer it.
What will you do? Now my necessity Makes me to ask you for my purse: it grieves me Much more for what I cannot do for you, Than what befalls myself. You stand amazed; But be of comfort.

2 Off. Come, sir, away.

Ant. I must entreat you of some of that money.

Vio. What money's, sir? For the fair kindness you have show'd me here, And, part, being prompt'd by your present trouble, I'll lend you sometimes: my having is not much; I'll make division of my present with you: Hold, there is half my coat.

Ant. Will you deny me now?

Is't possible that your deserts to you Can lack persuasion? Do not tempt my misery, But that it make me so unsound a man, To improve myself: You stand amazed.

Vio. I know of none;

Nor know I you by voice, or any feature:
I hate ingratitude more in a man, Than lynx, vainness, babbling, drunkenness, Or any taint of vice, whose strong corruption Inhales our frail blood.

Ant. O heavens themselves!

2 Off. Come, sir, I pray you, go.

Ant. Let me speak a little. This youth that you

Sir Toby. I snatched't one half out of the jaws of death; Reclaimed him with such sanctity of love, And to his image, which, methought, did promise Most venerable worth, did I devotion.

What? What's that to us! The time goes by:

Away.

Ant. But, O, how vile an id felov this god!—

Thou hast, Sebastian, done a good action here,—

In nature there's no blemish, but the mind:
None can be called deform'd, but the unkind:
Virtue is beauty, but the beauteous evil. transparents, or deterred by the devil.

1 Off. The man grows mad; away with him.

Come, come, sir.

Ant. Lead me on. [Exit Officers with Ant.

Laws of duel.
SCENE I.—The Street before Olivia's House.

Enter Sebastian and Clown.

Clo. Will you make me believe that I am not sent for you?

Seb. Go to, go to, thou art a foolish fellow;
Let me be clear of thee.

Clo. Well held out, faith! No, I do not know you; nor I am not sent to you by my lady. It think you come speak with her; nor your name is not master Cesario; nor this is not my nose neither.—Nothing that is so is so.

Seb. I pray thee, vent thy folly somewhere else;
Thou know'st not me.

Clo. Vent my folly! He has heard that word of some great man, and now applies it to a fool. Vent my folly! I am afraid this great hubbub, the world, will prove a cockney.—I pray thee now, unmask thy straigness, and tell me what I shall vent to my lady?

Seb. Shall I vent to her, that thou art coming?

Clo. I pray thee, foolish spear, depart from me;
There's money for thee; if thou tarry longer,
I shall give worse payment.

Seb. By my troth, thou hast an open hand;
These wise men that give fools money, get themselves a good report after fourteen years' purchase.

Enter Sir Andrew, Sir Toby and Fabian.

Sir And. Now, sir, have I met you again? there's no room.

[Striking Sebastian.]

Seb. Why, there's for thee, and there, and there:
And here! [To Sir Andrew.] Sir Toby. Sir. Hold, sir, or I will throw thy dagger over the house.

Clo. This will I tell my lady straight: I would not be in some of your costs for two-pence.

[Exit Clown.]

Sir To. Come on, sir; hold. [To Sir Andrew.] Sir And. Nay, let him alone, I'll go another way to work with him; I'll have an action of battery against him, if there be any law in Illyria: though I struck him first, yet it's no matter for that.

Seb. Let go thy hand.

Sir To. Come, sir, I will not let you go. Come, my young soldier, put up your iron: you are well flushed; come on.

Seb. I will be free from thee. What wouldst thou know?

If thou dar'st tempt me further, draw thy sword.

[Draws.]

Sir To. What, what? Nay, then I must have an omece or two of this malapert blood from you.

[Draws.]

Enter Olivia.

Olb. Hold, Toby; on thy life, I charge thee, hold.

Sir To. Madam!

Olb. Will it be ever thus? Ungracious wretch, Fit for pyramids and those barbarous caves,
Where monsters ne'er were preach'd out of my sight.

Be not offended, dear Cesario;
Right happy days!—I pray thee, gentle friend,

[Exeunt Sir Toby, Sir Andrew and Fabian.]

Let thy fair wisdom, not thy passion, sway
In this uncivil and unjust extent.

Rude fellow. Violence.

Sir To. A very dishonest petty boy, and more a coward than one that have: this dishonest fellow appears in leaving his friend here in necessity, and denying him; and for his cowardship, ask Fabian.

Fab. A coward, a most devout coward, religious in it.

Sir And. 'Slied, I'll after him again, and beat him.

Sir To. Do, cuff him soundly, but never draw thy sword.

Sir And. An I do not,—

Fab. Come, let's see the event.

Sir To. I dare lay any money, 'twill be nothing yet.

[Exit.]

ACT IV.

SCENE II.—A Room in Olivia's House.

Enter Maria and Clown.

Mar. Nay, I pr'ythee, put on this gown, and this beard; make him believe thou art Sir Topas, the master parson, do it quickly: I'll call Sir Toby the whilst.

[Exit Maria.]

Clo. Well, I'll put it on, and I will dissemble myself in it; and I would I were the first that ever dissembled in such a gown. I am not fit enough to become the function well, nor learn enough to be thought a good student; but to be said, an honest man, and a good housekeeper, goes as fairly, as to say, a careful man and a great scholar. The competitors enter.

Enter Sir Toby Belch and Maria.

Sir To. Jove bless thee, Master Parson.

Mar. Bonoe dies, sir Toby: for as the old hermit of Prague, that never saw pen and ink, very wittily said to a piece of king Gorboed, That, that is, to me, I am master parson, am master parson; for what is that, but that, and is, but is!

Sir To. To him, sir Topas.

Mar. What, how I say,—Peace in this prison! Sir To. The knave counterfeits well; a good knave.

Mal. (In an inner chamber.) Who calls there? Sir To. Sir Topas, the curate, who comes to visit Malvolio the butler.

Mal. Sir Topas, sir Topas, good sir Topas, go to my lady.

Sir To. Out, hyperbolical fiend! how vexest thou this house? inpoxest thou nothing but the eyes of priests! Sir To. Well said, master parson.

Mal. Sir Topas, never was a man thus wronged: good sir Topas, do not think I am mad; they have laid me here in hideous darkness.

Clo. Fie, thou dishonest Satan! I call thee by the most modest terms; for I am one of those gentle ones, that will use the devil himself with courtesy: Say st thou, that house is dark?

Mal. As hell, sir Topas.

Sir To. Why, it hath bay-windows transparent as bright cascades, and the clear stones towards the south, north are as lustrous as ebony; and yet complainest thou of obstruction?

Mal. I am not mad, sir Topas; I say to you, this house is dark.

Clo. Madman, thou errest: I say, there is no darkness, but ignorance; in which thou art more pazzled than the Egyptians in their fog.

[Confederates.]
Act V. Scene I.

OR, WHAT YOU WILL.

Mat. I say, this house is as dark as ignorance, though ignorance were as dark as hell; and I say, there was never man this abused: I am no more mad than you are; make the trial of it in any constant question.

Clo. What is the opinion of Pythagoras, concerning wild-fowl?

Mat. That the soul of our grandam might haply inhabit a bird.

Clo. What thinkst thou of his opinion?

Mat. I think nobly of the soul, and no way approve his opinion.

Clo. Fare thee well: Remain thou still in darkness, and thou shalt hold the opinion of Pythagoras: I will allow of thy wits; and fear to kill a woodcock, lest thou dispossess the soul of thy grandam.

Fare thee well.

Mat. Sir Topas, sir Topas,—

Sir To. My most exquisite sir Topas!

Clo. Nay, I am for all waters.

Mar. Thou mightest have done this without thy beard and cap;—he was not so far in offence with my niece, that I cannot pursue with any safety this sport to the upshot. Come by and by to my chamber. [Exit Sir Topas and MARCH.

Clo. Hey Robin, Jolly Robin.

Tell me how thy lady does. [Singing.

Mat. Fool,—

Clo. My lady is unkink, perdy.

Mat. Fool.

Clo. Alas, why is she so?

Mat. Fool, I say;—

Clo. She loves another—Who calls, ha!

Mat. Good fool, as ever thou wilt deserve well at my hand, help me to a candle, and pen, ink, and paper; as I am a gentleman, I will live to be thankful to thee for it.

Clo. Master Malvolio!

Mat. Ay, good fool.

Clo. Alas, sir, how fell you beside your five wits!—For thou didst never—there was never man so notoriously abused: I am as well in my fools, as thou art.

Clo. But as well! then you are mad, indeed, if you be no better in your wits than a fool.

Mat. They have here propounded me; keep me in darkness, send messengers to me, asses, and do all they can to face me out of my wits.

Clo. Advise you what you say; the minister is here. Malvolio! Malvolio! thy weasen restore! endeavor thyself to sleep, and leave thy vain babble.

Mat. Sir Topas.—

Clo. Maintain no words with him, good fellow.—

who, I, sir! not I, sir. God be' ye! you good sir Topas—Marry, amen—I will, sir, I will.

Mat. Fool, fool, fool, I say,—

Clo. Alas, sir, be patient. What say you, sir! I am shent for speaking to you.

Mat. Good fool, help me to some light, and some paper; I guess, I am as well in my wits, as any man in Illyria.

Clo. Well-a-day—that you are, sir!

Mat. By this hand, I am: Good fool, some ink, paper, and light, and convey what I will set down to my lady; it shall advantage thee more than ever the bearing of letter did.

Clo. I will help you to't. But tell me true, are you not mad indeed? or do you but counterfeit?

Mat. Believe me, I am not; I tell thee true.

Clo. Nay, I'll be or believe a madman, till I see his brains. I will fetch you light, and paper, and ink.

Mat. Fool, I'll requite it in the highest degree: I pray thee be gone.

Clo. I am gone, sir.

Mat. And now, sir,

I'll be with you again,

In a trice;

Like the old vices

Your need to sustain.

Who with dagger of faith,

In his rage and his wrath,

Cries, oh, ha! to the devil:

Like a mad lad,

Fare thee wels, adieu.

Adieu, good man drivell. [Exit.

SCENE III.—Olivia's Garden.

Enter Sebastian.

Seb. This is the air: that is the glorious sun; This pearl she gave me. I do feel it and see it: And though 'tis wonder that enraps me thus, Yet 'tis not madness. Where's Antonio then? I could not find him at the Elephant:

Yet there he was; and there I found his credit;

That he did range the town to seek me out.

His counsel now might do me golden service:

For though my soul did well with my sense,

That this may be some error, but no madness,

Yet doth this accident and flood of fortune

So far exceed all instance, all discourse,

That I am ready to distract mine eyes,

And wrangle with my reason, that permutes me

To any other trust, but that I am mad,

Or else the lady's mad: yet, if 'twere so,

She could not away her house, command her followers,

Take, and give back, affairs and their despatch,

With such a smooth, discreet, and stable bearing,

As I perceive, she does: ther's something in't,

That is deceivable. But here comes the lady.

Enter Olivia and a Priest.

Oli. Blame not this haste of mine; If you mean Now go with me, and with this holy man, Into the chantry by: there, before him, And underneath that conserved roof, I'll show thee the full assurance of my faith;

That my most jealous and too doubtful soul May live at peace; He shall conceal it, Unless you are willing it shall come to note;

What time we will our celebration keep According to my birth.—What do you say?

Seb. I'll follow this good man, and go with you; And, having sworn truth, ever will be true.

Oli. Then lead the way, good father;—And heaven so shine,

That they may fairly note this act of mine! [Exit.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The Street before Olivia's House.

Enter Clown and Fabian.

Fab. Now, as thou lov'st me, let me see his letter.

Clo. Good master Fabian, grant me another request.

Fab. Any thing.

Clo. Do not desire to see this letter.

Fab. That is, to give a dog, and, in recompense, desire my dog again.

* Regular conversation.

* Any other item as well as a Topaz.

* Sceult, reprimanded.

Enter Duke, Viola, and Attendants.

Duke. Well dost thou to the lady Olivia, friends?

Clo. Ay, sir; we are some of her trappings.

Duke. I know thee well; How dost thou, my good fellow?

Clo. Truly, sir, the better for my foes, and the worse for my friends.

Duke. Just the contrary; the better for thy friends. Clo. No, sir, the worse.

Duke. How can that be?

* A buffoon character in the old plays, and father of the modern Harlequin.

* Account.}

* Until,

[Exeunt.
Enter Antonio and Officers.

Vio. Here comes the man, sir, that did rescue me.

Duke. That face of his I do remember well;
Yet when I saw it last, it was besmirch'd
As black as Vulcan, in the smoke of war;
A bowling vessel was he captain of,
For shallow draught, and bulk unsparing;
With such scant hulls all grace might be
Make with the most noble bottom of our fleet,
That very envy, and the tangle of loss,
Cry vainly and unheaven'd. What's the matter?

Ors. Nay, sir, this is that Antonio,
That took the Phenix, and her freight from Candy.
And this he is, that did the Tiger board,
When your young, nephew Titus lost his leg;
Here in the streets, desperate of shame, and state,
In private, blind'd we apprehend him.

Vio. He did me kindness, sir; drew on my side;
But he was, in a manner, put strange speech upon me,
I know not what 'twas, but distraction.

Butl. Notable pirate! thou art-water-thief!
What doth this boldness bring thee to their mercies,
Whom thou, in terms so bloody, and so clear,
Hast made thine enemies?

Ors. Orsino, noble sir,
Be pleas'd that I shake off these manners given me;
Antonio never yet was thief, or pirate;
Though, I confess, on base and ground enough,
Orsino's enemy. A witcherath drew me hither:
That most ingrateful boy there, by your side.
From the rude seas a enraged and foamy mouth
Did I redeem; a wreck past hope he was;
His life I gave him, and did thereto add
My love, without retention, or restraint,
All his in dedication: for his sake,
Did I expose myself, pure for his love,
Into the danger of this adverse brave,
Drew to defeat him, when he was best;
Where being apprehend, his false cunning,
(Not meaning to partake with me in danger,)
Taint not to face me out of his acquaintance,
And drew a twenty-years-removed thing,
While one would wink; dened mine own purse,
Which I had recommended to his use
Not half an hour before.

Vio. How can this be?

Duke. When came he to this town?

Ant. To-day, my lord; and for three months before.

(Duke. This comes the countess; now heaven walks on earth.)

Vio. But for thee, fellow, fellow, thy words are madness!
Three months this youth hath tend to my pen; But more of that anon.—Take him aside.

Ors. What would my lord, but that he may not Wherein Olivia may seem serviceable?

Cesario, you do not keep promise with me.

Vio. Madam! Dull.

Duke. Gracious Olivia,—

Ors. What do you say, Cesario?—Good my lord.—

Vio. If the lord would speak, my duty hushes me.
Ors. He'll be aught to the old tune of my lord, It is as fat and lusome to mane ear,
As bowling after music.

Vio. Still more cruel.

Ors. Still so constant, lord.

Duke. What! to perverseness! you uncivil lady,
To whose ingrate and unauspicious favors
My soul the infulent odors hath breed't out,
That ever devotion tender'd! What shall I do?

Ors. Even what it please my lord, that shall be come him.

Duke. Why should I not, had I the heart to do,
Like to the Egyptian thief, at point of death,
Kill what I love; a savage jealousy,
That sometime savors nobly!—but hear me this: Since your ent'rance our endurance cast in mud,
And that I partly know the instrument
That screeches me from my true place in your favor,
As much as any ruffled garrulous tyrant,
But this, your munition, whom, I know you love,
And whom, by heaven, I swear, I tender dearly,
Wilt I bear out of that cruel eye,
Where the false crowns in his monarch's spite—
Come boy, with me; my thoughts are ripe in mischeif;
I'll sacrifice the lamb that I do love,
To spite a raven's heart within a dove.

[Going.]

Vio. And I, most jocund, apt, and willingly,
To do you rest, a thousand deaths would die.

[Following.]

Ors. Where goes Cesario?

Vio. After him I love,
More than I love these eyes, more than my life,
More by all means, than ever I shall love wife;
If I do behould, you witnesses above,
Punish my life, for tainting of my love!

Ors. Ah me, detested! how and I beguiled?

Vio. You shall beguile you! who does you wrong?

Ors. Hast thou forgot thyself? Is it so long?

Call forth the holy father. [Exit an Attendant.

Duke. Coze away, my lord.

Ors. Whither, my lord?—Cesario, husband, stay.

Duke. Husband!

Ors. Ay, husband; Can he that deny?

Duke. Her husband, sirrah.

Vio. No, my lord, not I.

Ors. Alas, it is the basiness of thy fear,
That makes thee strange thy gross proceedings.
Fear not, Cesario, take thy fortunes up;
Be that thou know at thou art, and then thou art
As great as that thou fearst.—O, welcome father! [Re-enter Attendant and Priest.

Duke. Father, I charge thee, by my reverend,
Here to unfold though lately we intended
To keep in darkness, what occasion now
Reveals before 'ts ripe; what dost thou know
Hath newly past between this youth and me.

Priest. A contract of eternal bond of love,
Confirmed by mutual bond of your hands,
Attested by the holy close of lips,
Strengthened by interchange of your rings;
And all the ceremony of this compact
Seal'd m'by my function, by my testimony:
Since when, my watch hath told me, toward my grave,
I have the field but two hours.

Duke. O thou assembling cull! what wilt thou be,
When time hath sow'd a grizzle on thy case?
Or will not else thy craft so quickly grow,
That this own time's ripeness shall be time overthrown?
Farwell, and take her; but direct thy feet,
Where thou and I henceforth may never meet.

Vio. My lord, I do protest—

Ors. O, do not swear;
Hold little faith, though thou hast too much fear.

Enter Sir Andrew Ague-cheek, with his head broken.

Sir And. For the love of God, a surgeon; send one presently to Sir Toby.

Oli. What's the matter?

Sir And. He has broke his head across, and has given sir Toby a bloody coxcomb too; for the love of God, give your help: I had rather than forty pound, I were at home.

Oli. Who has done this, sir Andrew?

Sir And. The count's gentleman, one Cesario; we took him up for a coward, but he's the very devil incarnate.

[Enter Toby Belch, drunk, led by the Clown.]

Here comes sir Toby halting, you shall hear more: but had you not been the drunkard, would you tickled you othercases than he did.

Duke. How now, gentleman? How is't with you? Sir To. That's all one; he has hurt me, and then the end on—to, did'st see Dick surgeon, so?

Clo. O he's drunk, sir Toby, an hour ago; his eyes were set at eight i' the morning.

Sir To. Then he's a rogue, and he had a passy-measure, or a pavin; I hate a drunken rogue.

Oli. Away with him: Who hath made this havoc with them?

Sir And. I'll help you, sir Toby, because we'll be dressed together.

Sir To. Will you help an ass-head, and a coxcomb, and a knife? a thing that I have done, a cut?

Oli. Get him to bed, and let his hurt be look'd to.

[Enter Clown. Sir Toby and Sir Andrew.]

Enter Sebastian.

Seb. I am sorry, madam, I have hurt your kinsman.

But had it been the brother of my blood, I must have done no less, with wit, and safety.

You throw a strange regard upon me, and by that I do perceive it hath offended you; Pardon me, sweet one, even for those vows We've done each other but so late ago.

Duke. One face, one voice, one habit, and two persons.

A natural perspective, that is, and not.

Seb. Antonio, my dear Antonio! How have the hours rack'd and tortur'd me, since I have lost thee?

Ant. Sebastian not thee?

Seb. Fear'st thou that, Antonio? Any how you have made division of yourself?—An apple, eaten in two, is not more twin Than these two creatures, Which is Sebastian? Oli. Most wonderful! Seb. Do I stand there? I never had a brother; Nor can there be that deity in my nature, Oli. Tell me, where I, where I, I, where I, I, I, I have a sister, Whom the blind waves and surges have devourd:—Of charity, what kin are you to me? [To VIOLA. What countryman? what name? what parentage? To MESSALINE: Sebastian was my father; Such a Sebastian was my brother too, So went he suited to his watery tomb: If spirits can assume both form and suit, You come to fright us.

Seb. I am a spirit; I am indeed, But aim in that dimension grossly chad, Which from the womb I did partake.

Were you a woman, as the rest goes even, I should my tears let fall upon your cheek, And say—Three welcome, drowned Viola! Viola. Mother had a maid upon his brow.

Seb. And so had mine.

Vio. And died that day when Viola from her birth

Had number'd thirteen years.

Seb. O, that record is lively in my soul! He finished indeed, his mortal act.

That day that made my sister thirteen years, Toby. If nothing lets to make us happy both, But this my masculine usurp'd attire, Do not eminc it, till each circumstance Of place, time, fortune, do conforme, and jump, That I am Viola: which to confirm, I'll bring you to a captain in this town, Where he lie in opulent weeds; by whose gentle garb I was preserv'd, to serve this noble count: All the occurrence of my fortune since Hath been between this lady and this lord.

Seb. So comes it, lady; you have been mistook: [To OLIVIA.]

But nature to her bias drew in that way That you would have been allotted to a maid; Nor are you therein, by my life, deceived. You are betroth'd both to a maid and man.

Duke. Be not amaz'd; right noble is his blood.—If this be so, as yet the glass seems true: I shall have share in this most happy wreck: Boy, thou hast said to me a thousand times, [To VIOLA. Than never shouldst love woman like to me. Toby. And all those sayings will I over-swear; And all those swearings keep as true in soul, As doth that orb continent, the lune, Then sever day from night.]

Duke. Give me thy hand; And let me see thee in thy woman's weeds. Toby. The captain, that did bring me first on shore, Hath my best garments: he, upon some action, Is now in discernance; at Malvolio's suit, A gentleman, and follower of my lady's. Oli. He shall enl Lture him;— Fetch Malvolio hitter.

And yet, alas, now I remember. They say, poor gentleman, he's much distract.

Re-enter Clown, with a Letter.

A most extracting frenzy of my blood From my remembrance clearly banish'd his. How does he, sirrah? Clo. Truly, madam, he holds Belclzebuth at the stage's end, as well as a man in his case may do: he has here writ a letter to you: I should have given it you to-day morning; but as a madman's epistles are no gospels, so it skills not much, when they are delivered.

Oli. Open it, and read it.

Clo. Look them to be well edified, when the fool delivers the madman. — By the Lord, madam,— Oli. How now, art thine eyes? and? Clo. No, madam, I do but read madness: an your ladyship will have it as it ought to be, you must allow rag.

Oli. Fry thee, read i' thy right wits. Clo. So I do, madonna; but to read his right wits is to read thus: therefore perpend, my princess and give ear. Oli. Read it you, sirrah. [To FABIAN. Fab. [Reads.] By the lord, madam, you wrong me, and the world shall know it: though you have put me into darkness, and given your drunken cousin rule over me, yet have I the benefit of my senses as well as your ladyship. I have your own letter that induced me to the semblance I put on; with the which I shall have more to do myself much right, or you much shame. Think of me as you please. I have your duty a little unthink'd of, and speak out of my injury. The mostly used.

Malvolio. Oli. Bid he write this? Clo. Ay, madam. Duke. This savors not much of discretion. Oli. See him deliver'd, Fabian; bring him hither. [Exit FABIAN. My lord, so please you, these things further thought on. To think me as well a sister as a wife, One day shall crown the alliance on, so please you, Here at my house, and at my proper cost. Duke. Madam, I am most apt to embrace your grace's grace. Your master quits you; [To VIOLA] and, for your service done him, So much against the mettle* of your sex, * Voice. * Attend. * Frame and constitution.
So far beneath your soft and tender breeding,
And since you call’d me master for so long,
Here is my hand; you shall from this time be
Your master’s mistress.

Oil. A sister! — you are she.

Re-enter Fabian with Malvolio.

Duke. Is this the madman?

Oil. Ay, my lord, the same:

How now, Malvolio?

Mal. Madam, you have done me wrong,
Notorious wrong.

Oil. Have I, Malvolio? no.

Mal. Lady, you have.

Pray you peruse that letter.

You must not now deny it is your hand,
Write from it, if you can, in hand, or phrase;
Or say, 'Is not your seal, nor your invention:
You can say none of this: Well, grant it then,
And tell me, in the modesty of honor,
Why you have given me such clear lights of favor;
Bade me come smiling, and cross-gartered to you,
To put on yellow stockings, and to frown
Upon sir Toby, and the lighter people:
And, setting this in an obedient hope,
Why have you suffer’d me to be imprison’d,
Kept in a dark house, visited by the priest,
And made the most notorious gags, and gull,
That e’er invention play’d on? tell me why.

Oil. Alas, Malvolio, this is not my writing,
Though I confess much like the character:
But out of question, ’tis Maria’s hand.

And now I do bethink me, it was she
First told me, thou wast mad; then came in smiling,
And in such forms which here were presuppos’d
Upon thee in the letter. Fythyce, be content;
This practice hath most shrewdly pass’d upon thee;
But when we know the grounds and authors of it,
Thou shalt be both the plaintiff and the judge
Of thine own cause.

Fab. Good madam, hear me speak;
And let no quarrel, nor no brawl to come,
Taint the condition of this present hour,
Which I have wonder’d at. In hope it shall not,
Most freely I confess, myself and Toby
Set this device against Malvolio here,
Upon some stubborn and uncourtly parts
We had conceived against him: Maria writ
The letter, at sir Toby’s great importance;
In recompense whereof, he hath married her.
How with a sportful malice it was follow’d,
MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

PERSONS REPRESENTED.

VINCENTIO, Duke of Vienna.
ANGELO, Lord Deputy in the Duke's absence.
ESCALUS, an ancient Lord, joined with Angelo in the deputation.

Lords, Gentlemen, Guards, Officers, and other Attendants.

SCENE.—Vienna.

ACT I.

Enter Duke, Escalus, and Lords.

Duke. Escalus,—

Esc. My lord.

Duke. Of government the properties to unfold,
Would seem in me t' affect speech and discourse,
Since I am put to know, that your own science
Exceeds in that the lists of all advice
My strength can give you: Then no more reminds
But that to your sufficiency, as your worth is able,
And let them work. The nature of our people,
Our city's institutions, and the terms
For common justice, y' are as pregnant in An art and practice hath curried any
That we remember: There is our commission,
From which we would not have you warp. Call
I say, bid come before us, Angelo.—
What figure of us think you he will bear!
For you must know, we have with special soul
Elected him our absence to supply;
Let him our terror, drest him with our love,
And given his depositions all the organs
Of our own power: What think you of it?
Esc. If any in Vienna be of worth to undergo such ample grace and honor,
It is lord Angelo.

Enter Angelo.

Duke. Look, where he comes.

Ang. Always obedient to your grace's will,
I come to know your pleasure.

Duke. Angelo,
There is a kind of character in thy life,
That, to th' observer, doth thy history
Fully unfold:—Thy self, and thy belongings,
Are not thine own so proper, as to waste
Thyself upon thy virtues, them on thee.
Heaven doth with us, as we with torches do,
Not light them for themselves: for if our virtues
Did not go forth of us, were all alike
As if we had them not. Spirits are not finely touch'd
But to fine issues: nor nature never lends
The smallest scruple of her excellence,
But, like a thirsty goddess, she determines
Herself the glory of a creditor,
Both thanks and use: but I do bend my speech
To one that can my part in him advertise;
Hold, therefore, Angelo:
In our remove, be thou at full ourself;
Mortality and mercy in Vienna
Live in thy tongue and heart: Old Escalus,
Though first in question, is thy secondary,
Take thy commission.

Ang. Now, good my lord,
Let there be some more test made of my metal,
Before so noble and so great a figure
Be stamp'd upon it.

Duke. No more evasion;
We have with a leaven'd and prepar'd choice
Proceeded to you; therefore take your honors.
Our haste from hence is of so quick condition,
That if it prefers itself, and leaves inquisition'd
Matters of needful value. We shall write to you,
As time and our concernings shall impurt'ne,
How it goes with us, and do look to know
What doth befall you here. So, fare you well:
To th' hopeful execution do I leave you
Of your commissions.

Ang. Yet, give leave, my lord,
That we may bring you something on the way.

Duke. My haste may not admit it;
Nor need you, on mine honor, have to do
With any scruple: your scope is as mine own,
So to enforce or qualify the laws
As to your soul seems good:—Give me your hand:
I'll privily whiddle; I love the people,
But do not like to stare me to their eyes:
Though it do well, I do not relish well
Their loud applause, and open veneration;
Nor do I think the man of safe discretion
That does affect it. Once more, fare you well.

Ang. The heavens give safety to your purposes.
ECC. Lead forth, and bring you back in happiness.
Bass. I thank you.—Pace you well.

Bass. Nay, sir, to give me leave to
To have free speech with you; and it concerns me
To look into the bottom of my place:
A power I have, but of what strength and nature,
I am not yet instructed.

Aug. 'Tis so with me—Let us withdraw to-gether.
And we may soon our satisfaction have Touching that point.

ECC. I'll wait upon your honor. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—A Street.

Enter Lucio, and two Gentlemen.

Lucio. If the duke, with the other dukes, come to not to composition with the king of Hungary, why then all the dukes fall upon the king.

1 Gent. Heaven grant us its peace; but not the king of Hungary's!

2 Gent. Amen.

Lucio. Thou concludest like the sanctimonious pirate, that went to sea with the ten commandments, but scraped one out of the table.

2 Gent. Thou shalt not steal!

Lucio. Ay, that he raved.

2 Gent. Why? twas a commandment to command the captain and all the rest from their functions; they put forth to steal: there's not a soldier of us all, that, in the thanksgiving before meat, doth not agree well the that prays for peace.

2 Gent. I never heard any soldier dislike it.

Lucio. I believe thee; for, I think, thou never wast where grace was said.

2 Gent. No! I do count on times at least.

1 Gent. What! in metre?

Lucio. In my proportion; or in any language.

1 Gent. I think, or in any religion.

Lucio. Why not! Grace is grace, despite of all controversy; as, for example, thou thyself art a wicked villain, despite of all grace.

2 Gent. Well, there went but a pair of sheers between us.

Lucio. I grant; as there may between the lists and the velvet: thou art the list.

1 Gent. And thou the velvet: thou art good velet: thou art a three-plit piece, I warrant thee: I had as lief be a list of an English kersy, as he plit, as thou art plit, for a French velvet.

2 Gent. I speak the French, thou know.

Lucio. I think thou dost; and, indeed, with most painful feeling of thy speech: I will, out of thine own confession, learn to begin thy health; but, while I live, I begin to drink after thine.

1 Gent. I think I have done myself wrong; have I not?

2 Gent. Yes, that thou hast; whether thou art taught or not.

Lucio. Behold, behold, where Madam Mitigation comes! I have purchased as many diseases under her roof, as comest in an election.

2 Gent. To what, I pray?

1 Gent. Judge.

2 Gent. To three thousand dollars a year.

1 Gent. Ay, and more.

Lucio. A French crown more.

1 Gent. Thou art always figuring diseases in me: but thou art full of crot; I am sound.

2 Gent. Nay, I wot not on what would say, healthy, but so sound, as things that are hollow: thy bones are hollow; impertinence has made a feast of thee.

Enter Bawd.

1 Gent. How now! Which of your hips has the most profound scatia?

Bawd. Well, well; there's one yonder, arrested, and carried to prison, was worth five thousand of you all.

1 Gent. Who's that, I pray thee?

Bawd. Marry sir, that's Claudio, Senior Claudio.

1 Gent. Claudio to prison! 'Tis not so.

Bawd. Nay, but I know 'ts so: I saw him arrested; saw him carried away; and, which is more, within these three days his head's to be chopped off.

1 Messer.

2 Gent. That's on the loss of hair by the French disease.

1 Coro. Veneria.

Lucio. But, after all this fooling, I would not have it so; art thou sure of this?

Bawd. I will send a messenger off, and it is for getting Madam Julietta with child.

Lucio. Believe me, this may be: he promised to meet me two hours since; and he was ever precise in providing time.

2 Gent. Besides, you know, it draws something near to the speech we had to such a purpose.

1 Gent. But most of all, agreeing with the proclamation.

Lucio. Away; let's go learn the truth of it.

[Exeunt Lucio and Gentlemen.]

Bawd. Thus, what with the war, what with the sweat; what with the yalloes, and what with poverty, I am custom-shrunk. How now! what's the news with you?

Enter Clown.

Clown. Yonder man is carried to prison.

Bawd. Well; what has he done?

Clown. A woman.

Bawd. But what's his offence?

Clown. Groping for trouts in a peculiar river.

Bawd. What, is there a maud with child by him?

Clown. Come, but there's a woman with child by him: you have not heard of the proclamation, have
you?

Bawd. What proclamation, man?

Clown. All houses in the suburbs of Vienna must be shut down.

Bawd. And what shall become of those in the city?

Clown. They shall stand for seed: they had gone down too, but that a wise burgher put in for them.

Bawd. But, shall all our houses of resort in the suburbs be pulled down?

Clown. O, the ground, mistress.

Bawd. Why, here's a chance indeed in the commonwealth: what shall become of me?

Clown. Come, fair not you; good counsellors lack no clients. Though you change your place, you need not change your trade; I'll be your tapster still. Courage; there will be pity taken on you:
you that have worn your eyes almost out in the service, you will be considered.

Bawd. What's to do here! Thomas Tapster, let's withdraw.

Clown. Here comes Signior Claudio, led by the provost to prison: and there's madam Julietta.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The same.

Enter Provost, Claudio, Juliet, and Officers.

Claud. Fellow, why dost thou show me thus to the world. Bear me to prison, where I am committed.

Pror. Do it not in evil disposition,
But from lord Angelo by special charge.

Claud. Thus can the demi-god, Authority,
Make us pay down for our offence by weight—
The words of heaven; on whom it will, it will;
On whom it will not, so; yet still 'tis just.

Enter Lucio.

Lucio. Why, how now, Claudio? whence comes this restraint?

Claud. From too much liberty, my Lucio, liberty!

As surfeit is the father of much fast,

So every scope by the improper use

Turns to restraint: our natures do pursue

(Like rats that ravin down their proper hole)

A thing too evii, and when we drink, we lose.

Lucio. If I could speak so wisely under an arrest,
I would send for certain of my creditors; And yet,
I would say the truth, I had as lief have the liberty of freedom, as the mockery of imprisonment.—What's thy offence, Claudio?

Claud. What, but to speak of would offend us.

Lucio. What, is it? murder?

Claud. No.

Lucio. Leechery!

Claud. Call it so.

Pror. Away, sir; you must go.

Claud. One word, good friend:—Lucio, a word with you.

[Takes him aside.]

*The swirling sickness.
Lucio. A hundred, if they'll do you any good.

Islethery so look'd after!

Claud. This stands it with me:—Upon a true contract

I got possession of Julietta's bed;

You know the lady; she is fast my wife,

So you and that do we the devil damn us all.

Of outward order: this we came not to,

Only for propigation of a dower

Remaining in the coiler of her friends;

For the time when we theathe do see our love,

Till time had made them for us. But it chances,

The stealth of our most unmeet intercourse,

With character too gross, is writ on Juliet.

Lucio. With child, perhaps!

Claud. Unhappily, even so.

And the new deputy now for the duke,—

Whether it be the hunt and glimpse of newness;

Or whether that the body public be

A horse whereon the governor doth ride,

Who newly in the seat, that it may know

He can command, let's it straightly ice, the spur;

Whether the tyranny be in his place,

Or in his eminence that fills it up,

I stagger in:—But this new governor

Awakes me all the unrolled penalties,

Which have like massacred armor, hung by the wall

So long, that nineteen zodiacs have gone round,

And none of them been worn; and for a name,

Now puts the drowsy and neglected act

Freshly on me:—'tis, sorely, for a name.

Lucio. I warrant, it; and the head stands so

Tickle on thy shoulders, that an athlete, if she be in love, may sigh it off. Send after the duke, and appeal to him.

Lucio. I have done so, but he's not to be found.

I pray thee, Lucio, do me this kind service:

This day my sister should the cluster enter,

And there receive her approbation;

Acquaint her with the danger of my state;

Implore her in my voice, that may make friends

To the stricr deputy: but herself assay him;

I have great hope in that: for in her youth

There is a prone and speechless dialtoss,

Sells moves men: bessee, she hath prospectors art

When she will play with reason and discourse,

And well she can persuade.

Lucio. I pray, she may: as well for the encouragement of the like, which else would stand under gnarous imposition; as for the enjoying of thy life, who I would be sorry should be thus loathly lost at a game of tick-tack. I'll to her.

Claud. I thank you, good friend Lucio.

Lucio. Within two hours.—

Claud. Come, officer, away.

SCENE IV.—A Monastery.

Enter Duke and Friar Thomas.

Duke. Not, holy father; throw away that thought;

Believe not that the dribbling dart of love

Can pierce a complete bosom: why I desire thee

To give me secret harb, hath a purpose

More grave and wrinkled than the aims and ends

Of burning youth.

Fri. May your grace speak of it?

Duke. My holy sir, none better knows than you

How I have ever loved the life removed;

And in my idle price to haunt a somberies,

Where youth and cost, and wistless bravery keeps,

I have deliver'd to lord Angelo

(A man of stricture and firm abstinence)

My absolute power and place in Vienna,

And he supposes me travel'd to Poland;

For so I have strew'd it in the common ear,

And so it is receiv'd: Now, ponders sir,

You will demand of me why I do this?

Fri. Gladly, my lord.

Duke. We have strict statutes, and most biting laws,

(The needful bits and curbs for headstrong steeds,)

Which for these fourteen years we have let sleep;

Even like an o'er-grown lion in a cage,

That does not out to prey: Now, as fond fathers

Having bound up the thorny wings of birds,

Only to stick it in their children's sight,

For terror, not to use; in time the rod

Becomes more mock'd than fear'd: so our decrees,

Dead to inflection, to themselves are dead;

And liberty pleads justice by the nose;

The baby beats the horse, and quite aethwan

Go'st all decorum.

Fri. It rested in your grace

To unboast this tied-up justice when you pleas'd;

And it is you more dreadfull would have seem'd,

Than in lord Angelo.

Duke. I do fear, too dreadful:

Sith, twas my fault, to press the pestilence.

Touched my tyranny to strike, and guilt them

For what I let them do: For we but thus be done,

When evil deeds have their permissive pass,

And not th'ir punishment. Therefore, indeed, my father.

I have on Angelo imposed the office;

Who may, in the ambush of my name, strike home,

And yet my nature never in the sight,

To do it slander: And to behold his away,

I will, as 'twere a brother of your order,

Visit both prince and people: therefore, I pray thee,

Supply me with the habit, and instruct me

How I may formally in person bear me

Like a true friar. More reasons for this action,

At our more leisure shall I render you;

Only this one:—Lucio is lord Angelo;

Stands at a guard with envy: scarce connoiss

That his blood flows, or that his appetite

Is more to bread than stone: Hence shall we see,

If power change purpose, what our scenarios be.

[Exeunt.

SCENE V.—A Nursery.

Enter Isabella and Francisca.

Isab. And have you nuns no further privileges!

Friar. Are not these large enough?

Isab. Yes, truly: I speak not as desiring more;

But rather wishing a more strict restraint

Upon the sisterhood, the votarists of saint Clare.

Lucio. Ho! Peace be in this place!—Within Isab. Who's that which calls?

Friar. It is a monk's voice:—gente Isabella.

Turn you the key, and know his business of him;

You may, I may not; you are yet unswoon;

When you have vowed, you must not speak with me.

But in the presence of the priestess:

Then, if you speak, you must not show your face;

Or if you show your face, you must not speak.

He calls again; I pray you answer him.

[Exit FRANCISCA.

Isab. Peace and prosperity! Who is that calls?

Enter Lucio.

Lucio. Hail, virgin, if you be; as those cheek-roses

Proclaim you are no less! Can you so steady me,

As bring me to the sight of Isabella,

A novice of this place, and the fair sister

To her unhappy brother Claudia?

Isab. Why her unhappy brother! let me ask;

The rather, for I now must make you know

I am that Isabella, and her sister.

Lucio. Gentle and fair, your brother kindly greets you,

Not to be weary with you, he's in prison.

Isab. Woe me! For what?

Lucio. For that which if myself might be his judge.

He should have been punished in thanks:

He had got his friend with child.

Isab. Sir, make me not your story.

Lucio. Sir, take it true.

I would not—though 'tis my familiar sin,

With maids to seem the lapwing, and to jest,

Tongue far from heart,—play with all virgins so,

Hold you as a thing ensky'd, and saints;

By your desire demand an immoral spirit;

And to be talked with in sincerity,

As with a saint.

Isab. You do blushing the good in mocking me.

Lucio. Do not believe it. Foweness and truth,

'tis thus: Your brother and his lover have embraced;

As those that feel grow full; as blossoming time,

That from the swaddles the bare fllow brings

* Do not make a jest of me.

[In few and true words.

* In few and true words.

* In few and true words.
To the gentle audience, even to her plenteous womb
Expresseth his full tithe, and industrious
Lucio. Some one with child by him! — My cousin
Jest! Lucio. Issue your cousin! Lab. Adoptedly: as school-maids change their names,
By vane though apt affection.
Lucio. She is it.
Lab. 0, let him marry her!
Lucio. This is the point.
The Duke is very strangely gone from hence;
Here many gentlemen, myself being one,
In hand, and hope of action; but we do learn
By those that know the very nerves of state,
His blood is current proof of an infinite distance.
From true-meaning design. Upon his place,
And with full livery of his authority,
Governs lord Angelo; a man, whose blood
Is very snow-broth; one who never feels
The wanton stings and motions of the sense;
But doth rebate and blunt his natural edge
With profits of the mind, study and fast.
He to give fear to use and liberty;
Which leave, for long, run by the hideous law,
As mice by holes! hath pick'd out an act,
Under whose heavy yoke doth break your life
Falls inferor! he arrests him on it;
And follows close the rigor of the statute,
To make him an example: all hope is gone,
Unless you have the grace by your fair prayer
To solen Angles. And that's my path
Of business twist you and your poor brother.
Lab. Both he so seek's his life!
Lucio. Has censor'd him
Already; and, as I hear, the provost hath
A warrant for his execution.
Lab. Alas! what poor ability's in me
To do him good?
Lucio. Assay the power you have.
Lab. My power! Alas! I doubt,—
Lucio. Our doubts are traitors,
And make us lose the good we oft might win;
By fearing to attempt, to lord Angelo,
And let him learn to know, when maidens sue,
Men give like gods; but when they weep and kneel,
All their petitions are as freely theirs
As they themselves would owe them.
Lab. I'll see what I can do.
Lucio. But speedily.
Lab. I will about it straight:
No longer staying but to give the mother
Notice of my affair. I humbly thank you:
Command me to my brother: soon at night
I'll send him certain word of my success.
Lucio. I take my leave of you.
Lab. Good sir, adieu.
[Exeunt.]
as he spit in his face, so she defied him.

Clo. Sir, if he please your honor, this is not so.

[Exit it before, these varlets here; thou honorable man, prove it.

Escal. Do you hear how he misplaces?

Clo. Sir, she came in great with child; and longing

(saving your honors reverence) for stew'd prunes; sir, we had but two in the house, which at that very distant time stood as it were, in a front-dish with six and some three-pence: your honors have seen such dishes; they are not china dishes, but very good dishes.

Escal. Go to, go to! no matter for the dish, sir.

Clo. Go to, indeed, sir, not a pin of you; there are some in the right; but, to the point: as I say, this mistress Elbow, being, as I say, with child, and being great belly'd, and longing, as I said, for prunes; and having but two in the dish, as I said, master Froth here, this very man, having eaten the rest, as I said, and, as I say, paying for them very honestly; — for, as you know, master Froth, I could not give you three-pence again.

Froth. No, indeed.

Clo. Very well: you being then, if you be remembered, cracking the stones of the foresaid prunes.

Froth. Ay, so I did, indeed.

Clo. Why, very well; I telling you then, if you be remembered, that such a one, and such a one, were past cure of the thing you wot of, unless they kept very good diet, as I told you.

Froth. All this is true.

Clo. Why, very well then.

Escal. Come, you are a tedious fool: to the purpose.— What was done to Elbow's wife, that he hath cause to complain of? Come me to what was done to her.

Clo. Sir, your honor cannot come to that yet.

Escal. No, sir, nor I mean it not.

Clo. Sir, but you shall come to it by your honor's leave: you can, you, look into master Froth here, sir; a man of fourscore pounds a year; whose father died at Hallowmas: — Was't not at Hallowmas, master Froth?

Froth. All-hollow'd, etc.

Clo. Why, very well: I hope here be truths: be, sir, sitting, as I say, in a lower'd chair, sir: —twas in the Bunch of Grapes, where, indeed, you have a delight to sit: have you not?

Froth. I have so: because it is an open room, and good for winter.

Clo. Why, very well then: — I hope here be truths.

Aug. This will last out a night in Russia, When nights are longest there: I'll take my leave, And leave you to the hearing of their cause; How Froth will find good cause to whip them all.

Escal. I think no less: good marrow to your lordship. [Exit Augio.

Now, sir, come on: what was done to Elbow's wife, once more.

Clo. Once, sir? there was nothing done to her once.

Clo. I beseech you, sir, ask him what this man did to my wife?

Clo. I beseech your honor, ask me.

Escal. Well, sir: what did this gentleman to her?

Clo. Sir, look in this gentleman's face: — Good master Froth, look upon his honor; 'tis for a good purpose: doth your honor mark his face?

Escal. Ay, sir, very well.

Clo. Nay, I beseech you, mark it well.

Escal. Well, I do so.

Clo. Dost your honor see any harm in his face?

Escal. Why, no.

Clo. I'll be supposed: upon a book, his face is the worst thing about him: good then; if his face be the worst thing about him, how could master Froth do the housewife any harm? I would know that of your honor.

Escal. He's in the right: constable, what say you to it?

Clo. First, an it like you, the house is a respected house; next, this is a respected fellow; and his mistress is a respected woman.

Clo. By this hand, sir, his wife is a more respected person than any of us all.

Clo. It be not worse; thou honest, wicked varlet: the time is yet to come, that she was ever respected with man, woman, or child.

Clo. Mistress Elbow was respected with him before he married her.

Escal. Which is the wiser here? justice or iniquity?

Clo. This true.

Escal. Is this true?

Clo. Troth, I'll swear it! 0 thou varlet! 0 thou wicked Hannibal! I respected with her, before I was married to her! If ever I was respected with her, or she with me, let not your worship think me the worse of it: — I prove this to his, thou wicked Hannibal, or I'll have mine action of battery on thee.

Escal. If he took you a box o' the ear, you might have your action of slander too.

Clo. No, no, Troth, when I take your worship's good warrant for it: what's your worship's pleasure I should do with this wicked caitiff?

Escal. Truly, officer, because he hath some offences in him, that thou wouldst discover if thou couldst, let him continue in his courses, till thou know'st what they are.

Clo. Marry, I thank your worship for it: — thou wicked varlet now, what's come upon thee; thou art to continue now, thou varlet; thou art to continue.

Escal. Where were you born, friend?

Froth. Here, in Vienna, sir.

Escal. Are you of fourscore pounds a year?

Froth. Yes, and I please you, sir.

Escal. So—What trade are you at, sir?

[To the Clown.

Escal. Your mistress's name?

Escal. Hath she had any more than one husband?

Clo. Nine: sirs, over-done by the last.

Escal. Nine: — Come hither to me, master Froth. Master Froth, I would not have you acquainted with tapsters: they will draw you, master Froth, and you will hang them: get you gone, and let me bear no more of you.

Froth. I thank your worship: for mine own part, I never come into any room in a taphouse, but I am drawn in.

Escal. Well; no more of it, master Froth: farewell. [Exit Eelr.] — Come hither to me master tapster: what's your name, master tapster?

Clo. Pompey.

Escal. What else?

Clo. Bum, sir.

Escal. Troth, and your hum is the greatest thing that has been spoken in this place. But the beastliness that is Pompey the great. Pompey, you are partly a bawd. Pompey, howsoever you color it in being a tapster. Are you not! come, tell me true; it shall be the better for you.

Clo. Truly, sir, I am a poor fellow, that would live.

Escal. How would you live, Pompey? by being a bawd? What do you think of the trade, Pompey? is it a lawful trade?

Clo. If the law would allow it, sir.

Escal. But the law will not allow it, Pompey; how do you intend to live? You are in Vienna.

Clo. Does your worship mean to geld and spill all the youth in the city?

Escal. No, Pompey.

Clo. Then, sir, in my poor opinion, they will do to then: if your worship will take orders for those drabs and the knives, you need not to fear the bawds.

Escal. There are pretty orders beginning, I can tell you: it is but heading and hanging.

Clo. If you head and hang all that offend that way but for ten years together, you'll never live to give out, for more heads yet. If this law hold in Vienna ten years, I'll rent the fairest house in it, after three-pence a day: if you live to see this come to pass, say Pompey told you so.

Escal. You think your worship good Pompey: and, in re- quital of your prophecy, bark you. — I advise you, let me not find you before me again upon any con-

4 Constable or Clown. For cantinal.

5 Measure.
Ang. Stay a little while,—[To Isab.] You are welcome. What's your will? Isab. I am a woful enquirer to your honor: Please but your honor hear me.

Ang. Well! what's your suit? Isab. There is a vice that most I abhor, and most desire should meet the blow of justice; for which I would not plead, but that I must; For which I must not plead, but that I am at war, twixt will, and will.

Ang. Well; the matter? Isab. I have a brother is condemned to die. I do beseech you, let it be his, and not my brother.

Pros. Heaven give thee moving graces. Ang. Condemn the fault and not the actor of it! Why, every fault's condemned, cret it be done: More were the better refuge of a wrong, To find the faults, whose fine stands in record, And let go by the actor.

Isab. O just, but severe law! I had a brother then.—Heaven keep your honor.

Retire. Lucio. [To Is. e. n.] Give it not o'er so: to him again, interreat him.

Kneel down before him, hang upon his gown; You are too cold; if you should need a pen You could not write more tame a tongue desire it: You him, his, must needs die! Isab. Must he need die! Lucio. Maid, no remedy.

Isab. Test: Do I think that you might pardon him, And neither heaven, nor man, grieve at the mercy. Ang. I will not do. Isab. But you can, if you would! Ang. Look, what I will not, that I cannot do. Isab. But might you do it, and do the world no wrong?

If so, your heart were touch'd with that remorse As mine is to him. Ang. He's sentenced: 'tis too late. Lucio. You are too cold.

Isab. Too late! why, as I, that do speak a word, May call it back again? I will believe this, No ceremony that to great ones 'longs. Not the king's crown, nor the deed sword, The marshal's truncheon, nor the judge's robe, Become them with one half so good a grace, As mercy does. If he had been as you, And you as he, you would have slipt like him; But he, like you, would not have been so stern.

Ang. Pray you, begone.

Isab. I would to heaven I had your potency, and you were Isabella! should it then be thus? No; I would tell what I were to be a judge, And what a prisoner.

Lucio. Ay, touch him: there's the vein. [Aside.] Ang. Your brother is a forfeit of the law, And you but waste your words.

Isab. Alas! alas! Why, all the souls that were, were forfeit once: And he that might the vantage best have took, Found out the remedy: How would he be, If He, which is the top of judgment, should But judge you as you are? 0, think on that; And mercy then will breathe within your lips, Like man new made. Be you content, fair maid; It is the law, not I, condemns your brother: Were he my kinsman, brother, or my son, It should be done with him:—he must die to-morrow.

Isab. To-morrow! O, that's sudden! Spare him, spare him.

Pros. He's not prepar'd for death! Even for our kitchens We kill the fowl of season; shall we serve heaven With less respect than we do minister To our gross selves! Good, good my lord, bethink you: Who is it that hath died for this offence? There's many have committed it.

Pros. Ay, well said. Ang. The law hath not been dead, though it hath slept: Those many had not dur'd to do that evil, If the first man that dur'd did the edict infringe, Had answer'd for his deed: now, 'tis awake; Takes note of what is done: and, like a prophet, Looks in a glass, that shows what future evils (Either now, or by remissness now-conceived,
And so in progress to be hatch'd and born)
Are now to have no successive degrees,
But, where they live, to end.

Let show some pity,
I show it most of all, when I show justice;
For then I pity those I do not know,
Which a disputed office would affect;
And do him right, that answering one foul wrong,
Lives best to act another that is said.
Your brother dies to-morrow: be content.
Isab. so you must be the first that gives this sentence;
And he, those others: O, it is excellent
To have a great'st strength; but it is tyrannous
To use it like a giant.
Lucio. That's well said.
Isab. Could great men thunder
As Jove himself does, Jove would never be quiet,
For every pedling, petty officer,
Would use his heaven for thunder; nothing but thunder—
Merciful heaven!
Thou rather, with thy sharp and sulphurous bolt,
Split in the unmerciful and knarled oak,
Than the soft, mildy:
—O, but, man, proud man!
Drest in a little brief authority,
Most ignorant of what he's most assured,
Hast not a name—like an angry ape,
Plays such fantastic tricks before high heaven.
As make the angels weep: who, with our spleens,
Would all themselves burn mock martial.
Lucio, O, to him, to himself: he will relent;
He's coming, I perceive it.

Prox. Pray heaven, she win him!
Isab. We cannot weep our brother with ourselves:
Great men may jest with such a subtle: its wit in them;
But, in the less, foul profanation.
Lucio. Thou'rt in the right, girl: more o' that,
Isab. That in the captain's but a choleric word,
Which in the soldier is that base blasphemy.
Lucio. Art advis'd o' that! more o' that.
Ang. Why do you put these sayings upon me?
Isab. Because authority, though it err like others,
Has a kind of medicinence in itself,
That skinns the vice o' the top: Go to your bosom;
Knock there: and ask your heart, what it doth know,
That's like my brother's fault: if it confess
A natural guiltiness, such as is his,
Let it not sound a thought upon your tongue
Against my brother's life.

Ang. She speaks, and tis
Such sense, that my sense breaxs with it. — Fare you well.
Isab. Gentle my lord, turn back.
Ang. I will bethim: me: — Come again to-morrow.
Isab. Hark, how I'll briege you: Good my lord, turn back.
Ang. How, briege me!
Isab. Ay, with such gifts, that heaven shall share with you.
Lucio. You had mar'd all else.
Isab. Not with loud speeches or the testold gold
Or stones, whose rates are either rich or poor,
As fancy values them: but with true prayers,
That shall be up at heaven, and enter there.
From impure: prayers from preserved souls,
From fasting maid's, whose maid's are dedicate
To nothing temporal.

Ang. Well; come to me.

To-morrow.
Lucio. Go to: it is well; away. | Aside to Isab.
Isab. Heaven keep your honorable soul!
Ang. Amen for you.

Aside.

Where prayers cross.
Isab. At what hour to-morrow
Shall I attend your lordship?

Ang. At any time, forenoon.

Isab. Save your honor!

[Exeunt Lucio, Isabella, and Proxest.
Ang. From thee: even from thy virtue:
What's this? what's this? Is this her fault or mine?
The tempter, or the tempted, who sins most! ha!
Not she: nor doth she tempt: But it is I,
That lying by the violet, in the sun,
Do, as the carnion does, not as the flower,
Corrupt with virtuous season: Can it be,
  • Patry.  • Knotted.  • Stamped.
  • Preserved from the corruption of the world.

That modesty may more betray our sense
Than woman's lightness! Having waste ground enough.

Shall we to desire to raise the sanctuary,
And parents, evin: \(\text{I}'s\) Eve, Eve, Eve!\)
What doth thou \(\text{I}'\) or what art thou, Angelo?
Dost thou desire her fairely, for those things
That make her good? \(\text{I}'\), let her brother live:
Cheekless for their nobility to have satisfied.
When judges steel themselves. What! do I love her,
That I desire to hear her speak again.
And least upon her eyes! What is it! dream on!\(\text{O}\) common enemy, that to catch a saint.
With samis dusts but thy hook! Most dangerous
Is that temptation, that doth lead us on
To sin in loving virtue; never could the strumpet
With all the doubt with art, and nature,
Once stir my temper; but this virtuous maid
Subtles me quite; — Ever, till now,
When men were fond, I should, and wonder'd how.

SCENE III. — A Room in a Prison.

Enter Duke, habiting like a Friar, and Provost.
Duke. Hail to you, provost: so think I you are.
Prox. In the provost: What's your will, good friar?
Duke. Bound by my charity, and my bless'd order,
I come to visit the afflicted spirits
Here in the prison: do you the common right
To let me see them; and to make me know
The nature of their crimes, that I may minister
To them accordingly.
Prox. I would do more than that, if it were needful.

Enter Juliet.

Look, here comes one; a gentlewoman of mine,
Who, falling, in the flames of her own youth,
Hath bluster'd her report: she is with child;
And he that get it sentenced: a young man
More fit to put another such offence,
Than die for this.

Duke. When must he die?
Prox. As I do think, to-morrow. —
I have provided for you: stay awhile. | To Juliet.
And you shall be conducted.
Duke. Repent you fair, one of the sin you carry! Juliet. I do: and bear the shame most patiently.
Duke. I'll teach you how you shall arraign your conscience,
And try your penitence, if it be sound,
Or hollowly put on. | Juliet.

Juliet. I'll gladly learn.
Duke. Love you the man that wrong'd you?
Juliet. Yes, as I love the woman that wrong'd him.
Duke. So then, it seems, your most officious act
Was mutually committed. — Mutually.
Duke. Then was your sin of heavier kind than his.
Juliet. I do confess it, and repent it, father.
Duke. To seek so, daughter: But lest you do repent,
As that the sin brought you to this shame,—
Which sorrow is always toward ourselves, not ours.
Showing, we'd not spare heaven, as we love it,
But as we stand in fear.
Juliet. I do repent me, as it is an evil;
And take the shame with joy.

Duke. There rest.
Your partner, as I hear, must die to-morrow,
And I am going with instruction to him.—
Grace go with you! Benvenuto! | Exit.
Juliet. Must die to-morrow! O, injurious love,
That repines me a lieu, whose very comfort

SCENE IV. — A Room in Angelo's House.

Enter Angelo.

Ang. When I would pray and think, I think and pray.
To several subjects: heaven hath my empty words:
Whist my invention, hearing not my tongue,
Anchors on Isbel: Heaven in my mouth, .—
As if I did but only know his name;
And in my heart, the strong and swarming evil
Of my conception: The state, wherein I studied,
Is like a good thing: being often read,
Grown wearied and tedious; yea, my gravity,
Wherein let no man bear me; I take pride,
Could I, with boot, change on an idle plumage,
Which the air beats for vain. O place! O form!
How often dost thou, in thy exact habit,
With all the awe from fools, and the wiser souls
To thy false seeming? Blood, thou still art blood!
Let's write good angels on the devil's horn
'Tis not the devil's crest.

Enter Servant.

How now, who's there?
Serv. One Isabel, a sister,
Desires access to you.

Ang. Teach her the way. [Exeunt Serv.

How now, fair maid?
Isab. And come to know your pleasure.
Ang. That you might know it, would much better please me,
Than to demand what 'is. Your brother cannot live.
Isab. Even so!—Heaven keep your honor!
[Retiring.

Ang. Yet may he live a while; and it may be
As long as you or I: Yet he must die.
Isab. I order your sentence!
Ang. Yes.
Isab. Whence? I beseech you! that in his reproof,
Lesser, or shorter, he may be so fitted,
That his soul sicken not.
Ang. Ha! lye, these filthy vices! It were as good
To pardon him, that hath from nature stolen
A man already made, as to remit
Their saucy sweeteness, that do coin heaven's image,
In stamps that are forbid: 'tis as easy
For man to take away a life true made,
As to put mettle in restrained means,
To make a false one.
Isab. 'Tis set down so in heaven, but not in earth,
As long as we are soft as our people shall you quickly,
Which had you rather, that the most just law
Now took your brother's life; or, to redeem him,
Give up your body to such sweet meekness,
And slave that he hath staid upon.
Isab. Sir, believe this,
I had rather give my body than my soul.
Ang. I talk not of your soul; our compell'd sins
Stand more for number than acquaint.
Isab. How say you?
Ang. Nay I'll warrant that; for I can speak
Against the thing I say. Answer to this:—
1. Now the voice of the recorded law,
Pronounce a sentence on your brother's life:
Might there not be a charity in sin,
That this brother's life?

Isab. Please you to do 't,
I'll take it as a peril to my soul,
It is no sin at all, but charity.

Ang. Please you to do 't at peril of your soul,
We are equal poise of sin and charity.
Isab. That I do be his life, if it be sin,
Isab. I grant it to be much made to suit,
If that be sin, I'll make it my morn prayer
To have it added to the faults of mine,
And nothing of your answer.

Nay, but hear me:
Your sense pursues not mine: either you are ignorant, or seem so, craftily; and that's not good.
Isab. Let me be ignorant, and in nothing good,
But gracioulsy to know I am no better.
Ang. Thus wisdom wishes to appear most bright,
When it doth tax itself: as these black marks
Proclaim an enthusiasm beauty ten times lovelier
Than beauty which could decay—But mark me;
To be received plain, I'll speak more gross:
Your brother is to die.
Isab. So.
Ang. And his offence is so, as it appears
Accountant to the law upon that pain.
Isab. True.
Ang. Admit no other way to save his life,
(As I subscribe not that, nor any other,
But in the loss of question,) that you, his sister,
Finding yourself desir'd of such a person,
Whose person is with the pose, or even great place,
Could fetch your brother from the manacles
Of the all-binding law; and that there were
No earthly mean to save him, but that either
You must lay down the treasures of your body
To this supposed, or else let him suffer;
What would you do?
Isab. As much for my poor brother as myself;
That is, were I under the terms of death,
The impression of keen whirls I'd wear as rubies,
And strip myself to death, as to a bed
That longing I have been sick for; ere I'd yield
My body to shame.
Isab. Then must your brother die.
Isab. And 'twere the cheaper way:
Better it were, a brother died at once,
Than that a sister, by redeeming him,
Should die for ever.
Ang. Were not you then as cruel as the sentence
That you have shiver'd so?
Isab. Imony in ransom, and free pardon,
Are of two honours: lawful mercy is Nothing akin to soul redemption.
Ang. You seem'd of hate to make the law a tyrant;
And rather prov'd the sliding of your brother
A memento than a vice.
Isab. I pardon me, my lord: it oft falls out,
To have what we'd have, we speak not what we mean:
I something do excuse the thing I hate,
For his advantage that I dearly love.

Ang. We are all frail.
Isab. Else let my brother die,
It is not a fodder, but only be,
Owes and succeed by weakness.
Ang. Nay, women are frail too.
Ang. Ay, as the glasses where they view them.

Which are as easy broke as they make forms.
Women!—Help heaven! men their creation mar
In profiting by them. Nay, call us ten times frail;
We are so dear as our people shall you quickly,
And erudite to false prints.

Ang. I think it well;
And from this testimony of your own, your (Since, I suppose, we are made to be no stronger Than faults may shake our frames,) let me be bold;
I do arrest your words; be that you are,
That is, a woman; if you be more, you're none;
If you be one, (as you are well express'd)
By all external warrants) show it now,
By putting on the destined livery.

Isab. I have no tongue but one: gentle my lord,
Let me entreat you, speak the former language.

Ang. Plainly coveyce, I love you.
Isab. My brother did love Juliet; and you tell me
That he had die for her.

Ang. He shall not, Isabel, if you give me love.
Isab. I know your virtue hath a licence in 't,
Which seems a little fouler than it is,
To pick on others.

Ang. Believe me, on mine honor,
My words express my purpose.

Isab. Little hear me, it is much believed,
And most pernicious purpose!—Seeming, seeming,
I will proclaim thee, Angelo: look for it:
Sign me a present pardon for my brother,
Or, with an outstretched threat, I'll tell the world
Aloud, what man thou art.

Ang. Who will believe thee, Isabel?
My unsal'd name, the wretchedness of my life,
My soul against you, and my place if the state,
Will so your accusation outweigh.
That you shall stile in your own report,
* Covered. * Associate. * Own. * Impressions.
Act III. Scene I. — A Room in the Prison.

Enter Duke, Claudio, and Provost.

Duke: So, then you hope of pardon from lord Angelo?

Claudio: The miserable have no other medicine, but only hope: I have hope to live, and am prepared to die.

Duke: Be absolute for death: either death, or life, shall thereby be the sweeter. Reason thus with life:—If it do lose thee, I do lose a thing that none but fools would keep: a breath thou art; (Serve to all the skies influences.) That dost this habitation, where thou keep'st, hourly afflict: merely, thou art death's foot; For he that knows not, by thy right hand, and yet runn'st toward him still: Thou art not noble; For all the accompaniments that thou bear'st, Are nurs'd by baseness: Thou art by no means valiant:

For thou dost fear the soft and tender fork Of a poor worm: Thy best of rest is sleep, And that thou oilt provok'st; Yet grossly fear'st Thy death, which is no more. Thou art not thyself: For thou exist'st on many thousands graces That issue out of dust: Happy thou art not; For what thou hast not, still thou strive'st to get; And when thou hast that, nor art certain; For thy complexion shin'd to strange effects; After the moon: If thou art rich, thou art poor; For thou canst ask, whose back is to the sun. Thou hast thy heavy riches but a journey, And death unloads thee: Friend hast thou none; For thine own bowels, which do call thee sire, The mere effusion of thy proper loves, Do curse the gout, scurvy, and the rheum. For ending thee so sooner: Thou hast not youth, nor age:

But, as it were, an after-dinner's sleep, Dreaming on both: for all thy blessed youth Becomes as aged, and doth beg the alms Of palsied old; and when thou art old and rich, Thou hast neither heat, affection, limb, nor beauty, To make thy riches pleasant. What's yet in thy, That bears the name of life! Yet in this life Lac hid more thousand deaths: yet death we fear. That makes these odds all even.

Claudio: I humbly thank you.

To sue to live, I find, I seek to die; And seeking death, find life: Let it come on.

Enter Isabella.

Isabella: What, ha! Peace here; grace and good company! Pray, who's there? come in: the wish desires a welcome. Duke: Dear sir, ere long I'll visit you again.

Claudio: Most holy sir, I thank you.

Isabella: My business is a word or two with Claudio.

Provo: And very welcome. Look, signior, here's your sister.

Duke: Provost, a word with you.

Provo: As many as you please.

Duke: Bring them to speak, where I may be concealed.

* Reluctant. 9 Afflicts, affections. 10 Leperous eruptions.

Yet hear them.

Enter Duke and Provost.

Claudio: Now, sister, what's the comfort? Isabella: Why, as all comfort are; most good indeed: Lord Angelo, having affairs to heaven, Detains you for his swift ambassador to their will; Hoinking both right and wrong to the apprize, To follow as it draws! I'll to my brother; Though he hath fallen by prompture of the blood, Yet hath he not to murder, nor to die. That had he twenty heads to tender down On twenty bloody blocks, he'd yield them up, Before his sister should her body stoop To such abhor'd pollution. But, then Isabel, live chaste, and, brother, die: More than our brother is our chastity. I'll tell him yet of Angelo's request, And fit his mind to death, for his soul's rest. [Exit.
Isab. Be ready, Claudio, for your death to-morrow.

Claud. Yes.—Has he affected him, this that this can make him bite the law by the nose?

Isab. Why would you fear it? Sure it is no sin;

Of the dead body seven it is the least.

Claud. Which is the least?

Isab. Half was damnable, he, being so wise, Which would be here for the momentary trick
Be perjur'd find it—(O Isabel!)

Isab. What says my brother?

Claud. Death is a fearful thing.

Isab. And shamed life a hateful.

Claud. Ay, but to die, and we know not where;

To lie in cold obstruction, and to rot:

The sensible warm of motion to become
A kneaded clod; and the delightful spirit
To bathe in fiery floods, or to reside
In thrilling regions of thick ribbed ice;

To topple down in the seaward winds
And blown with restless violence round about
The pendent world; or to be worse than worst
Of those, that hopeless and uncertain things
Imagin' how!—(Is it too horrible?)

The weakest and most boasted worldly life,

That age, ache, penury, and imprisonment,
Can lay on nature, is a paradise
That we fear of death.

Isab. Alas! alas!

Claud. Sweet sister, let me live:

What sin you do to have a brother's death,
Nature dispenses with the deed so fair,

That it becomes a virtue.

Isab. O, you beast!

O, dishonorable coward! O, dishonorable youth! Wilt thou be made a man out of my vice?

Isab. Is not a kind of incest, to take life

From thine own sister's name? What should I think?

Heaven shield, my mother play'd my father fair!

For such a warped slip of wilderness
Never issu'd from his blood. Take my defiance:

Did he part with that bright beam but my bending bow?

Reprieve thee from thy fate, it should proceed:

I'll pray a thousand prayers for thy death

No word to save thee.

Claud. Nay, hear me, Isabel.

Isab. O, fye, fye, fye!

Thy sin's not accidental, but a trade;

Mercy to thee would prove a bawd;

The best that thou dost nightly.

[Going

Claud. O hear me, Isabella.

Re-enter Duke.

Duke. Vouchsafe a word, young sister, but one word.

Isab. What is your will?

Duke. Might you dispense with your leisure, I would by and by have some speech with you: the satisfaction I would require, is likewise your own benefit.

Isab. I have no superfluous leisure; my stay must be stolen out of other affairs; but I will attend you avably.

Duke. [To Claudio, aside.] Son, I have overheard what has passed between you and your sister. Angelo had never the purpose to corrupt her; only he had made an essay of her virtue, to practice his judgment with the disposition of nature; she, hurring in the moment of her honor in him, hath made him that gracious denial which he is most glad to receive: I am confessor to Angelo, and I know this to be true; therefore prepare yourself to death:

Isab. الوزن, and you may not satisfy

Yourself the more with hopes that are fallible; because, now you must die; go to your knees, and make ready.

Claud. Let me ask my sister pardon. I am so out of love with life, that I will sue to be rid of it.

Duke. Hold you there! Farewell.

[Exit Claudio.

Re-enter Provost.

Provost, a word with you.

Prov. What's your will, father?

Duke. If now you are come you will be gone.

Leave me awhile with the maid; my mind promises with my habit, no less shall touch her by my company.

Prov. In good time.

[Exit Provost.

Duke. The hand that hath made you fair, hath made you good: the goodness that is cheap in beauty, makes beauty brief in goodness: but grace, being the soul of your complexion, should keep the body of your countenance in a sort; and never let me be made to you, fortune hath convey'd to me your understanding; and, that that truth hath examples for his falling, I should wonder at Angelo. How would you do to content this substitute, and to save your brother?

Isab. I am now going to resolve him: I had rather my brother die by the law, than my son should be made a saint. But O, how meanly thou dost, Duke; and I like the duke deceived in Angelo! If ever he returns, and I can speak to him, I will open my lips in vain, or dispose of my government.

Duke. That shall not be much amiss: Yet, as the matter now stands, he will avoid your accusation; he made trial of you only.—Therefore, fasten thy heart on thy good lieutenant: to the lessens in doing good, a remedy presents itself. I do make myself believe, that you may most unprincipally do a poor wronged lady a merited benefit; redeem your brother, by thy arts; I have no stain to your own gracious person; and much please the absent duke, if, peradventure, he shall ever return to have hearing of this business.

Isab. I have no heart to speak further: I have spirit to do any thing that appears not foul in the truth of my spirit.

Duke. Virtue is bold, and goodness never fearful. But you not hear speak of Mariana the sister of Frederick, the great soldier, who miscarried at sea?

Isab. I have heard of the lady; and good words went with her name.

Duke. Her should this Angelo have married; was appurtenant to her by oath, and the mutual appointed: 'twixt the contract and the solemnity, her brother Frederick was wrecked at sea, having in that perished vessel the dowry of her sister. But mark, how heavily this befall'd the poor girl: thenceforward, there she lost all: she became an orphan, brother in his love toward her ever most kind and natural; with him, the portion and Hew of her fortune, her marriage-dowry; with him, her companion, her confidant, her all-whole. Isab. Can this be so? Did Angelo so leave her?

Duke. Left her in her tears, and dry'd not one of them with his comfort; swallowed her grief, and whole, Pretending in her discoveries of dishonor; in few, bestow'd her on her own lamentation, which she yet vears for his sake; and he, a marble to her tears, was wash'd with them, but relents not.

Isab. What a merit were it in death, to take this poor maiden from the world! What corruption in this life, that it will let this man live!—but how out of the world she came?

Duke. It is a rupture that you may easily heal:

And the cure of it not only saves your brother, but keeps you from disfavor in doing it.

Isab. That is a thing of good heart, my lord.

Duke. This face-named maid hath yet in her the continuance of her first affection; his unjust unkindness, that in all reason should have quench'd the flame of the current, made it more violent and unruly. Go you to Angelo; answer his requirings with a plausible obedience; agree with his demands to the point: only refer it to this advantage,—first, that your stay with him may not be long; that the time may have all shadow and silence in it; and the place answer as well; secondly, that in this being gone, you can now follow. We shall advise this wronged maid to stand up in your appointment, go to your place; if the enquiring acknowledge itself heirless, it may compell her to his marriage, and dispose of the name. But, you think well to carry this as you may, the doubleness of the benefit defends the deceit from reproach. What think you of it?

Isab. It gives me content already; and I trust it will grow to a most prosperous perfection.

Duke. It lies much in your holding up: I taste you something of the flavor of it: if for this shall be esteem'd to your bed, give him promise of satisfaction. I will presently to St. Luke's; there, at the mounted grange, resides this deceased Mariana: At that [Petrel. Overreached.

[Exit.
Scene II. Measure for Measure.

Enter Duke, as a friar; to him Elbow, Clown, and officers.

ELB. Nay, if there be no remedy of it, but that you will needs buy an ill-sold man and women like beasts, as we shall have all the world drink brown and white bastard.

DUKE. Art, heavens! what stuff is here?

ELB. It has never merry world, since, of two usuries, the worst case was put down, and the worse allowed by order of law a tur'd gown to keep him warm; and tur'd with fox and lamb skins too, to signify, that craft, being richer than innocency stands for the lane.

ELB. Come your way, sir;—Bless you, good father.

DUKE. And you, good brother father: What offence hath this man made you, sir?

ELB. Martyr, sir, he hath offended the law; and, sir, we take him to be a thief too; for we have found upon him, sir, a strange pick-lock, which we have sent to the deputy.

DUKE. Fye, sirrah; a bawd, a wicked bawd!

The evil that thou causest to be done,
Thy meaner means to live: do, thou wilt think
What 'tis to cram a mat, or clothe a bache,
From such a filthy vice: say to thyself,—
From such an abominable and deadly touches
I think, I can array myself, and live.
Canst thou believe thy living is a life,
So stinkingly depending? Go, mend, go, mend.

CLONE. Indeed it doth sink in some sort, sir; but yet, sir, I would prove—

DUKE. Nay, if the devil have given thee proofs for sin,
Then why should he prove it. Take him to prison officer; Correction and instruction must both work;

ERE this base will profit.

ELB. He must before the deputy, sir; he has given him sureties that the deputy cannot abuse a bawd's master: if he be a whoremonger, and comes before him, he were as good a go a mile on his errand.

DUKE. That we were all, as some would seem to be,
Free from our faults, as faults from seeming free.

Enter Lucio.

Lucio. How now, noble Pompey? What, at the heels of Caesar! Art thou fell in triumph? What, is not some of your Pyramids in Robin Hood as heavy a woman, to be had now, for putting the hand in the pocket, and extracting it clutch! What reply! Ha! What say'st thou to this tune, matter, and method! Isn't dost drool 'tis the last run! Ha! What say'st thou, too! Is the world as it was, man? Which is the way! Is it sad, and few words! Or how! The trick of it!

Duke. Still this, and thus; still worse!

Lucio. How doth my dear morsel, thy mistress?

Procures she still? Ha!

PROCTOR. Truth, sir, she hath eaten up all her beef, and she is half full in the tubs.

Lucio. Why, 'tis good; it is the right of it; it must be so; ever your fresh where, and your powder bad: an unseem'd consequence; it must be: art you going to prison, Pompey?

CLEO. Yes, father, sir.

Lucio. Why, 'tis not amiss; Pompey: Farewell! Go, say I sent thee thither. For debt, Pompey? Or how!

ELB. For being a bawd, for being a bawd.

Lucio. Well, then imprison him: if imprisoned man is dead, why this his right bawd is he, doubtless, and of antiquity too; bawd-born. Farewell, good Pompey: commend me to the prison, Pompey: you will turn go! I husband now, Pompey, will keep the house.

CLEO. I hope, sir, your good worship will be my bail.

Lucio. No, indeed, will I not, Pompey; it is not the wear. I will pray, Pompey, to increase your bonds; if you lose it not gratuitously, why your mettle is the more: Adieu, trusty Pompey,—Bless you, friar.

Duke. And you.

Lucio. Does any fret paint still, Pompey? Ha!

ELB. Censure your ways, sir; come.

CLEO. You will not had me, then, sir!

Lucio. Then, Pompey! nor now—What news abroad, friar! What news.

ELB. Come your way, sir;—come.

Lucio. Go,—to kennel, Pompey, co;

[Exeunt Elbow, Clown, and Officers.

What news, friar, of the duke?

Duke. I know none, sir; I tell you tell me of any!

Lucio. Some say, he is with the emperor of Russia; other some, he is in Rome: but where is he, I think you know.

Duke. I know not where: But whereverse, I wish him well.

Lucio. It was a mad fantastical trick of him, to steal from the treasurers and spurge the legation he was never born to. Lord Aquila! if he do well, in his absence; he puts transgression to it.

Duke. He does well in't.

Lucio. A base mortification to lechery would do no harm in him: something, too crabbed that way, friar.

Duke. It is too general a vice, and severity must cure it.

Lucio. Yes, in good sooth, the vice is of a great kindred; it is well all'd: but it is impossible to expurgate it quite, friar, till eating and drinking be put down. They that are not made by man and woman, after the downright way of creation; is it true, think you?

Duke. How should he be made then?

Lucio. Some report, a sea-monstrous spawn'd him:

Some, that he was beat between two-stock-dishes; but it is certain, that when he makes water, his time is concluded, he is conceiv'd; that I know to be true: and he is a mortal ungenius, that's infallible.

Duke. You are pleasant, sir; and speak apart.

Lucio. Why, what a ruthless things is this, for the rebellion of a concubine, to take away the life of a man? Would the duke, that is about, have done this! Ere he would have hanged a man for the getting a hundred bastards, he would have paid for the murder a thousand; he had some feeling of the sport; he knew the service, and that instructed him to mercy.

Duke. I never heard the absent duke much detected for women; he was not inclined that way.

Lucio. O, sir, you are deceived.

Duke. 'Tis not possible.

Lucio. Who! not the duke? yes, your bazaar of ladies; and—how usual it is, to put a dish in her chamber: the duke had enticed him: He would be drunk too; that let me inform you.

Duke. You have him, sir.

Lucio. Sir, I was an inward of his: a shy fellow was the duke: and I believe I now the cause of his withdrawal.

Duke. What, I pray thee, might be the cause?

Lucio. No,—paris/on:—tis a secret must be lock'd within the teeth and the lips; but this I can let you understand,—The greater fire of the subject held the duke to be wise.

Dike. Wise! why, no question but he was.

Lucio. A very superficial, ignorant, unwielding fellow.

Duke. Either this is envy in you, folly, or mistaken: the very stream of his life, and the business he hath most; must upon a warranted need, give him a better proclamation. Let him be but testi monial in his own, by his mediocrity, and by the shall appear to the curious, a scholar, a statesman, and a soldier: Therefore, you speak unskillfully; or, if your knowledge be more, it is much darken'd in your marvel.

Lucio. Sir, I know him, and I love him.

Duke. Love talks with better knowledge, and knowledge with better love.

Lucio. Come, sir, I know what I know.

* Pottage.

* Goulash: The legates, two or three centuries ago, used to present their want by a wooden dish with a movable cover, which they clacked, to show that their vessel was empty.

* Guided.
Duke. I hardly believe that, since you know not what you speak. But, if ever the duke return, (as our prayers are busy,) let me desire you to make your answer before him. If he be honest you have spoke, you have courage to maintain it; I am bound to call upon you: and, I pray you, your name?

Lucio. Sir, my name is Lucio, well known to the duke.

Duke. He shall know you better, sir, if I may live to return a second time: this ungentlemanly action will unpeopie the province with continency; sparrows must not build in his house-eaves, because they are lecherous. The duke yet would have in his ear beards darkly answer'd; he would never bring them to light: would he were return'd! Marry, this Chando is condemned for untruths. Farewell, good fear: I pray thee, go, and say to the duke, I say to thee again, would eat mutton on Fridays. He's now past it; and, yet, I say to thee, he would mouth with a beecar, though she smell brown bread and garlic: say, that I said so. Farewell.

Duke. No may nor greatness in mortality Can censure scape; back-wounding calumny The whitest virtue strikes: What kin so strong, Can tie the sall in the slanderous tongue? But who comes here!

Enter Escalus, Provost, Bawd, and Officers.

Escal. Go, away with her to prison.

Bawd. Good my lord, be good to me; your honor is accounted a meteal man: good my lord.

Duke. Double and treble admonition, and still forsworn in the same kind! This would make mercy swear, and play the tyrant.

Prov. A Bawd of eleven years continuance, may it please your honor.

Bawd. My lord, this is one Lucio's information against me: mistress Kate Keep-down was with child, having in the duke's time, he promised her marriage; his child is a year and a quarter old; come Phillip and I, and I have kept it myself; and see how he goes about to abuse me.

Duke. Is a fellow of much license:—let him be calle before us.—Away with her to prison: Go to; no more words. [Exit Bawd and Officers.] Provost my brother Angelo will not be at home to die to-morrow; his house he furnishes with divers, and have all charitable proportion: if my brother wroght by my pity, it should not be with him. Provost, so please you, this friar hath been with him, and advis'd him for the entertainment of death.

Escal. Good even, good father.

Duke. Bless and good ness on you!

Escal. Of whence are you?

Duke. Not of this country, though my chance is now To use it for my time: I am a brother Of gracious order, late come from the see, In special business from his holiness.

Escal. What news abroad' the world?

Duke. All bad, but that there is so great a fever on goodness that the dissolution of it must cure it: novelty is only in request; and it is as dangerous to be aed, in any kind of course, as it is virtuous to be constant in any undertakings. There is scarce truth enough alive, to make societies secure; but security enough, to make fellowship accord: much upon this riddle runs the misfortune of the world. This news is old enough, yet it is every day's news. I pray you, sir, of what disposition was the duke? Escal. One that, above all other strifes, contended especially to know himself of this. Duke. What pleasure was given to? Escal. Rather rejoicing to see another merry, than merry at any thing which professed to make you rejoice: a gentleman of all temperance. But leave him to his events, with a prayer they may prove prosperous: and let me desire to know how you find Claudio prepared. I am made to understand, that you have lent him visitation.

Duke. He professes to have received no sinister measure from his judge, but most willingly humbles himself to the determination of justice; yet had he framed to himself, by the instruction of his frailty, many deceiving promises of life; which I, by my good leisure, have discerned to him, and now is he resolved.

Escal. You have paid the heavens your function, and the prisoner the very debt of your calling. I have labor'd for the poor gentleman, to the extremest my strength, and to the length of my patience: but my brother justice have I found so severe, that he hath forced me to tell him, he is indeed—justice.

Duke. If his own life answer the straitness of his proceeding, it shall become him well; whereas, if he chance to fail, he hath sentenced himself.

Escal. I am going to visit the prisoner: Fare you well.

Duke. Peace be with you! [Exit Escalus and Provost.]

He, who the sword of heaven would bear, Should be as holy as severe; Pattern in himself to know, Grace to stand, and virtue go; More nor less to others paying, Than by self-offences we watch. Shame to him, whose cruel striking Kills for faults of his own making! Twice treble shame on Angelo, To gain a wife and let his grow! O, what may man within him hide! Though angel on the outward side! How in my likeness, made in crimes, May these practice on his times. Draw with idle spiders strips Most past ras and substantial things! Craft against vice I must apply. With Angelo to-night shall lie His old betrothed, but despis'd; So desirous shall, by the desirous, Pay with falsehood false excusing. And perform an old contracting. [Exit.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—A Room in Mariana's House.

MARIANA discreetly calling; a Boy singing.

SONG.

Take on those lips away,
That so swiftly were won;
And those ears, the break of day,
Light's that do mislead the morn;
But my kisses bring again:
Seals of love, but seal'd in vain, seal'd in vain. [Exit Boy.

MARIANA. Break off thy song, and haste thee quick away; Here comes a man of comfort, whose advice Hath often still'd my burning discontent. [Exit Boy.

Enter Duke.

I cry you mercy, sir; and well could wish You had not found me here so musical; Let me excuse my, and believe me so; My mirth it much displeased, but pleas'd my woe. Duke. 'Tis good: though music oft hath such a charm, To make bad good, and good provoke to harm.
I pray you tell me, hath any body enquired for me here to-day? much upon this time have I promised here to meet. If you have not been inquired after: I have sat here all day.

Enter Isabella.

_Duke._ I do constantly believe you:—The time is come even now. I shall crave your forbearance a little: may be, I will call upon you anon, for some advantage to yourself.

_Mari._ I am always bound to you. [Exit.

_Duke._ Very well met, and welcome.

What is the news from this good deputy?

Enter, he hath a garden circumscribed with brick, whose western side is with a vineyard back'd; And to that vineyard is a plank'd gate, That makes his opening with this bigger key: This other doth command a little walk, Which from the vineyard to the garden leads; There have I made my promise to call on him, Upon the heavy middle of the night.

_Duke._ But shall you on your knowledge find this way?

_Isab._ Have I taken a due and wary note upon't; With whispering and most guilty diligence, In a motion all of precept, he did show me The way twice o'er.

_Duke._ Are there no other tokens Between you and her, concerning her observance!

_Isab._ No, none, but only a repair if the dark: And that I have possess'd him, my most stay Can be but brief: for I have made him know, I have a servant comes with the message; That stays upon me; whose persuasion is, I come about my brother.

_Duke._ 'Tis well born up.

_Isab._ I have not yet made known to Mariana A word of this:—What ho! within! come forth!

Re-enter Mariana.

_Ipray you, be acquainted with this maid; She comes to do you good._

_Duke._ Do you persuade yourself that I respect you?

_Mari._ Good friar, I know you do; and have found it.

_Duke._ Take then this your companion by the hand,

_Who hath a story ready for your ear: I shall attend your leisure; but make haste;

The vaporous night approaches._

Re-enter Mariana and Isabella.

_Duke._ Place and greatness, millions of false eyes Are stuck upon thee! volumes of report Run with these false and most conspicuous guests: Upon thy dooms! thousand 'scapes of wit Make thee the father of their idle dream. And rack them in their fancies!—Welcome! How agreed?

Re-enter Mariana and Isabella.

_Thy'shall take the enterprize upon her, father, If you advise it._

_Duke._ It is not my consent,

But my intrey too.

Little have you to say, When you depart from him, but soft and low,

Remember now my brother._

_Mari._ Nor, gentle daughter, fear you not at all: He is your husband on a pre-contract;

To bring you thus together, 'tis no sin;

But that the justice of your title to him

Both having 'silest,"'tis the death, come, let us go;

Our corns to reap, for yet our titles to sow._

Scene II.—A Room in the Prison.

Enter Provost and Clown.

_Prov._ Come hither, sirrah: Can you eat off a man's head?

_Clo._ If the man be a batchelor, sir, I can: but if

i. Walet round.

ii. Plank'd, wooden.

iii. Inquisitions, inquiries.

iv. God, or varnish over.

v. Titch, hand prepared for sowing.

he be a married man, he is his wife's head, and I can never cut off a woman's head!

_Prov._ Come, sir, leave me your snatches, and yield me a direct answer. To-morrow noon, to die Claudio and Bardolph: here is in our prison a common executioner, who in his office lacks a helper: if you will take it on you to assist him, it shall redeem you from your vices;* if not you shall have your full time of imprisonment, and your deliverance with an unplied whipping; for you have been a notorious wad.

_Clo._ Sir, I have been an unlawful bawd, time out of mind; but yet I will be content to be a lawful hangman. I would be glad to receive some instruction from my fellow-prisoner.

_Prov._ What ho, Abhorson! Where's Abhorson, there!

Enter Abhorson.

_Abhor._ Do you call, sir?

_Prov._ Sirrah, here's a fellow will help you to-morrow in your execution: If you think it meet, compound with him by the year, and let him abate here with you if I will, use him for the present, and dismiss him: he cannot plead his estimation with you; he hath been a bawd.

_Abhor._ A bad, sir! Fye upon him, he will discredite our mystery.

_Prov._ Go to, sir; you weigh equally; a feather will turn the scale._

_Clo._ Pray, sir, by your good favor, (for, surely, sir, a good favor you have, but that you have a hanging look,) do you call sir, your occupation a mystery.

_Abhor._ Ay, sir; a mystery.

_Clo._ Painting, sir, I have heard say, is a mystery; and your whores, sir, being members of my occupation, using painting, do prove my occupation a mystery: but what mystery there should be in hanging, if I should be hanged, I cannot imagine.

_Abhor._ Sir, it is a mystery.

_Clo._ Proof.

_Abhor._ Every true man's apparel fits his thief: if it be too little for your thief, your true man thinks it big enough; if it be too big for your thief, your thief thinks it little enough: so every true man's apparel fits his thief.

Re-enter Provost.

_Prov._ Are you agreed?

_Clo._ Sir, I will serve him: for I do find, your hangman is a more penitent trade than your bawd; he doth oftener ask forgiveness.

_Prov._ Sirrah, you, beside your block and your axe, to-morrow, four o'clock.

_Abhor._ Come on, bawd; I will instruct thee in my trade; follow.

_Clo._ I do desire to learn, sir; and, I hope, if you have occasion to use me for your own turn, you shall find me yare: 2 for truly, sir, for your kindness, I owe you a good turn._

_Prov._ Call forth Bardinard and Claudio:

_Exit Clown and Abhorson._

One has my pity; not a jot the other,

Being a minor, though he were my brother._

Enter Claudio.

_Look, here's the warrant, Claudio, for thy death: 'Tis now dead midnight, and by eight to-morrow Thou must be made immortal. Where's Bardinard?

_Claud._ As fast lock'd up in sleep, as guiltless labor

When it lies starkly in the traveller's bones:

_He will not wake._

_Prov._ Who can do good on him?

Well, go, prepare yourself. But hark, what noise!

Kneeling within.

Heaven give your spirits comfort! [Exit Claudio.]

_and by by:—

I hope it is some pardon or reprieve,

For the most gentle Claudio.—Welcome, father._

Enter Duke.

_Duke._ The best and wholesomest spirits of the night.

Envelope you, good provost! Who call'd here of late?

_Clo._ None, since the curfew rang.

_Prov._ Be it so.

_Trade._ Ready.
Duke. Not Israel!
Proc. No.
Duke. They will then, ere 't be long.
Proc. What comfort is for Claudio?
Duke. There's some in hope,
Proc. It is a bitter duty.
Duke. Not so, not so; his life is parallel'd
Even with the stroke and lute of his great justice;
He doth with holy abstemious subdue
That in himself, which he saw in his power
To qualify in others: were he meant!
With that which he corrects, then were tyrannous;
But this being so, he's just.
—Now are they come.
[Exited within.—Provost goes out.
This is a gentle provost: Seldom, when
The steeled gaoler is the friend of men.
How now! what noise! That spirit's possess'd with
That wounds the unsparing poison with these strokes.
Provost returns, speaking to one at the door.
Proc. There he must stay until the officer
Arise to let him in; he is call'd up.
Duke. Have you no correspondent for Claudio yet,
But he must die to-morrow?
None sir, none.
Duke. As near the dawning, provost, as it is,
You shall hear more ere morning.
Happily.
Proc. You something know; yet, I believe, there comes
No correspondent: no such example have we;
But very secret of justice.
Lord Angelo hath to the public ear
Profess'd the contrary.
Enter a Messenger.
Duke. This is his lordship's man.
Proc. And here comes Claudio's pardon.
Mess. My lord hath sent you this morrow and by me his further charge, that you swear not from the smallest article of it, neither in time, matter, or other circumstance.
Good morrow; for, as I take it,
Hath his lordship sent you a guard.
Duke. You may; you may;
Shaft do so;
This pardon, and you have it.
Proc. I shall obey him.
[Exit Messenger.
Duke. This is his pardon; purchased by such sin.
For which the pardoner himself is in.
[Aside.
Hence hath o'ertaken his quick celerity,
When it is borne in high authority;
When vice makes mercy, mercy's so extended.
That for the fault's love, is the offended friend.
Now, sir, news!
Proc. I told you: Lord Angelo, belike, thinking me remiss in mine office, awakens me with this unworthing put upon me; melancholy, strangely; for he hath not a word above.
Duke. Pray, you hear.
Proc. [Reads.] Whatsoever you may hear to the contrary, let Claudio be executed for order of the afternoon. Barnardine: for my better satisfaction, let me have Claudio's head sent me by eve.
Let this be duly performed: with a thought, that more depends on it than we must yet deliver.
Thus fail not to do your office, as you will answer it at your peril.
What say you to this, sir?
Duke. What is that Barnardine, who is to be executed in the afternoon?
Proc. A Bohemian born, but here nursed up and bred: one that is a prisoner nine years old.
Duke. He came to that the absent duke had ot ever delivered him to his liberty, or executed him?
I have heard, it was ever his manner to do so.
But this I do still prolong; in remembrance of him.
And, indeed, his fact, till now in the government of lord Angelo, came not to an undoubted proof.
Duke. Is it now apparent?
Proc. It is.
Duke. He is in jail, and not denied by himself.
Pard. Hath he borne himself penitent in prison?
How seems he to be touch'd?
Proc. A man that apprehends death no more darkly: he is not drunk, nor is new in the world, reckless and fear'd of what's past, present, or to come;
insensible of mortality, and desperately mortal.
Duke. He wants advice.
Proc. He'll not hear none: he hath evermore had the liberty of the prison; give him leave to escape hence, he would not; drunk many times a day, if
* Defied.
* Perhaps.
* Seated.
Nine years in prison.
not many days entirely drunk. We have very often awaked him, as if to carry him to execution, and showed him a warrant for it; it hath not moved him at all.
Duke. More of him anon. There is written in you, however, that honesty and constancy,
I read it not truly, my ancient skill betrays me; but in the boldness of my cunning, I will lay myself in hazard. Claudio, whom here you have a warrant to execute, is no express look: I know how the gentleman who hath sentenced him: To make you understand this in a manifest effect, I crave but four day's respite: for which you are to do me both a request, and a courtesy.
Prov. Pray, sir, in what!
Duke. In the delaying death.
Prov. Alack! how may I do it—having the hour limited to execute, and express command, to deliver his head in the view of Angelo? I may make my case as Claudio's, to cross this in the same.
Duke. By the vow of mine order, I warrant you, if my instructions may be your guide. Let this Barnardine be this morning executed, and his head borne to Angelo.
Proc. Angelo hath seen them both, and will discover the favor.
Duke. O, death's great dissuader: and you may add, that he is drunk, and in a head fit to say that, it was the desire of the penitent to be so hared before his death; you know, the course is common.
If any thing fail to you upon this, more than thinks to the mind of this business, by the saint whom I profess
I will plead against it with my life.
Prov. Pardon me, good father; it is against my order.
Duke. Were you sworn to the duke, or to the deputy?
Proc. To him, and to his substitutes.
Duke. You will think you have made no offence, if the duke awaketh the justice of your dealing?
Proc. But what likelihood is in that?
Duke. Not a resemblance, but a certainty.
Yet since you desire it, I will consult, that neither integrity, nor my persuasion, can with case attempt you, I will go further than I meant, to pacify all ears out of you. Look you, sir, here is the hand and seal of the duke. You know the character,
I doubt not; and the signet is not strange to you.
Proc. I know them both.
Duke. The contents of this is the return of the duke.
[Reads what news? The duke doth now over-read it at your pleasure:
where you shall find, within these two days he will be here. This is a thing that Angelo knows not; for he this very day receiv'd letters of a strange tenant persuading you, my lord Angelo, is about to enter into some monastery: but, by chance, nothing of what is writ. Look, the unfolding star calls up the listed here, peradventure, the persons of the these things should be; all difficulties are but easy when they are known. Call your executioner, and off with Barnardine's head: I will give him a pres-cent shelf, and advise him for a better place.
Yet you are amazed; but this shall absolutely resolve
you. Come away, it is almost clear dawn.
Duke. [Exit.
[Scene III.—Another Room in the same.
Enter Claudio.
Cla. I am as well acquainted here, as I was in our house of profession: one would think it were mistress Overdone's own house, for here be many of her old customers. First, here's young master Barnardine, Raedal, and old master Capell, the suit of which he made marks, ready money: marry, then, kinsman, were not much in request, for the old woman was not a young man. I think, then, and master Capell, the suit and brave master
Shoe-bee the great traveler, and wild Half-calf that stabb'd Pots, and, I think, forty more; all great doers in our trade, and are now for the lords.
Cla. [Exit.
[Exeunt.]
Enter Barnardine.

Abhor. Sire, bring Barnardine hither.
Clo. Master Barnardine! You must rise and be hand'd, master Barnardine!
Abhor. What, ho, Barnardine!
Barnard. With him! A posse of your throats!
Who makes that noise there? What are you? Clo. Your friends, sir; the hangmen: you must be so good, sir, to rise and he put to death.
Barnard. With him! Away, you rogue, away! I am sleepy.
Abhor. Tell him, he must awake, and that quick- ly too.
Clo. Fray, master Barnardine, awake till you are executed, and sleep afterwards.
Barnard. Go in to him, and fetch him out.
Clo. He is coming, sir, he is coming; I hear his straw rustle.

Enter Barnardine.

Barnard. How now, Abhorsen? what's the news with you?
Abhor. Truly, sir, I would desire you to clap into your prayers: for, look you, the wretched come forth.
Barnard. You rogue, I have been drinking all night; I am not fitted for it.
Clo 0, the better, sir; for he that drinks all night, and is hang'd betimes in the morning, may sleep the sounder all the next day.

Enter Duke.

Abhor. Look you, sir, here comes your ghostly father. Do we jest now, thank you?
Duke. Sir, induced by my charity, and hearing how hastily you are to depart, I am come to advise you, and to speak with you.
Barnard. Friar, not I! I have been drinking hard all night, and I will have more time to prepare me; or they shall beat out my brains with billets: I will not consent to die this day, that's certain.
Duke. 0, sir, you must: and therefore I beseech you, Look forward on your journey you shall go.
Barnard. I swear, I will not die to-day for any man's persuasion.
Duke. But hear you —
Barnard. Not a word; if you have anything to say to me, come to my ward; for thence will not I to-day.

Enter Provost.

Duke. Unfit to live, or die: 0, gravel heart! —
After him, fellows; bring him to the block.
[Exit Abhorsen and Barnardine.
Prov. Now, sir, how do you find the prisoner?
Duke. A creature unprepared, unmeet for death; And, to transport him in the mind he is, Were damnable.
Prov. Duke, 0, 'tis an accident that heaven provides! Despatch it presently; the hour draws on 'Preced'd by Angelo: See this be done, And sent according: to-morrow night at least; Persuade this rude wretchen willingly to die. Prov. This shall be done, good father, presently. But Barnardine must die this afternoon: At such a time we must continue Claudio, To save me from the danger that might come If he were known alive!
Duke. Let this be done: put them in secret holds, But make them appear: ere twice: The sun hath made his journal greeting To the under generation, you shall find Your safety manifester. Prov. Duke, I am your tree dependant.
Duke. Quick, despatch, And send the head to Angelo. [Exit Provost.
Now will I write letters to Angelo,—

* The antepole's.

The Provost, he shall hear them, whose contents Shall witness to him, I am assured at home; And that by great injunctious I am bound To enter publicly: him I'll desire To meet me at the consecrated font. A league below the city, and from thence, By cold gradation and well-balanced form, We shall proceed with Angelo.

Re-enter Provost.

Prov. Here is the head; I'll carry it myself.
Duke. Convenient is it: Make a swift return, For I would commune with you of such things, That want no ears in company.
Prov. I'll make all speed. [Exit. Iab. [Within.] Peace, ho, be here! Duke. The tongue of Isabel: — she's come to know, If yet her brother's pardon be come hither: But I will keep her ignorant of her good, To make her heavenly comforts of despair, When it is last expected.

Enter Isabella.

Iab. Ho, by your leave.
Duke. Go, go: and coming to you, fair and gracious dame.
Iab. The better, given me by so holy a man. Hath yet the deputy sent my brothers pardon?
Duke. He hath releas'd him, Isabel, from the world:
His head is off, and sent to Angelo.
Iab. Nay, but it is not so.
Duke. It is no other: Show your wisdom, daughter, in your close patience, Iab. 0, I will to him, and pluck out his eyes.
Duke. You shall not be admitted to his sight. Iab. Unhappy Claudio! Wretched Isabel! Injurious world! Most damned Angelo!
Duke. This nor hurts him, nor profits you a jot; Forbear it therefore; give your cause to heaven. Mark what I say: when you shall find By every syllable, a faithful verity, The duke comes home to-morrow: — nay, dry your eyes;
One of our confessors, and his confessor, Gives me this instance: Already he hath carried Notice to Escalus and Angelo; Who do prepare to meet him at the gates, There to give up their power. If you can, pace your wisdom In that good path that I would wish it go; And you shall have your bosom on this wretch, Scare of the duke, revenges to your heart, And general honor.
Iab. I am directed by you. Duke. This letter then to friar Peter give; 'Tis that he send me to the duke: — Return, Say, by this token, I desire his company At Mariana's house to-night. Her cause, and yours, I'll perfect him withal; and he shall bring you Before the duke: and to the head of Angelo Accuse him home, and home. For my poor self, I am combined by a sacred vow, And shall be absent. Wendi you with this letter: Command those fretting waters from your eyes, With a light heart; trust not my holy order, If I pervert your course. — Who's here?

Enter Lucio.

Lucio. Good even! Friar, where is the provost?
Duke. Not within, sir.
Lucio. 0, pretty Isabella, I am pale at mine heart, to see thine eyes so red: thou must be patient: I am fain to dine and sup with water and bread; I dare not for my head till my belly: one fruitful meal would set me to 't: But they say the duke will be here to-morrow. By my troth, Isabel, I lov'd thy brother; if the old fantastical duke, dark corners had been at home, he had liv'd. [Exit Isabella.
Duke. Sir, the duke is marvellous little beholden to your reports; but the best is, he lives not in them.
Lucio. Friar, thou knowest not the duke so well as I do: he's a better woodman than thou takest him for.
Duke. Well, you'll answer this one day. Fare ye well.
* Your heart's desire.
* Go.
Lucio, Nay, marry; I'll go along with thee; I can tell thee pretty tales of the duke.

Duke. You have told me too many of him already, sir; if they be true; if not true, none were enough.

Lucio, I was once before him for getting a wenches with child.

Duke, Did you such a thing?

Lucio, Yes, marry, did I; but was fain to forswear it; they would else have married me to the rotten median.

Duke, Sir, your company is fairer than honest; Rest you well.

Lucio, By my troth, I'll go with thee to the lane's end; If hasty talk offend thee, we'll have very little of it: Nay, fear, I am a kind of burr, I shall stick.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—A Room in Angelo's House.

Enter Angelo and Escalus.

Escalus. Every letter he writ hath thine dishonour'd other.

Angelo. In most uneven and distracted manner. His actions show much like to madness: pray heaven, his wisdom be not tainted! And why meet him at the gates, and re-deliver our libraries there?

Escalus. I guess not.

Angelo. And why should we proclaim it in an hour before his entering, that, if any grave redress of injuries, they should exhibit their petitions in the street!

Escalus. He shows his reason for that: to have a despatch of complaints, and to deliver us from devices hereafter, which shall then have no power to stand against us.

Angelo. Well, I beseech you, let it be proclaimed: Retire the more, I'll call you at your house: Give notice to such men of sort and suit; As to meet him.

Escalus. I shall, sir; fare you well. [Exeunt.]

Angelo. Good night.

This deed unshades me quite, makes me unpregnant, And dute to all proceedings. A deflower'd maid! And by an enameled body, that enforced The law against it! — but that her tender shame Will not proclaim against her maiden loss, How might she tongue me? Yet reason darts her— no; For my authority bears a credent bulk, That no particular scandal once can touch, But it confounds the breather. He should have liv'd, Save that his riotous youth, with dangerous sense, Might in the times to come, have taken revenge, By so receiving a dishonour'd life.

With reason of such shame. 'Would yet he had lived!

Alack, when once our grace we have forgot, Nothing goes right; we would, and we would not. [Exit.]

SCENE V.—Fields without the town.

Enter Duke in his own habit and Friar Peter.

Duke. These letters at fit time deliver me.

[Giving letters.]

The provost knows our purpose, and our plot. The matter being about, keep your instruction, And hold you ever to our special drift; Though sometimes you do blench from this to that, As cause doth minister. Go, call at Flavins' house, And tell him where I stand: give the like notice To Valentinus, Rowland, and to Grassus, And bid them bring the trumpets to the gate; But send me Flavins first.

F. Peter. It shall be speeded well.

[Exeunt.]

Enter Vaillius.

Duke. I thank thee, Vaillius; thou hast made good haste:

Come, we will walk: There's other of our friends Will greet us here anon, my gentle Vaillius. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VI.—Street near the city gate.

Enter Isabella and MARIANA.

Isab. To speak so indirectly, I am loath; I would say the truth; but to accuse him so, That is your part: yet I'm advised to do it;

He says, to veil full purpose.

MARIANA. Be ruled by him.

Isab. Besides he tells me, that if peradventure He speak against me on the adverse side, I should not think it strange; for 'tis a physic

That's better to sweet end.

MARIANA. I would, friar Peter —

Isab. 0, peace; the friar is come. [Exit Friar.]

Enter Friar Peter.

F. Peter. Come, I have found you out a stand most fit,

Where you may have such advantage on the duke, He shall not pass you; Twice have the trumpets sounded;

The generous and grave citizens

Have had the gates, and very near upon

The duke is erecting; therefore hence, away. [Exeunt.]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—A public place near the City Gate.

MARIANA [within], ISABELLA and Peter at a distance. Enter at opposite doors, Duke, Vaillius, Lords; ANGELO, ESCALUS, LUCIO, Provost, Officers, and Citizens.

Duke. My very worthy cousin, fairly met:— Our old and faithful friend, we are glad to see you.

Angelo and Escalus. Happy return be to your royal grace!

Duke. Many and hearty thankings to you both, We have made inquiry of you; and we hear Such goodness of your justice, that our soul Cannot but yield you forth to public thanks, Forerunning more requited.

Angelo. You make my bonds still greater.

Duke. 0, your desert speaks loud; and I should wrong To lock it in the wards of covert bosom, When it deserves with characters of brass A forced residence, against the breath of too And rage of oblivion: Give me your hand, And let the subject see, to make them know That outward courtesy would fain proclaim Favors that keep within.—Come, Escalus:

* Figure and rank.

You must walk by us on our other hand,— And good supporters are you.

Peter and Isabella come forward.

F. Peter. Now is your time; speak loud, and kneel before him.

Isab. Justice, O royal Duke! Vail your regard Upon a wrong'd, I'd gain have said, a mad! O worthy prince, dishonor not your eye By throwing it on any other object, Till you have heard me in my true complaint, And give me justice, justice, justice, justice!

Duke. Relate your wrongs: In what? By whom? Be brief: Here is lord Angelo shall give you justice; Reveal yourself to him.

Isab. O, worthy duke, You bid me seek redempion of the devil: Hear me yourselves: for that which I must speak Must either punish me, not being believed, Or wring revenge from your hand, I hear me, here.

Angelo. My lord, her wits, I fear, me are not firm: She hath been a sorcerer to me for her brother Cut off by course of justice.

Scene I. Measure for Measure.

Isab. By course of justice! Air. And she will speak most bitterly and strangely.

Isab. Most strange, but yet most truly will I speak:
That Angelo's forsworn, is it not strange?
That he, a murderer, is it not strange?
That Angelo is an adulterous thief,
An hypocrite, a virgin-violator;
Is it not strange, and strange?

Isab. It is not true he is Angelo;
This is all as true as it is strange;
Nay, it is ten times true: for truth is truth
To the end of reckoning.
Duke. Away with her: Poor soul, She speaks this in the infirmity of sense, Isab. O prince, I conjure thee, as thou believest The truth of my discourse, let me say:
That thou neglect me not with that opinion
That I am touch'd with madness: make not impossible
That which but seems unlike; 'tis not impossible,
But one, the wickedest cast off on the ground,
May seem as shy, as grave, as just, as absolute,
As Angelo: even so may Angelo,
In all his dressings, characters, acts, forms,
Be an arch-villain: believe it, royal prince,
If he be les, he's nothing; but he's more,
He, as the name for madness.
Duke. By mine honesty, If she be mad, (as I believe no other,) Her madness hath the oldest frame of sense,
Such a dependence on being things,
As e'er in mankind.
Isab. O, gracious duke, Harp not on that, nor do not banish reason
For me or any one but let your reason serve
To make the truth appear, where it seems hid;
And hide the false, seems true.
Duke. Many that are not mad,
Have more lack of reason: What would you say?
Isab. I am the sister of one Claudio,
Condemned, upon the law of formation,
To lose his head; condemned by Angelo!
I am in probation, as my brother
Was sent to by my brother: one Lucio
Was then the messenger:
Lucio, That's it, an't please your grace: I came to her from Claudio, and desire her
To try her gracious fortune with lord Angelo,
For her poor brother's pardon.
Isab. Duke. You were not bid to speak.
Lucio. No, my good lord,
Nor wish'd to hold my peace,
Duke. I wish you now then;
Pray you, take note of 't; and when you have
A business for yourself, pray heaven, you then
Be perfect.
Lucio. I warrant your honor.
Duke. The warrant's for yourself; take heed to it.
Isab. This gentleman told somewhat of my tale.
Lucio. Right.
Duke. It may be true; but you are in the wrong
To speak before your time. — Proceed.
Isab. To this pernicious caitiff deputy—
Duke. That's somewhat madly spoken.
Isab. Pardon it; The phrase is to the matter.
Duke. Meant against the matter! — Proceed.
Isab. The needless process by,
How I persuaded how I pray'd and kneel'd,
How he releas'd me, and how I reply'd;
(For this was of much length; the) the vile conclusion
I now bare with grace and shame to utter;
He would not but by gift of my chaste body
To his conceivable intemperate lust,
Bestow on my brother; and after much debatement
My sister's moreover with her honor,
And I did yield to him: but the next morrow betimes,
His purpose surfeiting, he sends a warrant
For my poor brother's head.
Duke. This is most likely.
Isab. O, that it were as like, as it is true!
Duke. By heaven, fond wretch, thou know'st
What thou speakest is not what thou speak'st;
Or else thou art suborn'd against his honor,
In hateful practice: First, his integrity
Habits and characters of office.
Refuted.
Folly.
Foolish.

Isab. But, no, sir, for what I would have said
Stands without blemish? Next, it imports no reason,
That with such vehemency he should pursue
Faults proper to himself: if he had so ojended,
He would have warch'd thy brother by himself,
And not have cut him short: some one hath set upon
Confess the truth, and say by whose advice
Thou cam'rt here to complain. Isab. And this is all! Then, oh, you blessed ministers of God,
Keep me in patience; and, with ripen'd time,
I hold the evil which is here wrapt up
In countenance!— Heaven since thy grace from
A-1, thus worn'd, 'd hence unbelieved go.
Duke. I know you d fain be gone—An officer!
To prison with her. — Shall we thus peremptorily
A blasting wind and a cruel cold wind fall
On him so near us? this his need must be a practice.
Who knew of your intent, and coming hither?
Isab. In that time that I would have been, sord Lordock.
Duke. A ghastly father, behke. — Who knows
That Lordock!
Lucio. My lord, I know him: 'tis a meddling friar; I do not like the man: bad he been lay, my lord,
For certain words he spake against your grace
In your retirement. I had sware him soundly.
Duke. Words against me! This a good friar, holie! And to set on this wicked woman
And against our substitute!— Let this friar be found.
Lucio. But yesternight, my lord, she and that friar
I saw them at the prison: a saucy friar;
Very scurvy fellow.
F. Peter. Blessed be your royal grace!
I have stood by, my lord; and I have heard
Your royal car abused: First, hath this woman
Most wronged you, and your word too,
Who is as free from touch or soil with her
As she from one angot.
Duke. We did believe no less.
Know you that friar Lordock, that she speaks of?
F. Peter. I know him for a man divine and holy:
Not scurvy, nor a temporary meddler,
As he's reported by this gentleman;
And, on my trust, a man that never fret.
Did, as he vouches, misreport your grace.
Lucio. My lord, most villainously! believe it.
F. Peter. Well, he in time may come to clear himself;
But at this instant he is sick, my lord.
Of a strange fever: Upon his mere request,
Being come to knowledge that there was a complaint
Intended against lord Angelo, came himself;
To speak, as from his mouth, what he doth know
Is true, and false: and what he with his oath,
And all probation, will make up full clear.
Whencesoever he's convinced. First, for this woman,
To justify this worthy noblemem.
So vulgarly and personally accused.
Her shall you hear desirous to prove her eyes,
Tell her herself confess it.
Duke. Good friar, let's hear it.
{Isabella is carried off, guarded; and
Do you not smile at this, lord Angelo!—
0 heaven! the vanity of wretched fools!
Give us some seats,—Come, consine Angelo,
In this I'll be impartial; by your judgment
Of your own cause,—Is this the witness, friar?
First, let her show her face: and, after, speak.
Mar. Pardon, my lord; I will not show my face,
Until my husband bid me.
Duke. What, are you married?
Mar. My lord, No, my lord.
Duke. Mar. Are you a maid?
Mar. No, my lord.
Duke. A widow then?
Mar. Neither, my lord.
Duke. Why, you are nothing then.—Neither maid, widow, nor wife.
Lucio. My lord, she may be a pun; for many of them are neither maid, widow, nor wife.
Duke. Silence that fellow: I would, he had some cause
To prattle for himself.
Lucio. Well, my lord.
Mar. My lord, I do confess I never was married;
And, I confess, besides, I am no maid;
I have known my husband; yet my husband knows not {Contended.
{Publicly.
Metal. I had Act As you since. Way Upon. Partly, As But Now. A Tlion To But Whom Po Will. Duke. Mar. My lord; bids me, now I unmask. This is that face, thou cruel Angelo. Which once thou sawst was worth the looking on: This is the hand, which, in a vow'd contract, Was first betock'd in thine; this is the body That took away the match from Isabel, And did supply thee in thy garden-house, In her imagined person. Duke. Know you this woman! Luc. Carnally, she says. Duke. Sire, no more. Luc. Enough, my lord. Aug. My lord, I must confess I know this woman: And, five years since, there was some speech of marriage Between myself and her; which was broke off, Partly, for that her promised proportions Come short of composition; but in chief, For that her reputation was disavowed In levity: since which time, of five years, I never spake with her, saw her, nor heard from her, Upon my faith and honor. Mar. Noble prince, As there comes light from heaven, and words from breath, As there is sense in truth, and truth in virtue, I am alienced this man's wife, as strongly As words could make up vows; and, my good lord, But Tuesday night last gone, in his garden-house, He knew me as a wife: As this is true Let me in safety raise me from my knees, Or else forever be confin'd here, A marble monument! Aug. I did but smile till now: Now, good my lord, give me the scope of justice; My patience here is touch'd: I do perceive, These poor inform'd women are no more But instruments of some more undetermed beings, That sets them on: Let me have way, my lord, To find this practice out. Duke. Ay, with my heart; And punish them unto your height of pleasure— Thou foolish friar, and thou pernicious woman, Compact with her that's gone! think'st thou thy ease? Though they would swear down each particular saint, Were testimonies against his worth and credit, That's seal'd in admission!— You, lord Escalus, Sit with my consent; lend him your kind pains To find out this abuse, whence 'tis deriv'd— There is another fad that set them on; Let him be sent for. F. Peter. Would he were here, my lord; for he, indeed, Hath set the woman on to this complaint: Your provost knows the place where he abides, And he may fetch him. Duke. Go do it instantly.— [Exit Provost. Aug. A goodly man and well-warranted cousin, Whom it concerns to hear this matter forth, Do with your injures as seems you best, In your discretion: I, for a while, Will bear no witness, till you, if you have well Determined upon these slanderers. Escal. My lord, we'll do it thoroughly.— [Exit Duke.] Sir, for Lucio, did not you say, you knew that friar Lodovick to be a dishonest person?

Luce. O, Capullus et facti monnichum: honest in nothing, us'd to wear my clothes; and one that hath spoke most villainous speeches of the duke. Escal. We shall entreat you to abide here till he come, and enforce them against him: we shall find this friar a notable fellow. Luc. As any in Vienna, on my word. Escal. Call that same Isabel here once again; [To an Willabret.] I would speak with her; Pray you, my lord, have me leave to question; you shall see how I'll handle her. Luc. Not better than he, by her own report. Escal. I will. Luc. Marry, sir, I think, if you handled her privately, she would sooner confess; perchance publicly she'll be ashamed. Re-enter Officers, with Isabella; the Duke, in the Friar's habit, and Provost. Escal. I will go darkly to work with her. Luc. That's the way; for women are light at midnight. Escal. Come on, mistress; [To Isabella.] here's a gentlewoman denies all that you have said. Luc. My lord, here comes the rascal I spoke of; here with the provost. Escal. Give you good time— speak not you to him, till we call upon you. Luc. Mum. Escal. Come, sir; Did you set these women on to slander lord Angelo? they have confess'd you did. Duke. 'Tis false. Escal. Had you know you where you are? Duke. Respect to your great place! and let the devil Be some time honored for his burning throne: Where is the duke? 'tis he should hear me speak. Escal. The duke's in us; and we will hear you speak: Look, you speak justly. Duke. Boldly, at last;— But, O, poor souls, Come you to seek the lamb here of the fox! Goodnight to your redress. Is the duke gone! Then is your cause gone too. The duke's unjust, Thus must you to your manifest appeal. Escal. And put your trial in the villain's mouth, Which here you come to accuse. Luc. This is the rascal; this is I spoke of. Escal. Why, thou unrevenged and unshallow'd friar! 'Tis not enough, that thou hast subtorn these women, To accuse this worthy man; but in foul mouth, And in the witness of his proper ear, To call him villain! And then, glance from him to the duke himself; To tax him with injustice!— Take him hence! To the rack with him:— We'll torque you joint by joint, But we will know this purpose.— What! unjust? Duke. Be not so hot; the duke Dare no more stretch thisfinger of mine, than he Dare rack his own: his subject am I not, Nor here provincial; My business in this state Made a looker-on here in Vienna, Where I have seen corruption boil and bubble, Till it o'er-run the stew: laws for all faults; But faults so counterenam'd, that the strong statues Stand like the base in a barber's shop, As much in mock as mark. Escal. Slander to the state! Away with him to prison. Luc. What can you vouch against him, signior Lucio? Is this the man that you did tell us of? Duke. Be not so hot; the duke Dare no more stretch thisfinger of mine, than he Dare rack his own: his subject am I not, Nor here provincial; My business in this state Made a looker-on here in Vienna, Where I have seen corruption boil and bubble, Till it o'er-run the stew: laws for all faults; But faults so counterenam'd, that the strong statutes Stand like the base in a barber's shop, As much in mock as mark. Escal. Slander to the state! Away with him to prison.
Lucio. O thou dainty fellow! Did not I pluck thee by the nose for thy speeches?
Duke. I protest I love the dace as I love myself.
Ang. Har! how the villain would close now, after his treasonable abuses.
Lucio. Such a fellow is not to be talked withal:—
Away with him to prison. Where is the provost?—
Away with him to prison; say bolts enough upon him; let him speak no more to thee. Away with these guilds;—

The provost takes hands on the Duke.
Duke. Stay, sir; stay awhile.
Lucio. Come, come; come, come; let, sir, let, sir;
Why, you bald-pated, lying rascal! you must be hooded, must you! Show your knife's visage! why, you whining scoundrel! show your face, and be hang'd an hour! Will 't not off?

[Pulls off the Friar's hood, and discovers the Duke.
Duke. Thou art the first knife that e'er made a duke.—
First, provost, let me bail these gentle three:—
Sneak not away, sir; [To Lucio.] for the friar and you,
Must have a word anon:— Lay hold on him.
Lucio. This may prove worse than hanging.
Duke. What have you spoke, I pardon; sit you down.
[To Escalus.
We'll borrow place of him:— Sir, by your leave:
[To Angelo.
Hast thou or word, or wit, or impudence,
That yet can do thee office? If thou hast,
Reely upon it till my tale be heard,
And hold no longer out.
O my dread lord,
I should be guiltier than my guiltiness,
To think I can be undiscernible,
When I perceive your grace, like power divine.
Happy look'd upon my passages. Then, good prince,
No longer session hold upon my shame,
But let my trial be mine own confessions;
Immediate sentence then, and sequent death,
In all the grace I beg.
Duke. Come hither, Mariana:—
Say, was't thou e'er contracted to this woman?
Ang. I was, my lord.
Duke. Go, take her hence, and marry her instantly:—
Do you the office, friar; which consummate,
Return him here again:— Go with him, provost.
[Exeunt Duke, Mariana, Peter, and Provost.
Escalus. My lord, I am more amazed at his dis-honor,
Than at the strangeness of it.
Duke. Come hither, Isabel:—
Your friar is now your prince: As I was then
Advertising, and holy to your business,
Not at the changing heart I am, yet I am still Attorney at your service.
Isabel. O give me pardon,
That I, your vessel, have employ'd in pain
Your unknown sovereignty.
Duke. You are pardon'd Isabel:
And now, dear maid, be you as free to us.
Your brother's death, I know, sits in your heart;
And you may marvel why I obscure myself.
Laboring to save his life; and would not rather
Make rash remonstrance of my hidden power,
That my guest be so lost. O, most kind maid,
It was the swift celerity of his death.
Which I did think with slower foot came on,
That brain'd my purpose: But peace be with him!
That life is better lost, past bearing death,
Than that which lives to fear: make it your comfort,
So happy is your brother.

Re-enter Angelo, Mariana, Peter, and Provost.
Isabel. I do, my lord.
Duke. For this new-married man, approaching here,
Whose said imagination yet hath wrong'd your well-defended honor, you must pardon
For Mariana's sake: but as he adjudged your brother, (Being criminal, in double violation
Of sacred chastity, and of promise-break,
Theeron dependant for your brother's life,)

Wanton, Devices, and Attentive,
The very mercy of the law cries out Most amiable, even from his proper tone,
"An Angelo for Claudio, death for death,"
Haste still plays haste, and leisure answers leisure;
Like death quit like, and "Measure still for Measure!"
Then, Angelo, thy fault's thus manifested;
Which though thou woul'st deny, deems thee van¬
solent,
We do condemn thee to the very block
Where Claudio stood to death, and with like haste:—

Away with him.
Mari. O, my most gracious lord,
I hope you will not mock me with a husband!
Duke. It is your husband mock'd you with a husband.
Consenting to the safeguard of your honor,
You thought my marriage fit; else imputation,
For that he knew you, might reproach your life,
And cloe your good to come; for this his possessions,
Although by confession they are ours,
We do institute and widow you willful,
To buy you a b-tier husband.
Mari. O, my dear lord,
I crave no other nor no better man.
Duke. Never erase him; we are definitive.
Mari. Gentle my heart, Sir; [To Angelo.]
Duke. You do but lose your labor;
Away with him to death.— Now, sir, [To Lucio.]
to you.
Mari. O, my good lord!— Sweet Isabel, take my part;
Lend me your knees, and all my life to come
I'll lend you all my life to do you service.
Duke. Against all sense do you prevent her— She should kneel down in mercy of this fact,
Her brother's ghost his paved bed would break,
And take her hence in horror.
Mari. Isabel, Sweet Isabel, do yet but kneel by me;
Hold up your hands; say nothing: I'll speak all.
They say, best men are moulded out of faults;
And, for the most, become much the better.
For being a little bad: so may my husband.
O, Isabel! will you not lend a knee!
Duke. He dies for Claudio's death.
Isabel. Most bounteous sir,
Look, if it please you, on this man condemn'd,
As if my brother liv'd: I partly think,
A little sincerity govern'd his deeds.
Tell him I did look on me; since it is so,
Let him not die: My brother had but justice,
In that he did the thing for which he died:
For Angelo,
His act did not o'er take his bad intent,
And must be burned but as an intent,
That perished by the way: thoughts are no subjects;
Intents but merely thoughts.
Mari. Merely, my lord.
Duke. Your suit's unprofitable; stand up, I say:
I have bethusbath me of another fault:
For Provost, how came it, Claudio was beheaded
At an unusual hour!
Prov. It was commanded so.
Duke. Had you a special warrant for the deed?
Prov. No, my good lord; it was by private mes¬sages.
Duke. Of which I'll discharging you of your office.
Give up your keys.
Prov. Pardon me, noble lord:
I thought it was a fault, but knew it not;
Yet did repent me after more advice.
For testimony whereof, one in the prison,
That should by private order else have died,
I have reserve alive.
Duke. What's he?
Prov. His name is Barnardine.
Duke. I am sorry, one so learned and so wise.
As you, lord Angelo, have still appear'd,
Should slip so grossly, both in the heat of blood,
And lack of temper'd judgment afterward.
Ang. I am sorry, that such sorrow I procure:
And so deep sticks it in my penitent heart,

Consideration.
That I crave death more willingly than mercy;
'tis my deserving, and I do entreat it.

Re-enter Provol, Barnardine, Claudio, and Juliet.

Duke. Which is that Barnardine?

Prop. This, my lord.

Duke. There was a 'fair told me of this man.
Sirrah, thou art said to have a stubborn soul,
That apprehends no further than this world,
And squar' thy life according. Thou'rt condemn'd;
But, for those earthly faults I quit them all;
And pray thee, take this mercy to provide
For better times to come.—Fray, advise him;
I leave him to your hand.—What muffled fellow's that?

Prop. This is another prisoner, that I say'd.
That should have died when Claudio lost his head;
As like almost to Claudio as himself.

UngetStatus Claudio.

Duke. If he be like your brother, [To Isabella] for his sake
Is he pardon'd; and for your lovely sake,
Give me your hand, and say you will be mine,
He is my brother too: But fitter time for that
By this lord Angelo perceives he's safe;
Methinks I see a quick'ning in his eye:
Well, Angelo, your evil quitted you well;
Look that you love your wife; her worth, worth
Yours.—

I find an apt remission in myself:
And yet here's one in place I cannot pardon:
You, sirrah. [To Lucio] that knew me for a fool, a coward,
One all of luxury, an ass, a madman:
Wherein have I so deserved of you,
That you extol me thus?

Lucio. Faith, my lord, I spoke it but according to the trick: If you will hang me for it, you may but I had rather it would please you, I might be whipp'd.

Duke. Whipp'd first, sir, and hang'd after.—
Proclaim it, provost, round about the city;
If any woman's wrong'd by this lewd fellow,
(As I have heard him swear himself, there's one Whom he begot with child,) let her appear,
And he shall marry her; the nuptial finish'd,
Let him be whipp'd and hang'd.

Lucio. I beseech your highness, do not marry me to a whore. Your highness said even now, I made you a duke; good my lord, do not recompense me, in making me a cuckold.

Duke. Upon mine honor, thou shalt marry her.
Thy slanders I forgive; and wherewithal
Remit thy other forfeits:—Take him to prison:
And see our pleasure herein executed.

Lucio. Marrying a punk, my lord, is pressing to death, whipping, and hang'n.

Duke. Bending a prince deserves it.—
Sir, Claudio, that you wrong'd look you restore.
Joy to you, Mariana!—love her, Angelo;
I have confess'd her, and I know her virtue.—
Thanks, good friend Escalus, for thy much goodness:
There's more behind, that is more gratulate.
Thanks, provost, for thy care and secrecy;
We shall employ thee in a worthier place:—
Forgive him, Angelo, that brought you home
The head of Ragozine for Claudio's;
The offence pardons itself.—Dear Isabel,
I have a motion much imports your good;
Where to it you'll a willing ear incline,
What's mine is yours, and what is yours is mine;
So bring us to our palace; where we'll show
What's yet behind, that's meet you all should know.

Thoughtless practice.

[Exeunt.

PERSONS REPRESENTED.

Don Pedro, Prince of Aragon.
Don John, his bastard brother.
Claudio, a young Lord of Florence, Favorite to Don Pedro.
Benedick, a young lord of Padua, Favorite likewise of Don Pedro.
Leonato, Governor of Messina.
Antonio, his brother.
Balthazar, Servant to Don Pedro.
Borachio, Followers of Don John.

Dogberry, two foolish officers.
Verges, A Sexton.
A Friar.
A Boy.

Hero, Daughter to Leonato.
Beatrice, niece to Leonato.
Margaret, Gentlewomen attending on Hero.
Ursula, Messengers, Watch, and Attendants.

SCENE, Messina.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Before Leonato’s House.

Enter Leonato, Hero, Beatrice, and others, with a Messenger.

Leonato. I learn in this letter, that Don Pedro of Aragon comes this night to Messina.
Hero. He is very near by this; he was not three leagues off, when I left him.
Leon. How many gentlemen have you lost in this action?
Mess. But few of any sort, and none of name.
Leon. A victory is twice itself, when the achiever brings home full numbers. I find here, that Don Pedro hath bestowed much honor on a young Florentine, called Claudio.
Mess. Much deserved on his part, and equally remembered by Don Pedro: He hath borne himself beyond the promise of his age; doing, in the figure of a lamb, the feats of a lion: he hath, indeed, better bettered expectation, than you must expect of me to tell you how.
Leon. He hath an uncle here in Messina will be very much glad of it.
Mess. I have already delivered him letters, and there appears much joy in him; even so much, that joy could not show itself modest enough, without a badge of lattiness.
Leon. Did he break out into tears?
Mess. In great measure.
Leon. A kind overflow of kindness: There are no eyes truer than those that are so washed. How much better is it to weep at joy, than to joy at weeping!
Beat. I pray you, is signior Montanto returned from the wars, or no?
Mess. I know none of that name, lady; there was none such in the army of any sort.
Leon. What is he that you ask for, niece?
Hero. My cousin means signior Benedick of Padua.
Mess. O, he is returned; and as pleasant as ever he was.
Beat. He set up his bills here in Messina, and challenged Cupid at the flight: and my uncle’s fool, reading the challenge, subscribed for cupid, and challenged him at the bird-belt— I pray you, how many hath he killed and eaten in these wars? But how many hath he killed? for, indeed, I promised to eat all of his killing.
Leon. Faith, niece, you tax signior Benedick too much; but he’ll meet with you, I doubt it not.
Mess. He hath done good service, lady, in these wars.
Beat. You had musty victual, and he hath help to eat it: he is a very valuable trencher-man, he hath an excellent stomach.
Mess. And a good soldier too, lady.
Beat. And a good soldier to a lady:—But what is he to a lord?
Mess. A lord to a lord, a man to a man; stuffed with all honorable virtues.
Beat. It is so, indeed; he is no less than a stuffed man— but for the stuffing—Well, we are all mortal.
Leon. You must not, sir, mistake my niece: there is a kind of merry war between signior Benedick and her: they never meet, but there is a skirmish of wit between them.
Beat. Alas, he gets nothing by that. In our last conflict, four of his five wits went halting off, and now is the whole man governed with one: so that if he have wit enough to keep himself warm, let him bear it for a difference between himself and his horse: for it is all the wealth that he hath left, to be known a reasonable creature.—Who is his companion now? He hath every month a new sworn brother.
Mess. Is it possible?
Beat. Very easily possible; he wears his faith but as the fashion of his hat, it ever changes with the next block.
Mess. I see, lady, the gentleman is not in your books.
Beat. No: an he were, I would burn my study, but I pray you, who is his companion? Is there no young squarer now, that will make a voyage with him to the devil.

*A cuckold.
*Quarrelsome fellow.

101
MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

Act I.

Mess. He is most in the company of the right noble Claudio.

Beat. O lord! he will hang upon him like a disconsolate shadow, and so brush him by, if he take the rakers presently mad. God help the noble Claudio! if he have caught the Benedick, it will cost him a thousand pound ere he be cured.

Mess. I will hold friends with you, lady.

Beat. Do, good friend.

Leon. You will never run mad, niece.

Beat. No, not till a hot January.

Mess. Don Pedro is approached.

Enter Don Pedro attended by Balthazar and others, Don John, Claudio, and Benedick.

D. Pedro. Good signior Leonato, you are come to meet your trouble: the fashion of the world is to avoid cost, and you encounter it.

Leon. Never came trouble into my house in the likeness of your grace; for trouble being gone, comfort should remain; but, when you depart from me, sorrow abides, and happiness takes his leave.

D. Pedro. You embrace your charge too willingly— I think, this is your daughter.

Leon. Her mother hath many times told me so.

Beat. You were quite in doubt, sir, that you asked her?

Leon. Signior Benedick, no; for then were you a child.

D. Pedro. You have it full, Benedick: we may cure you of this what you are, being a man. Truly, the lady fathers herself: Be happy, lady! for you are like an honorable father.

Bente. If signior Leonato be her father, she would not have him on her shoulders, for all Messina, as like him as she is.

Bene. I wonder that you will still be taking signior Benedick; no body marks you.

Clau. What my dear lady Disdain are you yet living?

Beat. Is it possible, disdain should die, while she hath such means to feed it, as signior Benedick? Cowards must convert to disdain, if you come in her presence.

Bente. Then is courtesy a turncoat:— But it is certain I am loved of all ladies, only you excepted; and I would I could find in my heart that I had not a hard heart; for, truly, I love none.

Beat. A dear happiness to women: they would else have been troubled with a pernicious suitor. I thank God, and my cold blood, I am of your humor for that; I had rather hear my dog bark at a crow, than a man swear he loves me.

Bente. Keep your ladyship still in that mind! so some gentleman or other shall scarce a precipitate scratched face.

Beat. Scratching could not make it worse, an precipe face as yours were.

Bene. Well, you are a rare parrot-teacher.

Bente. A bird of my tongue is better than a beast of yours.

Beat. I would my horse had the speed of your tongue; and so good a companion: But keep your way o' God's name; I have done.

Beat. You always end with a jade's trick; I know you of old.

D. Pedro. This is the sun of all: Don John, signior Claudio, and signior Benedick,— my dear friend Leonato hath invited you all. I tell him, we shall be in the house but a month; and he heartily prays, some occasion may detain us longer: I dare swear he is no hypocrite, but prays from his heart.

Leon. If you swear, my lord, you shall not be forbid: I much desire so kind a welcome, my lord; being reconciled to the prince your brother, I owe you all duty.

D. John. I thank you; I am not of many words, but I thank you.

Leon. Please it your grace lead on?

D. Pedro. Your hand, Leonato: we will go together but Balthazar and Claudio.

Claud. Benedick, dost thou note the daughter of signior Leonato?

Bente. I noted her not; but I looked on her.

Claud. Is not a nobler young lady?

Beat. Do you question me, as an honest man should do, for my simple true judgment; or would you have me speak after my custom, as being a professed tyrant to their sex?

Bene. No, I pray thee, speak in sober judgment.

D. Pedro. Why, faith, methinks she is too low for a high praise, too brown for a fair praise, and too little for a great praise; only this commendation I can afford her that she is another than she is, she were unhandsome; and being no other but as I, I do not like her.

Claud. This is a fault I am in sport; I pray thee, tell me true how thouliest her.

Bene. Would you buy her, that you inquire after her?

Claud. Can the world buy such a jewel?

Bene. Yea, and a case to put it into. But speak you with this a sad brow? or do you play the floating Jack; to tell us Cupid is a good hare-finder, and Valentine a master carpenter? Come, in what key shall a man take you, to go in the song?

Claud. In mine eye, she is the sweetest lady that ever I looked on.

Bene. I am yet not without suspicions, and I see no such matter: there's her cozen, as she were not possessed with a fury, exceeds her as much in beauty, as the first of May doth the last of December. But I hope you have no intent to turn husband; have you?

Claud. I would scarce trust myself, though I had sworn the contrary, if Hero were my wife.

Bene. You were so to this, Faith: Hath not the world one man, but he will wear his cap with suspicion? Shall I never see a bachelor of three-score again? Go to, Faith! an then will it be a vast neck to pay the print of it, and sigh away Sundays. Look, don Pedro is returned to seek you.

Re-enter Don Pedro.

D. Pedro. What secret hath held you here, that you followed not to Leonato's?

Bene. I would your grace would constrain me to tell.

D. Pedro. I charge thee, on thy allegiance.

Bene. You hear, count Claudio: I can be secret as a dumb man, I would have you talk so; but on my allegiance I have this, on my allegiance:

—He is in love. With who?— now that is your grace's part. —Mark, how short his answer is:

With Hero, Leonato's short daughter.

Claud. As I have done, and I have done,

Bene. Like the old tale, my lord: it is not so, nor twas not so; but, indeed, God forbid it should be so.

Claud. If my passion change not shortly, God forbid it should be otherwise.

D. Pedro. Amen, if you love her; for the lady is very well worthy.

Claud. Will you speak this to fetch me in, my lord.

D. Pedro. By my troth, I speak my thought.

Claud. And, in faith, my lord, I spoke mine.

Bene. And, by my two faiths and troths, my lord, I spoke mine.

Claud. That I love her, I feel.

D. Pedro. That she is worthy, I know.

Bene. That I never feel how she should be loved, nor know how she should be worthy, is the opinion that fire cannot melt out of me; I will die in it at the stake.

D. Pedro. Then was ever an obstinate heretic in the despite of beauty.

Claud. And never could maintain his part, but in the force of his will.

Bene. Faith, I must needs conclude to myself, that I do not love her; for by the Heaven that ever blessed me, if I love her, I love another woman, my lord: being reconciled to the prince your brother, I owe you all duty.

D. John. I thank you: I am not of many words, but I thank you.

Leon. Please it your grace lead on?

D. Pedro. Your hand, Leonato: we will go together but Balthazar and Claudio.

Claud. Benedick, dost thou note the daughter of signior Leonato?

Bente. I noted her not; but I looked on her.

Claud. Is not a nobler young lady?

Beat. Do you question me, as an honest man should do, for my simple true judgment; or would you have me speak after my custom, as being a professed tyrant to their sex?

Bene. No, I pray thee, speak in sober judgment.

D. Pedro. Why, faith, methinks she is too low for a high praise, too brown for a fair praise, and too little for a great praise; only this commendation I can afford her that she is another than she is, she were unhandsome; and being no other but as I, I do not like her.

Claud. This is a fault I am in sport; I pray thee, tell me true how thouliest her.

Bene. Would you buy her, that you inquire after her?

Claud. Can the world buy such a jewel?

Bene. Yea, and a case to put it into. But speak you with this a sad brow? or do you play the floating Jack; to tell us Cupid is a good hare-finder, and Valentine a master carpenter? Come, in what key shall a man take you, to go in the song?

Claud. In mine eye, she is the sweetest lady that ever I looked on.

Bene. I am yet not without suspicions, and I see no such matter: there's her cozen, as she were not possessed with a fury, exceeds her as much in beauty, as the first of May doth the last of December. But I hope you have no intent to turn husband; have you?

Claud. I would scarce trust myself, though I had sworn the contrary, if Hero were my wife.

Bene. You were so to this, Faith: Hath not the world one man, but he will wear his cap with suspicion? Shall I never see a bachelor of three-score again? Go to, Faith! an then will it be a vast neck to pay the print of it, and sigh away Sundays. Look, don Pedro is returned to seek you.

Re-enter Don Pedro.
Bette. If I do, hang me in a bottle like a cat, and shoot at me; and he that hits me, let him be clapped on the shoulder, and called Adam.
D. Pedro. Well, as time shall try:
In the grave, lie there and hear the yoke.
Bette. The savage bull may; but if ever the sensible Benedick bear it, pluck off the bull’s horns, and set them in my forehead: and let me be vide printed.
D. Pedro. If you do the same to me, be assured, you shall rue it as I rue mine.
Here is good horse to hire, let them signify under my sign.
—Here you may see Benedick, the married man.
Claudio. If this should ever happen, then would be the want.
D. Pedro. Nay, if Cipolloni have not spent all his quiver in Venice, thou wilt quake for this shortly.
Bette. I look for an earthenquake too then.
D. Pedro. Well, you will temporize with the hours. In the meantime, good signior Benedick, repair to Leonato’s; commend me to him, and tell him, I will not fail him at supper; for, indeed, he hath made great preparation.
Bette. I have almost matter enough in me for such an embassy; and so I commit you—
Claudio. To the nation of God: From my house, (if I had it)—
D. Pedro. The sixth of July: Your loving friend, Benedick.
Bette. Nay, mock not, mock not: The body of your discourse is sometimes garbled with fragments, and the guards are but slightly basted on neither; ere you shoot old ends any further, examine your consequence; and so let this discourse.
Claudio. My hege, your highness now may do me good.
D. Pedro. My love is thine to teach; teach it to me when you please.
And thou shalt see how apt it is to learn
Any hard lesson that may do thee good.
Claudio. Hath Leonato any son, my lord?
D. Pedro. None but Hero, she’s his only heir;
Dost thou affect her, Claudio?
Claudio. O my lord,
When you went onward on this ended action,
I went upon her sight under the sun;
That lik’d, but, had a rougher task in hand
Than drive to like with the name of love:
But now I am return’d, and that war-thoughts
Have left ere their place vacant, in their rooms
Come thronging soft and delicate desires,
All prompting me how fair young Hero is,
Saying, I’d like her ere I went to wars,
D. Pedro. Ten child, this is Hero, she’s his only present;
And tire the hearer with a book of words;
If thou dost love fair Hero, cherish it;
And I will break with her, and see her father,
And all things that may be, both cannot.
Wilt thou not to this end
That thou becast’st to twist so fine a story?
Claudio. How sweetly do you minister to love,
That know love’s grief by his complexion;
But my liking is too sudden.
I would have sav’d it with a longer treatise,
D. Pedro. What need the bridge much broader
Than the flood?
The fairest grant is the necessity:
Look, what will serve, is: tis once, thou lov’st;
And I will fit thee with the remedy.
I know, we shall have reveling tonight;
I will assume they part in some discourse,
And tell fair Hero I am Claudio;
And in her bosom I’ll unclasp my heart.
And take her hearing prisoner with so much grace
And her strong encounter of my amorous tale,
Then, after, to her father will I break;
And the conclusion, she shall be thine;
In practice let us put it presently.

SCENE II.—A Room in Leonato’s House.
Enter Leonato and Antonio.
Leon. How now, brother! Where is my cousin, your son? Hath he provided this music?
Ant. He is very busy about it, brother; you can string your news that you yet dreamed not.
Leon. Are they good?

SCENE II.—A Room in Leonato’s House.
Enter Leonato and Antonio.
Leon. How now, brother! Where is my cousin, your son? Hath he provided this music?
Ant. He is very busy about it, brother; you can string your news that you yet dreamed not.
Leon. Are they good?
Ant. At the event stamps them; but they have a good cover, they show well outward. The prince and Count Claudio, walking in a thick-pleached him any way, I bless myself every way: You are both sure, and will assist me?

Con. To the death, my lord.

D. John. Let us to the great supper; their cheer is the greater, that I am subserv'd; Would the cook were of my mind!—shall we go where what's to be done?

Bora. We'll wait upon your lordship. [Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—A Hall in Leonato's House.

Enter Leonato, Antonio, Hero, Beatrice and others.

Leon. Was not count John here at supper?

Ant. I saw him not.

Beat. How tardy that gentleman looks! I never can see him, but I am heart-burned an hour after.

Hero. He is of a very melancholy disposition.

Leon. Then half signior Benedick's tongue in count John's mouth, and half count John's melancholy in signior Benedick's face.

Beat. With a good leg, and a good foot, uncle, and money enough in his purse, such a man would win any woman in the world,—if he could get her good will.

Leon. By my troth, niece, thou wilt never get thee a husband, if thou be so shrewd of thy tongue.

Ant. Troth, she is too curt.

Beat. Too curt is more than curt: I shall lessen God's sending that way; for it is said, God sends a curst cow short horns; but to a cow too curt he sends none.

Leon. So, by being too curt, God will send you no horns.

Beat. Just, if he send me no husband; for the which baseness, I am at him upon my knees every morning and evening; Lord! I could not endure a husband with a beard on his face; I had rather he in the wooden.

Leon. You may light upon a husband that hath no beard.

Beat. What should I do with him? dress him in my apparel, and make him my waiting gentleman? He that hath a beard, is more than a youth; and he that hath no beard, is less than a man: and he that is more than a youth is not for me; and he that is less than a man, I am not for him. Therefore, I will even take sixpence in earnest of the bear-hed, and lead his apes into hell.

Leon. Well then, go you into hell.

Beat. No; but to the gate; and there will the devil meet me, like an old cuckold, with horns on his head, and say, Get you to heaven, Beatrice, get you to heaven; here's no place for you nor me: so deliver I up my apes; and away to Saint Peter for the heavens; he shows me where the bachelors sit, and there live we as merry as the day is long.

Ant. Well, niece. [To Hero.] Trust you will be better please by your father.

Beat. Yes, it is my cousin's duty to make courtesy, and say, Father, as it pleases you;—but yet for all that, cousin, let him be a handsome fellow, or else mad another, courtesy, and say, Father, and please me.

Leon. Well, niece, I hope to see you one day fitted with a husband.

Beat. Not till God make men of some other metal than earth. Would it not grieve a woman to be overmaster'd with a piece of vulgar dust to make an account of her life too cold of outward mail! No, uncle, I'll none: Adam's sons are my brethren; and truly, I hold a sin to match in my kindred. Leon. Daughter, remember what I told you if the prince do decline it in that kind, you know your answers.

Beat. The fault will be in the music, cousin, if you be not wodd in good time: if the prince be too important, tell him, there is measure in every thing, and so dance out the answer. For hear me, Hero; Wooning, wedding, and repenting, is as a Scotch jig, a measure, and cinque-pace: the first suit is hot and hasty, like a Scotch jig, and full as fantastick. The wedding, mannerly-modest, as a measure full of state and ancestor; and then comes repentance, unt, with his bad legs, falls into the cinque-pace faster and faster, till he sink into his grave.

Leon. Cousin, you apprehend passing shrewdly. Beat. I have a good eye, uncle; I can see a church by day-light.

Leon. The revelers are entering; brother, make good room.

Enter Don Pedro, Claudio, Benedick, Bal- thazar, Don John, Borachio, Margaret, Ursula, and others, masked.

D. Pedro. Lady, will you walk about with your friend?

Hero. So you walk softly, and look sweetly, and say nothing, I am yours for the walk; and, especially, when I walk away.

D. Pedro. With me in your company?

Hero. I may say so when I please.

D. Pedro. And when will I please you to say so?

Hero. When I like your favor; for God defend, the lute should be like the case!

D. Pedro. My visor is Philemon's roof; within the house there is love.

Hero. Why, then your visor should be thatch'd.

D. Pedro. Speak low, if you speak love.

(Bows.)

Bene. Well, I would you did like me.

Marz. So would not I, for your own sake; for I have many ill qualities.

Bene. Which is one?

Marz. I say not prayers aloud.

Bene. I love the better; the hearers may cry Amen.

Marz. God match me with a good dancer!

Bene. Amen.

Marz. And God keep him out of my sight, when the dance is done?—Answer, clerk.

Beat. No more words: the clerk is answered.

Urs. I know you well enough; you are signior Antonio.

Ant. At a word, I am not.

Urs. Know you the waggling of your head, Ant. To tell you true, I counterfeit him.

Urs. You could never do him so ill unless, you were the very man: Here's his dry hand up and down; you are he, you are he.

Ant. At a word, I am not.

Urs. Come, come; do you think I do not know you by your excellent wit? Can virtue hide itself? Go to, man, you are he; graces will appear, and there's an end.

Beat. Will you not tell me who told you so?

Bene. No, you shall pardon me.

Beat. Nor will you not tell me who you are?

Bene. Not now.

Beat. That I was disguis'd,—and that I had my good wit out of the Hundred Merry Tales;—Well, this was signior Benedick that said so.

Bene. What's he?

Beat. I am sure, you know him well enough.

Bene. No, I believe not.

Beat. Did he never make you laugh?

Bene. I pray you, what is he?

Beat. Why, he is the prince's jester: a very dull fool; and his gift is devising impossible slanders: none but libertines delight in him; and the commendation is not in his wit, but in his villainy; for he both pleaseth men, and angers them, and then they love him, and beat him: I am sure, he is in the fleet; I would he had boarded me.

Bene. When I know the gentleman, I'll tell him what you say.
Scene I. Much Ado About Nothing.

Benedick. He'd, he'd! but he'll break a comparison or two on me; which, peradventure, not marked, or not valued, into his words, and then there's a patriote, being savag'd, for the soul will eat no supper that night. [Music within.] We must follow the leaders.

Beatrice. Very early dinner.

Benedick. Nay, if they feed to any ill, I will leave them at the next turning.

[Enter JOHN, BORIS, DONJOHN, and CLAUDIUS.

John. Sure, my brother is anonymous on Hero, and hath withdrawn her father to break with her about it. The ladies forewarned her; and I, as I do believe, I am he.

Don John. Signor, you are very near my brother in his love: he is enamoured on Hero; I pray you disuade him from her, she is no equal for his birth; you may do the part of an honest man in it.

Claudius. How know you she loves him?

Don John. I heard him swear his affection.

Boris. So did I too; and he swore he would marry her in a day.

Don John. Come, let us to the banquet.

[Exit Don John, and BORIS.

Claudius. This answer I name in Benedick. But hear these news. All news with the ears of Claudius.—'Tis certain so:—the prince woods for himself.

Friendship is constant in all other things, Save in the olive and affections of men. Therefore, all hearts have in love their own tongues; Let every eye negotiate for itself, and Trust no agent: for beauty is a witch, A widow whose charms faint upon the sight in blood. This is an accident of hourly proof.

Which I mistrusted not: Farewell therefore, Hero!

[Re-enter BENEDICK.

Bene. Count Claudio?

Claud. Ay, he same.

Bene. Come, will you go with me?

Claud. Whither?

Bene. Even to the next willow, about your own business, count. What fashion will you wear the garland? About your neck, like a usurer's chain, or under your arm, like a lieutenants' scarlet? You must wear it one way, for the prince hath got your Hero.

Claud. I wish him joy of her.

Bene. Why, that's spoken like an honest drover: so they sell bullocks. But did you think, the prince would have served you thus?

Claud. That I pray you, leave me.

Bene. Ho! now you strike like the blind man; 'twas the bay that stole your meat, and you'll beat the poet.

Claud. If it will not be, I'll leave you. [Exit. Bene. Alas, poor hurt foul! Now will be creep into sedges. But, that my lady Beatrice should know me, and not know me! The prince's fool!—It, it may be, I go under that tittle, because I am merry. Yea; but so; I am apt to do myself wrong: I am not so reputed: it is the base, the better disposition of Beatrice, that puts the world into her person, and so gives me out. Well, I'll be revenged as I may.

[Re-enter DON PEDRO.

Pedro. Now, signor, where's the count? Did you see him?

Bene. Truth, my lord. I have played the part of lady Fame. I found him here as master-school to a lodge in a warren; I told him, and I think, I told him true, that your grace had got the good will of this young lady; and I offered him my company to a conference whether to make him her garland, as being forsaken, or to bind him up a rod, as being worthy to be whipped.

Pedro. To be whipped! What's his fault?

Bene. This: the flat transgression of a school-boy; who, being overjoyed with finding a birds nest, shows it to his companion, and he steals it.

Pedro. Will thou make a trust a transgression? The transgression is in the stealers.

Bene. Yet it had not been assiduous the rod had been made, and the garland too; for the garland he might have worn himself: and the rod he might have bestowed on you, who, as I take it, have stolen his fish from his nest.

Pedro. I will but teach them to sing, and restore them to the owner.

Bene. If their singing answer your saying, by my faith, I doubt it.

Pedro. The lady Beatrice hath a quarrel to you; the gentleman that danced with her, told her, she is much wronged by you.

Bene. I, in the name of God, with all that Adam had left him before he transgressed: she would have made Hercules have turned spit; yea, and have cut his club to make meat. Come, talk not of her: you shall find her the internal Ate in good apparel. I would to God, some scholar would conjure her; for certainly, while she is here, a most unhappy life as quiet as hell, in a sanctuary; and people sin upon purpose, because they would go thither; so, indeed, all discquet, horror, and perturbation follow her.

[Re-enter CLAUDIO, BEATRICE, LEONATO, and HERO.}

Pedro. Look, here she comes.

Bene. Will your grace command me any service to the world's end? I will go on the slightest errand now to the Antipodes, that you can devise to send me on: I will fetch you a toothpicker now from the farthest inch of Asia: bring you the length of Preser John's foot; fetch you a hair off the great Chaim's beard; do you wish anything more? I'll go to the Thames, rather than hold three words conference with this harpy: You have no employment for me.

Pedro. None, but to desire your good company.

Bene. O God, sir, here's a dish I love hot; I cannot endure my lady Tongue.

[Exit. Bene. Come, lady, come; you have lost the heart of signor Benedick.

Beat. Indeed, my lord, he leant it me a while; and I gave him use for it, a double heart for his single one: marry, once before, he won it of me with false darts, therefore your grace may well say I have lost it.

Pedro. You have put him down, lady, you have put him down.

Beat. So had not he should do me my lord, lest I should prove the mother of fools. I have brought count Claudio, whom you sent me to seek.

Pedro. Why, how now, count, wherefore are you so sad?

Claud. Not sad, my lord.

Pedro. How then? Sick?

Claud. Neither, my lord.

Beat. This count is neither sad, nor sick nor merry, nor well: but evil, count; evil as an orange, and something of that jealous complexion.

Pedro. I faith, lady, I think your blazon to be true; though it be said he be so, his conceit is false. Here, Claudio. I have wonced in thy name, and fair Hero is won: I have broke with her father, and his good will obtained: name the day of marriage, and God give you joy immortal. Leon. Count, take of me my daughter, and with her my fortunes; his grace hath made the match, and all grace say Amen to it!

Beat. Speak, count, take your cue.

Claud. Silence is the perfectest herald of joy: I was before happy, if I could say how much.—Lady, as you that flat, am you not! I give away myself for you, and dye upon the exchange.

Beat. Speak, count: or if you cannot, stop your mouth with a kiss, and let him not speak, neither.

Pedro. In faith, lady, you have a merry heart.

Beat. Yea, my lord; I think it, poor fool, it keeps on the windside side of care — My cousin tells him in his letter, that I have a letter from Claus. And so she doth, cousin.

oyal. Good lord, for alliance! — Thus goes every one to the word but I, and I am sun-burned; I must sit in a corner and cry help-ho! for a husband.

D. Pedro. Lady Beatrice, I will get you one.

Beat. I would rather have one of your gentleman.
Have you grace upon you in a beaker like your-our father got excellent husbands, it a maid could come by them.

D. Pedro. Will you have me, lady?

Beat. No, my lord, unless I might have another for working days; your grace is too costly to wear ey every day; — But, believe your grace, pardon me: I
I have never spoken all this in nothing.

D. Pedro. Your silence mostoffends me, and to be mercy best becomes you; for out of question, you were born in a merry hour.

Beat. My true love, my lord, my mother cried; but then there was a star danced, an under that I was born. — Cousins, God give you joy!

Leon. Niece, will you look to those things I told you of!

Beat. I cry you mercy, uncle. — By your grace's pardon. [Exit Beatrice.

D. Pedro. By my troth, a pleasant-spirited lady.
How can I bear the burden of the old lady's evil done in her, my lord? she is never sad, but when she sleeps:and not ever sad then; for I have heard my daughter say, she hath often dreamt of unhap-some day; and that her marriage with her dead husband.

D. Pedro. She cannot endure to hear tell of a husband.

Leon. O, by no means; she mocks all her wooers out of the way.

D. Pedro. She was an excellent wife for Benedick.

Leon. O, lord, my lord, if they were but a week married, they would talk themselves mad.

D. Pedro. Count Claudio, when mean you to go to church?

Claudio. To-morrow, my lord: Time goes on crutches, till love have all his rites.

Leon. Not til Monday, my dear son, which is hence a just-seven-night; and a time too brief too, for to have all things answer my mind.

D. Pedro. Come, you shake the head at so long a breathing; but, I warrant thee, Claudio, the time shall not go daily by us: I will, in the interim, uniform one of Hercules' lusty tenors, which is to bring signor Benedick and the lady Beatrice into a mountain of affection, the one with the other. I would may as hasten as I may, and I do not ought to have said to thee three words, unless a minister should see, or see what security s assurance as I shall give you direction.

Leon. My lord, I am for you, though it cost me ten nights watching.

Claudio. And my lord.

D. Pedro. And you too, gentle Hero?

Hero. I will do any modest office, my lord, to have my cousin to a birthday, my lord.

D. Pedro. And Benedick is not the unhappiest husband that I know: thus far can I praise him;
he is of a noble strain: of approved valor, and confirmed honesty. I will teach you how to honor your cousin, that she shall in love with Benedick;
and I, with your two helps, will so practice on Benedick, that in spite of his quick wit, and his world's jests, he shall fall in love with Betrice. If we can do this, Cupid is no longer an archer; his arrow shall be ours, for we are the only love-gods. Go in with me, and I will tell you my drife. [Exeunt.

SCENE II. — Another Room in Leonato's House.

Enter Don John and Borachio.

Don John. It is so; the count Claudio shall marry the daughter of Leonato.

Borachio. Yen, my lord; but I can cross it.

Don John. Any cross, any impediment will be medieval to me; I am sick in displeasure to him; and whatsoever comes athwart his affection, ranges evenly with mine. How canst thou cross that borrachio?

Borachio. Not honestly, my lord; but so covertly, that no dishonor shall appear in me.

Don John. Show me bravely how.

* Linoge.
* Paschious.
MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING

Claud. Yes, my good lord:—How still the evening is.

As hush'd as purpose to enrage harmony!

D. Pedro. See you where Benedick hath hid himself?

Claud. O, very well, my lord: the music ended,
We'll fit the stage for this my-worth.

Enter BALTHAZAR with music.

D. Pedro. Come Balthazar, we'll hear that song again.

BALTH. O good my lord, tax not so bad a voice
To slander music any more than once.

D. Pedro. It is the witness still of excellency,
To put a strange face on his own perfection:
I pray thee, sing, and let me won no more.

BALTH. Remember, sir, when you talk of what I sing:
Since many a wo'er doth commence his suit
To her he thinks not worthy: yet he woos;
Yet will he swear, he loves.

Or, if thou wilt hold longer argument,
Do it in notes.

BALTH. Note this before my notes,
There's not a note of mine that's worth the noting.

D. Pedro. Why these are very crotchets that he speaks:

Note, notes, forsooth, and nothing! [Music.

Bene. [Aside.] Divine air! now is his soul ravish'd!
—Is it not strange, that sheep's guts should hide souls out of men's bodies?—Well, a horn for my money, when all's done.

BALTHAZAR sings.

Exeunt.

Claud. Halt the hook well: this fish will bite.

[Aside.

Leon. What effects, my lord! She will sit you—
You heard my daughter tell you how.

Claud. She did, indeed.

D. Pedro. How, how, I pray you? You amaze me:
I would have thought that for the spirit had been invincible against all assaults of affection.

Leon. I would have sworn it had, my lord; especially against Benedick.

Claud. I mean this think this a gull, but
That the white-bearded fellow speaks it: knavery
Cannot, sure, hide itself in such reverence.

Claud. He hath taken the infection: hold it up,

D. Pedro. Hath she made her allusion known to Benedick?

Leon. No; and swears she never will; that's her torment.

Claud. 'Tis true, indeed; so your daughter says:
Shall I, says she, but have so oft encounter'd him
With scorn, write to him that I love him?

Leon. This says she now when she is beginning to write to him: for she'll be up twenty times a night: and there will she sit in her smock, till she have write a sheet of paper,—my daughter tells us all.

Claud. Now you talk of a sheet of paper, remember a pretty jest your daughter told us of.

Leon. Oh! When she had written it, and was reading it over, she found Benedick and Beatrice between the sheet!

Claud. That.

Leon. Of! she tore the letter into a thousand half-pence; rated at herself, that she should be so immodest to write to one that she knew would not read her: I ensure him, says she, be my own spirit; for I should not wish him, if he well wrote to me; yet, though I love him, I should.

Claud. Then down upon her knees she falls, weeps, sobs, beats her heart, tears her hair, prays, curses,—O sweet Benedick! God give me patience!

Leon. She doth, indeed; my daughter says so: and the jests hath so much overborne her, that my daughter would not sometimes affect she would do a desperate outrage to herself: It is very true.

D. Pedro. It were good, that Benedick knew of it by some other, if she will not discover it.

Claud. To what end? He would but make a sport of it, and torment the poor lady worse.

D. Pedro. An he should, it were an alms to hang him: She's an excellent sweet lady; and, out of all suspicion, an excellent lady.

Leon. And she is exceeding wise.

D. Pedro. In every thing, but in loving Benedick.

Leon. O my lord, wisdom and blood combating in so tender a notch, I have ten times in the course of the day, this blood hath the victory. I am sorry for her, as I have just cause, being her uncle and her guardian.

D. Pedro. I would she would discover this defance on me, I would have double all other respects, and made her half myself: I pray you, tell Benedick of it, and hear what he will say.

Leon. Well, I thank you?

Claud. Hero thinks surely, she will die: for she says, she will die if he love her not; and she will die ere she make her love known: and she will die ere she know her love; and she will hate one breath of her distressed crossness.

D. Pedro. She doth well: if she should make tender of her love, 'tis very possible he'll scorn it; for no man, as you know all, hath a contemplative spirit.

Claud. He is a very proper man.

D. Pedro. He hath indeed a good outward happiness.

Leon. I, Fore God, and in my mind, very wise.

D. Pedro. He doth indeed show some sparks that are like wit.

Leon. And to be him to be valiant.

D. Pedro. As Hector, I assure you: and in the managing of quarrels you may say he is wise; for either he avoids them with great discretion, or undertakes them with a just Christian and Christian fear.

Leon. If he do fear God, he must necessarily keep peace; if he break the peace, he ought to enter into a quarrel with fear and trembling.

1. More.

Thrown off.
D. Pedro. And so will he do: for the man doth fear God, however it seems not in him, by some large jests he will make. Well, I am sorry for your piece: I will go see Benedick, and tell him of her love.

Claud. Never tell him, my lord; let her wear it out with good counsel.

Hero. Nay, that’s impossible; she may wear her heart out first.

D. Pedro. Well, we'll hear further of it by your daughter; let it cool the while. I love Benedick well; moor could wish he would modestly examine himself, to see how much he is unworthy so good a lady.

Leon. My lord, will you walk? dinner is ready.

D. Pedro. Let there be the same net spread for her; and that must your daughter and her gentlewoman carry. The sport will be, when they hold one an opinion of another’s dotage, and no such matter; that’s the scene that I would see, which will be merely a dumb show. Let us send her to call him in to dinner.

[Aside Don Pedro, Claudio, and Leonato.]

Benedick advances from the Arbor.

Claud. This can be no trick: The conference was sadly borne. —They have the truth of this from Hero. They seem to pity the lady; it seems, her affections have their full bent. Love me! why, it must do: I hear how I am censured; they say, I will hear myself prouder, if I perceive the love come from her; they say too, that she will rather die than give any sign of affection. —I did never think I must be so prou’d: Happy are they that hear their detractions, and can put them to mending. They say, the lady is fair; ’tis a truth I can bear them witness; and virtuous; —tis so, I cannot reprove it; and wise but for loving me. —By my troth, it is no addition to her wit; —nor any great argument of her folly, for I will be horribly in love with her. —I may chance have some odd quirks and remnants of wit broken on me, because I have long so against marriage; —But doth not the appetite alter? A man loves the meat in his youth, that he cannot endure in his age: Shall quips, and sentences, and these paper bullets of the brain, awe a man from the career of his honor? No: The world must be peopled. When I said, I would die a bachelor. I did not think I should live till I were married. —Here comes Beatrice: By this day, she’s a fair lady: I do spy some marks of love in her.

Enter Beatrice.

Beat. Against my will, I am sent to bid you come in to dinner.

Beat. Fair Beatrice. I thank you for your pains. Beat. I took no more pains for those thanks, than you take pains to thank me; if it had been painful, I would not have come.

Beat. You take pleasure in the message! Beat. Yea, just so much as you may take upon a knave’s head that does a good day with you: —you have no stomach, signior; fare you well. [Exit.

Beat. Ha! Against my will, I am sent to bid you come to dinner. —there’s a double meaning in the whole: I have no pains for those thanks, than you look pains to thank me —that’s as much as to say, Any pains that I take for you is as easy. as thanks: —If I do not take pity of her, I am a villain. If I do not love her, I am a Jew: I will get her picture. [Exit.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—Leonato’s Garden.

Enter Hero, Margaret, and Ursula.

Hero. Good Margaret, run thou into the parlor: There shall thou find my cousin Beatrice preparing with the prince and Claudio. Whisper her ear, and tell her, I and Ursula walk in the orchard, and our whole discourse is all of her; say, that thou overheard’st us; And bid her steal into the pleasant bower, Where honey-suckles, rippled by the sun, Forbid the sun to enter; —like favorites, Made proud by princes, that advance their pride Against that power that bred it: —there will she hide her.

To listen our purpose: This is thy office, Bear thee well in it, and leave us alone.

Marg. I’ll make her come, I warrant you presently. [Exit.

Hero. Now, Ursula, when Beatrice doth come, As we do trace this alley up and down, our talk must only be of Benedick: When I do name him, let it be thy part To praise him more than ever man did merit; My talk to thee must be, how Benedick Is sick in love with Beatrice: Of this matter Is little Cupid’s crafty arrow made, That only wounds by hearsay. Now begin;

Enter Beatrice behind.

For look where Beatrice, like a lapwing, runs close by the ground, to hear our conference.

Urs. The pleasantest angling is to see the fish Cut with her golden ears the silver stream, And go edly devour the treacherous bait: So ancle we for Beatrice; who even now Is couched in the woodland covert;

Fear you not my part of the dialogue.

Hero. Then go we near her, that her ear lose nothing; —seriously carried on. —Discourting.

Of the false sweet bait that we lay for it— [They advance to the bower.

No, truly, Ursula, she is too disdainful; I know, her spirits are as coy and wild.

As haggards of the rocks. [Exit.

Urs. But are you sure, That Benedick loves Beatrice so entirely! Hero. So says the prince, and my new-trothed lord.

Urs. And then they bid you tell her of it, madam! Hero. They did entreat me to acquaint her of it: But I persuaded them, if they loved Benedick, To wish him wrestle with affection, And never to let Beatrice know of it.

Urs. Why did you so? Ioth not the gentleman Deserve as full, as fortunate a bed, As ever Beatrice shall couche upon! Hero. O God of love! I know, he doth deserve As much as may be yielded to a man: But nature never fram’d a woman’s heart Of prouder stuff than that of Beatrice; Dishast and scorn ride sparkling in her eyes, Misparing what they look on; and her wit Values itself so highly, that to her All matter else seems weak: she cannot love, Nor take go shape nor project of affection, She is so self-endearing.

Urs. Sure, I think so; And therefore, certainly, it was not —she knew his love, lest she make sport at it.

Hero. Why, you speak truth: I never yet saw man, How wise, how noble, young, how rarely featur’d, But she would spill him backward: if fair-fled, she bear, the gentleman should be her sister; If black, why, nature, drawing of an antick, Made a foul blot: if tall, a lance ill-headed; If low, an agate very wily cut: If speaking, why, a vine blown with all wind; If sly, why, a block moved with none. So turns she every man the wrong side out; —A species of hawks.
SCENE II.  MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

And never gives to truth and virtue, that,
Which simplicity and merit purchaseth.

 Urs.  She's curst, and her prating is not commendable.

 Hero.  Nor: not to be so odd and from all fashions.

 As Beatrice is, cannot be commendable:
But who dare tell her so? If I should speak,
She's such a madwoman, she would laugh me
Out of myself, press me to death with wit.

Therefore let Benedick, like cover'd fire,
Come away in sighs, waste inwardly:
It were a better death, to die with mucks;
Which is as bad as die with tickling.

 Urs.  Yet tell her of it: hear what she will say.

 Hero.  Not; rather I will go to Benedick
And counsel him to course to this passion:
And, truly, I'll devise some honest standers
To stain my counsel with: One doth not know,
How much an ill word may en蛟ison like.

 Urs.  Do, not to do me wrong.

 She cannot be so much without true judgment,
(Having so swift and excellent a wit,
As is priz'd to have,) at least to suffer
So rare a gentleman as singer Benedick.

 Hero.  He is the only man of Italy,
Always excepted my dear Claudio.

 Urs.  Do you, by no means, be angry with me, madam,
Speaking of my fancy; signor Benedick.

 For shape, for bearing, argument, and valor,
Goes foremost in report through Italy.

 Hero.  Indeed he hath an excellent good name.

 Urs.  His excellence did earn it, ere he had it—
When are you married, madam?

 Hero.  Why, every day; — to-morrow: Come:
I'll show thee some attires; and have thy counsel,
Which is the best to furnish me to-morrow.

 Urs.  She's lim'd, I warrant you; we have caught many a Benedict.

 Hero.  If it prove so, then loving goes by haps:
Some Cupid kills with arrows, some with traps.

[Exit Hero, and Ursula.]

BEATRICE advances.

Beatrice advances.

 Bf.  What fire is in mine ears! Can this be true?
Stand I condemned for pride and sworn so much?
Contempt, falseCVV., and maiden pride, adieu!
No longer lives behind the back of such.

 And, Benedick, love on, I will requite thee;
Turning my wild heart to thy loving hand;
If thou dost love, my kindness shall incite thee
To bind our loves up in a holy band:
For others say, thou dost desire; and I
Believe it better than reporting.

[Exit.

SCENE II. — A Room in Leonato's House.

Enter Don Pedro, Claudio, Benedick, and Leonato.

 Don Pedro.  I do but stay till your marriage be consummated, and then I go to laugh Aragon.

 Claud.  I'll bring you thither, my lord, if you'll vouchesafe me.

 Don Pedro.  Nay, that would be as great a soil in the new glass of your marriage, as to show a child its new coat, and forbid him to wear it. I will only be bold with Benedick for his company; for, from the crown of his head to the sole of his foot, he is all mirth; he hath twice or thrice Cupid's bow-string, and the little hangman dare not shoot at him: he hath a heart as sound as a bell, and his tongue is the clapper; for what his heart thinks, his conscience speaks.

 B.  Gallants, I am not as I have been.

 Leon.  Say so I; methinks you are sadder.

 Claud.  I hope, he be in love,

 B.  Forthening him, threatning: there's no true drop of blood in him, to be truly touch'd with love: if he be sad, he wants money.

 Leon.  I have the tooth-sache.

 Claud.  I have it.

 B.  Hang it.

 Claud.  You must hang it first, and draw it after.

 Don Pedro.  What! sigh for the tooth-sache?
 Leon.  Where is but a humor, or a worm!

 B.  Well, every one can master a grief, but he Claud.  Yet say I, he is in love.

 Leon.  I have no appearance of fancy in him, unless it be a fairy that he hath to strange disguises: as to be a Dutchman to-day; a Frenchman to-morrow; or in the shape of two countries at once, as a German from the west downward, all slop; and a Spaniard from the hip upward, no doubt: unless he have a fancy to this foolery, as it appears he hath, he is as fool for fancy, as you would have it appear he is.

 Claud.  If he be not in love with some woman, there is no believing old signs: he brushes his hat on his eyebrows, What should that baste?

 Don Pedro.  Hath any man seen him at the barber's?

 Claud.  No, but the barber's man hath been seen with him: and the old ornament of his cheek hath a sadly studded beard for his passion.

 Leon.  Indeed, he looks younger than he did by the loss of a beard.

 Don Pedro.  Nay he rubs himself with ehit: Can you small him out by that?

 Claud.  That's as much as to say, The sweet youth's in love.

 Don Pedro.  The greatest note of it is his melancholy.

 Claud.  And when was he wont to wash his face?

 Don Pedro.  Yes, or to paint himself! for the which, I hear what they say of him.

 Claud.  Nay, he is but a rough spring, which is now crept into a lustre, and now governed by steps.

 Don Pedro.  Indeed, that tells a heavy tale for him.

 Claud.  Not a word, I know who loves him.

 Don Pedro.  That would I know, too; I warrant, one that knows him not.

 Claud.  Yes, and his ill conditions: and, in despite of all, dies for him.

 Don Pedro.  She shall be buried with her face upward.

 Leon.  Yet is this no charm for the tooth-sache—

 Old signor, walk aside with me: I have studied eight or nine wise words to speak to you, which these hobby-horses must not hear.

 [Exeunt Benedick and Leonato.]

 Don Pedro.  For my life, to break with him about Beatrice.

 Claud.  Tis even so: Hero and Margaret have by this played their parts with Beatrice: and then the two bears will not bite one another, when they meet.

 Enter Don John.

 Don John.  My lord and brother, God save you.

 Don Pedro.  God bless your brother.

 Don John.  If your leisure served, I would speak with you.

 Don Pedro.  In private?

 Don John.  If it please you; — yet count Claudio may hear; for what I would speak of, concerns him.

 Don Pedro.  What's the matter?

 Don John.  Means your lordship to be married to-morrow?

 Don Pedro.  You know he does.

 Don John.  I know not that, when he knows what I know.

 Claud.  If there be any impediment, I pray you, discover it.

 Don John.  You may think I love you not; let that appear hereafter, and aim better at me by that I now will manifest: For my brother, I think he holds you well; and in dearness of heart hath help to effect your ensuing marriage: surely, suit ill spent, and labor ill-begotten.

 Don Pedro.  Why, what's the matter?

 Don John.  I came hither to tell you: and, circumstances shortened, (for she hath been too long a talking of) the lady is diasabled.

 Claud.  Who! Hero?

 Don John.  Even she; Leonato's Hero, your Hero, every man's Hero.

 Claud.  Divulge it!

 Don John.  The word is too gross to paint out her wickedness; I could say, she were worse; think you of a worse curse, and I will fit her it to. Wonder not till further word, I go but with me tonight, you shall see her chamber-window entered; even the night before her wedding-day: if you love her then, to-morrow weel her; but it would better fit your honor to chance your mind.

 Claud.  May this be so!

 1 Largo loose breeches.
D. Pedro. I will not think it.

D. John. If you dare not trust that you see, confess yourself: if you will follow me, I will show you enough; and when you have seen more and heard more, proceed accordingly.

Claud. If I see anything too-night why I should not hear to-morrow, in the congregation, where I should see, there will I shame her.

D. Pedro. And as I vowed for thee to obtain her, I will join with thee to disgrace her.

D. John. I will not disgrace her no farther, till you are my witnesses: hear it coldly but till midnight, and let the issue show itself.

D. Pedro. O day untowardly turned! Claud. This device strangely thwarts me! D. John. O plague right well prevented!

So will you say when you have seen the sequel. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—A Street.

Enter Dogberry and Verges, with the Watch.

Dogb. Are you good men and true?

Verg. You, or else you were put but they should suffer salvation, body and soul.

Dogb. Nay, that were a punishment too good for them, if they should have any allegiance in them, because they lose the prince's watch.

Verg. Well, give them their charge, neighbor Dogberry.

Dogb. First, who think you the most dishartless man to be constable?

1 Watch. Hugh Outake, sir, or George Seaead; for they can write and read.

Dogb. Come hither, neighbor Seaead. God hath blessed you with a good name: to be a well-favored man is the gift of fortune; but to write and read comes by nature.

2 Watch. Both which, master constable,—

Dogb. You have; I knew it would be your answer. Well, for your favor, sir, why, give God thanks, and make no boast of it; and for your writing and reading, let that appear when there is no need of such vanity. You are thought here to be the most senseless and fit man for the constable of the watch; therefore hear you the lantern: This is your charge. You shall comprehend all vagram men; you are to bid any man stand in the prince's name.

2 Watch. How, if he will not stand?

Dogb. Then, take no note of him, but let him go; and presently call the rest of the watch together, and thank God you are rid of a knave.

Verg. If he will not stand when he is bidden, he is no friend of prince's subjects.

Dogb. True, and they are to meddle with none but the prince's subjects—You shall also make no noise in the streets; for, for the watch to babble and talk, that is not to be endured.

2 Watch. We will rather sleep than talk; we know what belongs to a watch.

Dogb. Why, you speak like an ancient and most quiet watchman; for I cannot see how sleeping should offend: only have a care that your bills be not stolen—Well, you are to call at all the alehouses, and bid those that are drunk get them to bed.

2 Watch. How, if they will not.

Dogb. Why then, let them alone till they are sober: if they make you not then the better answer, you may say, they are not the men you took them for.

2 Watch. Well, sir.

Dogb. If you meet a thief, you may suspect him, by virtue of your office, to be no true man; and for such kind of men, the less you meddle or make with them, the more is for your honesty.

2 Watch. If he be a thief, we shall not lay hands on him.

Dogb. Truly, by your office, you may; but, I think, they that touch bitich will be defiled: the most certain way, if you do take a thief, is, to let him show himself what he is, and steal out of your company.

Verg. You have been always called a mercifull man, partner.

Dogb. Truly, I would not hang a dog by my will; much more a man who hath any honesty in him. [Weapons of the watchmen.

Verg. If you hear a child cry in the night, you must call to the nurse, and bid her still it.

Borb. Well, how, if the nurse be asleepe, and will not hear it?

Dogb. Why, then depart in peace, and let the child wake her with crying; for the eue that will not hear when it is broken, will never answer a call when he beats.

Verg. 'Tis ever true.

Dogb. This is the end of the charge. You, constables, discharge the prince's people, as well as you can. If you meet the prince in the night, you may stay him.

Verg. Nay, by' lady, that, I think, he cannot.

Dogb. Five shillings; to one o'er, with any man that may stay him, marry, not without the prince he will; for, indeed, the watch ought to offend no man; and it is audence to stay a man against his will.

Borb. I think it be so.

Dogb. Ha, ha, ha! Well, masters, good night: an there be any matter of weighty chances, call up me: keep your fellows' counsel and your own, and good night.—Come, neighbor.

2 Watch. Well, masters, we hear our charge: let us go sit here upon the church-bench till two, and then all to bed.

Dogb. More word, more honest neighbors: I pray you, watch about signior Leonato's door; for the wedding being there to morrow, there is a great coil to-night: Adieu, be vigilant, I beseech you.

[Exeunt Dogberry and Verges.

Enter Borachio and Conrad.

Con. Here, man, I am at thy elbow.

Bora. Mass, and my elbow tiched; I thought there should be a rack to follow.

Con. I will owe thee an answer for that; and now forward with thy tale.

Bora. Stand thee close then under this penthouse; there is no villain there; and I will, like a true drunkard, utter all to thee.

Watch. [Aside.] Some treason, masters; yet stand close.

Bora. Therefore know, I have earned of don John a thousand ducats.

Con. Is it possible that any villainy should be so dear?

Bora. Thou shouldst rather ask, if it were possible any villainy should be so rich; for when rich villains have need of poor ones, poor ones may make what price they will.

Con. I am afraid of both.

Bora. That shows thou art unconfirmed? Thou knowest that the fashion of a doublet, or a hat, or a cloak, is nothing to a man.

Con. I dare not be a knave.

Bora. I mean the fashion.

Con. Yes the fashion is the fashion.

Bora. Tush! I may as well say the fool the fool.

But see'st thou not what a deformed thief this fashion is? I know that Deformed; he has been a vile thief this seven year: he goes up and down like a gentleman: I remember his name.

Bora. Didst thou not hear somebody?

Con. No; 'twas the vane on the house.

Bora. Thou liest not, I say, which a deformed thief this fashion is! how giddily he turns about all the hot bloods between fourteen and five-and-thirty! sometime, fashioning them, like Phaon's soldiers; sometime, like a painting; sometime, like god Bel's priests in the old church window; sometime, like the shaven Hercules in the smirched* worm-eaten tapestry, where his cod-piece seems as massy as his head.

Con. All this I see; and see that the fashion wears out more apparel than the man; but art not thou thyself giddy with the fashion too, that thou dost shift out of thy tale into telling me of the fashion?

Bora. Not so neither: but know, that I have tonight wooed Margaret, the lady Hero's gentle-woman,

* Unpretentious in the ways of the world.

† Smoked.

‡ Soldi.
times good night—I tell this tale vilely— I should first tell thee, how the prince, Claudio, and my master, planted, and placed, and possessed by my master don John, saw afar off in the orchard this amiable gentleman.

Cort. And thought they, Margaret was Hero.

Bona. Two of them did, the prince and Claudio; but the devil my master knew she was Margaret; and partly by his oaths, which first possessed them, partly by the dark night, which did deceive them, but chiefly by my villany, which did confirm any slander that don John had made, away went Claudio enraged; swore he would meet her, as he was appointed that morning at the temple, and that before the whole congregation, shame her with what he saw over-night, and sent her home again without a husband.

1 Watch. We change you in the prince's name, stand.

2 Watch. Call up the right master constable: We have recovered the most dangerous piece of lechery that ever was known in the commonwealth.

1 Watch. And one Deformed is one of them; I know him, he wears a lock.

1 Watch. You'll be made bring Deformed forth, I warrant you.

Cont. Masters.—

1 Watch. Never speak; we charge you, let us obey you to go with us.

Barta. We are like to prove a goodly commodity, by this means to take off of these men's bills.

Cont. A commodity in question, I warrant you. Come, we'll obey you. [Exeunt]

SCENE IV.—A Room in Leonato's House.

Enter Hero, Margaret, and Ursula.

Hero. Good Ursula, wake my cousin Beatrice, and desire her to rise.

Urs. I will, lady.

Hero. And bid her come hither.

Urs. Well.

[Exit Ursula.]

Marg. Troth, I think, your other rabato were better.

Hero. No, pray thee, good Meg, I will wear this.

Marg. By my troth, it's not so good; and I warrant your cousin will say so.

Hero. My cousin's a fool, and thou art another; I'll wear none but this.

Marg. I'll be the new attire within excellently, if the hair were a thought browner; and your gown's a most rare fashion, i' faith. I saw the duchess of Milan's gown, that they praise so.

Hero. O that exceeds, they say.

Marg. By my troth, it's but a night-crown in respect of yours: Cloth of gold, and cuts, and faced with gold; set with pearls, down sleeves, side-sleeves, and skirts round, underborne with a bluest tinsel; but for a fine, quaint, graceful, and excellent fashion, yours is worth ten in one.

Hero. God give me joy to wear it, for my heart is exceeding heavy.

Marg. 'Twill be heavier soon, by the weight of a man.

Hero. Fie upon thee! art not ashamed?

Marg. Of what, lady? of speaking honorably? I am not marriage honorable in a beggar! Is not your lord honorable without marriage! I think you would have me say, saving your reverence,—a hamburg; and thinking do not rest true speaking. I'll offend nobody: Is there any harm in—the heavier for a husband? None, I think, an if it be the right husband, and the right wife; otherwise, 'tis light and not heavy: Ask my lady Beatrice else, she comes.

Enter Beatrice.

Hero. Good morrow, coz.

Beat. Good morrow, sweet Hero.

Hero. Why, now how! do you speak in the sick tone?

Beat. I am out of all other tune, methinks, Margaret. Clap us into—Light o' love; that goes without a burden; do you an' it, and I'll dance it. Beat. Yea, Light o' love, with your heels!—then if your husband have stables enough, you'll see he shall lack no barns.

A kind of ruff.

Marg. O illegitimate construction! I scorn that with my heart and tongue.

Beat. 'Tis almost five o'clock, cousin: 'tis time you were ready. By my troth, I am exceeding ill:—hey ho!

Marg. For a hawk, a lorse, or a husband!

Beat. For the letter that becometh them all, H.

Marg. Well, you an' be not turned Turk, there's no more sailing by the star.

Beat. What's that means the fool, trow?

Marg. Nothing! but God send every one their heart's desire!

Hero. These gives the count sent me, they are an excellent morphine.

Beat. I am studied, cousin, I cannot smell.

Marg. A maid, and studied! there's goodly catching of cold.

Beat. O, God help me! God help me! how long have you professed apprehension?

Marg. Ever since you let it: doth not my wit become me rarely!

Beat. It is not yet seen enough, you should wear it in your cap.—By my troth, I am sick.

Marg. Get you some of this distilled Cardims Benedict, and lay it to your heart; it is the only thing for a cold.

Hero. There thou prick'st her with a thistle.

Beat. Benedict? why Benedict? you have some moral in this Benedictus.

Marg. No, by my troth, I have not a moral meaning: I meant, plain holy thistle. You may think, perchance, that I think you are in love; nay, by' faith, I am not such a fool to think what I list, nor I list me such nonsense; nor, indeed, I cannot think, if I would think my heart out of thinking, that you are in love, or that you will be in love, or that you can be in love; yet Benedict was such an emperor, and now a he become a man; he swore he would never marry; and yet now, in despite of his heart, he eats his meat without grudging: and how you may be converted. I know not; but, methinks, you look with your eyes as other women do.

Beat. What pace is this that thy tongue keeps?

Marg. Not a false gallop.

Re-enter Ursula.

Urs. Madam, withdraw; the prince, the count, signior Benedick, don John, and all the gallants of the town are come to fetch you to church.

Hero. Help to dress me, good coz, good Meg, good Ursula. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Another Room in Leonato's House.

Enter Leonato, with Dogberry and VerGES.

Leon. What would you with me, honest neighbor?

Dog. Marry, sir, I would have some confidence with you, that deverts you nearly.

Leon. Briefly, I pray you, for, you see, 'tis a busy time with me.

Dog. Marry, this it is, sir.

Ver. Ye mean, it is, sir.

Leon. What is it, my good friends?

Dog. Goodman Verge, sir, speaks a little off the matter; an old man, sir, and his wife are not so blunt, as, God help, I would desire they were; but, in faith, honest, as the skin between his brows.

Ver. Yes, I thank God, I am as honest an any man living, that is an old man, and no honest wench.

Dog. Comparisons are odorous: palpabrum, neighbor Verges.

Leon. Neighbors, you are tedious.

Dog. It pleases your worship to say so, but we are the poor duke's officers; but truly, for many own part if I were as tedious as a king, I could find in my heart to bestow it all your worship.

Leon. All these things you are exceeding a pleasure to hear them.

Ver. And so am I.

Leon. I would fain know what you have to say. Ver. Marry, sir, our watch to-night, excepting your worship's presence, have on a couple of as ardent knownes as any in Messina.

1 o'clock for an ace or pain.
MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The Inside of a Church.

Enter Don Pedro, Don John, Leonato, Friar, Claudio, Benedict, Hero, Beatrice, &c.

Leonato. Come, friar Frances, be brief; only to the plain form of marriage, and you shall recount their particular duties afterwards.

Friar. You come hither, my lord, to marry this lady.

Claudio. No.

Leonato. To be married to her, friar; you come to marry her.

Friar. Lady, you come hither to be married to this count.

Hero. I do.

Friar. If either of you know any inward impediment, you should show me it, and I will give you leave to return.

Claudio. Know you any, Hero?

Hero. None, my lord.

Friar. Know you any, count?

Leonato. I dare make his answer, none.

Claudio. O, what men dare do! what men may do!

What men daily do! not knowing what they do.

Bear now no similitude of looks; Why then, some be laughing, as ha! ha! ha!

Claudio. Stand thee by, friar—Father, by thy leave.

May we have no unconstraining soul.

Give me this maid, your daughter.

Leonato. As freely, son, as God did give her me.

Claudio. And what have I to give you back, whose worth May counterplease this rich and precious gift?

D. Pedro. Nothing, unless you render her again.

Claudio. Sweet prince, you learn me noble thankfulness.

There, Leonato, take her back again;

Give not this rotten orange to your friend;

She's but the sign and semblance of her honor—

Behold, how like a maid she blushes here;—

O, what authority and show of truth!

Can cunning sin cover itself with that?

Comes not that blood, as modest evidence,

To witness simple virtue? Would you not swear,

All you that see her, that she were a maid,

By these exterior shows? But she is none;

She knows the heat of a luxurious bed;

Her blush is guiltiness, not modesty.

Leonato. What do you mean, my lord?

Claudio. Not to be married,

Not knit my soul to an approved wanton.

Leonato. Dear my lord, if you in your own proof

Have vanquished the resistance of her youth,

And made her subject to your virtue.——

Claudio. I know what you would say; if I have known her,

You'll say, she did embrace me as a husband,

And so terminate the Faithful sin.

No, Leonato.

I never tempted her with word too large;

i. e. It is wonderful to see. — Leucippeus.

But, as a brother to his sister show'd

Bashful sincerity, and comely love.

Hero. And seemed I ever otherwise to you?

Claudio. Out on thy seeing! I will write against it.

You seem to me as Dinn in her orb:

As chase as in the hull ere it be blown:

But you are more interreggare in your blood

Than Venville, or those panoplist'ed animals

That rage in savage sensuality.

Hero. Is my lord well, that he doth speak so wide?

Leonato. Sweet prince, why speak not you?

D. Pedro. What should I speak?

I stand discomfòrt'd, that have gone about

To link my dear friend to a common stake.

Leonato. Are these things spoken for this dream!

D. John. Sir, they are spoken, and these things are true.

Bene. This looks not like a nuptial.

Leonato. True? O God!

Claudio. Leonato, stand I here!

Is this the prince? Is this the prince's brother?

Is this fair Hero? Are our eyes our own?

Leonato. All this is true. But what of this, my lord?

Claudio. Let me but move one question to your daughter:

And, by that fatherly and kindly power

That you have in her, bid her answer truly.

Leonato. I charge thee do, as then art my child.

Hero. O God defend me! how am I best?

Claudio. That cannot call thee by this name

To make you answer truly to your name.

Hero. Is it not Hero? Who can blot that name

With any just reproach?

Claudio. Marry, that can Hero;

Hero itself can blot out Hero's virtue.

What man was he talk'd with you yesternight

Out at your window, betwixt twelve and one?—

Now, if you are a maid, answer to this.

Her. I talk'd with no man at that hour, my lord.

D. Pedro. Why, then are you no maiden.—Leonato.

I am sorry you must hear: Upon mine honor,

Myself, my brother, and this grievéd count

Did see her, hear her, at that hour last night;

Talk with a ruffian at her chamber-window;

Who hath, indeed, must like a liberalf'vilian,

Confess'd the vile encounters they have had

A thousand times in secret.

D. Pedro. Fye, fye, they are Not to be name'd, my lord, not to be spoke of;

There is not chaste lady in the land;

Without offence to utter them: Thus pretty lady,

With her own solitary harmless ornament.

Claudio. O Hero! what a Hero hast thou been,

If half thy outward graces had been placed

About thy thoughts, and counsels of thy heart!

But, fare thee well, most well, most fair!—But well,

Thou pure impiloty, and impious purity!

For thee I'll lock up all the gates of love,

Licentious. — Wildly. — Too free of tongue.
And on my eyelids shall conjure hag,
Taking all beauty, all beauty's harm,
And never shall it more be gracious.
Leon. Hath no man's dagger here a point for me?
What way, now, cousin! wherefore sink you down?
D. John. Come, let us go; these things, come thus to light,
Another hour, she sleeps; [Exit Don Pedro, Don John, and Claudio.
Leon. How doth the lady?
Bart. Dead. I think,—help, uncle,—
Hero! why, Hero!—Uncle!—Signior Benedick? Friar!
Leon. O fate, take not away thy heavy hand!
Death is the farthest ever for her shame,
That may be wish'd for.
Bart. How now, cousin Hero?
Friar. Have comfort, lady.
Leon. Dost thou look up?
Friar. Yes; wherefore should she not?
Leon. Wherefore? Why, doth not every earthly thing
Cry shame upon her? Could she here deny
The story that is printed in her blood?
Do not live, Hero; do not ope thine eyes;
For did I think thou wouldst not quickly die,
Then thou speakest. If thy spirits were strong, as thine,
Myself would, on the rearward of reproaches,
Strike at thy life; Grip'd I, had I but one
One for that at frail nature's frame! Is O, one so much by beauty's hand! Why had she one?
Why ever wast thou lovely in my eyes!
Why had I not, with chartless hand,
Took up a beggar's issue at my gates;
Why makest thou thine and mine so much,
That I myself was to myself not mine,
Valuing of her; why, she,—I, is fallen
Into a pot of ink! that the wise and sedent,
Harlots, that used to wash her clean again;
And salt too little, which may season give
To her foul tainted flesh!
Bart. Sir, sir, be patient:
For my part, I am so aff't in wonder,
I know not what to say.
Bart. O, on my soul my cousin is belief'd,
That Lady, were you her body be dead?—
Bart. No, truly, not: although until last night,
I have this twelvemonth been her bedfellow.
Leon. Confirmed, confirmed! O, that is stronger made,
Which was before hark'd up with ribs of iron!
Would the two princes lie! and Claudio lie—
Who lov'd her so, that, speaking of his fainess,
Would it with extraience from her; let her die.
Friar. Hear me a little:
For I have only been silent so long,
And given way unto this course of fortune,
By nothing of the lady: I have mark'd,
A thousand blushing apparitions start
Into her face; a thousand immences shames
In angel whiteness hear away those blushes;
And aura all her eye; not that but true,
To burn the errors that these princes hold
Against her maiden truth:—Call me a fool,
Trust not my reasoning, nor my observations,
With what I have experience, to seal that warrant
The tenor of my book; trust not my age,
My reverence, calling, nor divinity,
If this sweet lady lie not guiltless here
Under some biting error.
Leon. Friar, it cannot be:
Thou seest, that all the grace that she hath left,
Is, that she will not add to her damnation
A sin of perjury; she denies nothing,
Why seek'st thou then to cover with excuse
That which appears in proper nakedness?
Friar. Lady, what man is he you are accus'd of?
Hero. They know, that do accuse me; I know none:
If I know more of any man alive,
Than that which maiden modesty doth warrant,
Let all my sins lack mercy!—O my father,
Prove you that any man with me convers'd
Disposition of things,
Snail'd.
At hours unmeet, or that I yesternight
Did lend the chance of words with any creature,
Refuse me, then, hence to that authority.
Friar. There is some strange misprision in the princes.
Bart. Two of them have the very heart of honor;
And if their wisdoms be mislaid in this,
The practice of it lives in John the bastard,
Whose spirits toil in frame of villanies.
Leon. I know not. I'll they speak the truth of her,
These hands shall tear her; if they wrong her honor,
The proudest of them shall well hear of it,
Time hath not yet so dried this blood of mine,
Nor age so eat up my invention.
Nor fortune made such havoc of my means,
Nor my bad life rost me so much of friends,
But they shall find, asked of such a kind,
Both strength of limb and fluid policy of soul,
Ability in means, and choice of friends,
To quit me of them thoroughly.
Friar. Pause a while,
And let my counsel sway you in this case,
Your daughter here the princes left for dead;
Let her awhile be secretly kept in,
And publish it, that she is dead indeed:
Maintain a mourning observation:
And on your family's old monument
Hang mourner epistles, and do all rites
That appear at once a burial.
Leon. What shall become of this? What will this do?
Friar. Marty, this, well-carried, shall on her behalf
Change slander drop to charity; that is some good:
But not for that, dream I on this strait course,
But on this trall'd look for greater birth.
She dyeing, as it must be so maintained,
Upon the instant that she was accus'd,
Shall be lamented, pitied, and excus'd,
Of every hearer: For it so falls out,
That what we have we prize not to the worth;
While, whiles we enjoy it; being backed and lost,
Why, then we rack the value; then we find
The virtue, that possession would not show us,
Whiles it was ours:—So will it fare with Claudio
When he shall hear her so disposed by his words
The idea of her life shall sweetly creep
Into his study of imitation;
And every lovely organ of her life,
Shall come apparel'd in more precious habit,
More moving-delicate, and full of life,
Into the eye and prospect of his soul,
Than when she liv'd indeed,—then shall he mour'n
If ever love had interlaced in his liver,
And wish he had not so accus'd her;
No, though he thought his accusation true.
Let this be so, and doubt not success
Will fashion the even of a better shape
Than I can lay it down in likelihood,
But if all arm but this be level'd false,
Then in the suppression of the lady's death
Will quench the wonder of her infancy:
And, if it sort not well, you may conceal her
(As best he fits her wounded reputation)
In some reclusive and religious life.
Out of all eyes, tongues, minds, and injuries.
Bart. Signior Leonato, let the friar advise you.
And though, you know, my inwardness and love
Is very much in it; but being backed and lost,
Yet, by mine honor, I will deal in this
As secretly, and justly, as your soul
Should with your body.
Bart. Being that I flow in grief,
The smallest twine may lead me.
Friar. 'Tis well consented; presently away;
For to strange sore straights they strain the cure.
Come, lady, to live: this wedding day,
Perhaps, is but prolong'd; have patience, and endure.
Leon. I beg your excus'd.
Friar. Hero, and Leonato.
Bart. Lady Beatrice, have you kept all this while?
Bart. Yea, and I will weep a while longer.
Bart. I will despise you then:
Bart. You have no reason, I do it freely.
Bart. Surely, I do believe you fair cousin is wrong'd.
Bart. Ah, how much might the man deserve of me,
that would right her!
MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

Act IV.

Beat. Is there any way to show such friendship?
Bened. A very even way, but no such friend.
Beat. May a man do it?
Bened. It is a man's office, but not yours.
Beat. I do love nothing in the world so well as you. I hope there's that same friend.
Bened. As strange as the thing I know not: It was as possible for me to say, I love nothing so well as you; but believe me not; and yet I lie not; I confess nothing, nor do I deny nothing: I am sorry for my cousin.
Bened. By my sword, Beatrice, thou lov'st me.
Beat. I do not swear by it, and eat it.
Bened. I will swear by it, that you love me; and I will make him eat it, that says I love not you.
Beat. Will you not eat your word?
Bened. A peace of grace that can be devised to it: I protest, I love thee.
Beat. Why then, God forgive me!
Bened. What offence, sweet Beatrice!
Beat. O, heaven! I have slain me in a happy hour; I was about to protest, I loved you.
Bened. And do it with all thy heart.
Beat. I love you with so much of my heart, that none is left to protest.
Bened. Come, bid me do any thing for thee.
Beat. Kill Claudio.
Bened. I hate not for the wide world.
Beat. You kill me to deny it: farewell.
Beat. Tarry, sweet Beatrice.
Beat. I am gone, though I am here:—There is no such love:—Nay, I pray you, let me go.
Bened. Beatrice.
Beat. In faith, I will go.
Bened. We'll be friends first.
Beat. You darefu'l be friends with me, than fight with mine enemy.
Bened. Is Claudio thine enemy?
Beat. He is not approved in the height a villain, that hath slandered, scorned, dishonored my kind woman!—O, that I were a man!—What! What! hear her in hand until they come to take hands; and then with public accusation, uncovered slander, unmuzzled rancor,—O God, that I were a man! I would eat his heart in the market-place.
Bened. Hear me, Beatrice;—
Bened. Yare with a man out at a window! A proper saying.
Bened. Nay, but, Beatrice;—
Beat. Sweet Hero!—she is wronged, she is slander'd, she is undone.
Bened. Beat.
Beat. Princes and counties! Surely, a princely testimony, a goodly count-confess a sweet galant! If I were a man for his sake!—that I had any friend would be a man for my sake! But manhood is muddled into courtesies, valor into compliment, and men are only turned into tongue, and bated men are thus, as I am now as valiant as Hercules, that only tells a lie, and swears it:—I cannot be a man with wishing, therefore I will die a woman with grieving.
Bened. Sweet, good Beatrice: By this hand, I love thee.
Beat. Use it for my love some other way than swearing by it.
Bened. Think you in your soul the count Claudio hath wronged Hero?
Beat. Yea, as sure as I have a thought, or a soul.
Bened. Enough, I am engaged, I will challenge him; I will kiss your hand, and so leave you: By this hand, Claudio shall render me a dear account: As you hear of me, so think of me. Go, comfort your cousin; I must say, she is dead; and so, farewell.

SCENE II.—A Prison.

Enter CHAPPY, Verges, and Sexton, in gowns; and the Watch, with Conrad and Borachio.

Dogb. Is our whole assembly appeared?

Verg. No, a stool and a cushion for the sexton!
Sexton. Which be the malefactors?
Dogb. Marrv, that am I and my partner.

*Noblemam. A nobleman made out of sugar.

Verg. Nay, that's certain; we have the exhibition to the last.

Sexton. But which are the offenders that are to be examined? let them come before master constable.

Dogb. Yea, marry, let them come before me. What!—What is that same friend?
Bora. Borachio.

Dogb. Pray write down—Borachio—Yours, sirrah!

Con. I am a gentleman, sir, and my name is Conrad.

Dogb. Write down—master gentleman Conrad—am I.—Let them be examined for this.

Con. Bora. Yea, sir, we hope.

Dogb. Write down—that they hope they serve God;—and write God first; for God defend but God at last!—Cover false villains; Masters, it is proved already that you are better than false knaves; and it will go near to be thought so short- ly. How answer you for yourselves!

Bora. Thoughtfully, we say we are none.

Dogb. A marvellous witty fellow, I assure you; but I will go with about him. Come you hither, sirrah; a word in your ear, sir; I say to you, it is thought you are false knaves.

Bora. Sir, I say to you, we are none.

Dogb. Well, stand aside.—For God, they are both in a tale: Here you write down—that they are not enemies.

Sexton. Master constable, you go not the way to examine; you must call forth the watch that are the true accusers.

Dogb. Yea, marry, that's the effect way:—Let the watch come forth.—Masters, I charge you, in the prince's name, accuse these men.

1 Dogb. What heard you him say else?

2 Watch. Marry, that he had received a thousand ducats of don John, for accusing the holy Hero.

Bora. Flat burglary, as ever was committed.

Verg. Yea, by the mass, that it is.

Sexton. What else, fellow?

1 Dogb. Watch. And that count Claudio did mean, upon his words, to disgrace Hero before the whole assembly, and not marry her.

Dogb. O villain! thou wilt be condemned into everlasting other than such.

Sexton. What else?

2 Watch. This is all.

Sexton. And this is more, masters, than you can deny!—Or is him this morning secretly stolen away? Hero was in this manner accused, in this very manner refused, and upon the grief of this suddenly died.—Master constable, let these men be bound, and brought to Leonato's! I will go before, and show him their examination. [Exit.

Dogb. O villain! thou wilt be condemned into everlasting other than such.

Verg. Let them be in bond.

Con. Off, coxcomb!

Dogb. God's my life! where's the sexton? let him write down— the prince's officer, coxcomb.

Verg. I come, let them be in bond.

Con. Off, coxcomb!

Dogb. God's my life! where's the sexton? let him write down— the prince's officer, coxcomb.—

Verg. Let them be in bond.

Con. Away! you are an ass, you are an ass.

Dogb. Dowth thou not suspect my place? Dowth thou not suspect my years?—O that he were here to write me down— an ass!—but, masters, remember, that I am an ass; though it be not written down, yet forget not that I am an ass:—No, thou villain, thou act full of piety, as shall be proved upon my body, and goodwill witness, I am a wise fellow; and, which is more, an officer; and, which is more, a householder: and, which is more, as pretty a piece of man as any is in Messina; and one that knows the law, go to; and a rich fellow enough, go to; and a fellow that hath had losses; and one that hath two gowns, and every thing handsome about him. Away, O, thou villain! thou hast been written down—an ass.

[Exeunt]
ACT V.

SCENE I.—Before Leonato's House.

Enter Leonato and Antonio.

Ant. If you go on thus, you will kill yourself;
And 'tis not wisdom, thus to second grief
Against yourself.

Leon. I pray thee, cease thy counsels,
Which falls into mine ears as proceeded
As water in a sewer: give not me counsel;
Nor let the comforter delight mine ear.
But such a one whose woes do sit with mine.
Bring me a father, that so lov'd his child,
Whose joy of her is overwhelm'd like mine,
And let him speak of patience,
Measure his woe the length and breadth of mine,
And let it answer every strain for strain;
As thus for thus, and such a grief for such,
In every lineament, branch, shape, and form:
If such a one will smile, and stroke his beard:
Cry,—sorrow, woe, and hein, when he should groan;
Pitc'h grief with provokes, make misfortune drink
With candy-waters; bring him yet to me,
And I of him will gather patience,
But there is no such man: For, brother, men
Can counsel, and speak comfort to that grief
Which they themselves not feel; but tasting it,
Their counsel turns to passion, which before
Would give preceptual medicine to receive,
Favored, wrong madness in a sufferer,
Charm ache with air, and agony with words:
No, no: 'tis all men's office to speak patience
To those that writ under the load of sorrow,
But no man's virtue, nor sufficiency,
To be so moral, when he shall endure
The like himself: therefore give me no counsel;
My griefs cry louder than advertisements.
Ant. There is no man from children nothing differ.
Leon. I pray thee, peace; I will be flesh and blood;
For there was never yet philosopher,
That could endure the toothache patiently;
However they have wise the style of gods,
And made a pitch at change and sufficiency.
Ant. Yet bend not all the harm upon yourself;
Make those, that do offend you, suffer too.
Leon. There thou speak'st right, nay, I will do so:
My soul doth tell me, Hero is belied;
And that shall Claudio know, so shall the prince,
And all of them, that thus dis honor her.

Enter Don Pedro and Claudio.

Ant. Here comes the prince, and Claudio, hastily.
D. Pedro. Good den, good den.
Claudio. Good day to both of you.
Ant. Leon, here you, my lord.
D. Pedro. We have some haste, Leonato.
Leon. Some haste, my lord!—well, fare you well, my lord:
Are you so hasty now!—well, all is one.
D. Pedro. Nay, do not quarrel with us, good old man.
Ant. If he could right himself with quarrelling,
Some of us would be how.

Whose wrongs him?

Leon. Marry,
Thou, thou dost wrong me; thou desemblest, thou;
Nor lay thy hand upon thy sword,
I fear thee not.

Claudio. Marry, beshrew my hand,
If it should give your age such cause of fear:
In faith, my hand meant nothing to my sword.
Leon. Tush, tush, man, never leer and jest at me;
I speak not like a dotard, nor a fool;
As, under privilege of age, to brag
What I have done, or you, or what would do.
Were I not old: Know Claudio, to thy head,
Thou hast so wrong'd; mine innocent child and me,
That I am forc'd to lay my reverence by;
And with great hair, bruise one and many days,
Do challenge thee to trial of a man.
I say, thou hast belied mine innocent child;
Thy slander hath gone through and through her
And she lies buried with her ancestors;
Of in a tomb where never scandal slept,

Admonition.
Claus. If he be, he knows how to turn his girdle.
Beau. Shall I speak a word in your ear?
Claus. God bless me from a challenge!
Beau. You are a villain!—I jest not:—I will make you confess. How do you dare, with what you dare:—Do me right, or I will protest your cowardice. You have killed a sweet lady, and her death shall fall heavy on you! Let me hear the reason of all this!
Claus. Well, I will meet you, so I may have good cheer.
D. Pedro. What a feast a feast! A feast!
I, faith, I thank him; he hath bid me to a calf's head and a capon; the which if I do not curse most curiously, say, my knight's naught.
—Shall I not find a weedcock too?
Beau. To weigh with us, it goseth easily.
D. Pedro. I'll tell thee how Beatrice praised thy wit the other day: I said, thou hadst a fine wit: True, said she, a fine little one.
Claus. I, a good wit; Just, said she, it hurts nobody.
Beau. Nay said I, the general is wise: Certain, said she, a wise gentleman:
Beau. Nay said I, he hath the tongues; That I believe, said she for she swore a thing to me on Monday night, which he forewore on Tuesday morning; there's a double tongue; there's two tongues, in one head, did she, in one mouth, trans-shape thy particular virtues; yet at last, she concluded with a sigh, thou wast the properest man in Italy.
D. Pedro. For which she wept heartily, and said she cared not.
D. Pedro. Yea, that she did; but yet for all that, an if she did not hate him deadly, she would love him dearly; that old man's daughter, and us all.
Claus. All, and; and moreover, God saw him when he was hit in the garden.
D. Pedro. But when shall we set the savage bull to the sensible benefactor?
Claus. Yea, and text underneath, Here dwells Benedick the married man?
Beau. Fare you well, boy; you know my mind; I will give you now two to your gossip-like humor: you break jests as braggarts do their blades, which, God be thanked, hurt not.—My lord, for your many courtesies, I must discourse of your company; your brother, the bastard, is fled from Messina: you have, among you, killed a sweet and innocent lady: For my lord back-board, here, and he shall meet; and till then, peace be with him.
—[Exeunt BEATRICE, LEONATO, and BORACHIO.
Claus. He is then a giant to an ape: but then is an ape to doctor such a man.
D. Pedro. But, sooth you, let be; pluck up, my heart, and be sad! Did he not say, my brother was tliee?
Dogb. Come, you, sir; if justice cannot tame you, she shall never weigh more reasons in her balance: nay, an you be a cursing hypocrite once, you must be a cursing hypocrite always.
D. Pedro. How now, two of my brother's men bound! Borachio, one!
D. Pedro. Heaken after their offence, my lord!
D. Pedro. Officers, what offence have these men done?
Dogb. Marry, sir, they have committed false report; moreover, they have spoken untruths; se- condly, that you are slander'd, saith, and all the clad, have believ'd a lady; thrice, they have verified un-just things; and, to conclude, they are lying knaves.
D. Pedro. First, I ask thee what they have done; then, I ask thee what's in their Benedick's head and, lastly, why they are committed; and, to conclude, what you lay to their charge.
D. Pedro. Officers, what is borachio, and in his own division; and, by my troth, there's one meaning well suited.
D. Pedro. Whom have you offended, masters; that are you thus bound to your answer? this learned, constable is too cunning to be understood.
What's your offence!
Bora. Sweet prince, let me go no further to answer; do you hear me, and let this count kill me.
D. Pedro. I have decreed even your very eyes; what your wishions could not discover, the seer of seers have brought to light; who, in the night, overheard me confessing to this man, how den John your bride; now, I suppose, to sully the lady Hero: how you were brought into the orchard, and saw me court Margaret in Hero's garments; how you disgraced her, when you should marry her!
Bora. Yeu, and paid me richly for the practice of it.
D. Pedro. He is composed and framed of treachery—
And did he is upon this villainy.
Claus. Sweet Hero! now thy image doth appear
In the rare semblance that I loved it first.
Dogb. Come, bring away the plaintiff; by this time out of his fiery current, and shall reform the matter.
And, masters, do not forget to specify, when time and place shall serve, that I am an ass.
Verge. Here comes master signior Leonato, and the sexton too.
Re-enter LEONATIO and ANTONIO, with the Sexton.
Leon. Which is the villain? Let me see his eyes That when I note another man like him, I may avoid him: Which of these is he!
Bora. If you would know your wronser, look Leon. Art thou the slave, that with thy breath hast kill'd Mine innocent child?
Bora. Yea, even I alone.
Leon. No, not so, villain; thou bely'st thyself.
Here stand a pair of honorable men,
A first I pricked, thank thee the hand in it—
I thank your princes, for my daughter's death; Record it with your high and worthy deeds;
Twas bravely done, if thou bereft you of it.
Claus. I know not how to pray your patience, Yet I must speak: Choose your revenge yourself; Impose me to what pittance your invention Can lay upon my sin: yet sinnd I not, But how to bring.
D. Pedro. By my soul, nor 1;
And yet, to satisfy this good old man,
I would bend under any heavy weight
That he might run on me.
Leon. I cannot bid you my daughter live,
That were impossible; but, I pray you both, Possess the people in Messina here
How innocent is she, if your love Can labor aught in sad invention,
Hang her an epitaph upon her tomb,
And sing to her bones; sing it to-night—
To-morrow morning, come you to my house:
And since you could not be my son-in-law,
Be yet my nephew: my brother hath a daughter,
Almost the copy of my child's that's dead,
And she is his heir to both of them.
Give her the right you should have given her cousin,
And so do's my revenge.
Claus. Bene. O, noble sir,
Your over-kindness doth wring tears from me!
I do embrace your offer; and dispose
For henceforth of poor Claudio.
Leon. Upon what condition, I will expect your coming To-might I take my leave.—This naughty man Shall face to face be brought to Margaret,
Who, I believe, was pack'dd in all this wrong, Her to it by his brother.
Bora. No, by my soul, she was not;
Nor knew not what she did, when she spoke to me; But always hath been just and virtuous,
In any thing that I do know by her.
Dogb. Moreover, sir, (which, indeed, is not under white and black, this plaintiff here, the offender did call me aw affeece you, let it be remembered
—Serious.
—Insolent.
—Acquaint.
—Combined.
MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING

in his punishment: And also the watch heard them talk together; and they say, he bears a key in his ear, and a lock hanging by it; and borrows money in God's name; the which he hath used so long, and never paid, that now men grow hard-headed, and will lend nothing for God's sake:
Pray you, examine him upon that point.
Lout. I thank thee for thy care and honest pains.
Dob. Thy worship speaks like a most thankful and reverend gentleman, and I praise God for you.
Lout. There's for thy pains.
Dob. God save the foundation!
Leon. Go, I discharge thee of thy prisoner, and I thank thee.
[Exit Leon.]
Dob. I leave an astray knave with thy worship which, I beseech thy worship, to correct yourself, for the more use may be made of it. And keep your worship well: I wish with your worship well; God restore you to health: I humbly give you leave to depart; and if a merry meeting may be wished, God prohibit it:—Come, neighbour.

[Exeunt DOBERY, VERGES, and Watch.
Leon. Until to-morrow morning, lords, farewell.
And, Farewell, my lords; we look for you to-morrow.

D. Pedro. We will not fail.
Claud. To-night I'll mourn with Hero.

[Exeunt DON PEDRO and CLAUDIO.
Leon. Bring these three fellows on; we'll talk with Margaret,
How her acquaintance grew with this lowly fellow.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Leonato's Garden.

Enter Benedick and Margaret, meeting.
Bene. Pray thee, sweet mistress Margaret, deserve well at my hands, by helping me to the speech of Beatrice.
Marg. Will you then write me a sonnet in praise of my beauty?
Bene. In so high a style, Margaret, that no man living shall come over it; for in must comedy truth, thou deservest it.
Marg. To have no man come over me! why, shall I always keep below stairs?
Bene. Thy wit is as quick as the greyhound's mouth, it catches.
Marg. And yours as blunt as the fencer's foils, which hit, but hurt not.
Bene. A most mean wit, Margaret, it will not hurt a woman; and so I pray thee, call Beatrice: I give thee the bucklers.
Marg. Give us the sword, we have bucklers of our own.
Bene. If you use them, Margaret, you must put in the play with a vice; and they are dangerous weapons formaids.
Marg. well, I will call Beatrice to you, who I think, hath legs.

[Exit MARGARET.
Bene. And therefore will come.

The god of love,
That sits above,
And knows me, and knows me.
How pifull I describe—

I mean, in singing; but in loving,—Leander the good swimmerTroilus the first employer of pandars, and a whole book full of these quondam carb-mongers, whose names yet run smoothly in the even road of the vulgar verse, why, then, I say, true love so truly turned over and over as my poor self, in love! Marry, I cannot show it in rhyme; I have tried; I can find out no rhyme to lady bat bat bat, an innocent rhyme; for seventeen, horn, a bastard rhyme; for school, foot, a babbling rhyme; very ominous endines: No, I was not born under a rhyming planet, nor I cannot woo in festival ways.

[Exit BEATRICE.
Sweet Beatrice, wouldst thou come when I called thee?

Beat. Yea, signior, and depart when you bide me.
Bene. O, stay out till then!
Beat. Then, is spoken; fare you well now:—
and yet, ere I go, let me go with that I came for, which is in knowing what hath passed between you and Claudio.
Bene. Only fowl words; and thereupon I will kiss thee. —Wicked.

Beat. Foul words are but foul breath, and foul breath is passable; therefore I will depart un kissed.

Bene. Thou hast stricken the word out of his right sense, so forcible is thy wit: But I must tell thee plainly, Claudio undergoes my challenge; and therefore let either sign any other, or I will subscribe him a coward. And, I pray thee now, tell me, for which of my bad parts dost thou first fall in love with me? For them all together; when maintained so politic a state of evil, that they will not admit any good part to intermingle with them. But for which of my good parts didst thou first fall in love for me? Bene. Some few. For a good epithet! I do suffer love, indeed, for I love thee against my will. Beat. In spite of thy heart, I think; alas! poor heart! If you spit it for yours; for I will never love that which any friend hates. Bene. Thou and I are too wise to woo peaceably. Beat. It appears not in this confession: there is not one wise man among twenty that will praise himself.

Bene. An old, an old instance, Beatrice, that lived in the time of good neighbors; if a man do not erect in this age his own tomb ere he dies, he shall live no longer in monument than the bell rings, and the widow weeps.
Beat. And who are you that is this, think you?
Bene. Question!—Why, an hour in damler, and a quarter in rhenum: Therefore it is most expedient for the wise, (if don Worn his conscience find no ramp, and-{the contrary!} to be the trumpet of his own virtues, as I am to myself: So much for praising myself, (who, I myself will hearken witness is praise-worthily,) and now tell me, How doth thy cousin?

Beat. Very ill.
Bene. And how do you?
Beat. Very ill too.
Bene. Serve God, love me, and mend; there will I leave you too, for here comes one in haste.

[Enter Ursula.
Urs. Madam, you must come to your uncle;—your lord's old coil at home: it is proved, my lady Hero hath been falsely accused, the prince and Claudia mightly abused: and don John is the author of all, who is dead and gone: will you come presently?
Beat. Will you tell me this news, signior?
Bene. I, I, I, I will live in thy heart, die in thy lip, and be buried in thy eyes, and, moreover, I will go with thee to thy uncle.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Inside of a Church.

Enter Don Pedro, Claudio, and Attendants, with music and lutes.
Claud. Is this the monument of Leonato?
Alfio. It is, my lord.
Claud. [Reads from a scroll.]

Do me to death by slanderous tongues,
Was the hero that here lies:

Death in guardiant of her wrongs,
Gives her fame which never dies:
So the life, that died with shame,
Lives in death with glorious fame.

Hang thou there upon the tomb, [Affixing it.

Praying her when I am dead.—

Now, music, sound, and sing your solemn hymn.

SONG.

Pardon, goddess of the night,
Those that slay thy virgin knight,
For the which, with songs of woe,
Round about her tomb they go.
Midnight, aid our noon;
Help us to sigh and groan,
Hearty, hearty.
Graves own, and yield your dead,
Till death be uttered,
Hearty, hearty.

Claud. Yes unto thy bones good night! Yearly will I do this rite.

D. Pedro. Good morrow, masters; put your torches out:
The work is done; prey; and look, the gentle day,

Stir. Reward.
Before the wheels of Phoebus, round about
Dapples the drowsy east with spots of grey:
Thanks to you all, and leave us; fare you well.

Claud. Good morrow, masters; each his several way.

D. Pedro. Come, let us hence, and put on other weeds;
And then to Leonato’s we will go.

Claud. And, Friar, now with luckier issue speeds,
Than this, for whom we render’d up this woé!
[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—A Room in Leonato’s House.

Enter LEONATO, ANTONIO, BENEDICK, BEATRICE, URSULA, Friar, and HERO.

Friar. Do not tell me she was innocent?
Leon. No, and I will make her an example to all such.

And then to Leonato’s we will go.

Claud. And, Friar, now with luckier issue speeds,
Than this, for whom we render’d up this woé!
[Exeunt.

Enter Don Pedro and CLAUDIO, with Attendants.

D. Pedro. Good morrow to this fair assembly.

 Leon. Good morrow, prince; good morrow, Claudio.

Friar. We here address you; are you yet determined?

To-day to marry with your brother’s daughter?

Claud. I’ll hold my mind, were she an Ethiope.

Leon. Call her forth, brother, here’s the friar ready.

D. Pedro. Good morrow, Benedick: Why, what’s the matter,
That you have such a February face.

So full of frost, of storm, and snow?

Claud. I think, he thinks upon the savage bull:—
Tush, fear not, man, we’ll tip thy horns with gold,
And all Europe shall rejoice at thee;
As once Farnace did at last, at love.
When he would play the noble beast in love.
Beat. Bull Jove, sir, had an amiable love;
And some such strange bull kept your father’s cow,
And got a calf in that same noble feat,
Much like to you, for you have just his beard.

Re-enter ANTONIO, with the Ladies masked.

Claud. For this I owe you; here come other reckonings,
Which is the lady I must seize upon?

Ant. As good as she, and I do give you her.

Claud. Why, then she don’t: Sweet, let me see your face.

Leon. No, that you shall not, till you take her hand.

Before this friar, and swear to marry her.

Claud. Give me your hand before this holy friar;

I am your husband, if you like of me.

Hero. And when I lived I was your other wife:

Umasking.

And when you loved, you were my other husband.

Claud. Another Hero!

Hero. Nothing certain:
One Hero died defil’d; but I do live,
And, surely as I live, I am a maid.

D. Pedro. The Fugitive Hero! Hero that is dead!

Leon. She dies, my lord, but whiles she slander lived.

Friar. All this amazement can I qualify;
When, after that the holy rites are ended,
I’ll tell you largely of fair Hero’s death:
Mean time let wonder seem familiar,
And to the chapel let us presently.

Bene. What is it, Friar?—Which is Beatrice!

Beat. I answer to that name;
[Unmasking.

What is your will?

Bene. Do not you love me?

Beat. No, no more than reason.

Bene. Why, then your uncle, and the prince, and Claudio,
Have been deceived: for they swore you did.

Beat. Do you not love me?

Bene. No, no more than reason.

Beat. Why, then my cousin, Margaret and Ursula, Are much deceived: for they did swear, Bene. They swore that you were almost sick for me.

Beat. They swore that you were well-looked for me.

Bene. ’Tis no such matter:—Then you do not love me!

Beat. No, truly, but in friendly recompense.

Leon. Cousin, aunt, I am sure you love the gentleman.

Claud. And I’ll be sworn upon’t, that he loves me;

For here’s a paper, written in his hand,
A halting sonnet of his own pure balm,
Fashion’d to Beatrice.

Hero. And here’s another.

Write in my cousin’s hand, stolen from her pocket,
Containing her affection unto Benedick.

Bene. A miracle! here’s our own hands against our hearts!—Come, I will have thee; but, by this light,
I take thee for pitt.

Beat. I would not deny you; but, by this good day,
I yield upon great persuasion; and, partly, to save your life; for I was told you were in a consumption.

Bene. Peace, I will stop your mouth—

Kissing her.

D. Pedro. How dost thou, Benedick the married man?

Bene. I’ll tell thee what prince; a college of wedding-crackers cannot douse out of my humors:
Just think, I mean a cake for a-sake, or an epigram:
No: If a man will be beaten with brains, he shall wear nothing handsomely about him; in brief, since I do propose that to marry, I will think nothing to my purpose that the world can say against it; and therefore never doute at me for what I have said against it; for man is a giddy thing, and this is my conclusion.—For thy part, Claudio, I did think to have beaten thee; but in that thou art like to be my kinsman, live unbruised, and love my cousin.

Claud. I had well hope thou wouldst have denied Beatrice, that I might have cud,clelled thee out of thine own: But after my lady there is a double deal: which, out of question, thou wilt be, if my cousin do not look exceeding narrowly to thee.

Beat. I once, come, we are friends:—let’s have a dance, ere we are married, that we might lighten our own hearts and our wives’ heels.

Leon. We’ll have dancing afterwards.

Beat. Mine, my lord, there’s what; therefore, play, music—Prime, thou art sad; get thee a wife, get thee a wife: there is no such more reverend than one tipped with horn.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord, your brother John is in the hall.

And brought with armed men back to Messina.

Beat. Think not on him till to-morrow; I’ll devise thee brave punishments for him.—Strike up, papers.

Dance.—Exeunt.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Athens. A Room in the Palace of Theseus.

Enter Theseus, Hippolyta, Philostrate, and Attendants.

Thee. Now, fair Hippolyta, our nuptial hour Draws on apace; four happy days bring in Another moon: but, oh, methinks, how slow
This old moon wanes! she lingers my desires,
Like to a step-dame, or a dowager,
Long withering out a young man's revenue.

Hipp. Four days will quickly steep themselves in nighs;
Four nights will quickly dream away the time;
And then the moon, like to a silver bow
New bent in heaven, shall behold the night
Of our solemnities.

Thee. Go, Philostrate,

[Exit Philostrate.

Hippolyta. I wooed thee with my sword,
And won thy love, I due thee injuries; But I will wed thee in another key,
With pomp, with triumph, and with revelling.

Enter Egeus, Hermia, Lysander, and Demetrius.

Ege. Happy be Theseus, our renowned duke! Thee. Thanks, good Egeus! What's the news with thee?

Ege. Full of occasion come I, with complaint Against my child, my daughter Hermia.— Stan'd forth, Demetrius—My noble lord, This man hath my consent to marry her— Stan'd forth, Lysander—And, my gracious duke, This hath bewitched the bosom of my child: Thou, thou, Lysander, thou hast given her rhymes,
For ever the society of men.
Therefore, fair Hermia, question your desires,
Know of your youth, examine well your blood,
Whether, if you yield not to your father's choice,
You can enjoy of such a world as you desire.
For aye to be in shady cloister now'd,
To live a barren sister all your life,
Chant at full moon hymns to the cold truant moon.
Then, to that nurse, and to that maidservant,
To undergo such maiden pilgrimage:
But cutthell happy is the rose distill'd,
Than that which withering on the virgin thorn,
Grows with its single and unsullied blood.
Herm. If I will grow, so live, so die, my lord,
Ere I will yield my virgin patent up
Upon my lordship, and true unwon with yoke
My soul consents not to be sovereignly.
The. Take the time to pause; and, by the next new moon,
(The second day-between my love and me,
For everlasting bond of fellowship.)
Upon that day either prepare to die,
For disobedience to your father's will;
Or else, to well Demetrius, as he would;
Or on Diana's altar to protest,
For aye, austerity and single life.
Din. Relent, sweet Hermia;—And, Lysander, yield.
Thy crazed title to my certain right.
Lys. You have her father's love, Demetrius:
Let me have Lysander's; do you me him?
Enr. May Lysander! true, he hath my love;
And what is mine my love shall render him;
And she is mine; and all my right of her
I do assign unto Demetrius.
Lys. I am, my lord, as well deriv'd as he,
As well possess'd; my love is more than his;
My fortunes every way as fairly rank'd,
I not with vantage, as Demetrius.
And, which is more than all these boists can be,
I am below'd of beauteous Hermia:
Why should not I then prosecute my right?
Demetrius? I know, I know, to his head I made
Love to Neld's daughter, Helena,
And won her soul; and she, sweet lady, does
Upon this sportive and inconsistent man.
The. I must confess, that I have heard so much,
And with Demetrius thought to have spoke thereof;
But, being over-ful of self-affairs,
My mind did lose it. But, Demetrius, come,
And come, Egeus; you shall go with me:
I have some private schooling for you both.—
For you, fair Hermia, look you arm yourself
To check your fancies to your father's will;
Or else the law of Athens yields you up
(Which by no means we may extenuate)
To death, or to a vow of single life.—
Comant. Hippolyta. What, what shall, my love?
Demetrius, and Egeus, go along:
I must employ you in some business
Against our nuptial; and confer with you
Of something nearly that concerns yourselves.
Exit. With duty and desire, we follow you.
Lys. How now, my love! Why is your cheek
So blithe? I never saw your eyes so bright.
If you make these roses do so far fast?
Herm. Believe, for want of rain; which I could well
Betray them from the tempest of mine eyes.
Thou canst not love, but better love, that ever I could read,
Could ever hear by tale or history,
The course of true love never did run smooth:
But acts of might, and actions different in blood.
Her. O cross! too high to be endur'd by love!
Lys. Or else mislaid, in respect of years;
Her. O, spere! too old to be enam'd by you;
Lys. O, what is mine, upon the choice of friends;
Her. O love, to choose love by another's eye?
Lys. Or, if there were a sympathy in choice
War, death, or sickness did lay siege to it;
May, it may be, for want of as a source.
Swift as a shadow, short as any dream;
Brief as the lightning in the coldeight night;
That in a splint, unboil'd both heaven and earth,
And dry our mouth and tongue. No further let's hold;
The jaws of darkness do devour it up:
So quick bright things come to confusion.
Herm. Trifles true lovers have been ever cross'd,
It stands as an edict in destiny:
Then let us teach our true patient, Because it is a customary cross;
As due to love, as thoughts, and dreams, and sights,
Wishes and heart's delight. Let us health:
Lys. A good permission; therefore, hear me,
Hermia.
I have a widow aunt, a dowager
Of great revenue, and she hath no child;
From Athens is her house remote seven leagues;
And she respects me as her only son.
There, gentle Hermia, may I marry thee;
And to that place Philo Atticus cannot pursue us: if thou lovest me then,
Steal forth thy father's house to morrow night;
And in the morning I shall meet thee, where Where I did meet thee once with Helen,
To do observance to a morn of May,
There will I stay for thee.
Her. My good Lysander!
Lys. I swear to thee by Cupid's strongest bow,
By his best arrow with the golden head;
By the simplicity of Venus' doves;
By that which knitteth souls, and prospers lovers;
And by that fire which burn'd the Carthage queen,
When the false Trojan under sail was seen;
By all the vows that ever men have broke,
In numbers more than ever woman spake:
In that same place thou hast appointed me,
To-morrow truly will I meet with thee.
Lys. Keep promise, love; Look, here comes Helena.
Enter Helena
Hel. God speed fair Helena! Whither away!
Lys. Call you me fair? that fair again musy,
Demetrius loves you fair: O happy fair!
Your eyes are lode-stars; and your tongue's sweet
More tuneful than lark to shepherd's ear,
When wheat is green, when hawthorn buds appear.
Sickness is catching; 0, were favor so!
Yours is the fairest, and it is your Helena.
Lys. My car should catch your voice, my eye your eye,
My tongue should catch your tongue's sweet melody.
Were the world mine, Demetrius being hated,
The rest I'll give to be to you translated.
O, teach me how you look; and with what art
You sway the motion of Demetrius' heart.
Her. I frown upon him, yet he loves me still.
Lys. O, that your frowns would teach my smiles such skill!
Her. I give him curses, yet he gives me love.
Lys. O, that my prayers could such affection move.
Her. The more I hate, the more he follows me.
Lys. The more I love, the more he hateth me.
Her. The faults of Helen, is no fault of mine.
Lys. None, but your beauty; would that fault were mine!
Her. Take comfort: he no more shall see my face,
Lysander and myself will fly this place.—
Before the time I did Lysander see,
Seem'd Athens as a paradise to me;
O then, what graces in my love do dwell,
That death hath turn'd it heaven unto hell!
Lys. Helena, to you our minds we will unfold,
To-morrow night when Phæbe doth behold
Her silver visage in the wat'ry glass,
Deck'd with the velvet and the sable grass,
(A time that lovers' lights do still conceal)
Through Athens: gates have we devised to seal.
Her. And in the wood, where often you and I
Upon saint primrose-beds were wont to lie,
Emptying our bosome of their counsel sweet;
There my Lysander and myself shall meet;
And there, the Athenians, turn away our eyes,
To seek new friends and stranger companies.
Farewell, sweet play-fellow; pray thou for us,
And good luck grant thee thy Demetrius.
Keep well thy visage, and we must shut our sight
From lovers' food, till morrow deep midnight.

Enter Hermia
Lys. I will, my lord.—Hermia, adieu:
As you do Fortune's dots to the table, love O, Lys.
Hel. How happy some, or other some can be!
Through Athens I am thought as far as she.
But what of that? Demetrius thinks not so;
Scene II. MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM.

He will not know what all but he do know.

And as he errs, doing on Hermia's eyes,

So I, admiring of his qualities.

Things base and vile, holding no quantity,

Love can transpose to form and dignity.

Love looks not with the eyes, but with the mind;

And therefore is wing'd Cupid painted blind.

Nor hath Love's look so sweet influence o'er

Wings, and no eyes, heere unheedly haste.

And therefore is Love said to be a child,

Because in choice he is so oft beguiled.

As waggish boys, in mirth themselves forewarre,

So the boy Love is perqurd every where:

For ere Demetrius look'd on Hermia's eye,

Haply could down eft all, that he was only mad:

And when this had some heat from Hermia felt,

So he dissolved, and showers of oaths did melt

I will go tell him of thy Hermia's flight;

Then to the wood will lie, to-morrow night,

Pursue her; and for this intelligence

If I have thanks, it is a dear expence:

But herein mean I to surch my pain,

To have his sight thither, and back again. [Exit.

Scene II. The same. A Room in a Cottage.

Enter Snug, Bottom, Flute, Snout, Quince, and Starveling.

Quin. Is all our company here!

Snug. We are, and all seven of us;

The men in the main, according to the set

Quin. Here is the scroll of every man's name,

Which is thought fit, through all Athens, to play in

Our players, before the duke and duchess, on

This wedding-day at night.

Bol. First, good Peter Quincke, say what the play treats on; then read the names of the actors

And so grow to a point.

Quin. Marry, our play is—The most lamentable comedy, and most cruel death of Pyramus and Thisby.

Bol. A very good piece of work, I assure you,

And a merry. Now, good Peter Quincke, call forth

Your actors by the scroll: Masters, spread yourselves.

Quin. Answer, as I call you.—Nick Bottom, the weaver.

Bol. Ready: Name what part I am for, and Proceed.

Quin. You, Nick Bottom, are set down for Pyramus.

Bol. What is Pyramus? a lover, or a tyrant.

Quin. A lover, that kills himself most gallantly for love.

Bol. That will ask some tears in the true performing of it: If I do it, let the audience look to their eyes; I will move storms, I will coddle in some measure. To the rest.—Yet my chief humor is for a tyrant: I could play Ercles rarely, or a part to tear a cat in, to make all split.

The raving rocks,

With sivating shocks,

Shall break the locks

Of prison gates:

And Phibbus' car

Shall shine from far,

And make and mar

The foolish fates.

This was lost. Now name the rest of the players.

—This is Ercles' vein, a tyrant's vein: a lover is more condoleing.

—Flute. Francis Flute, the bellows-mender.

Flut. Here, Peter Quince.

Quin. You must take Thisby on you.

Flut. What is Thisby? a wandering knell?

Quin. It is the lady that Pyramus must love.

Flut. Nay, faith, let me not play a woman; I have a beard coming.

Quin. That's all one; you shall play it in a mask,

And you may speak as small as you will.

Bol. An I may hide my face, let me play Thisby too: I'll speak in a monstrous little voice—Thisnes.

Thisnes.—Al, Pyramus, my lover dear; thy Thisby

Love, and loves thee: I will prostrate

Quin. No, no: you must play Pyramus, and,

Flute you Thisby.

Bol. Well, proceed.

Quin. Robon Starveling, you must play Thisby's mother; then, the tinker.

Starv. Here, Peter Quincke.

Quin. You, Pyramus's father; myself Thisby's father.—Snug, the joiner, you, the man's part:

And I, hope here is a play fitted.

Snug. Have you the lion's part written? I pray you, if it be, give it me, for I am slow of study.

Quin. You may do it extempore, for it is nothing but roaring.

Bol. Let me play the lion too: I will roar, that I will do any man's heart good to hear me; I will roar, that I will make the duke say 'Let him roar again, Let him roar again.'

Quin. An you should do it too terribly, you would fright the duchess and the ladies, that they would shriek: and that were enough to hang us all.

All. That would hang us every mother's son.

Bol. I grant you, friends, if that you should fright the ladies out of their wits, they would have no more discretion but to hang us: but I will agree to any more, so that I will roar you as sweetly as any sucking dove; I will roar you as twelve any midnightale.

Quin. You can play no part but Pyramus; for Pyramus is the sweet-faced man: a proper man, as one shall see in a summer's day: a most lovely,

gentleman-like man: therefore you must needs play Pyramus.

Bol. Well, I will undertake it. What beard were I best to play it in?

Quin. Why, what you will.

Bol. I will discharge it in either your straw-colored beard, your orange-lavyn beard, your purple-in-grain beard, or your French-crown-color beard, your perfect yellow.

Quin. Some of your French crowns have no hair at all, and then you will play bare-faced.

But, masters, here are your parts; and I am to treat you, request you, and desire you to, e'en them by to-morrow night; and meet me in the palace wood, a mile without the town, by moonlight; there will we rehearse: for if we meet in the city, we shall be dog'd with company, and our devices know. In the mean time, I will draw a bill of properties, such as our play wants. I pray you, tarry me not.

Bol. We will neglect; and there we may rehearse more decently, and courageously. I take pains;

be perfect; adore.

Quin. At the duke's oak we meet.

Bol. Enough: Hold, or cut bow-string.

[Exeunt.

Act II.

Scene I.—A Wood near Athens.

Enter a Fairy at one door, and Puck at another.

Puck. How now, spirit! whither wander you?

Puck. Over hill, over dale,

Through thorn bush, thosorugh briar,

Over park, over pile,

Thosorugh flood, thosorugh fire,

I do wander every where,

* Spirit.

* Eyes.

Flit. Swifter than the moon's sphere;

And I serve the fairy queen;

To dew her orbs upon the green:

The cows shall kneel to see her; and

In their gold coats spots you see;

Those be ribbes, fayre favors;

In those freckles like their savors;

I must go seek some dewdrops here,

And hang a pearl in every cowslip's ear.

* As if.

* Articles required in performing a play.

* At all events.

* Circles.
Scene II.

Enter Oberon, at one door, with his train, and Titania, of another, with hers. Oberon. Ill meet by moonlight, proud Titania. Titania. What, jealous Oberon! Fair, skirp, hide: I am not so hard bedewed and crowned with the stars as thou, with thy birch and courtier's grace; When I slip from her balm, down topples she, and tailor crease, and falls into a wound; And then the whole quire hold their hips, and thole; And old news, in their集成, and me to swear, and a merrier hour was never wasted there. — But room, fairy, here comes Oberon. Oberon. And here my mistress: Would that he were gone!

SCENE III.

Tell me, thou lye of spirits, I’ll be gone; Our queen and all her elves come here anon. Puck. The king doth keep his revels here to-night. Take heed, the queen come not within his sight, For Oberon is set up in fell and wrath, Because that she, as her attendant, hath A lovely boy, stolen from an Indian king; She never had so sweet a changeling: And just now, they say, should have the child Knight of his train, to trace the forest wild: But she, perfervice, withholds the loved boy. Crowns him with flowers, and makes him all her joy: And meet they never in grove, or green, By fountains clear, or spangled star-light sheen, But they do square: that all their elves, for fear, Creep from the fresh lap, and hide in the crumhorn case. Fair. Either I must show your shape and making quite, Or else you are that shrewd and knavish sprite; Call’d Keeling-tail: are you not he, That rich the maidens of the villagery; Skin milk; and sometimes labor in the quern, And boodles the breathless housewife churn; And sometimes make the drink to bear no burned! Misled night-wanderers, laughing at their harm! Those that Hobomak call you, and sweet Puck, You do their work, and they shall have good luck: And you be he? Puck. I am that merry wanderer of the night, I jest to Oberon, and make him laugh. When I a fat and bean-fed horse beguile, Neighing in likeness of a silly foal; And sometime lurk in a gossip how, I was quizzed on the wisp of a child. And, when she drinks, against her lips I bob, And on her wither'd dew-lap pour the ale. The wisest aunt, telling the saddest tale, Sometimes for three-foots stool mistake me: Then slip I from her balm, down topples she, And tailor crease, and falls into a wound; And then the whole quire hold their hips, and thole; And old news, in their集成, and me to swear, and a merrier hour was never wasted there. — But room, fairy, here comes Oberon. Oberon. And here my mistress: Would that he were gone!

The ox hath therefore stretch'd his yoke in vain, The ploughman lost his sweet; and the green corn Hath rotted ere he youth attain'd a beard: The fold stands empty in the drowned field, And e'en the worms are pleased with the marian flocks; The ninth men's morris is fill'd up with mud; And the quaint mazes in the wandan green, For lack of tread, are indistinguishable: The handmaids were to use their weft and here; Now night is how with hymn or carol blest: — Therefore the moon, the government of floods, Pale in her anger, washes all the air. That rheumatic diseases do abound: And through this temperature, we see The seasons alter: hoary-headed frosts Fall in the bosom of the crumhorn case; And on old Hyems' chin, and icy crown. An odorous chaplet of sweet summer buds Is, as in mocket, set: The spring, the summa The coast is检and, angry winter, change Their wonted lvries; and the mazed world, By their increase, now know not which is which: And this same procecy of evils comes From our debate, from our discussion; We are their parents and original. Oberon. Do you amend it then; it lies in you: Why should Titania cross her Oberon? Do not be a little meddling boy, To be his buckman. Titania. Set your heart at rest, The fairy land buys not the chill of night: His mother was a votress of my order; And, in the spiced Indian air, by night Full often hath she gossip'd by my side; And say with me on Neptune's yellow sails, Marking the embarked traders on the flood; When we have laugh'd to see the sails conceive, And grow big-belched, with the wanton wind: Which, with, with wind and with swimming gait (Following her own, with rich young squirm,) Would imitate; and sail upon the land, To fetch me treasures, and return again, As from a voyage, rich with merchandise. But she, being mortal, of that day did die; And, for her sake, I do now rear up her bones. And, for her sake, I will not part with him. Oberon. How long within this wood intend you stay? Titania. Perchance, till after Theseus' wedding-day. If you will patiently dance in our round, And see our moonlight revels, go with us; If not, shun me, and I will spare your haunts. Oberon. Give me that boy, and I will go with thee. This Oberon, and thy kindred. — Farewell, away: We shall chide downright, if I longer stay. Exeunt Titania, and her train. Oberon. Well, go thy way: thou shalt not from this TILL I torment thee for this injury.— My gentle Puck, come hither: Thou remember'st Since once I sat upon a promontory, And heard a merman, on a dolphin's back, Uttering such dulcet and harmonious breath, That the rude sea gasp'd at hearing it; And certain star-shot madly from their spheres, To hear the sea-nymph's music. Puck. I remember. Oberon. 'Tis that very time I saw, but thou couldst not, Flying between the cloud and the earth, Cupid all arm'd: A certain sin he took At a fair vestal, chambered by the vest; And left his love-shaft quiver'd from his bow. As it did quiver there a thousand youthful hearts: But I might see young Cupid's fiery shaft Quench'd in the chaste beams of the watyr moon; And the imperial votress pass'd on it, In maiden meditation, fancy-free. Yet mark'd I where the bolt of Cupid fell: It fell upon a little western flower, Before milk-white, now marish purlple with love's wound— And wilt not have that call it love-in-idleness. Fetch me that flower; the herb I show'd thee once: The juice of it on sleeping eye-lids laid, Will make or woman or man mad: On the next live creature that it sees Fetch me this herb: and be thou here again, Ere the Levantian can swing a league.
Enter Demetrius, Helena following him.

Dem. I love thee not, therefore pursue me not. Where is Lysander, and fair Hermia? The one I'll slay, the other slayeth me. Thou toldst me they were stolen into this wood, And thou and I, and wood, and wood, because I cannot meet with Hermia. Hence, get thee gone, and follow me no more. Hel. If you draw me, you hard-hearted ladman; But yet you draw not true, for my heart Is true as steel: Leave you your power to draw, And I shall have no power to follow you. Do, do, do I entice you? Will you speak you fair? Or rather, do I not in plainest truth Tell you — I do not, nor can I love you! Hel. And even for that do I love you the more. I am your companion: and, Demetrius, The more you beat me, I will fawn on you: Use me as your spaniel, strike me, strike me, Neglect me, lose me; only give me leave, Unworthy as I am, to follow you. What worse place can I be in your love, And yet a place of such respect with me? Than to be used as you use your dog!

Dem. Tempt not too much the hatred of my spirit; For I am sick, when I do look on thee. Hel. And I am sick when I look not on you. Do you suppose your love can be too much, To leave the city, and commit yourself Into the hands of one that loves you not? To trust the opportunity of night, And the ill counsel of a desert place, With the rich worship of your virginity. Hel. Your virtue is my privilege for that. It is not night, when I do see your face. Therefore I think I am not in the midst: Nor doth this wood lack worlds of company; For you, in my respect, are all the world: Then how can it be so? I am a dunce; When all the world is here to look on me! Dem. I'll run from thee, and hide me in the brakes.

And leave thee to the mercy of wild beasts. Hel. The wildest beast not such a heart as you. Run when you will, the story shall be chang'd; Apollos flies, and Daphne holds the clothe; This wilder pursues the griffin; that sex Makes speed to catch the tiger: fleshoodless speed! When cowards pursue, and e'er flies.

Dem. I will not stay the questions: let me go: Or, if thou follow me, do not believe But I shall do thee in chief in the wood. Hel. Ay, in the temple, in the town, the field, You do me mischief, Fye, Demetrius! You gentlemen do set a scandal on a man! We cannot fight for love, as men may do; We should be woo'd, and I were not made to woo, I'll follow thee, and make a heaven of hell, To die upon the hand I love so well.

Enter Demetrius and Hermia.

Ope. Fare the well, nymphs: ere he do leave this grove, Thou shalt fly him, and he shall seek thy love.—

Re-enter Peck.

Hast thou the flower there! Welcome, wanderer. Peck. Ay, there it is.

Ote. Well, then, I almost prays thee, give it me.

I know a bank whereon the wild thyme blows, Where ox-eye and the golden violet grows; Quite over-come with larkspur and tobin; With sweet musk-rose, and with cistamine: A bower may I, Or bring in one or two. By. The greater cowslip, the greater cowslip.

There sleeps Titania, some time of the night. Lys. Laid in these flowers with delight and delight, And there the snake throws her enamelled skin, Weed wide enough to wrap a fairy in: And with the joy of this I'll streak her eyes And make her father laugh: But I take thou some of it, and seek through this grove: A sweet Athenian lady is in love With a disdainful wood-nymph, fair and fair: But do it, when the next thing he esposes May be the lady: Thou shalt know the man By the Athenian garments he hath on. Effect it with some care that he may prove More fond on her, than she upon his love: And look thou meet me ere the first cock crow; Peck. Fear not, my lord, your servant shall do so.

SCENE III.—Another part of the Wood.

Enter Titania with her train.

Tit. Come, now a roundelay and a fairy song; Then, for the third part of a minute, hence; Some, to kill cankers in the musk-rose buds; Some, with war-reems for their feather wings, To make my small elvish coats; and, some, keep back The clamorous owl, that nightly hoots, and wonders Of our quaint sounds: Sun, moon, and stars, That to our eyes by night are made asleep; Then to your offices, and let me rest.

SONG.

1 Fai. You sweet sprites, with double tongue, Thorin delir-i-ous, be not so n't; News, a blin-lin-bornings, do not wrong; Come not near our fairy queen.

Chorus. Philomel, with melody, Sing in our sweet lullaby; Latin, lull, lullaby, lull, lull, lullaby; Never harm, nor spell, nor charm, Come our lucky lullaby; So good night, with lullaby.

II.

2 Fai. Venerating sprites come not here; Hence, you long-legged spaniels, hence; Butter black, approach not near; Worm, nor snail, do no offence.

Chorus. Philomel, with melody, &c.

1 Fai. Hence, away; now all is well; One, about, stand sentinel.

[Exeunt Fairies. TITANIA sleeps.

Enter Oberon.

Obe. What thou seest, when thou dost wake, [Squeezes the flower on TITANIA'S eye-brows. Do it for thy true love sake; Love andausandish for his sake: Be it cresses, or cat, or bear, Pard, or bear with bristled hair, In thy eye that shrivels it: When thou wak'st, it is thy dear; Wake, when some vile thing is near. [Exit.

Enter Lysander and Hermia.

Lys. Fair love, you faint with wandering in the wood; And to speak truth, I have forgot our way; We'll rest us, Hermia, if you think it good, And tarry for the comfort of the day. Her. Be it so, Lysander: find you out a bed, For upon this bank will rest my head. Lys. One, one heart, two bosoms, and one truth. Her. Nay, good Lysander; for my sake, my dear, Lie further on yet, do not lie near. Lys. O, take the sense, sweet, of my innocence, Love takes the meaning, in love's conference. I mean, that my heart unto yours is knit, So that but one heart we can make of it: two bosoms interchanged with one name, So then, two bosoms, and a single truth. Then, by your side, no bed-room me deny; For, lying so, Hermia, I love you, I. Her. Lysander reddles very pretty:— Now much beshrew my manners and my pride, If Hermia meant to say Lysander lied. But, gentle friend, for love and courtesy:

4 A Kind of damns.
5 Hates.
6 Sports.
7 Mists.
8 Slow-worms.
9 The small tiger.
Lie farther off; in human modesty.
Such separation, as, may well be said,
Become a virtuous bachelor and a maid:
So far be distant; and good night, sweet friends!
This lovely night, call all the sweet by name;
Lys. Amen, amen, to that fair prayer, say I;
And then end life, when I end loyalty!
Here is my bed; sleep give thee all his rest!
Her. With half that wish the watchers eyes be press'd!
[They sleep.]

Enter Puck.

Puck. Through the forest have I gone,
But Athenian found I none,
On whose eyes I might approve
This dower's force in stirring love,
Night and silence! who is here! Wreaths of Athens be thine wearer:
This is he my master said,
Deepsest the Athenian maid:
And here the maiden, sleeping sound,
On the dark and gritty ground,
Pretty soul! she durst not lie
Near this lack-love, kill-courtesy.
Churl, upon thy eyes I throw,
All the power this charm clothe o'er?
When thou wak'st, let love forbid
Sleep'seat on thy eye-brow.
So awake, when I am gone;
For I must now to Oberon.
[Exit.

Enter Demetrius and Helen, running.

Helen. Stay, though thou kill me, sweet Demetrius,
Dem. I charge thee, hence, and do not haunt me thus.
Helen. O, wilt thou darke! leave me! do so not.
Dem. Stay, on thy pelf! I alone will go.
[Exit. Demetrius.
Helen. O, I am out of breath in this fond chace!
The more my prayer, the lesser is my grace.
Happy is Hermia, whereas'er she lies;
For she hath blessed and attractive eyes,
How came her eyes so bright! Not with salt tears;
If so, my eyes are often wash'd thers.
No, no, I am as silly as a bear;
For beasts that meet me, run away for fear:
Therefore, no marvel, though Demetrius
Do, as a monster, by my presence thus:
What wicked and dissembling glass of mine
Made me compare with Helen's sphery eye—
but who is here!—Lysander! on the ground!
Dead! or asleep! I see no blood, no wound;
Lysander, if you live, good sir, awake.
Lys. Amen, amen, to that fair prayer;
Stay! and run through fire I will, for thy sweet sake, [Exit. Waking.

ACT III.

SCENE I. — The same. The Queen of Fairies lying asleep.

Enter Quince, Snug, Bottom, Flute, Snout, and Starveling.

Lord. Are we all met?
Quain. Pat, pat; and here's a marvellous convenient place for our rehearsal! This green plot shall be our stage, this hathorn brake, our prying-house and we will do it in action, as we will do it before the duke.

Bot. Lord, Peter Quince—
Quain. What say'st thou, bully Bottom?
Bot. There are things in this comedy of Pyramus and Thisbe, that will never please. First, Pyramus must draw a sword to kill himself; which the ladies cannot do. How can I answer you? I know not.
Snout. By taking, a parlous fear.
Snug. I believe, we must leave the killing out, when all is done.
Bot. Not a whit; I have a device to make all well. Write me a prose; and let the prose seem to say, we will do no harm with our swords; and that Pyramus is not killed indeed: and for the more better assurance, tell them, that I, Pyramus, am not Pyramus, but Bottom the weaver: This will put them out of fear.
Quain. Well, we will have such a prose; and it shall be written in eight and six.
Bot. No, make it two more; let it be written in eight and ten.

Scene II. — The same. The Lion and the Ass. Will the ladies be afraid of the lion?

Sfrau. I fear it, I promise you.
Bot. Masters, you ought to consider with yourselves: to bring in, God forbid! a lion among ladies, is a most dreadful thing: for there is not a more fearful wild-beast than your lion, living; and we ought to look to it.
Sfrau. Therefore, another prose must tell, he is not a lion.

Bot. Nay, you must name his name, and half his face must be seen through the lion's mouth and be made to look and be the same defect.—Ladies, or fair ladies, I would wish you, or I would request you, or, I would entreat you, not to fear, not to trouble: my life for yours. If you think I come hither as a lion, it were pity of my life: No, I am no such thing; I am a man as other men are: — and there, indeed, let him

From all that is dear.
name his name; and tell them plainly, he is Snug the Joiner.

Quin. Well, it shall be so. But there is two hard things; that is, to bring the moon-light into a chamber: you know, Pyramus and Thisby meet by moon-light.

Snug. Both the moon shine, that night we play our play.

Bot. A calendar, a calendar! look in the almanac; find out moonshine, find out moonshine.

Quin. Yes, it doth shine that night.

Bot. Play it then you may have a casement of the great chamber window, where we play, open; and the moon shine in at the casement.

Quin. Ay; or else one must come in with a bush of rough cast, and say, he comes to disfigure, or to present, the person of moon shine.

Then, there is another thing: we must have a wall in the great chamber; for Pyramus and Thisby, says the story, did talk through the cracks of a wall.

Snug. You never can bring in a wall.—What say you, Bottom?

Bot. Some man or other must present wall: and let him have some plaster, or some loan, or some tough cast about him, to scentily wall; or let him hold his fingers thus, and though that cranny shall Pyramus and Thisby whisper.

Quin. I hope it may be, then all is well. Come, sit down, every mother's son, and rehearse your parts. Pyramus, you begin: when you have spoken your speech, enter into that brake, and so every one according to his part.

Enter Puck behind.

Puck. What hempen house-skins have we swag gering here?

So near the chalice of the fairy queen?

What, a play toward! I'll be an auditor;

An actor too, perhaps, if I see cause.

Quin. Speak, Pyramus.—The scene, stand forth.

Py. Thisby, the flowers of odious suors sweet—

Quin. Odors, odors.

Py. Odors, odors sweet.

So both may stand, to that deceased Thisby dear.

Bot. Hark, a voice! stay thou but here awhile;

And by and by I will to thee appear. [Exit. Puck. A stranger Pyramus that's ever played here! [Aside. Exit.]

This. Must I speak now?

Quin. Ay, marry, must you? for you must understand, he does but to see a noise that he heard, and to come again.

This. Most radiant Pyramus, most lily-white of hue,

Of color like the rose on triumphant brier.

Most blushing juvenes and most lovely Jew.

As true as truest horse, that yet would never tire,

I'll meet thee, Pyramus, at Nym's tomb. [Exit. Quin. Now, young man: Why you must not speak that yet; and you answer to Pyramus; you speak all your part at once, curse and all—Pyramus, enter; your cue is past; it is, never tire.

Re-enter Puck and Bottom with an Ass's head.

This. O. As true as truest horse, that yet would never tire.

Py. If you were fair, Thisby, I were only then—

Quin. 0 monstrous! 0 strange! we are haunted. Pray, masters! fly, masters! help! [Execut Clowns.

Puck. I'll follow you, I'll lead you about a round,

Through box, through bush, through brake, through bower;

Sometime a horse I'll be, sometime a hound,

A boar, a headless bear, sometime a fire,

And neigh, and bark, and grunt, and roar, and burn,

Like horse, hound, hog, bear, fire, at every turn. [Exit.

Bot. Why do they run away? this is a knavery of them, to make me afraid.

Re-enter Clown.

Snug. O, Bottom, thou art changed! what do I see?

Bot. What do you see? you see an ass's head of your own; Do you?

Thicket. Young man.

* The last words of the preceding speech, which serve as a hint to him who is to speak next.

Re-enter Quince.

Quin. Bless thee, Bottom! bless thee! thou art translated. [Exit.

Bot. I see their knavery: this is to make an ass of me; to prove if I can understand. But I will not stir from this place, do what they can: I will walk up and down here, and I will sing, that they shall hear I am not afool. [Sings. The sweet oak, so black of hue,

With orange-yellow bough,

The throst with his note so true,

The corn with little quail.

Tity. What angel wakes me from my dovery bed?

[Exit. Waking.

Bot. The flinch, the sparrow, and the lark,

The pie-a-song cuckoo grey.

Whose foot may make a mark with his toot mark,

And darts his answer, say—or, indeed, who would set his wit to so foolish a bird? who would give a bird the lie, though it cry, cuckoo, never so?

Tity. I pray thee, gentle mortals, sing again;

Mine ear is much enamored of thy note.

So is mine eye enchant'd to thy shape;

And thy fair virtue's force perforce doth move me,

On the first view of thee; and I will hear thee.

Bot. Mirth, mirth, mirth, mistress, you have little reason for that:

And yet to say the truth, reason and love keep little company together now-a-days: the more they are the more they will not make them friends. Nay, I can gleeck upon occasion.

Tity. Thou art as wise as thou art beautiful.

Bot. Not so, neither; but if I had wit enough to get out of this wood, I have enough to serve mine own turn.

Tity. Out of this wood do not desire to go;

Thou shalt remain here, whether thou will or no.

I am a sport of no common rate:

The summer still doth tend upon my state,

And I do love thee; therefore, go with me;

I will give thee fairies to attend on thee,

And they shall fetch thee jewels from the deep,

And sing, while thou on pressed flowers dost sleep:

And I will purr thy mortal greatness so,

That thou shalt like an airy spirit go—

Peas-blossom! Cowslip! Motil! and Mustard-seed!—

Enter four Fairies.

1 Fair. Ready.

2 Fair. And I.

3 Fair. And I.

4 Fair. Where shall we go?

Tity. Be kind and courteous to this gentleman;

Hop in his walks, and gambol in his eyes;

Feed him with apricocks and dewberries,

With purple grapes, green figs, and mulberries;

The honey bees steal from the humble-bees,

And, for night-tapers, crop their waxen thugs,

And light them at the fairy glow-worms' eyes,

To have my love to bed, and to arise;

And pluck the wings from painted butterflies,

To fan the moonbeams from his sleeping eyes;

Not to him, elves, and do him courteous.

1 Fair. Hail mortal!

2 Fair. Hail!

3 Fair. Hail!

4 Fair. Hail! [Exit. Bot. I cry your worship's mercy, heartily.—I beseech your worship's name!

Col. Cobweb.

Bot. I shall desire you of more acquaintance, good master Cobweb: if I cut my finger, I shall make bold with you. Your name, honest gentleman? Peas-blossom.

Bot. I pray you, commend me to mistress Squash, your mother, and to master Peashead, your father.

Good master Peas-blossom, I shall desire you of more acquaintance. To your name, I beseech you, sir! Missus-Mustard-seed.

Bot. Good master Mustard-seed, I know your patience well: that same cowardly, giant-like oxen that hath devoured so, are not below your house: I promise you, your kindred hath made no eyes water ere now. I desire you more acquaint ance, good master Mustard-seed.

Tity. Come wait upon him; lead him to my lower.
The moon, methinks, looks with a watery eye;
And when she weeps, weeps every little flower,
Lamenting some enforced chastity.
Tie up my love's tongue, bring him silently.

SCENE II.—Another part of the Wood.

Enter Orson.

Ose. I wonder, if Titania be awak'd;
Then, what it was that next came in her eye,
Which she must dote on in extremity.

Enter Puck.

Here comes my messenger.—How now, mad spirit?
What night-mare now about this haunted grove?

Puck. My mistress with a monster is in love.
Now go seek close and concealed.
While she was in her dell and sleeping hour,
A crew of patches rude mechanicals,
That work for bread upon Athenian stalls,
Were met together to rehearse a play,
Intended for great Theseus' nuptial day,
The shallowest thickskin of that barren sort,
Who Pyramus presented, in their sport
Forsook his scene, and enter'd in a barge:
When I did him at this advantage take,
An ass's nayl I fix'd on his head;
Anon, his Thasie must be answered,
And for a play some comedy.
When they him spy,
As wild glee that the creeping fowler eye,
Or russet-pated thoroughs, many in sort,
Rising and coming at the gum's report
Sever themselves, and unlade the sky;
So, at his sight, away his fellows fly;
And, at our stamp, here o'er and o'er one falls;
His murder cries, and help from Athens calls.
Their sense thus was lost, with their fears thus strong,
Made senseless things begin to do them wrong:
For brutes and thorns at their apparel snatch;
Some, sleeper, some, lists: from yielders all things catch.

I led them on in this distracted fear,
And left sweet Pyramus translated there:
When in that moment, (so it came to pass,)
Titania wake d, and straightway lov'd an ass.
O'er. This falls out better than I could devise.
But hast thou get'thAbed the Athenian's eyes
With the love-juice, as I did bid thee do?

Puck. I took him sleeping,—that is finish'd too,—
And the Athenian woman by his side;
That, when he wake'd, of force his wife must be ey'd.

Enter Demetrius and Hermia.

O'er. Stand close; this is the same Athenian.
Puck. This is the woman, but not this the man.

Dem. O, why rebuke you him that loves you so?
Lav breath so bitter on your bitter foe.
Hr. Now I but chide; but I should use thee worse;
For these mortals, in their own truth appear to curse.
If thou hast slain Lysander in his sleep,
Being o'er shoes in blood, plunge in the deep,
And kill me too.
The sun was not so true unto the day,
As he to me: Would he have sto'd away
From sleeping Hermia! I'll believe as soon.
This whole earth may be forlorn and lost,
Miss the moon and miss the centre crease,
No displease o'er her brother's moonshine with the antipodes:
It cannot be he but thou hast murder'd him:
So should a murderer lose his soul, to do grim.
Dem. So should the murder'd book; and so should I,
Pier'd through the heart with your stern cruelty:
Yet you, the murderer, look as bright as clear,
As your sweet Venus in her shimmering sphere.

Herm. What's this to my Lysander! where is he?
Ah, good Demetrius, wilt thou give him me?

Dem. I had rather give his espree to my hounds.
Herm. Do; go, out, our! thou driv'st me past the bounds
Of maiden patience.  Hast thou slain him then?
Herm. What? be never number'd among men!
O, what a train of active contumelies!

Dem. Oh; I have thus: I have seen that face;
Durst thou have look'd on him, being awake,
And hast thou kill'd him sleeping! O brave touch!
Could not a worm, an adder, do so much!

An adder did it: for with doubter tongue
Than thine, thou serpent, never adder sung.

简单 follows.

Instruct.

Dearn. You spend your passion on a mispris'd mood;
I am not guilty of Lysander's blood;
Nor is he dead, for anath that I can tell.
Hr. Nay, thou hast led me then, that he is well.

Durn. And if I could, what should I get therefore!
Hr. A privilege, never to see me more.
And from thy hate I preserue part I so
See me no more; whether he be dead or no.

Exit.

Dearn. There is no following her in this fierce vein:
Here, therefore, for a while I will remain.
So sorrow's heaviness doth heavier grow
For debt that bankrupt sleep doth sorrow owe;
Which now, in some slight measure, it will pay,
If for his tender here I make some stay.

Durn. What hast thou done? thou hast mistaken
And laid the love-juice on some true love's sight:
Of thy misprision must perforce ensue.
Some one will say 'tis not, and not a fair turn'd true.

Puck. Then fate o'er-curles; that, one man holding troth,
A million fail, confounding oath on oath.
O'er. About the wood I go swifter than the wind,
And Helena of Athens look they find:
All fancy-sick she is, and pale of cheer;
With sights of love, that eves the fresh blood dear:

Hel. Why, what's the matter? What's the matter?
Is he there?
O'er. He is there.
Hel. If he be there, I know the way to sing
I'll charm his eyes, against she do appear.

Puck. I go, I go; look how I go;
Swifter than arrow from the Tartar's bow.

Exit.

O'er. Flower of this violet die,
With Cupid's arrow's,
Sink in apple of his eye!
When his love he doth close,
Let her shine so gloriously
As the Venus of the sky.
When thou wak'st, if she be by,
Beg of her for remedy.

Re-enter Puck.

Puck. Captain of our fairy band,
Hermia is here at hand;
And the young Pyramus by me,
Pleading for a lover's see;
Shall we their fond pacient see?
O, what fools these mortals be!

O'er. Stand aside: the noise they make,
Will cause Demetrius to awake.

Puck. Then will two at once, woe one;
That must needs be sport alone;
And those things do best please me,
That beal preposterously.

Enter Lysander and Hermia.

Lys. Why should you think, that I should woe
In scorn?
Scorn and derision never come in tears;
Look, when I woe, I weep; and vows so born,
Faint in my duty, had all truth appeared to curse.
How can these things in men seem scorn to you,
Bearing the badge of faith, to prove them true?

Hel. You do advance your cunning more and more.
When truth kills truth, O devilish-holy fray!
These vows are Hermia's: Will you give her o'er?
Wretch oath with oath, and you will nothing
Your vows, to her and me, put in two scales,
Will even weigh; and both as light as tales.

Lys. I had no judge but thee, to whom I swore.
Hel. O, my mind, now you give her o'er.

Lys. Demetrius loves her, and he loves not you.

Dern. I love her in my way,
Oh, Helen, goddess, nymph, perfect divine!
To what, my love, shall I compare thine eye?
Crystal is maddy. O, how ripe in show
These kissing cherries, tempting sweet grow!

Dearn. Do, me?
This pure, dear white, this sense of bliss!

Hel. O spirits! O hell! I see you all are bent
To set against me, for your merriment.
If you were civil, and knew courtesy,
You would not do me thus a false turnd injury.
Can you not hate me, as I know you do,

Mistaken.

Lovestruck.

Countenance.
But if you were men, as men you are in show,
You would not use a gentle lady so;
To lock, and swear, and make your parts,
When I am sure, you hate me with your hearts,
You both are rapiers, and love Hermia;
And now both rapiers, to mock Helen:
And now I see, the sword is out of play,
To compare tears up in a poor maid's eyes,
With your derision! none, of noble sort,
Would so offend a virgin, and extort.
A poor man's pathetics, all to make you sport.
Lys. You are unkind, Demetrius: be not so:
For you love Hermia; this, you know, I know:
And here, with all good will, with all my heart,
In Hermia's love, I sport in vain; and
And yours of Helen to me bequeath,
Whom I do love, and will do to my death.
Hel. Never did slickers waste more idle breath.
We had best, Lysander, to thy Hermia. I will none:
If ever I loved her, all that love is gone.
My heart with her, but as guest-wise, soujourn'd;
And now to Helen it is home returned,
There to remain.
Lys. Helen, it is not so.
Dem. Disparate not the faith thou dost not know,
Lest, to thy profit, I will make too bold.
Look, where thy love comes; yonder is thy dear.
Enter Hermia.
Lys. Thy dark night, that from the eye his function takes.
The car more quick of apprehension makes,
Wherein it doth impair the seeing sense,
It pays my hearing doubts, my looking sense.
Thou art not by mine eye, Lysander, found;
Mine ear, I thank it, brought me to thy sound.
But why unkindly dost thou leave me so?
Lys. Why should he stay, whom love doth press to go?
Hel. What love could press Lysander from my side?
Lysander's love, that would not let him hide.
Fair Helen: who more raptudst the night
Than all you fiery eyes and eyes of light.
Why seek'st thou leave? could not this make thee know,
The hate I bear thee made me leave thee so?
Helen. You speak not as you think it cannot be.
Hel. Lo, she is one of this confederacy!
Now I perceive they vanity, all three,
To fashion this false sport in spite of me.
Inferious Hermia; most ungrateful maid!
Have you conjured, have you with these contriv'd,
To part me thus this fair self desde!
Is all the counsel that we two have shar'd!
The sisters' vows, the hours that we have spent,
What we have chiefly in each other found.
For parting us—0, and is all forgot!
All school-days' friendship, childhood innocence!
We, Hermia, like two artificial gods,
Have with our needles creat'd both a flower,
Both on one sapphire, sitting on one cushion,
Both warbling of one song, both in one key;
As if our hands, our sides, voices, and minds,
Had been one proper piece.
Lysander, if I may,
Like to a double cherry, seeming parted:
But yet a union in partition,
Two lovely berries moulder on one stem:
So was her heart, and mine two seeming one heart;
Two of the first, like coals in heraldry,
Doubt but to one, and crowned with one crest:
And will you rent our ancient love asunder,
To part you with men in scorn of your poor friend!
It is not friendly, 'tis not maidenly:
Our sex, as well as I, may chide you for it;
Though alone I do feel the injury.
I am amazed at your great passionate words:
I scorn you not; it seems that you scorn me.
Hel. Have you not set Lysander, as in scorn,
That I may see your eyes and face
And made you other love, Demetrius?
(Who even but now did spur me with his foot,)
To call me goddess, nymph, divinest, and rare,
Perciess celestial! When they more press on thee
To her he hates! and wherefore doth Lysander
Deny your love, so rich wthin his soul,
And tender me, forsoth, affection;

* Heartily.
* Pay dearly for it.
* Cleark.
* Ingenious.
* Needles.

But by your setting on, by your consent!
What though I be not so in grace as you,
So huned upon love, so fortunate;
And unnumbered pleasures and graces,
This you should pay, rather than despise.
Hel. I understand not what you mean by this.
Lys. Ay, do, persee, counterfeit sad looks,
Make in my face, when I turn my book;
Wink at each other; hold the sweet jest up!
This sport, well carried, shall be chronicled.
If you have any pity, grace, or manner,
You would not make such an unpleasantment.
But fare ye well: 'tis partly none own fault;
Which death, or absence, soon shall remedy.
Lys. Stay, gentle Hermia; hear my excuse;
Lysander, my love, my soul, fair Helen!
Hel. O excellent!

Lys. Madam, is your mind not set out,
To prove him false, that says I love thee not.
Dem. I say, I love thee, since he can do.
Lys. If thou say so, withdraw, and prove it too.
Dem. Quick, come—
Lys. Away, you Elizabeth!

No, no, sir!—he will seem to break loose: take on, as you would follow:
But yet come not; you are a tone man, go!
Lys. Hang it, thou cat, thou bair: vile thing,
Lys. What should I hurt her, strike her, kill her dead!

Although I hate her, I'll not harm her so.
Lys. What, can you do me greater harm, than hate?
Hate me! wherefore! O me! what news, my love,
Am not I Hermia? Are not you Lysander?
Lys. And marvel now, as was so,
Since night, you lov'd me, yet, since night you lov'd me;

Lys. Thy love? out, haughty Tartar, out!
Hel. Do you not join?

If, Yes, sooth; and so do you.
Dem. Yes.

Lys. Demetrius, I will keep my word with thee.
Lys. I would, I had your bond: for, I perceive,
A week broken words; and I'll not trust your word.
Lys. What should I hurt her, strike her, kill
her dead!

Although I hate her, I'll not harm her so.
Lys. What, can you do me greater harm, than hate?
Hate me! wherefore! O me! what news, my love,
Am not I Hermia? Are not you Lysander?
Dem. And marvel now, as was so,
Since night, you lov'd me, yet, since night you lov'd me;

Lys. Thy love? out, haughty Tartar, out!
Hel. Ay, by my life;
And never did desire to see thee more.
Therefore, be out of hope, of question, doubt,
Be certain, nothing true; be no jest,
That I do hate thee, and love Helen.

Lys. O me! you juddler! you canker blossom!
You thief of love! what have you come by night
And sol in my love's heart from him!

Fine, fine!
Have you no modesty, no maiden shame,
No touch of bashfulness! What, will you tear
Tentative answers from my bashful tongue?
Fie, fie! you counterfei't me, you puppet you!

Lys. Puppet! why so? Ay, that way goes the game.

Now I perceive that she hath made compared Between our estates, she hath urg'd her height
And with her personage, her tall personage;
Her height, forsooth, she hath prevail'd with him:—
And you are grown so high in his esteem,
Because I am so dwarfish, and so low!
How low am I, thou paiz'd maypole! speak;
How low am I? I am not yet so low,
But that his nails can reach unto thine eyes.
Hel. I pray you, though you mock me, gentlemen.

Let her not move me: I was never cursed;
I have no gift at all in shrewishness;
I am a right maid for my cowardice;
Let her not strike me: you, perhaps, may think,

* Wry faces.
* A worm that prey's on buds of flowers

Shrewish or mischievous.
MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM.

Act III.

Because she's something lower than myself;
That I can match her.

Her.

Lower! barb, again.

Her.

Good Hermia, do not be so bitter with me.
I evermore did love you, Hermia.
Do your best keep your counsel; I never wrong'd you;
Save, that, in love unto Demetrius,
I told him of your stealth unto this wood:
He followed you; for love, I follow'd him:
But he hath chid me loves, and threatned me
To strike me, spurn me, may, to kill me too;
And now, so you will let me quit go,
To Athens will I bear my lolly back.
And follow you no further: let me go:
You see how simple and how fond I am.

Her.

Why, you go: who is that hinder's

Hab.

A foolish heart that I leave here behind.

Her.

What, with Lysander?

Hab.

With Demetrius.

Lys.

Be not afraid; she shall not harm thee, Hermia.

Dem.

No, sir; she shall not, though you take her part.

Hel.

Oh, when she's angry, she is keen and shrewd:
She was a vixen, when she went to school;
And, though she be but little, she is fierce.
Her.

Little aye! nothing but low and little!—
Why will you suffer her to flout me thus?
Let me come to her.

Lys.

Get you gone, you dwarf!

You minions, of hindering knot-grass made;
You head, you acorn.

Dem.

You are too officious
In her behalf that scorn your services.
Let her alone; speak not of Hermia.
Take not her part: for if thou dost meddle,
Never so little show of love to her,
Thou shalt aby it.

Lys.

Now, now, she holds me not;
Now follow, if thou darest, to try whose right,
Or thine, or mine, is most in Hermia.

Dem.

Follow! nay, I'll go with thee chick by
Your counsel, Lysander, and Demetrius.

Her.

You, mistress, all this coil is long of you!

Nay, go not back.

Hel.

I will not trust you;
Nor longer stay in your combustency.
Your hands, and mine, are quicker for a fray;
My legs are longer, though, to run away.
[Exeunt Lys., Dem., and Her.

Obe.

This is thy negligence: still thou mistak'st,
Or else commit'st thy knowledges wilfully.
Puck.

Believe me, king of shadows, thou mistook,
Dost not to tell me, I should know the man
By the Athenian hegar he gird on;
And so far blameless proves my enterprize,
That I have pointed an Athenian's eyes:
And so far am I glad it so did sort,
As this their jumbling I esteem a sport.

Obe.

Thou seest these lovers seek a place to fight:
Here, therefore, Reuben, overcast the night;
The stary welkin cover thou amain
With drooping fog, as black as Acheron;
And lead these tussles rival so astray,
As come not within another's way:
Like to Lysander sometime frame thy tongue,
Then stir Demetrius up with bitter wrong;
And sometime rail thou like Demetrius;
And do in such each other look but hate;
Till over their brows death counterfeiting sleep
With leaden legs and sweaty wings doth creep;
Then crush this herb into Lysander's eye;
Whose liquor hath this virtuous property,
To take from thence all error, with his might,
And make his eye-balls roll with wond'ring sight.
When they next wake all this derelict;
She shall seem a dream, and fruitless vision;
And back to Athens shall the lovers tend,
With league, whose date till death shall never end.
Whiles I in this I do to thy counsels stand,
I'll age my sovereign, and beg her Indian boy;
And then I will her charmed eye release
From monster's view, and all things shall be peace.

Puck.

My fairy lore this must be done with haste,
Foolish.

---Anciently, knot-grass was believed to prevent the growth of children.

Pretend.

Go.

---called.]
For night's swift dragon outs the clouds full fast,
And yon clear suns Aurora's diurner;
At whose approach, ghosts, wandering here and there,
Tramp home to church-yards: dammed spirits all,
That in mischiefs, and sorrows have skirmish'd,
Already to their wormy beds are gone;
For fear lest day should take their shames upon,
They willfully themselves exil from light,
And make their eye consort with black-head's night.
Oh.  But we are spirits of another sort;
I with the Morning's Love have oft made sport;
And, like a forester, the crows may treat,
Even till the eastern birds all fly red,
Opening on Neptune with fair blessed beams,
Turns into yellow cold his salt-green streams.
But, mothers breastes, be sure, make no delay;
We may effect this business yet ere day.
[Exeunt.

Puck.

Up and down, up and down;
I will lead them up and down;
I am fear'd in field and town;
Goblin, lead them up and down!

Here comes one.

Enter Lysander.

Lys.

Where art thou, proud Demetrius? Speak thou now.

Puck.

Come, within; drawn and ready. Where art thou?

Lys.

I will be with thee straight.

Puck.

Follow me then
To fairester ground.

[Exeunt Lysander, as following the voice.

Enter Demetrius.

Dem.

Lysander! speak again
Thou runaway, thou coward, art thou fled?
Speak. In some bush! Where dost thou hide thy head?

Puck.

Thou coward, art thou brazening to the stars,
Telling the bushes that thou look'st for wars,
And wilt not come! come, recreant; come, thou child!
I'll whip thee with a rod: He is dead'd,
That draws a sword on thee.

Dem.

Yes; art thou there?

Puck.

Follow my voice; we'll try no manhood here.

[Exeunt.

Re-enter Lysander.

Lys.

He goes before me, and still dares me on;
When I come where he calls, then he is gone.
The villain is much lighter hec'd than I:
I followed fast, but Dian she did fly;
That fallen am I in dark unseen way,
And here will rest me. Come, thou gentle day!

For if but once thou show me thy grey light,
I'll find Demetrius, and revenge this spite.

[Exeunt.

Re-enter Puck and Demetrius.

Puck.

Ho, ho! ho, ho! Coward, why com'st thou about me,

Dem.

Abide me, if thou darest; for well I wot,
Thou runn'st before me, shifting every place;
And dast not stand, nor look me in the face.

Where art thou?

Puck.

Come hither; I am here.

Dem.

Nay, then, thou mock'st me. Thou shalt hang by this dear.

If ever I thy face by daylight see;
Now, go thy way. Fainthness constraineth me
To measure out my length on this cold bed.—
By day's approach look to be vestured.

[Exeunt.

[Exeunt down and sleeps.

Enter Helena.

Hel.

O weary night, O long and tedious night,
Abate thy hours; shine, comfort, from the cast;
That I may lack to Athens, by day-light,
From these that my poor company detest,
And, shall that sometime shoots up my sorrow's eye,
Steal me awhile from mine own company.

Puck.

Yet but three! Come one more;
Two of both kinds, make up four.

Here she comes, erewild and sad:
Cupid is a knavish lad,
Thus to make poor females mad.

Ophæus, the paramour of Aurora.
ACT IV.

SCENE 1. —The same.

Enter Titania and Bottom. Fairies attending; ORBERON behind scene.

Tit. Come, sit thee down upon this flowery bed, While thy amiabledores do thy. And stick musk-roses in thy sleek smooth head, And kiss thy i' th' face, my gentle joy. But where's your Peas-blossom? Pet. Ready.

Bot. Monsieur Cobweb; good monsieur, get your weapons in your hand, and kill me a red-hipped hum-bled bee on your right elbow, and, good monsieur, have the honey-bay. Do not fret yourself too much in the action, monsieur; and, good monsieur, have a care the honey-bay break not: I would be loth to have you overthrown with a honey-bay, signior. — Where's the monsieur Mustard-seed? Must. Ready.

Bot. Give me your niche; monsieur Mustard-seed. Pray, you leave your courtesy, good monsieur. Must. What's your will? Bot. Nothing, good monsieur, but to help cavalero Cobweb to scratch. I must to the barber's, monsieur; for, methinks, I am marvellous hairy about the face: and I am such a tender ass, if my hair do but tickle me, I must scratch.

Tit. What, wilt thou hear some music, my sweet love? Bot. I have a reasonable good ear in music: let us have the songs and the bones. Tit. Or, say, sweet love, what thou desirest to eat. Bot. Trudge, my lord: I could munch thy dry good oats. Methinks I have a great desire to a bottle of bay; good bay, sweet bay hath no fellow. Tit. I have a venorous fairy that shall seek The squirrel's board, and fetch thee new nuts.

Bot. I had rather have a hundred, or two, of dried peas. But I pray you, let none of your people straggle; I have an exposition of sleep come upon me. I will sleep thou, and I will wind thee in my arms.

Fairies, begone, and be all ways away. [Exit Fairies.]

Bot. So both the woodland, the sweet honey-suckle, Gentle entwined, the feeble joy so Eniting the barky fingers of the elm, O, how I love thee! how I do thee. [They sleep.

[Enter Oberon and Puck.]

Oyb. Welcome, good Robin. See'st thou this sweet sight? Her dotage now I do begin to pity. For meeting her of late, behind the wood, Seeking sweet sleep, in this hateful fool, I did upbraid her, and fall out with her: For she her hairy temples then had rounded With cotelet and fringed flowers; And that same dew, which sometime on the buds Was wont to swell, like round and orient pearls, Stood now within the pretty flowers' eyes, Like tears that did their own disgrace bewail. When I had, at my pleasure, taunted her, And she, in mild terms, begg'd my patience, Stroke. Fist.

[Enter Theseus, Hippolyta, Egeus, and train.]

The. Go, one of you, find out the forester; — For now our observation is perform'd; And since we have the rewards of the day, My love shall bear the music of our hounds, — Unfood in the upper western valley: go — Despatch, I say, and find the forester. — We will, fair queen, up to the mountain's top, To mark the marks the musical confusion Of hounds and echo in conjunction. Hye. I was with Hercules, and Cadmus, once, When in a wood of Crete they had the bear With hounds of Sparta: never did I hear Such gallant chiding; for, besides the groves, The shades, the fountains, every region near, Seem'd all one natural cry: nor did I hear So musical a discord, such sweet thunder. Thb. My hounds are bred out of the Spartan kind,
So fled He so sanded; and their heads are hung
With ears that sweep a way the morning dew,
Crook-kneed, and dew-lapp'd like Thessalian bulls;
Now in pursuit, but match'd in mouth like bells,
Each under each. A cry more tuneable,
Was, that he hold's a flower clipp'd by the horn,
In Crete, in Spara, not in Thessaly;
Judge when you hear,—But, soft; what nymphus are these?
Ege. My lord, this is my daughter here asleep;
And this, Lyndsey; this Demetrius is;
This Helena, old Nedar's Helena.
I wonder of their being here together.
Thus in the night:
No doubt they rose up early, to observe
The rite of May; and, hearing our intent,
Came here in grace of our solemnity.—
But, speak, Egeus; is not this the day
That Hermia should give answer of her choice?
Ege. It is, my lord.
The. Go, but the huntsmen wake them with their horns.

Helena and snouts within. Demetrius, Lysander, Hermia, and Helena, wake and start up.

The. Good-morrow, friends. Saint Valentine is past.
Be in these wood-birds but to couple now?
Ege. Pardon, my lord.
[He and the rest kneel to Theseus.

The. I pray you all, stand up.
I know you are two rival enemies;
How comes this genteel concord in the world,
That hatred is so far from jealousy,
To sleep by hate, and fear no enmity?
Lys. My lord, I shall reply amazedly,
Half sleep, half waking; But as yet, I swear
I cannot only say how I came here:
But, as I think, (for truly would I speak,—
And now I do bekethink me, so it is—)
I came with Hermia hither; our intent
Was, to discourse for news from Athens, where we might be Without the peril of the Athenian law.
Ege. Enough, enough, my lord; you have enough!
I beg the law, the law, upon his head.—
They would have stol'n away, they would, Demetrius,
Thence to have redeemed you and me;
You of your wife: and me, of my consent;
Of my consent that she should be your wife.

Dem. My lord, fair Helen told me of their stealth,
Of this their purpose hither to this house;
And I am thus hither follow'd them.

Helena in fancy: following me.
But, my good lord, I wot not by what power,
(But my good power, as it is,) my love to Hermia,
Melting as doth the snow, seems to me now
As the remembrance of an idle caved,
Which in my childhood I did dose upon:
And, as the death, the virtue of my heart,
The object, and the pleasure of mine eye,
Is only Helena. To her, my lord,
Was I betroth'd ere I saw Hermia:
But, like in sickness, did I loath this food;
Now do I wish it, love it, long for it,
And will for evermore be true to it.
The. Fair lovers, you are fortunately met:
Of this discourse we more will hear anon.—
Egeus, I will overawe your will;
For in the temple by and by with us,
These couples shall eternally be knit.
And, for the morrow; when is something worn,
Our purpose'd hunting shall be set aside.—
Away, with us, to Athens: Three and three,
We'll hold a feast in great solemnity.—
Come, Hippolyta.

[Exeunt Theseus, Hippolyta, Egeus, and Train.

Dem. These things seem small and undistinguishable.
Like far-off mountains turned into clouds.
Egeus. Methinks, I see these things with parted eye.
When every thing seems double.

The. So methinks:
And I have found Demetrius like a jewel,
Mine own, and not mine own.

Dem. It seems to me,

That yet we sleep, we dream—Is not it so, you think?
The duke was here, and bid us follow him?
H. Yes; and my father.
H. And Hippolyta.
Lys. Nor And he bid us follow to the temple.

Dem. Why then, we are awake: let's follow him;
And, by the way, let us recount our dreams. [Exeunt.

As they go out, Bottom awakes.

Bot. When my eye comes, call me, and I will answer:—my next is, Most fair Pyramus.—Hey ho!—Peter Quince!-Flute, the fellows-mender; Snout, the tinker! Starting! Gods my life! Stolen hence, and left me asleep! I have had a mass rare vision. I have had a dream,—past the wit of man to say what dream it was: Man is but an ass: I know not what I said in my dream: it shall be called Bottom's Dream, because it hath no bottom; and I will sing it in the latter end of the play, before the duke. Perverse, to make it the more gracious, I shall sing it at her death. [Exeunt.

Enter Quince, Flute, Snout, and Starveling.

Flute. Have you sent to Bottom's house?—Is he come home yet?

Quince. He cannot be heard of. Out of doubt, he is transported.

Flute. If he come not, then the play is marred; it goes not forward, doth it?

Quince. It is not possible: you have not a man in all Athens, able to discharge Pyramus, but he.

Flute. Yet that which is best may the best of any handcraft man in Athens. Quince. Yea, and the best person too: and he is a very paramour, for a sweet voice.

Flute. You must say a paragon: a paramour is, God bless us, a thing of nought.

Enter Snug.

Snug. Masters, the duke is coming from the temple, an there is two or three lords and ladies more married: if our sport had gone forward, we had all been made men.

Flute. Sweet bully Bottom! Thus hath he lost six-pence a day during his life: he could not have 'scape sixpence a-day: an the duke had not given him sixpence a-day for playing Pyramus, I'll be bound, he would have deserved it: sixpence a-day, in Pyramus, or nothing.

Enter Bottom.

Flute. Where are these lads? where are these hearts? Quine. Bottom!—O most courageous day! O most happy hour!

Bot. Masters, I am to discourse wonders: but ask me not what; for, if I tell you, I am no true Athenian. I will tell you every thing, right as it fell out.

Quince. Let us hear, sweet Bottom.

Bot. Not a word of me. All that I will tell you, is, that the duke hath dined: Got your apparel together; good stairs to your boards, new ribbons to your pumps; meet presently at the palace; every man look out his part; for, the short and long of it, you shall all play in: it may come to this: let us have clean linen; and let not him that plays the lion, pare his nails, for they shall hang out for the lion's claws. And, most dear actors, eat no pancakes to-night; eat no rose-ear garlic, for we are to utter sweet breath; and, I do not doubt, but to hear them say, it is a sweet comedy. No more words; away! go away! [Exeunt.

* The flies are the large chaps of a hawk.
² Love.
ACT V.

Which makes it tedious: for in all the play
There is not one word apt, one player fitter.
And tragi-cal, my noble lord, it is;
For Pyramus therein doth fill himself.
Which, when I saw rehearsed, I must confess,
Made mine eyes water; but more merry tears
The passion of loud laughter never shed.
What are they, that do play it?
Philost. Har-fand-ered men, that work in Athens
here,
Which never lab'd in their minds till now;
And now have told their unbread memories
With this same play, against your nuptial.
The. And we will hear it.
Philost. No, my noble lord,
It is not for you: I have heard it ever.
And it is nothing, nothing in the world;
Unless you can find sport in their intents.
Extremely stretch'd and comm'd with cruel pain,
To do you service,
The. I will hear that play:
For never anything can amuse,
When simplicity and duty tender it.
Go, bring them in;—and take your places, ladies.

Enter Philostrate.
This I love not to see wretchedness o'ercharg'd,
And duty in his service perish.
The. Why, gentle sweet, you shall see no such thing.
This. He says, they can do nothing in this kind.
The. The kinder we to give them thanks for nothing
Our sport shall be, to take what they mistake:
And what poor duty can do,
Noble respect takes it in might, not merit.
Where I have come, great works have purposed
To greet me with promis'ded welcomes;
Where I have seen them shiver and look pale,
Make periods in the midst of sentences,
Throttle their practis'd accent in their tears,
And, in conclusion, dumbly have broke off,
Not paying me a welcome: 'Trust me, sweet,
Out of this silence, yet, I piec'd a welcome;
And in the modesty of fearful duty
I read as much, as from the rattling tongue
Of saucy and audacious eloquence.
Love, therefore, and tongue-tied simplicity,
In least, speak most, to my capacity.

Enter Philostrate.
Philost. Do please your grace, the prologue is address'd.
The. Let him approach. | Flourish of trumpets.
Enter Prologue.

Pro. If we offend, it is with our good-will,
That you should think, we come not to offend,
But with good-will. To show our simple skill,
That is the true beginning of our end.
Consider then, we come but in despair.
We do not come as sounding to content you.
Our true intent is, All for your delight,
We are not here. That you should here repent you.
The actors are at hand; and by their show,
You shall know all, that you are like to know.
The. This fellow doth not stand upon points.
This. He hath rid his prologue like a rough colt;
He knows not the stop. A good moral, my lord:
It is not enough to speak, but to speak true.
His subject is a child, and played on this prologue, like a child on a recorder: a sound, but not in government.
The. His speech was like a tangled chain: nothing impress'd but all disorderd. Who is next?

Enter Pyramus and Thisbe, Wall, Moonshee, and Lion, as in dumb show.

Pro. "Gentiles, perchance, you wonder at this show;

| Ready. | A musical instrument.
"But wonder on, till truth make all things plain."

"This man is Pyramus, if you would know;"

"This beauteous lady Thisby is, certain."

This man is true, and touchest, both present;"

"Wall, that vile wall which did these lovers sunder;"

"And through wall's chink, poor souls, they are content."

"To whisper; at which let no man wonder."

"This man with lantern, dog, and bush of thorn,"

"Presenteth moonshine: if, as I will know,"

"By moonshine did these lovers think no sorn."

"To meet at Nuns' tomb, there, there to wow."

"This grisly beast, which name lion hight;"

"The trusty Thisby, coming last by night,"

"And, Theseus haring in mulberry shade,"

"And, as she did, her mantle she did fall;"

"When monk with bloody mouth did stain:"

"Anon comes Pyramus, sweet youth, and tall,"

"And finds his trusty Thisby's mantle slain:"

"Whereat with blade, with bloody blamable blade,
He bravely branched'd his boisting bloody breast;"

"This by Pyramus and Thiseby,"

"Did whisper often secretly."

"This loan, this rough-cast, and this stone, doth shew him to his lady;"

"That I was that same wall: the truth is so:
And this the cranious, right and signifer,
Through which the fearful lovers are to whisper."

"Thou canst desire, and speak in better words!"

"This is the widest partition that ever I heard discourse, my lord."

"The Pyramus draws near the wall: silence!"

Enter Pyramus.

Pyr. "O grim look! night! O night with hue so black!"

"O night, which ever art, when day is not!"

"O night, O night, alack, alack, alack,"

"I fear my Thisby's promise is forgot!—"

"And, O, how sweet, O, how sweet, O, how waist!"

"That standst between her father's ground and mine!"

"Thou wall, O wall, O sweet and lovely wall, Show me thy chink, to break through with mine cyne."

"Thanks, courteous wall: dost thou shield thee well for this?"

"But what see I! No Thisby do I see,
O wicked wall, through whom I see no bliss;
Curst be thy stones, for thus deceiving me!"

"Thee wall, methinks, being sensible, should curse again."

Pyr. No, in truth, sir, he should not. Deceiving me, is Thisby's cue: she is to enter now, and I am to set out, O wall; O wall, O softly wall. Yea shall see, it will fall apart as I told you:—Yonder she comes.

Enter Thiseby.

This. "O wall, full often hast thou heard my moans,
For parting my fair Pyramus and me:"

"My cherry lips have often kiss'd thy stones;"

"Thy stones with lime and hair knott up in thee;"

"Pyr. "I see a voice: now will I to the chink,
To spy, I can hear my Thisby's face."

Thisby. "My love, thou art my love, I think."

Pyr. "Think what thou will, I am thy lover's grace;"

"And like Linnander am I trusty still."

This. "And I like Helen, till the fates kill me."

Pyr. "Not Sthenelus to Procrus so true.
This. "As Sthenelus to Procrus, I to you;"

Pyr. "O, kiss me through the hole of this vile wall."

This. "I kiss the wall's hole, not your lips at all."

Called.

Pyr. "Wilt thou at Nunny's tomb meet me straightway?"

This. "This life, this death, I come without delay."

"Wilt thou at Nunny's tomb meet me, my part discharged?
And, being done, thus wall away doth go."

Enter Wall, Pyramus, and Thisby.

This. The wall now is the mural down between the two neighbors.

Dem. No remedy, my lord, when walls are so willing to hear without warning.

Hips. This is the silliest stunt that ever I heard.
This. The best in this dream are still but shadowy;
and the worst are no worse, if imagination amend them.
Hips. It must be your imagination then, and not thine.

This. If I imagine no worse of them, than they of themselves, they may pass for excellent men.
Here come two noble beasts in, a moon, and a lion.

Enter Lion and Moonshine.

Lion. "Yon, ladies, you, whose gentle hearts do fare;"

"This noblest monstrous mouse that creeps on floor,"

"May now, perchance, both quake and tremble here,"

"When moon in wildest race doth roar."

This. "Thus kill I, one stroke the joker, am
A lion fell, nor else no lion's dam:
For if I should as lion come in stride
Into this place, 'tis very pity on my life."

Thee. A very gentle heart, and of a good conscience.

Dem. The very best at a beast, my lord, that ever
I saw.

Lys. "This lion is a very fox for his valor."

Thee. Is, and a goose for his discretion.

Dem. But no, my lord: for his valor cannot carry his discretion; and the fox carries the goose.
This. His discretion, I am sure, cannot carry his valor; for the goose carries not the fox. It is well: leave to this discretion, and let us listen to the moon.

Moon. "This lantern doth the horned moon present:—"

Dem. He should have worn the horns on his head.
This. He is no crescent, and his horns are invisible within the circumference,

Moon. "This lantern doth the horned moon
present:"

"Myself the man I the moon do seem to be."

This. This is the greatest error of all the rest: the man should be put into the lantern: How is it else the man the moon?"

Dem. He dares not come there for the candle:
for man's eye is greater, in my soul."

Hips. I am aweary of this moon: Would, he would change.

This. By means, by his small light of discretion, that he is in the wane: but yet, in courtesy, in all reason, we must stay the time.

Lys. Proceed, moon.

Moon. "All that I have to say, is, to tell you, that the lantern is the moon: 1, the man in the moon; this thorn-bush, my thorn-bush; and this dog, my dog.
Dem. Why all these should be in the lantern; for they are not in the moon. But, sleep; here comes Thisbe.

Enter Thisbe.

This. "This is old Nunny's tomb: Where is my love?"

Lion."Oh—"* [The Lion roars. — Thisbe runs off.]

Dem. Well run, lion.

This. Well run, Thisbe.

Hips. Well shine, moon.—Truly, the moon shines with a good grace.

This. Well mouthed, lion.

[Lion roars. — Thisbe's mantle and exit.]

This. And so comes Pyramus.

Lys. And so the lion vanished.

Enter Pyramus.

Pyr. "Sweet moon, I thank thee for thy sunny beams;"

"I trust thy moon, for shining now so bright;"

"For, by thy gracious, golden, glittering streams
I trust to taste of truest Thisby's sigh."

"But stay,—O spit!"

"But mark,—Poor knight,"

In anger; r quible.
Scene I.
Midsummer-Night's Dream.

"What dreadful dole is here! —
Eyes, do you see!

"O fainty duck! I dare!
"Thy mantle good,
"What, stand with blood!

"Approach, tis light!
"O lute! come, come!
"Cut thread and trimm!

"Quail, crush, conclude, and quell!"

The. This passion, and the death of a dear friend, great would go near to make a man look sad.

Hip. Besirew my heart, but I pity the man.

Pyg. "O, wherefore, nature, dost thou hose down thy frame?"

"Since lion vile hath here dolo'd my dear:
"Which is — no, no — which was the fairest dame,
"That lived, that liv'd, that lik'd, that look'd with cheer:
"Come, tears, confound;
"Out, sword, and wound

"The pap of Pyramus:
"Ay, that left pap,

"Where heart both hop:
"Thus die I, thus, thus, thus,
"Now am I dead,

"My soul is in the sky:
"Tongue, lose thy light!

"Moon, take thy light:

"Now die, die, die, die, die."

[Dies.—End Moonshine.

Dem. No die, but an ace, for him; for he is but one.
Lyre. Less than an ace, man; for he is dead; he is nothing.

Thee. With the help of a surgeon, he might yet recover, and prove an ass.

Hip. How chance moonshine is gone, before
Thisbe comes back and finds her lover!

Thee. She will find him by star-light — Here she comes; and her passion ends the play.

Enter Thisbe.

Hip. Metheinks, she should not use a long one, for such a Pyramus: I hope she will be brief.

Lyre. She hath spied him already with those sweet eyes.

Dem. And thus she must, sibylly,—

"This, " Asleep, my love!

"What, dead? my love!

"O Pyramus, arise,
"Speak, speak. Quite dumb!

"Dead, dead! A tomb

"Must cover thy sight eyes,

"These lily brows,

"This cherry nose,

"Those yellow cowslip cheeks,

"Are gone, are gone;

"Lovers, make mean!

"His eyes were green as leeks,

"(i) sisters three,

"Come, come, to me,

"With hands as pale as milk;

"Lay them gore,

"Since you have sliore

"With shears, his thread of silk.

"Tongue, not a word:—

"Come, trusty sword;

"Come, blade, my breast imbure,

"And farewel, friends;—

"Thus Thisbe ends:

"Adieu, adieu, adieu."

[Dies.

Thee. The Moonshine and lion are left to bury the dead.

Dem. Ay, and wall too.

But. No, I assure you; the wall is down that parted their fathers.
Will it please you to see the epilogue, or to hear a Bergomask dance, between two of our company?

Thee. No epilogue, I pray you; for your play needs no excuse. Never excuse; for when the players are all dead, there need none to be blamed.

Mar. By that writ it, had play'd Pyramus and hanged himself in Thisbe's garner, it would have been a fine tragedy: and so it is truly; and very notably dischased: But come, your Bergomask: let your epilogue alone.

SCENE, Navarre.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Navarre.  A Park with a Palace in it.
Enter the King, Biron, Longaville, and Dumain.

King.  Let fame, that all hunt after in their lives,
Like register'd upon our brazen tombs,
And then grace us in the disgrace of death
When, spite of coromant devouring time,
The endeavor of this present breath may buy
That honor, which shall hate his scythe's keen edge,
And make us heirs of all eternity.
Therefore, brave conquerors:—for so you are,
That war against your own affections,
And the huge army of the world's desires,—
Our late edict shall strongly stand in force;
Navarre shall be the wonder of the world;
Our court shall be a little Academe,
Still and contemplative in living art.
You three, Biron, Dumain, and Longaville,
Have sworn for three years' term to live with me,
My fellow-scholars, and to keep those statutes,
That are recorded in this schedule here:
Your oaths are past, and now subscribe your names;
That his own hand may strike his honor down,
Which violates the smallest branch herein;
If you are arm'd to do, as sworn to do.
Subscribe to your deep oath and keep it too.
Long.  I am resolve'd: 'ts but a three years' fast;
The mind shall banquet, though the body pine:
Pat paunches have lean putes; and dainty bits
Make rich the ribs, but bank not quite the wits.
Dumain.  My loving lord, Dumain is mortified;
The grosser manner of these world's delects
He throws upon the gross world's baser slaves:
To love, to wealth, to pomp, I pine and die;
With all these living in philosophy.
Biron.  I can but say their protestation over,
So much, dear liege, I have already sworn,
That is, To live and study here three years.
but there are other strict observances:
As, not to see a woman in that term;
Which, I hope well, is not enrolled there:
And, one day in a week to touch no food:
And but one meal on every day beside;
The which, I hope, is not enrolled there;
And then to sleep but three hours in the night,
And not to be seen to wink of all the day;
(When I was wont to wink no harm at night,
And make a dark night too of half the day;)
Which, I hope well, is not enrolled there:
O, these are baren tasks, too hard to keep;
Not to see ladies, study, fast, not sleep.
King.  Your oath is pass'd to pass away from these.
Biron.  Let me say no, my liege, if you please!
I only swore, to study with your grace;
And stay here in your court for three years' space.
Long.  You swore to that, Biron, and to the rest.
Biron.  By yea and may sir, then I swore in jest.—
What is the end of study? let me know.
King.  Why, that to know, which else we should not know.
Biron.  Things hid and bar'd, you mean, from common sense?
King.  Ay, that is study's god-like recompense.
Biron.  Come on then, I will swear to study so,
To know the thing I am forbid to know:
As thus—To study where I well may dine,
When I to feast expressly am forbid;
Or study where to meet some mistress fine,
When mistresses from common sense are hid:
Or, having sworn too hard-a-keeping oath,
Study to break it, and not break my troth.
If study's gain be thus, and this be so,
Study knows that, which yet it doth not know:
Swear me to this, and I will never say, no.
King.  These be the steps that hinder study quite,
And train our intellects to vain delight.
Biron.  Why, all delights are vain but that most vain,
Which with pain purchas'd, doth inherit pain.
As, painfully to pore upon a book.
To seek the light of truth; while truth the while Both falsely blind the eyesight of his look:
Light, seek'ning light, both light of light beguile
So, ere you find where light in darkness lies,
Your light grows dark by losing of your eyes.
Study me how to please the eye indeed,
By fixing it upon a fairer eye;
Who dazzling so, that eye shall be his heed,
And give him light that was it blinded by.
Study is like the heaven's glorious sun,
That will not be deep-search'd with saucy looks,
LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST

Scene I.

Small hill cemmetary, a haere e wean, and there, ane thinc Troilus and Cressida. These earthy garlands of heaven's lights, that give a name to ever fixed star, have in upon proit of their shining nights, though these be weak, and not wot what they are. Too much to know, is, to know that but little; and every godfather can give a name. King. How well he's read, to reason against Love. Diurn. Proceeded well, to stop all god-proceeding! Long. He weeds the corn, and still let's grow worse. Biron. The spring is near, when green geese are a breeding. Diurn. Well, say I am; why should summer boast, before the birds have any cause to sing? Why should I joy in an abortive birth? At Christmas I no more desire a rose Than wish a snow in May's new-fangled shaws; But like of each thing, that in season grows. So you to study now, is too late. Climb o'er the house' t' unlock the little gate. Ksaz. Well, set you o' home, Biron; adeu! Biron. No, my god-father, I have sworn to stay with you: And, though I have for hirsham spoke more, Than for that angel knowledge you can say, Yet confident I'll keep what I have swore. To him the pleasure of each three years' day. Give me the paper, let me read the same; And to the strict'st decrees I'll write my name. King. How well this yielding rescues thee from shame! Biron. [Reads] Item, That no woman shall come within a mile of my court.— May this been proclam'd! Long. Four days ago. Biron. Let's see the penalty. [Reads.]—On pain of losing her tongue. Who devidt this? Long. Marry, that till. Biron. Sweet lord, and why? Long. To fright them hence with that dread pel. Biron. A damagous law against gentry. [Reads.] Item, If any man be seen to talk with a woman within the term of three years, he shall be attainted, as one of the rest of the court can possibly deserve.— This article, my liege, yourself must break; For, well you know, here comes a messenger The French king's daughter, with yourself to speak,— A maid of grace, and complete majesty,— About some garrison of Tilbury. To her decretip, sick, and bedridden father; Therefore this article is made in vain, Or vainly comes the admired princess hither. King. What say you, lords; why, this was quite forgot. Biron. So study evermore is overshot; While it doth study to have what it would, it doth forget to do the thing it should. And when it hath the thing it hunteth most, 'Tis won, as towns with fire; so won, so lost. King. We must of force dispense with this decree; She must and here, upon necessity. Biron. Necessity will make us all forsworn Three thousand times within this three years' space. And for every man with his affects is born; Not by might mastered, but by special grace: If I break faith, this word shall speak for me, I am forsworn on more necessary.— So by the law that I have made my name: I subscribe. And he, that breaks them in the least degree, Stands in attainder of eternal shame: All resistance are to other, and me; But, I believe, although I seem so forth, Am the last that will keep his oath. But is there no quick recreation granted! No Nipping. Beadle. Temptations. King. Ay, that there is: our court, you know, is large With a refined traveller of Spain; A man in all the world's new fashion planted, That hath a mouth of prudent things in his brain: One, who sent the muse of his own vain tongue Both rhish, like enchanting harmony; A man of compliments, whom right and wrong Have else commended to their mutual shame: This child of fancy, that Armado bights; For interim to our studies, shall relate, In high-born words, the worth of many a knight For a twelvemonth lost in the world's debate. How you delight, my lords, I know not; But, I protest, I have to hear him be, And I will use him for my medis: Biron. Armado is a most illustrious wight. A man of fire-new words, fashion's own knight. Long. Costard the swain, and he, shall be our sport! And, so to study, three years is but short. Enters Dull, with a letter, and Costard. Dull. Which is the duke's own person? Biron. This fellow, What wouldst thou? Dull. I myself reprehend that person, for I am his grave's thorough; but I would see his own person in flesh and blood. Long. He hath it here. Dull. Signor Aran—Aras—comments you. There's villainy abroad; this letter will tell you more. Cost. Sir, the contempts thereof are as touching me. King. A letter from the magnificent Armado. Biron. Have you so sever the matter, I hope in God for high words. Long. A high hope for a low having: God grant us patience. Biron. To hear? or forbear hearing? Long. To hear meekly, sir, and to laugh moderately; or to forbear bath. Biron. Well, sir, be it as the style shall give us cause to choose the manner. Cost. The matter is to me, sir, as concerning Jaqueminda. The manner of it is, I was taken with the manner. Biron. In what manner? Cost. In manner and form following, sir; all these three: I was seen with her in the minor house, sitting with her upon the form, and then following her, and he, she which, put together, is, in manner and form following. Now, sir, for the manner,—it is the manner of a man to speak to a woman; for the form,—same form. Biron. Is the following, sir? Cost. As it shall follow in my correction; and God defend the right! King. Will you hear this letter with attention? Biron. As we would hear an oracle. Cost. Such is the simplicity of man to hearken after the flesh. King. [Aside] Great deputy, the wealke's viceroy, and sole dominator of Navarre, our souls earth's Gid, and baby's fostering patron,— Cost. Not a word of Costard yet. King. Sir. Cost. It may he say; but if he say it so, he is, in telling true, but so, so. King. Peace. Cost. Peace be to me, and every man that darest not fight! King. No words. Cost. If of other men's secrets, I beseech you. King. So this behead with subtle-colored menachly, I do commend the black-suppressing humor to the most wholesome physick of the blood-giving air; and as I am a gentleman, look up to me, the true one. About the sixth hour when heads and grace, birds bed and peck, men sit down to that nourishment which is called dinner. Shall we have a chace for the time when. Now for the ground which; which, I mean, I walk upon; it is walled the park. Twixt the place where, where, I mean, I did encounter that abbess, and most properly at the park. But that she from my, snow-white pen the sublimely ink, which here than view'd, beheld, beheld, or seek'd, but to * Called. i.e. Third-Borough, a peace officer. * In the fact.
LOVE'S LABOR'S LOST.

Act I.

Scene I. Armado's House.

Enter Armado and Moth.

Arm. Boy, what sign is it when a man of great spirit crowns melancholy?

Moth. A great sign, sir, that he will look sad.

Arm. My sadness is one and the self-same thing, dear imp.

Moth. No, no; O lord, sir, no.

Arm. How canst thou part sadness and melancholy, my tender juvenile?

Moth. By a familiar demonstration of the working, my touchy gentleman.

Arm. Why touchy senior? why touchy senior?

Moth. Why tender juvenile? why tender juvenile?

Arm. I spoke it, tender juvenile, as a concurrent epipheton, appertaining to thy young days, which we may nominate tender.

Young man.

Moth. And I, touchy senior, as an appointive title to your old time, which we may name tough.

Arm. And so hath my and apt.

Moth. How mean you, sir? I pretty, and my saying apt? or, I apt, and my saying pretty?

Arm. I how pretty, because little.

Moth. Which pretty, because little? Wherefore apt?

Arm. And therefore apt, because quick.

Moth. Speak you this in my praise, master?

Arm. In thy confin'd praises.

Moth. I will praise an eccl with the same praise.

Arm. What! that an eccl is ingenuous!

Moth. That an eccl is quick.

Arm. Why, thou art quick in answer: Thou heast my blood.

Moth. I am answered, sir.

Arm. I love not to be crossed.

Moth. He speaks the more contrary, crosses love not him.

Arm. Impossible.

Moth. How many is one thrice told?

Arm. I am ill at reckoning, I fitteth the spirit of a tapster.

Moth. You are a gentleman, and a gameser, sir.

Arm. I confess both; they are both the varnish of a company.

Moth. Then, I am sure you know how much the gross sum of dence-are amounts to.

Arm. It doth amount to one more than two.

Moth. I will go through the base vulgar do call thee three.

Arm. True.

Moth. Why, sir, is this such a piece of study? Now here is three studied, ere you'll three wark; and love may to thee years to the word three, and study three years in two words, the dancing horse will tell you.

Arm. To see a fine figure?

Moth. To prove you a cipher.

Arm. I will hereupon confess, I am in love: and as it is base for a soldier to love, so am I in love with a dancing horse. If drawing my sword against the humor of affection would deliver me from the reprobate thought of it, I would take desire prisoner, and ransom him to any French courtier for a new devised courtesy. I think scorn to such; me thinks, I should outwear Cupid. Comfort me, boy: What great men have been in love?

Moth. Hercules, master.

Arm. No, Samson Hercules! — More authority, dear boy, name more; and, sweet my child, let them be men of good repute and carriage.

Moth. Samson, master: he was as one of good carriage, for he carried the town gates on his back, like a porter: and he was in love.

Arm. O well-knit Samson! stout-jointed Samson! I know how he in manly fashion a man dost me in carrying gates. I am in love too.—Who was Samson's love, my dear moth?

Moth. A woman, master.

Arm. Of what complexion?

Moth. Of all the four, or the three, or two; or one of the four.

Arm. Tell me precisely of what complexion.

Moth. Of the sea-water green, sir.

Arm. Is that one of the four complexions?

Moth. As I have read, sir; and the best of them too.

Arm. Green, indeed, is the color of lovers: but to have a love of that color, methinks, Samson had small reason for it. He, surely, affected her for her wit.

Arm. It was so, sir; for she had a green wit.

Moth. My love is most immaculate white and red.

Arm. Most maculated, master, are masked with such colors.

Moth. Define, define, well-educated infant.

Arm. My father's wit and my mother's tongue assist me.

Moth. Sweet invocation of a child; most pretty and pathetic!

Arm. Meth it be made of white and red, I fear faults will he never be known.

Moth. For blushing cheeks by faults are bred, and fears by pale white shown: Then, if she fear, or he to blame, by this you shall not know;

The name of a coin once current.
Scene I.—A Pavilion and Tents at a distance.

Enter the Princess of France, Rosaline, Maria, Katherine, Boyet, Lords, and other Attendants.

Boyet. Now, damosel, summon up your dearest spirits.

Consider who the king your father sends;
To whom he sends; and what his embassy
Yourself, held precocious in the world's esteem,
To parity, with the sole inferior.

Of all perfections that a man may own,
Matchless Navarre; the peer of no less weight
Than Aquitain; a dowry for a queen.

Be now as prodigal of all dear grace,
As nature was in making grace dear;
When she did starve the general world beside,
And prodigally gave them all to you.

Prio. Good lord Boyet, my beauty though but mean,
Needs not the painted flourish of your praise;
Beauty is bought by judgment of the eye.
Not usher'd by base sale of chamberlains tongues:
I am less proud to hear you tell my worth,
Than you much willing to be counted wise
In spending your wit in the praise of mine.
But now to task the tasker.—Good Boyet,
You are not ignorant, all-telling fame.

Dolce noise abroad Navarre hath made a row,
Till painful study shall out-wear three years,
No woman may approach his silent court;
Therefore to us semeth it a needful course,
Before we enter his forbidden gates,
To know his pleasure; and, in that behalf,
Bold of your worthiness, we single you
As our best-moving fair solicitor:
Tell him, the daughter of the king of France,

Act II.

Scene I. Love's Labor's Lost.

Love. Villain, thou shalt fast for thy offences, ere thou be pardoned.

Cost. Well, sir, I hope, when I do it, I shall do it on a full stomach.

Arm. Thou shalt be heavily punished.

Cost. I am more bound to you than your fellows,
For they are but lightly rewarded.

Arm. Take away this villain; shut him up.

Moth. Come, you transgressing slave; away.

Cost. Let me not be pent up, sir; I will fast, be In loose.

Moth. No, sir, that were fast and loose: thou shalt
Shalt to prison.

Cost. Why, sir, if ever I do see the merry days of desolation
That I have seen, some shall see—

Moth. What shall some see!

Cost. Nay, nothing, nothing Moth; but what they Look upon. It is not for prisoners to be too silent
In their words; and, therefore, I will say nothing:
I thank God, I have as little patience as another
Man; and, therefore, I can be quiet.

Enter Done and Jaucenetta.

Arm. I do affect the very ground which is base
Where her shoe, which is baser, guided by her foot,
Which is basest, doth tread. I shall be forsworn,
Whose motto in love, is a chaplet of false good,
I love.

And how can that be true love, which is falsely attempted?
Love is a familiar; love is a devil: there is no evil angel but love. Yet Solomon was so corrupted; and he had an excellent strength: yet was Solomon so seduced; and he had a very good wit. Cupid's uplift shanks is too hard for Hercules' club, and therefore too much odds for a Spaniard's taper. The first and second cause will not serve my turn; the passado he resists not, the duello he regards not: his discourse is to be called boy; but his glory is to subdue men. Adieu, valor! rest, rapier: be still, drum; for your manager is in love; yea, he loveth. Assist me, some extemporal god of rhyme, for, I am sure, I shall turn sometreece. Devise, wit; write, pen; for I am for whole volumes in folio.

ACT II.

On serious business, craving quick dispatch,
Importunate personal conference with his grace.
Haste, signify so much; while we attend,
Like humble lavished suitors, his high will.
Boyet. Proud of employment, willingly I go.

Prio. All pride is willing pride, and yours is so—
Who are the votaries, my loving lords,
That are very fellows with this virtuous duke?

1 Lord. Longaville is one.

Prio. Know you the man?

Mar. I know him, madam; at a marriage feast,
Between lord Perceval and the beauteous heir
Of Jaques Falcouche solemnized,
In Normandy saw I this Longaville:
A man of all foreign parts he is esteem'd;
Well fitted in the arts, glorious in arms.
Nothing becomes him ill, that he would well.
The only thing he lacks, (if virtue's gloss,
(If virtue's gloss will stain with any soil)
Is a sharp wit match'd with too blunt a will;
Whose edge hath power to cut, whose will stills
It should not dare to come within his power.

Prio. Some merry mocking lord, belike; it is so!

Mar. They say so most, that most his honors know.

Prio. Such short-liv'd wits do wither as they grow.
Who are the rest?

Kath. The young Duman, a well-accomplish'd youth,
Of all that virtue love for virtue lov'd;
Most power to do most harm, least knowing ill.
For he hath wit to make an ill shape good,
And shape to win grace though he had no wit.
I saw him at the duke Alencon's once
And much too little of that good I saw,
Is my report to his great worthiness.

Love. Arrows to shoot at butte with.
Ros. Another of these students at that time
Was there with him: if I have heard a truth,
Biron they call him: but a merrier man,
Within the limit of becoming mirth,
I never spent an hour's talk withal:
His verse begets no laughter for his sake.
For every object that the one doth catch,
The other turns to a mirth-moving jest;
Which his fair tongue (conceit's expositor)
Believ'd in such apt and gracious words,
That aged ears play truant at his tales,
And younger hearing are quite ravished;
So sweet and volatile is his discourse.
Biron, God bless my lady! and all you in love,
That every one her own hath garnished
With such bedizening ornaments of praise?
Mar. Here comes Biron.

Re-enter BOYET.

Prin. Now, what admittance, lord?
Boyet. Navarre hath notice of your fair approach;
And he, and his competitors, in oath,
Were all address'd to meet you, gentle lady.
Before I came. Marry, thus much I have learnt,
He rather means to lodge you in the field,
Like one that comes here to besiege his court,
Than seek a dispensation for his oath,
To let you enter his unpeopled house.
Here comes Navarre. (The ladies mask.)

Enter King, Longville, Dumain, Biron, and Attendants.

King. Fair Princess, welcome to the court of Navarre.
Prin. Fair, I give you back again; and, welcome have not yet: the roof of this court is too high to be yours; and welcome to the wide fields too base to be mine.

Prin. You shall be welcome, madam, to my court.

King. You shall be welcome; then: conduct me
hither.

Prin. Hear me, dear lady; I have sworn an oath.
Prin. Our lady help my lord! he'll be forsworn, King. Not for the world, fair madam, by my will.

Prin. Why, will he break it; will, and nothing else.

Prin. Your ladyship is ignorant what it is.
Prin. Were my lord so, his ignorance were wise,
Where now his knowledge must prove ignorance.
I hear, your grace hath sworn-out house-keeping;
'Tis deadly sin to keep that oath, my lord,
And sin to break it; but pardon me, I am too sudden-bold;
To teach a teacher ill beseech me.
Vendible to read the purpose of my coming,
And suddenly resolve me in my suit.

[Gives a paper.

King. Madam, I will, if suddenly I may.

Prin. You will the sooner, that I were away;
For I have prov'd perjur'd, if you make me stay.

Biron. Did not I dance with you in Brabant once?

Prin. Did not I dance with you in Brabant once?

Biron. I know you did.

Prin. How needless was it then
To ask the question?
Biron. You must not be so quick.
Ros. 'Tis long of you that spur me with such questions.
Biron. Your wit's too hot, it speeds too fast, 'twill burn.
Ros. Not till it leave the rider in the mirage.
Biron. What time of day?
Ros. The hour that fools shall ask.
Biron. Now fair heaven will your mask! In
Dox. Fair fill the face it covers!
Biron. And send you many lovers!
Ros. Amen, so be none.
Biron. Nay, then will I be gone.
King. Madam, your father here doth intimate
The payment of a hundred thousand crowns;
Beating the one half of an entire sum,
Divided by my father in his will:
But say, that he, or we, (as neither have,) Receive'd that sum; yet there remains unpaid
A hundred thousand more: in surely of the which,
One part of Aquitain is bound to us,
Although not valued to the money's worth.
Then the king your father will restore [Confederate.

[Prepared.

But that one half which is unsatisfied,
We will give up our rights in Aquitain,
And hold fair friendship with his majesty.
But that, it seems, he little purposeth.
For here he doth demand to have repaid
A hundred thousand crowns: and those thousands,
On payment of a hundred thousand crowns,
To have his title live in Aquitain;
Which we much rather had depart'd withal,
And have the money by our father lent,
Than Aquitain so gilded as it is.

Dear princess, were not his requests so far
From reason's yieldings; your fair self should make
A yielding to his reasons in your breast,
And so well satisfied to France again.
Prin. You do the king my father too much wrong,
And wrong the reputation of your name.
In so unseeming to confess receipt
Of that which hath so faithfully been paid.
King. I do protest, I never heard of it;
And, if you prove it, I'll repay it back,
Or yield up Aquitain.

Prin. We arrest your word:--
Boyet, you can produce acquittances,
For which, from special officers
Of Charles his father.

King. Satisfy me so.

Boyet. So please your grace, the packet is not come.
Where that and other specialities are bound;
To-morrow you shall have a sight of them.
King. It shall suffer no more: at which interview,
All liberal reason I will yield unto.
Mean time, receive such welcome at my hand,
As honor, without breach of honor, may
Make tender of thy true worthiness:
You may not come, fair princess, in my gates;
But here without, you shall be so receiv'd,
As you shall deem yourself lodg'd in my heart,
Then, if so deni'd fair harbor in my house,
Your own good thoughts excuse me, and farewell;
To-morrow shall we visit you again.

Prin. Sweet health and fair desires consort your person.

King. Thy own wish wish I thee in every place!

[Exeunt King and his Train.

Biron. Lady, I will commend you to my own heart.

Ros. 'Pray you, do my commendations; I would be glad to see it.

Biron. Would you heard it groan.

Ros. Is the fool sick?
Biron. Sick at heart.

Ros. Alack, let it bled.

Biron. Would't that do good that it?
Ros. My physic says, 'tis.

Biron. Will you prick twt with your eye?
Ros. No punct: with any knife.
Biron. Now, God save thy life!

Ros. And yours from long living!
Biron. I cannot stay thanksgiving,

[Retiring.

Dum. Sir, I pray you, a word: What lady is that same?

Boyet. The heir of Alaung, Rosaline her name.

Dum. A gallant lady! Monsieur, face you well.

[Exit.

Long. I beseech you a word; What is she in the white?

Boyet. A Roman sometimes, an you saw her in
We with light:
Perchance, light in the light; I desire her name.

Boyet. She hath but one for herself; to desire that were a shame.

Long. Pray you, sir, whose daughter?
Boyet. Her mother's, I have heard.

Long. God's blessing on your heart!
Biron. Good sir, be not offended:
She is an heir of Falconbridge.

Long. Nay, my cloister is ended.
She is a most sweet lady.
Boyet. Not unlike, sir; that may be.

[Exit Long.

Biron. What's her name in the cap?

Boyet. Katherine, my good hap.

Biron. Is she wedded or no?
Boyet. To her will, sir, or so.

Biron. You are welcome, sir; a dieu!

Part 1, Ay, yes. A French particle of negation.
ACT III.

SCENE I.—The Park, near the Palace.

Enter ARMADO and MOTH.

Arm. Warble, child; make passionate my sense of hearing.

Moth. Consolamet.—[Singing.] Arm. Sweet air!—Go, tenderness of years; take this key, give entanglement to the swarm, bring him feebly—hither! I must employ him in a letter to my love.

Moth. Master, will you win your love with a French bray?

Arm. How mean'st thou? brailing in French?

Moth. No, my complete master: but to jig off a tune at the tongue's end, canary? to it with your feet, humor it with turning up your eyes—such a nose; and as a note; sometime through the throat, as if you swallowed love with singing love; sometime through the nose, as if you swallowed up love by smelling love; with your hat penthouse-like, over the shop of your eyes; with your arms crossed on your thin belly-doublet, like a rabbit on a spit; or your hands in your pocket, like a man after the old painting; and keep not too long in one tune, but a snip and away: These are complements, these are humors; these betray nice wenchings—that would be betrayed without these; and make the men of note (do you note, men?) that are most affected to these.

Arm. How hast thou purchased this experience?

Moth. By my penny of observation.

Arm. But, o!—But, o!

Moth.—the hobby-horse is forgot.

Arm. Callest thou my love, hobby-horse?

Moth. No ma'ter; the hobby-horse is but a colt; and your love, perhaps a luckey. But have you forgot your love?

Arm. Almost I had.

Moth. Negligent student! learn her by heart.

Arm. Learn her, and in heart, boy.

Moth. And out of heart, master: all those three I will prove.

Arm. What will that prove?

Moth. A man, if I live; and this, by, in, and without, upon the instant: By heart you love her,

* A quibble, several significant unenclosed lands.

† Boddly.

* Canary was the name of a sprightly dance.

His heart, like an auge, with your print-impressed, proud with his form, in his eye pride expressed;

His tongue all impatient to speak and not see,

Did stumble with haste in his eyesight to be;

All signs to that sense did make their repair,

To feel only looking on fairest of fair:

Me thought, all his senses were locked in his eye,

As jewels in crystal for some prince to buy;

Who, tendering their own worth, from where they were glad.

Did point you to buy them, along as you pass'd.

His face's own margin did quote such anizes,

That all eyes saw his eyes enchant'd with gazes;

I'll give you Aquitain, and all that is his,

An you give him for my sake but one loving kiss.

Pris. Come, to our pavilion: Boyet is disposed.

Moth. But I can speak the words, which his eye hath disclosed:

I only have made a mouth of his eye,

By adding a tongue which I know will not lie.

Roes. Thou all this art an old love-monger, and speak'st skilfully.

Mar. He is Cupid's grandfather, and learns news of him.

Roes. Then was Venus like her mother; for her father is but arm.

Moth. Do you hear, my mad wenches!

Mar. No.

Roes. What then, do you see?

Moth. Ay, our way to be gone.

Moth. You are too hard for me.

[Exeunt.]
Scene I.—A Pasture in the Park.

Enter the Princess, Rosaline, Maria, Katharine, Boyet, Lords, Attendants, and a Forerunner.

Boyet. Was that the king, that spurred his horse so hard
Against the steep uprising of the hill?

Kath. I know not; but I think it was nothe.

Boy. When he was he, he show'd a bounding mind.

Kath. Delightful.

Enter Ioviu.

Iovi. O, my good knife, Costard! excessively well met.

Cost. Pray you, sir, how much carnation ribbon may a man buy for a remuneration?

Iovi. What is that remuneration?

Cost. Marry, sir, half-penny farthing.

Iovi. O, why then, three-farthings-worth of silk.

Cost. I thank your worship: God be with you! Iovi. O, stay, stay; I must employ thee: As thou wilt win my favor, good my knife, Do one thing for me that I shall entreat.

Cost. When would you have it done, sir?

Iovi. This afternoon.

Cost. Well, I will do it, sir: Fare you well.

Iovi. O, thou knowest what it is.

Cost. I will know, sir, when I have done it.

Iovi. Why, will you, that must wait till first.

Cost. I will come to your worship to-morrow morning.

Iovi. It must be done this afternoon. Hark, slave, it is but this:

The princess comes to hunt here in the park,
And in her train there is a gentle lady;
When they do talk sweetly, then they name her name,
And Rosaline they call her: ask for her;
And to her white hand see thou do commend
This scald up counsel. There's thy Grenadan.

[Give's him money.

Cost. Grenadan,—O sweet gendron! better than remuneration: eleven pence farthing better: Most sweet gendron, this argument in:

That's my money.

Iovi. And, I, forsooth, in love I, that have been love's whip, a very beadle to a humorous sigh;
A crust; nay, a night-watch constable;
A damnable pedant o'er the boy,
That when no mortal so much beguilest,
This whimpered, whimsical, wayward boy;
This senior-junior, giant-dwarf, Dan Cupid;
Regent of love-rymes, lord of jocund arms.

The mounted sovereign of sights and grooms,
Liese of all loiterers and malcontents,

Dread prince of packets, king of.coedipuses,
Sole imperator, and great general
Of treading pedants,—O my little heart!
And I to be a corporal of his field,
And wear his colors like a tumber's hoop:
What a! I love! I sue! I seek a wife!

Cost. True, true, true, now you will be my purgation, and let me loose.

Iovi. I give thee thy liberty, set thee from duration: and, in lieu thereof, impose on thee nothing but this: bear this significant to the country mad, Jaquenetta: there is remuneration; [Giving him money.] for the best ward of mine honor, is to reward thy dependants. Morth, follow. [Exit. Iovi. Like the mention;—Sir, Sir! Sir—Sir]

Cost. My sweet ounce of man's flesh! my mirth;

[Exit Iovi. Now will I look to his remuneration. Remuneration! O, that's the Latin word for three farthings; three farthings—remuneration—What's the price of this table? a penny.—No, I'll give you a remuneration: why, it carries it.—Remuneratio!—

ACT IV.

Well, lords, to-day we shall have our despatch; On Saturday we will return to France,
Then, forester, my friend, where is the bush, That we must stand and play the murderer in.

Fors. Here, by, upon the edge of the hollow copse: A stand, where you may make the fairest shoot.

Iovi. I thank my beauty, I am fair that shoot, And therefore I shall speak it, the fairest shoot.

[Reward. Petitions.

With the utmost exactness.

The officers of the spiritual courts who arrive at...
Love's Labor's Lost.

Scene I.

For. Pardon me, madam, for I meant not so.

Prin. What, what! first praise me, and again say, no!

O short-lived praise! Not fair! Not back for woe!

For. Yes, madam, for.

Prin. Nay, never paint me now;

Where fair is not, praise cannot mend the brow.

Here, good my glass, take this for telling true;

[Give her a bottle of wine

Fair payment for foul words is more than due.

For. Nothing but fair is that which you impute.

Prin. See, see, my beauty will be sav'd by merit.

O holy mask, lest for these days;

A giving hand, though foul, shall have fair praise.—

but come, the bow—Now mercy goes to kill,

And shooting well is then accounted ill.

Thus will I save my credit in the shaft;

Not wounding, pity would not let me do;

If wounding, then it was to show my skill,

That more for praise, than purpose, meant to kill.

And then, I saw, in thine, so thine was,

Glory grows guilty of detested crimes;

When, for fame's sake, for praise, an outward part,

We bent to that the working of the heart;

But, for praise alone, now seek to spoil

The poor dear's blood, that my heart means no ill.

Boyet. Do not curst wives hold that self-sowner

Only for praise' sake, when they strive to be

Lords over their lords!

Prin. Only for praise: and praise we may afford

To any lady that subdues a lord.

Enter Costard.

Prin. Here comes a member of the common

Cost. God dig-you-den' all! Pray you, which is the head lady?

Prin. Thou shalt know her, fellow, by the rest that have no heads.

Cost. Which is the greatest lady, the highest?

Prin. The thickest, and the tallest.

Cost. The thickest, and the tallest! it is so; truth

An your waist, mistress, were as slender as my wit.

One of these mad's girdles for your waist should be fit.

Are not you the chief woman? you are the thickest

here.

Prin. What's your will, sir? what's your will?

Cost. I have a letter from monsieur Biron, to one

Ladell Roseiine.

Prin. O, thy letter, thy letter; he's a good friend of mine:

Stand aside, good bearer.—Boyet, you can carve;

Break up this capon.

Boyet. I am bound to serve—

This letter is mistook, it importemeth none here;

It is writ to Jaguetta.

Prin. We shall read it, I swear;

Break the neck of the wax, and every one give ear.

Boyet. [Reads.] By heaven, that thou art fair, is more true, that thou art beautious; truth itself, that thou art lovely: more faire than faire, beautiful than beautious, truer than truth itself, have commiseration on your honored vassal;

The magnanimous and most illustrious king to picture set eye upon the prodigious and indiscrinate beggar Zenclopin; and he it was that might rigidly saw, vein, vidi, ventici, which to anachronize to the vulgar, (O base and obscene vulgar!) vililicet, he came, came, and overcame: he came, one, saw, two, overcome, three. Who came? the king? Why did he come to see? why did he see? to good house: To whom come he? to the beggar: What saw he? the beggar: Who overcame he? the beggar: the conclusion is victory: On whose side? the king's. The capture is certain; On whose side? the beggar's: The catastrophe is a mute: On whose side? the king's?—no, on both in one or one in both. I am the king: for so standeth the comparison; he the beggar, for to withstand his behawes. Shall I command thee blue? I may: shall I enproof thy love? I could: Shall I enproof thy love? I will. What shall thou exchange for ruthless relish? For little, little: For myself, no. Thus, expecting thy reply, I prepare my lips on thy foot, my eyes on thy picture, and my heart on thy every part.

* God give you good even.
LOVE's LABOR'S LOST.

ACT IV.

When it comes so smoothly off, so obscurely, as it was, so fit.

Arthimo of the one side,—0, a most dainty man! This makes seven lovers, and (to be bear her fault.

To see him kiss his hand! and how most sweetly

a will swallow!—

And his page of other side, that handful of wit! Ah, heavens, it is a most pathetic mix!

[Exit Costard, running,

SCENE II.—The same.

Enter Holofernes, Sir Nathaniel, and Dull. Nath. Very reverent spurt, truly; and done in the best sense of a good conscience.

Hot. The deer was, as you know, in song—blood; ripe as a pomewater. Who now hangeth like a jewel in the ear of corn, the sky, the wakin, the heaven; and again falleth like a crab, on the face of terrae—the soil, the land, the earth.

Nath. Truly, master Holofernes, the epithets are sweetly varied, like a scholar at the least: But, sir, I assure thee, it was a buck of the first head.

Dull. Sir Nathaniel, had crevo. Twas not a buck crevo, 'twas a pricket. Hot. Most barbarous imagination! yet a kind of incommunicable were, in the way of explanation: facer, as it were, repetition, or, rather ostent, to show, as it were, his inclination,—after his undertaking, unreclaimable, unpractised, unuttered, or rather unuttered, or rather, unreferred fashion,—to insert again my had crevo for a deer.

Dull. I said, the deer was not a buck crevo; 'twas a pricket.

Hot. Twice sod simplicity, his coxius!—0 thou monster ignorance, how deformed dost thou look! Nay, the soul never felt of the daunties that are bred in a book; he hath not eat paper, as it were; he hath not drunk ink: his intellect is not replenished; he is only an animal, only sensible in the outward parts; And such barren plants are set before us, that we thankfully

(Which I must, grace and feeling are) for those parts that do fructify in us more than he.

For as it would ill become me to be vain, indiscreet, or a fool.

so, were there a patch set on learning, to see him in a school, but, oneone bene, say I; being of an old father's mind.

Many can break the weather, that love not the wood.

Dull. You are too bookmen: Can you tell by your wit,

What was a month old at Cain's birth, that's not five weeks old as yet?

Hot. Dyctyna. Dyctyna, good man Dull; Dyctyna, good man Dull. Dull. What is Dyctyna?

Nath. He was to Plutarcho, to Luna, to the moon.

Hot. The moon was a month old, when Adam was no more:

and taught not five weeks, when he came to five score.

The allusion holds in the exchange.

Dull. 'Tis true indeed; the collision holds in the exchange.

Hot. God comfort thy capacity! I say, the allusion holds in the exchange.

Dull. And I say the pollution holds in the exchange; for the moon is never a month old; and I say besides, this was a patch that the princess kill'd.

Hol. Sir Nathaniel, will you hear an extemoral epitaph for the death of the old box, and to humor the ignorant? I have call'd the deer the princess kill'd a pricket.

Nath. Perser, good master Holofernes, perser; so shall please me to abbreviate toability.

Hot. I will somewhat affect the letter; for it argues facility.

'Tis a species of apple.

The praiseful princess po'd and pricked a pretty pleasing pricket.

Some say a sore; but and a sore, till now made

The dogs did yell; put i to sore, then soret jumps from thickel.

Or pricket, sore, or else sorely the people full a having.

If sore, be sore, then I to sore makes fifty sores; O sore I!

Of one a hundred make, by adding but one more I.

Nath. A rare talent! Dull. If a talent be a claw, look haw be claws him with. Dull. This is a gift that I have, simple, simple, a foolish extravagant spirit, full of forms, figures, shapes, objects, ideas, apprehensions, motions, revolutions; these are bred in the wond of pinn niter; and deliver'd upon the mellowing of occasion: But the gift is good in those in whom it is acute; and I am thankful for it.

Nath. Sir, I praise the Lord for you; and so may all my parishioners; for their souls are well tutor'd by you, and their bodies, and all their functions very greatly under you: you are a good member of the common wealth.

Hol. Mecere, if their sons be insensuous, they shall have no instruction; if their daughters he culpable, let there be no mercy; no mercy;

Jov. I wish it might be so, as read me this letter; it was given me by Costard, and sent me from Don Arthimo: I beseech you, read it.

Hol. Nay, without gelida quando pocus ome sub umbra, Ruminal,—and so forth. Ah, good old Mantua! I may speak of thee as the traveller doth of Venice!—Pomfret, Pomfret.

Choi non leo. et. non leo prixia. Old Mantua! old Mantuan! Whom understandeth thee not?—Ut, re, sol, la, mi, fa.—Under pardon, sir, what are the contents?—Is it rather, as Horace says in his—What, my soul, verses? Nath. Ay, sir, and very learned.

Hol. I sent me a hear a stall, a stanza, a verse; Lege, domine.

Nath. [Reads.] If love make me forsaken, how shall I swear to love? Ah, Heaven! what shall I do? if to beauty reverch! Though to myself forsaken, to thee I'll faithful prove; Those thoughts to me were oakes, to thee the oares bowed.

Study his brows leaves, and make his book thimmes; Where all those pleasures live, that art would comprehend. If knowledge be the mark, to know the shall suffice; Well learned is that tongue, that well can I esteem comments. All ignorance that soul, that sees thee without wonder; (Which is to me some praisel that I thy parts admire) Thy eye's forst glowing bears, thy voice his dreadful thunder, Which not to anger bent, is music, and sweet fire. Celestial, as thou art, oh pardon, low, this wrong, That sweet parent's praise with such an earthly force.

Hol. You find not the apostrophe, and so miss the accent; therefore you surpass the cansion. Here are only numbers ratified; but for the elegance facility, and golden cadence of verse, care. Oxidin Nasso was the man: and why, indeed, Nasso; but not for some such figures, for some such poem, for some of fancy; the spark of invention! Infuri, is nothing to do both the bound his master, the ape his keeper, the tied horses his rider. But damascus virgin, was this directed to you?— Attire, caparisoned.
Scene III.

LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

Jeq. Ay, sir, from one monsieur Biron, one of the strange queen's kins.

Hot. I will over-thrust the superstit. To the snow-white hand of the most beautiful Lady Rosaline. I will amak amon the intellect of the letter, for the nomination of the party writing to the person written unto.

Your ladyship's in all desired employment,

Biron.

Sir Nathaniel, this Biron is one of the valets with the king; and here he hath framed a letter to a sequent of the stranger queen's, which, accidentally, or by way of progression, hath miscarried.—To am, and am, my sweet; deliver this paper into the royal hand of the king; it may concern much; say not thy compliment: I forgive thy duty; adieu.

Joy. Good Costard, go with me.—Sir, God save your life.

Cost. Have with thee, my girl.

[Exeunt Cost. and Jerv.

Nath. Sir, you have done this in the fear of God, very religionously; and, as a certain father saith—

Hot. Sir, tell me not of the father, I do fear colorable effects. Int. to return to the verses; did they please you, sir Nathaniel?

Nath. Marvelous well for the pen.

Hot. I do am use to-day at the father's of a certain pupil of mine; where if, before repast, it shall please you to gratify the table with a grace, I will, on my promise, forego with the parents of that child or pupil, undertaken your ben venuto; where I will prove those verses to be very unlearned, neither savouring of poetry, wit, nor invention: I beseech you, son, learn them.

Nath. And thank you too; for society, (saith the text) is the happiness of life.

[Exeunt Biron, Costard, and Jerv.

Enter Biron, with a paper.

Biron. The king he is hunting the deer; I am about to call; they have pitch'd a toil; I am tolling in a pitch; pitch the delfies; defile! a foul word. Well, set thee down, sorrow! for so, they say, the fool shall and so say I, and I the fool.—Well proved, wit! by the lord, this verse is as mad as Ajax: it kills sheep; it kills me, I a sheep. Well proved again on my side! I will not live; if I do, hang me; I faith, I will not. O, but her eye,—by this light, I would not love her; yes, for her two eyes. Well, I do nothing in the world but lie, and lie in my threat. By heaven, I do love; and it had taught me to rhyme, and to be melancholy, and here is the game; in my threats, and here is my melancholy. Well, she saith one of my sons already; the clown here it, the fool sent it, and the lady hath it, sweet clown, sweeter fool, sweetest lady! By the world, I would not care a toil if the other three were in: Here comes one with a paper; God give him grace to groan!—

[Exeunt Biron.

Scene III.—Another part of the Park.

Enter Biron, with a paper.

Biron. The king he is hunting the deer; I am about to call; they have pitch'd a toil; I am tolling in a pitch; pitch the delfies; defile! a foul word. Well, set thee down, sorrow! for so, they say, the fool shall and so say I, and I the fool.—Well proved, wit! by the lord, this verse is as mad as Ajax: it kills sheep; it kills me, I a sheep. Well proved again on my side! I will not live; if I do, hang me; I faith, I will not. O, but her eye,—by this light, I would not love her; yes, for her two eyes. Well, I do nothing in the world but lie, and lie in my threat. By heaven, I do love; and it had taught me to rhyme, and to be melancholy, and here is the game; in my threats, and here is my melancholy. Well, she saith one of my sons already; the clown here it, the fool sent it, and the lady hath it, sweet clown, sweeter fool, sweetest lady! By the world, I would not care a toil if the other three were in: Here comes one with a paper; God give him grace to groan!—

[Exeunt Biron.

King. Ah me!

Biron. [Aside.] Shot, by heaven! Proceeded, sweet Cupid; then hast thou pup'd him with thy bird-bolt under the left p'pp.—I faith secrets,—

King. [Reads.] So sweet a kiss the golden sun shall never

To those fresh morning drops upon the rose

As thy eyes-beam, when their fresh rays have smote

The night of dew that on my cheeks down flows:

No kisses, O, no kisses, my lips are so benumbed;

Through the transparent bower of the dews,

As doth thy face through tears of mine give light;

That shad'st in every tear that I do weep,

And as my tears are in my eye so dry,

So robb'st thou triumphing in my vow,

Do but behold the tears that swell in me,

And they thy glory through my griefs still show.

But am, am, my sweet; how may I ever care?

My tears for glasses, and still make me weep.

O queen of queens, how far doth that exact?

No thought can think, nor tongue of mortal art.

In truth.

How shall she know my grace! I'll drop the paper

Sweet leaves, shade only. Who is he comes here!

[Aside.]

Enter Longaville, with a paper.

What Longaville! and reading! listen, car.

Biron. Now, in thy likeness, one more fool, appear!

[Aside.]

Long. Ah me! I am forsworn.

Biron. Why, he comes in like a purgier, wearing papers.

King. In love, I hope; sweet fellowship in shame.

Biron. One drunkard loves another of the name.

Long. Am I the first that have been purgier so?

Biron. [Aside.] I could put thee in compassion; not by two, that I know:

Thou mak'st the trumpery, the corner-cap of society.

The shape of love's Tyburn that hangs up simplicity.

Long. I fear, these stubborn lines back power to move:

O sweet Mirth, empress of my love!

These numbers will but tire, and write in wanton

Cupid's bace; disfigure not his hap.

Long. This same shall go.—

[He reads the sonnet.]

Didst not the heavenly rhetoric of those eyes

galst whom the world renowned and argument

Persuade my heart to this false pecuniary

Poesy for thee broke, deserve ye punishment.

A woman I forswear, out, I will prove,

That being a goddess, I forswear not thee:

My love was early, that a heavenly love;

Thy grace being gain'd, cures all disgrace in me.

Your are but breath, and breath a vapor is;

As then their vain, which on my earth doth

Exhale this vapor woe; in thee it is:

If broke, then, if to my fault of mine:

If by me broken, what fool is so wise.

To lose an oath to win a paradise?

Biron. [Aside.] This is the liver vein, which Makes fiesh a deity.

A green goddess a pure, pure idolatry.

God amend us, God amend! we are much out o' the way.

[Exeunt Biron, with a paper.

Long. By whom shall I send this?—Company! stay.

[Stepping aside.]

Biron. [Aside.] All hid, all hid, an old infant

Like a demi-god here sit I in the sky,

And wretched fools' secrets heedfully o'er-eye.

More sakes to the null! O heavens, I have my wish.

Dumain transform'd: four woodcocks in a dish!

Dum. O most divine Kate!

Biron. O most profane Coxcomb!

[Aside.]

Dum. By heaven, the wonder of a mortal eye! Biron. By earth, she is but corporal; there you lie.

Dum. Her amber hairs for foul have amel-coted.

Biron. An amber-color'd raven was well noted.

Dum. As upright as the cedar.

Dum. As fair as day.

Biron. As so fair as day; but then no sun must shine.

Dum. 0 that I had my wish!

Long. And I had none!

King. And I mine too, good lord!

Biron. Amen, so I had mine: Is not that a good word?

Dum. I would forget her; but a fever she Reigns in my blood, and will remember'd be.

Biron. A fever in your blood, why then motion

Would let her out in souces; sweet misprision

Dum. Once more I'll read the ode that I have writ.

9 Outstripped, surpassed.
When shall we see you write a thing in rhyme?
Biron. If you or groan for Joan or spend a wintry time.
In trimming me? When shall you hear that?
I will praise a hand, a foot, a face, an eye,
A gait, a state, a brow, a breast, a waist,
A leg, a limb?—
King. Sow! Whither away so fast?
Biron. A true man, or a thief, that gai-laps so!
Intrimming myself.

Ester Jacquesetta and Costard.

Dum. Walk aside the true folk, and let the traitors stay.
Biron. Ah, you whom the distant breezes have engaged,
'Tis you that should be sweet lovers, not us embracers.
As true we are, as flesh and blood can be:
The sea shall ebb and flow, heaven show his face;
What looks good shall willfully obey and be obeyed.
We cannot cross the cause why we were born;
Therefore, of all hands must we be forsown.

Dum. The number of hairs.

Biron. True, true, we are four:
Biron. Why? I have three fools lack'd me fool to make up the mess:
He, he, and you, my liege, and I,
Are pick-purses in love, and we deceive to die.

Cost. Walk aside the true folk, and let the traitors stay.

Biron. Your eyes are not hid in love or in love;
Your eyes do make no coaches; in your tears
There is no certain prince that appears:
You're never seen without your jacket;
Tush, none but minstrels like of someting.
But are you not asham'd? you are not,
All three of you, to be thus much a-crotch;
Your words and your wit, the king you did ride to;
But I a beam do find in each of three.
O what a scene of folly I have seen,
Of sighs, of groans, of sorrow, and of love!
O me, how strong, how straight, but for my love, day would turn to night!
Of all complexion the cruel!—
Do meet, as at a fair, in her fair cheek;
Where several worthies make one dignity;
Where nothing wants, that want itself doth seek.
Lend me the flourish of all gentles tongues—
Fye, painted rhetoric! O, she needs it not;
To things of sale a seller's prize belongs;
When I praise too short a dot doth
A witter'd hermit, five-score winters worn,
Might shock off fifty, looking in her eye:
Beauty don't ashamed then to this new-born;
And gives the crutch the cradle's infancy.
O, 'tis the sun, that maketh all things shine!
King. By heaven, thy love is black as ebony.
Biron. Ah, is honey like her? I too wood divine!
A wife of such wood were felicity.
Scene III.
LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

O, who can give an oath! where is a book?
That I may swear, beauty doth beauty lack;
If she that learn not of her eye to look;
No face is fair, that is not full so black.

King. O parsley! black is the badge of hell.
The line of dunces, and the scowl of night;
And beauty's crest becomes the heavens well.

Biron. Would it so soonest tempt, resembling spirits
Of light.
O, if in black my lady's brows be decked,
it mourns, that painting, and usurping hair,
Should rivash coers with a base aspect;
And therefore she is born to make black fair.

Her favor turns the fashion of the days;
For native blood is count'd painting now;
And therefore red, that would avoid dispraise,
Paints itself black, to imitate her brow.

Dum. To look like her, are chimney-sweepers black.

Long. And, since her time, are collors count'd bright.

King. And Ethiops of their sweet complexion crack.

Dum. Dark needs no candles now, for dark is light.

Biron. Your mistresses dare never come in rain.

For fear their colors should be wash'd away.

King. 'Twere good, yours did: for, sir, to tell you plain,
I'll find a farer face wash'd today.

Biron. I'll prove her fair, or talk till dooms-day here.

King. No devil will fright thee then so much as she.

Dum. Never knew man hold vile stuff so dear.

Long. Looks, here's thy love: my foot and her face see.

Biron. O, if the streets were paved with thine eyes,
Her foot were much too dainty for such tread!

Dum. O vale! then as she goes, what upward hay.

The street should see as she walk'd over head.

King. But what of this? Are we not all in love?

Biron. Nothing so sure; and thereby allforsworn.

King. Then leave this chatter: and, good Biron, how prove
Our loving lawfull, and our faith not torn.

Dum. Ay, marry, there,—some flattery for this devil.

Long. O, some authority how to proceed;
Some tricks, some quietts, 4 how to cheat the devil.

Dum. Some salve for perjury.

Biron. 4 It, to be more than need—
Have at you then, allocution men at arms:
Consider, what you first did swear unto:
To fast,—to study,—and to see no woman:
Flat to the earth, grind the kernel out of oath:
Say, can you fast! your stomachs are too young.
And abstinence engenders maladies.
And where that you have vow’d to study, lords,
In each at you hath forsworn his book:
Can you still dream, and pore, and theoreon book?
For when would you, my lord, or you, or you,
Have found the ground of study’s excellence,
Without the beauty of a woman’s face.
From women’s eyes this doctrine I derive:
They are the ground, the books, the academies,
From whence doth spring the true Pythian fire.
Why, universal plooding princes up
The nimble spirits in the arteries;
As motion, and long-drawing action,
The spirit of the body’s life.
Now, for not looking on a woman’s face,
You have in that forsworn the use of eyes;
And study too the cause of your vow:
For where is any author in the world,

Teaches such beauty as a woman’s eye?
Learning is but an adjutant to your own.
And where we are, our learning likewise is.
Then, when ourselves we see in ladies eyes,
For then we do not in our learning there.
O, we have made a vow to study, lords;
And in that vow we have forsworn our books;
For when we study, we have, or you, or you,
In vain contemnation, have we found out
Such petty numbers, as the prompting eyes
Of beauteous tutors have enrich’d you with?
Some other shows entirely keep the brain;
And therefore finding barren practises,
Searce show a harvest of their heavy toil.

But love, first learned in a lady’s eyes,
Lives not alone immured in the brain;
But, with the motion of all elements,
Courses as swift as thought in every power;
And gives to every power a double power.
Above their functions and their others,
It adds a precious seeing to the eye;
A lover’s eyes will gaze an eagle blind.
A lover’s ear will hear the lowest sound,
When the suspicious head of thief is stopp’d;
Love’s feeling is more soft, and sensible,
Than are the tender horns of cocked stags;
Love’s touch, too, the dainty bacchus’s taste in:
For valor, is not love a Hercules;
Still climbing trees in the hesperides.
Subtle as Sphinx; as sweet, and musical,
As Apollo’s lute, strong with his string.
And, when Love speaks, the voice of all the gods
Makes heaven drowsy with the harmony.
Never burn poset touch a pen to write;
Until his lines were temper’d with Love’s sigh;
Or, then his lines would ravish savage cars,
And plant in tyrants mild humility.

From women’s eyes this doctrine I derive:
They sparkle still the right Pythian fire.
They are the books, the arts, the academies,
That show, contain, and nourish all the world;
Else none at all in aught proves excellent.
Then hope you were these women to forswear;
Or, keeping what is sworn, you will prove fools.
For wisdom’s sake, a word that all men love;
Or for love’s sake, a word that loves all men;
Or for men’s sake, the authors of these women;
Or women’s sake, by whom we men are men;
Let us once lose our oaths, to find ourselves,
Or else we lose ourselves to keep our oaths:
It is religion to be thus forsworn:
For charity itself fulfills the law;
And who can seav love from charity?

King. Nay! Cupid, then! and, soldiers, to the field!

Biron. Advance your standards, and upon them,
Hear;
Fell-mell, down with them! but be first advis’d,
In conflict that you get the sun of them.

Long. Now to plain-dealing; lay these crosses by:
Shall we resolve to woo these girls of France?

King. And win them too; therefore let us devise
Some entertainment for them in their tents.

Biron. First, from the park let us conduct them thither:
Then, homeward, every man attack the hand
Of his fair mistress: in the afternoon
We will have some strange pastime solace them,
Such as the shortness of the time can shew;
For receipts, dances, masks, and merry hours,
Fore-run fair Love, strewing her way with flowers.

King. Away, away! no time shall be omitted,
That will be time, and may by us be fitted.

Biron. Alons! Alons!—now’d cocke rep’d no corn;
And justice always whirs in equal measure:
Light wenchers may prove plagues to men forsworn;
If so, our copper buys no better treasure.

Exeunt.
LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST

Act V.

SCENE I.—A Street.

Enter Holofernes, Sir Nathaniel, and Dull.

Hol. Salus sitis sufficient.

Nath. I praise God for you, sir, your reasons at dinner were been sharp and scolding; pleasant without scurrility, witty without affectation, audacious without impudence, learned without opinion, and strange without heresy. I did converse this quattuor days with a companion of the king's, who is intituled, nominated, or called, Don Adrian de Armado.

Nath. Nori hominem langum te: His humor is lofty, his discourse peremptory, his tongue fixed, his eye ambitious, his fate majestic, and his general behavior vain, ridiculous, and tirassomical. He is too picked, too spruce, too affected, too odd, as it were, too peremptive, as I may call it.

Nath. A most singular and choice epitaph.

[Toes out his labor-book.]

Hol. He draweth out the thread of his verbosity finer than the staple of his argument. I allow such fantastical phantasies, such insensible and pointless companions; such rackets of orthography, as to speak, doubt, fine, when he should say, doubt, det., when he should pronounce, debt; d, e, b, t.; not, d, c, t.: he electeth a call, cauf; half, haut; neighbor, nantir; nebior, neigh abbreviated, i.e.:

This horrid scoundrel (which he would call adorable), it mismatches of my insinse; Nteligentia domus to make frantic, lunatic.

Enter Lampado, born intelligo.

Hol. Born?—er, for bear: Prisca a little scratched; 'twill serve.

Enter Armado, Moth, and Costard.

Nath. Videane quis vocat?

Hol. Vido, el guadeo.

Arm. Chira!

[Nath. Chira! Chira, not sirrah?]

Arm. Men of peace, well encounter'd.

Hol. Most military sir, salutation. Moth. They have been at a great feast oflanguages, and stolen the scraps. [To Costard aside.

Conf. o, they have lived long in the alms-basket of words! I marvel, thy master hath not catchen thee for a word; for thou art not so long by the head as honoredintellectualitatis that art easier swollen than a clap-dragon.

Moth. Peace; the peal begins.

Arm. Most worthy sir, Hol. are you not letter'd? Moth. Yes, yes; he teaches boys the horn-book:

What is a, b, speck backward with a horn on his head?

Hol. Ba pertica, with a horn added.

Moth. Ba, most silly sheep, with a horn:—You hear his learning.

Hol. Quies, quis, thou commodat?

Moth. The thing is, the five vowels, if you repeat them; or the fifth, u.

Hol. I will repeat them, a, e, i, u.

Moth. The sheep; the other two concludes it; o, u.

Arm. Now, by the salt wave of the Mediterraneum, a sweet torch, a quick venem of wit: snip, snap, quick and home; it repented my intellect: true.

Moth. Offer'd by a child to an old man; which is wise-old.

Arm. What is the figure? what is the figure.

Moth. Horse.

Hol. Thou disputest like an infant: go, whip thy gig.

Arm. Lead me thy horn to make one, and I will whip about thy mummy circum cervix; A gig of a cuckold's horn!

Conf. Of I had but one penny in the world, thou shouldst have to buy; but tinder horn, there is the very remuneration I had of thy master, thou half-[Discourse.

Arm. Arts-man, præambule! we shall be singled from their baptism, so you not educate youth at the charge-house on the top of the mountain! Hol. Or, mons. the hill.

Arm. At your sweet pleasure, for the mountain.

Nath. Sir, it is the king's most sweet pleasure and affection, to congratulate the princess at her pavilion, in the posteriors of this day; which the rude multitude call the afternoon.

Hol. The posterior of the day, most generous sir, is hable, congruent, and measurable for the afternoon: the word is well cur'd, chose; sweet and subtle.

Arm. Sir, the king is a noble gentleman; and my familiar, I do assure you, very good friend—for what is inward between us, let it pass.—I do beseech some other stock of courtesie;—I beseech thee, apparatus tiny head; and among other important and most serious designs,—and of great importance too—but let that pass—for I must tell thee, it will please grace by the world) sometime to lean upon my poor shoulder; and with his royal finger, thus, daily with my excrement, with my most guilty, but sweet heart, let that pass by the world, I recount no idle; some certain special honors it pleaseth his greatnesse to impart to Armado, a soldier, a man of travel, that hath seen the world; but let that pass,—the very all of all is,—but sweet heart, I do implore secrecy,—that the king would have me present the princess, sweet choice, with some delightful ostentation, or show, or pageant, or act, or fire-work. Now, understanding that the curious and your sweet self, are good at such eruptions, and sudden breaking out of youth, as it were, I have acquainted you withal, to the end to crave your assistance.

Hol. Sir, you shall present before her the nine worthies—Sir Nathaniel, as concerning some entertainment of time, some show in the posterior of this day, to be rendered by our assistance,—the king's command, and the most gallant, illustrious, and learned gentleman,—before the princess; I say, home some to present the nine worthies.

Nath. Wherefore will you find men worthy enough to present them?

Hol. Joshua, yourself; myself, or this gallant gentleman, Armado Mussemanus; this swain, because of his great limb or joint, shall pass Pompy the great; the page, Hercules.

Arm. Fardon, sir, either: he is not quantity enough for that Augustus's thumb: he is not so big as the end of his club.

Hol. Shall I have audience? be shall present Hercules in minority: his enter and exit shall be strangely, I do assure you, sir, I do assure.

Moth. An excellent device! so, if any of the audience less, you may cry. Well done, Hercules! Note this! crushed the stuke? thus is the way to make an olive graceious; though few have the grace to do it.

Arm. I have the rest of the worthies!

Hol. I will play three myself.

Moth. Three-worthy gentleman!

Arm. Shall I tell you a thing?

Hol. We tread.

Arm. We will have, if this fadge not, an act. I beseech you, follow.

Hol. Viva, Goodman Dull! thou hast spoken no word at all, and let me have three lines.

Dull. Nor understood none neither, sir.

Arm. Allons! we will employ thee.

Dull. I'll make one in a dance, or so; or I will Scene II.  Love's Labor's Lost.

Play on the tabor to the words, and let them dance the lute.

Hot. Most dull, honest Dull to our sport, away.

(Scene entered.)

The Princess's Pavilion.

Enter the Princess, Katharine, Rosaline, and Maria.

Prin. Sweet hearts, we shall be rich ere we depart, if laurels come thus plentifully in.

And lack withal about with dim Simons.

Look you, what I have from the loving king.

Rosaline, come, let us have none this way along with that.

Prin. Nothing but this! Yes, as much love in rhyme.

As would be crammed up in a sheet of paper,

Writ on both sides the leaf, margent and all;

Then let us as fast as we can set down Cupid's name.

That was the way that he made his godhead wax.

For he had been five thousand years a boy.

Kath. Ay, and a shrewd unhappy gallows too.

Rosaline, you'll never be friends with him; he kill'd your sister.

Kath. He made her melancholy, sad, and heavy;

Merry men! but she's light, like you,

Of such a merry, nimble, shining spirit,

She might have been a grandam ere she died:

And so may you: for a light heart lives long.

Rosaline, thy dark meaning, mouse? of this light word!

Kath. A light condition in a beauty dark.

Rosaline, we need more light to find your meaning out.

Kath. You'll make us laugh, by taking it in snuff.

Therefore, I'll darkly end the argument.

Prin. Look what you do, you do it still i' the dark.

Kath. Do not you; for you are a light wench.

Prin. Indeed, I weigh not you; and therefore, light.

Kath. You weigh me not—o, that's care for me not.

Rosaline, great reason; for, past cure is still past care.

Prin. Well banded both; a set of wit well play'd.

Rosaline, you have a favor too;

Who sent it? and what is it?

Rosaline. I would you knew,

An if my face were but as fair as yours,

My favor were as great; be witness this.

Nay, I have verses too, I thank Biron:

The numbers true: and, were the numbering too,

I were the fairest goddess on the ground:

I am compared to twenty thousand fairies.

You hath drawn my picture in his letter!

Prin. Any thing like?

Rosaline. Much, in the letters: nothing, in the praise.

Prin. Beauteous as ink; a good conclusion.

Kath. And if the text B in a certain poem,

Rosaline. Ware pencils! How I let me not die your debtor.

My red dominick, my golden letter.

O that your face were not so full of O's!

Kath. A pox of that jest! and beseech all shaws,

But what was sent to you from fair Dumain?

Kath. Madam, this glove.

Prin. Did he not send you a wall?

Kath. Yes, madam; and moreover,

Some thousand verses of a faithful lover:

A large translation of hypocrisies,

Woe to conjugal and simplicity.

Mar. Thus, and these pearls, to me sent Longaville;

The letter is too long by half a mile.

Prin. Think you not? Dost thou not wish in heart,

The chain were longer, and the letter short?

Mar. Ay, or I would these hands might never part.

Prin. They are wise girls to mock our lovers so.

Rosaline, they are worse fools to purchase mocking so.

That same Biron I'll torture ere I go,

O, that I knew he were but in the wreck!

Drum! drum! what would make you box, and seek;

And wait the season, and observe the times;

And spend his prodigious words in bootless rhymes;

And shape his service wholly to his behoves; and

To prove him proud to make me proud that jests;

So portent-like would I o'ersway his state,

That he should be my foot, and I his lute.

Grow.

In anger.

Formerly a term of endangerment.

Prin. None are so sorely caught, when they are catch'd.

As wit turn'd fool: folly, in wisdom hatch'd,

Hath wisdom's warrant, and the help of school;

And wit's base course graces a learned fool.

Rosaline, the blood of your ears: not with such express.

As gravity's revolt to wantonness.

Mar. For such fools deeds bear not so strong a note,

As looser in the wise, when wit doth dictate;

Since all the power thereof doth apply,

To prove, by wit, worth in simplicity.

Enter Boyet.

Prin. Here comes Boyet, and mirth is in his face.

Boyet. O, I am staid b with laugher! Where is her grace?

Prin. Fly, fly news, Boyet! I

Boyet. I prepare, madam, prepare!—

Arm, wenches, arm! encounters mournful are

Against your peace: love hath approach'd disguise'd,

Armed in arguments: you'll be surpris'd.

Muster your wits; stand in your own defence;

Or hide your heads like cowards, and fly hence.

Prin. Saint Dunstan to smite you! What are they,

That charge them with breaking against me? say, say, say.

Boyet. The greatest and most of ancient course:

I thought to close mine eyes some half an hour:

When, lo! to interrupt my purposed rest,

Toward that I sought I found beyond discredit.

The king and his companions: wary

I stole to a neighbor thicket by,

And overheard what you should overhear;

And that, by and by, you tell me what.

Then heraid was a pretty knavish page,

That well by heart hain conn'd his embroidery:

Action, and accent, did they teach them there;

Thus noted thou their speech, and thus thy sly bear;

And ever and anon they made a doubt,

Presence maugreful would put him out;

For, quoth the king, an angel shall thou see;

If fear me not, say so audaciously.

The boy reply'd, An orogen is not real;

I should have fear'd her, had she been a devil.

With that all hang'd, and capp'd him on the shoulder;

Making the bold way by their prais'd bolder,

One Richard's elbow, thus; and thee'd, and swore,

A better speech was never spoke before:

Another with his finger and his thumb,

Cry'd, That we will do, come what will come;

The third he capp'd, and cried. All goes well;

The fourth turn'd on the toe, and down he fell

With that all turn'd on the ground,

With suchazalous laughter, so profound,

That in the spleen ridiculous appears,

To check their folly, passion's solemn tears.

Prin. But, let us come, to see them visit us.

Boyet. They do, they do, and are apparell'd thus.

Like Muscovites, or Russians: as I guess,

Their purpose is, to parle, to court, and dance;

And every one his love-seat will advance

Into his several mistress; which they'll know

By favors several, which they did bestow.

Prin. And will they so? the galants shall be task'd:

For, ladies, we will have every one be mask'd;

But not a one of them shall have the grace,

Despite of suit, to see a lady's face.—

Hold, Rosaline, this favor thou shalt wear!

And then the king will court thee for his dear;

Hold, take this, my sweet, and me thine: so

Shall Biron take me for Rosaline.

And change your favors too; so shall your loves

Woo contrary, decoy'd by these removes.

Rosaline, come, then, and take the favor's post in sight.

Kath. But, in this changing, what is your intent?

Prin. The effect of my intent is, to cross them:

They do it but in mawrking merriment;

And mock for mock; my love is only,

Their several coupl'd they unlooked shall

To loves mistakes; and so be mock'd within.AI

I pon the next occasion that we meet,

With visage display'd, to talk, and great prosecuting.

Boyet. But shall we dance, if they desire us so?

Prin. No: to the death, we will not move a foot,

Nor to their pen'd speech render we no grace;

But, while in speech, each turn away her face.
Boyet. Why, that contempt will kill the speaker's heart.

Enter the King, Biron, Longaville, and Du-Main, in Russian habits, and masked; Moth, Musicians, and Attendants.

Moth. All hail, the richest beauties on the earth! Boyet. Beauties no richer than rich taffeta. Moth. A holy parley of the fair sex: [The Ladies turn their backs to him.]

That ever turn'd their backs — to mortal views! Biron. Their eyes, villain, their eyes. Moth. That ever turn'd their eyes to mortal views! Out —

Biot. True; out, indeed.

Moth. Out of your favors, heavenly spirits, vouchsafe,

Not to behold—
Biron. Once to behold, rogue.

Moth. Once to behold, with your sun-beamed eyes,—with your sun-beamed eyes—

Biyet. They will not answer to that epithet; You were best call it, daughter-beamed eyes.

Moth. They do not mark me, and that brings me out.

Biron. Is this your freedom? be gone, you rogue.

Ros. What would these strangers? I know their minds, Boyet;

If they do speak our language, 'tis our will
That some plain man recount their purposes:

Know what they would.

Boyet. What would you with the princess?

Biron. Nothing but peace and gentle visitation.
Ros. What would they, say they!

Boyet. Nothing but peace, and gentle visitation.

Ros. Why, that they have you on our watch—

Boyet. She says, you have it, and you may begone.

King. Say to her, we have measured many miles
To tread a measure with her on this grass.

Boyet. They say that they have measured many a mile,

To tread a measure with you on this grass.

Ros. If not ask them how many inches
Is in one mile: if they have measured many,
The measure then of one is easily told.

Boyet. If to come hither you have measured miles,
And the princess bids you tell,

How many inches do fill up one mile.

Biron. Tell her, we measure them by weary steps.
Ros. How many weary steps,

Of many weary miles you have o'ergone,
Are numbered in the travel of one mile?

Biron. We number nothing that we spend for

Our duty so rich, so infinite,
That we may do it still without account.

Youthful to show the sunshine of your face,

That we, like savages, may worship it.

Ros. My face is but a moon, and clouded too.

King. Blessed are clouds, to do such things do!

Vast shades, bright beams, and those dusky stars to shine

(Those clouds removed) on you out of my eye,

Ros. O vain petitioner! beg a greater matter;

Then now request but moonshine in the water.

King. Then in our measure do but vouchsafe

one change;

Thou bidst me beg; this begging is not strange.

Ros. Play, muse, then: nay, you must do it

Muse's play.

Not yet;—no dance;—this change I like the moon.

King. Will you not dance? how come you thus extraneous?

Ros. You took the moon at full; but now she's changed.

King. Yet still she is the moon, and I the man.

The moon's the plays; vouchsafe some motion to it.

Ros. Our ears vouchsafe it.
Scene II.
LOVE'S LABORS LOST.

King.  We came to visit you; and purpose now
To lead you to our court; vouchsafe it then.

Prin.  The good God hold me for, and so hold your

Nor god, nor I, delight in perjur'd men.

King.  Relate me not for that thou provokest;
The virtue of your friend must live in my mouth.

Prin.  You neck-name virtue: vice you should have spoken;
For vice's office never breaks men's truth.

Now by my maiden honor, yet as pure
As the unsoiled lily, I protest,
A world of forces thought I should endure,
I would not yield to be your homely guest:
So much I hate a breakingcause to be
Of heavenly oaths, vow with false, rity.

Kings.  O, you have liv'd in desolation here,
I need, I need, much to your shame.

Prin.  Nor so, my lord; it is not so, I swear;
We have had pastimes here, and pleasant game
A mess of Russians let us but of late.

King.  How, madam! Russians!

A/y, in truth, my lord
Tran gallants, full of courtship, and of state.

Ros.  Madam, speak true—for it is not so, my lord.
My lord. (to the manner of the day,
In courtesies, gives undervaluing grace.
We pour, mured, confronted here with four
In Russian habit: here they stay'd an hour,
Until it was to get license from his lord,
They did not bless us with one happy word.
I dare not call them ions; but this I think,
When they were thirsty, fools would inan have drink.

Biron.  It was no way the properst way,

Prin.  That is not my doctrine, nor is it sweet,
Your wit makes wise things foolish, when we greet
With eyes best seing heaven's fiery eye,
By light we lose light, our capacity
Is of that nature, that to your huge more
Wise things seem foolish, and rich things but poor
Ros.  This proves ye wise and rich: for in my cye, Biron.  I am a fool, and full of poverty.

But that you take what doth to you belong,
It were a fault to snatch words from my tongue.

Biron.  I am yours, and all that I possess.

Ros.  All the rest mine

Biron.  I cannot give you less.

Ros.  Which of the visors was it that you wore?

you this!

Ros.  I here, then, that visor; that surplices case,
That had the worse, and snow'd the better face.

King.  Verily, we are deceived: they'll mock us now downward.

Dum.  Let us confess, and turn it to a jest.

Prin.  Amaz'd, my lord! Why looks yond noble

Biron.  Help, hold his brows! I'll swoon! Why

Seek-sick, I think, coming from Muscovy.

Biron. This pour the stars down plagues for perjury,

Can any tree of brass hold longer out?

Here stand I, lady, I dart thy shaft at me;
Brave will she seem, confound me with a

Thrust thy sharp wit quite through my ignorance;
Cut me to pieces with thy keen conceit;
And I will blush twice, and think on my
Not never more in Russian habit wait,
O! never will I trust to stitches pein
Not to the motion of a schoolboy's tongue;
Never on air to you my friend,
Nor weep in rhyme, like a band harper's song:
Tell tales, that you thence summer's true
Have blown me tumble of muggost ostentation:
I do forsware then: and I here protest,
By this white glove, (how white the hand,

Henceforth my wooring mind shall be express'd
In russet years, and honest kersy noise:
And, to be brief, your friends I'll serve so well
My love to thee is sound, saints scarce to know.

Ros.  Suis sans, I pray you.

Biron.  Yet I have a trick

Of the old rage:—bear with me, I am sick;

After the fashion of the times.
I'll leave it by degrees, soft, let us see:—

Write, Lord, have me say on us, on those three;
They are infected, in their hearts lies;
They have the plague, and caught it of your eyes;
Their lords are wasted; you are not true,
For the Lord's tokens on you do I see.

Prim. No, they are free, that gave these tokens to us.
Biron. Our states are forlorn, seek not to undo us.
Prim. They are not so; for how can this be true,
That you stand forlorn, being those that sue.
Biron. Peace; for I will not have to do with you.
Ros. Nor shall not, if I do as I intend.
Biron. Speak not, for yourselves, my lord is not amind.
King. Teach us, sweet madam, for our rude transgression
Some fair excuse.

Prim. The fairest is confession.

What you have not here, but even now, disguis'd!

Ros. Madam, I was, and were you all advis'd!

King. I was, fair madam.

When you then were here, What did you whisper in your lady's ear?

King. That more than all the world I did respect her.

Prime. When she shall challenge this, you will reject her.

King. Upon mine honor, no.

Prim. Peace, peace, for hear; Your oath once broke, you force; not to forswear.

King. Despise me when I break through of mine, and take before keep it—Rosaline. What did the Russian whisper in your ear?

Ros. Madam, he swore that he did hold me dear As precious e'yeglass; and did value it Above this word: adding thereto, moreover, That he would wed me or else die my lover.

Prim. God give thee joy of him! the noble lord Most honorably doth uphold his word.

King. What mean you, madam! by my life, my troth, I never swore this lady such an oath. Ros. By heaven, you did; and to confirm it, You gave me this; but take it, sir, again.

King. My faith, and this the princess, I did give;
I knew her by this jewel on her sleeve.
Prim. Pardon me, sir, this jewel did she wear; And lord Biron, I thank him, is my dear —
What, will you have me or, your pearl again?

Biron. Neither of either; I remit both twain. I see the trick is't.—There was a consent. (Knowing beforehand of our errment.)

To dash it like a Christmas comedy; Some carry talk, some please man, some slight fancy.

Some tumble-news, some trencher-knight, some Dick,
That smiles in his cheek in years; and knows the trick To make my lady laugh, when she's disposed,— Told our intents before: which once disclosed, The ladies did change favors; and then we, Following the sign, and did the sign of she, Now, to our perjury to add more terror, We are again forsworn; in will, and error.

Much upon this it is; —And might not you.

To BOYET.

Forestall our sport, to make us thus untrue? Do not you know my lady's foot by the squire,— And laugh upon the apple of her eye! And stand between her back, sir, and the fire, Holding a trencher, jesting merrily! You put our pace out; you, you are allow'd; These lemons you will, a semon shall be your shred. You leen upon me, do you? there's an eye

Wounds like a keen sword.

Boyet. Full merry

When the brave manage, this career, then run. Biron. Lo, he is tilting straight! Peace; I have done.

Enter COSTARD.

Welcome, poor wit! thou partest a fair fray.
Cost. O, Lord, sir, they would know Whether the three worthies shall come in, or no. Biron. What, are there but thee? —

Cost. No, sir; but it is varie fine,
For every one parents three.

Biron. Bawdery. And three times thrice nine, is 1 Make no difficulty. 2 Conspiracy. 3 Bullock. 4 Square, rule.

Cost. Not so, sir; under correction, sir; I hope, it is not so;
You cannot be, sir, I can assure you, sir; we know what we know. I hope, three times thrice, sir,—
Biron. — Is not nine! —

Cost. Under correction, sir, we know whereuntil it doth amount.
Biron. For God's sake, I always took three threes for nine.

Cost. O, Lord, sir, it were a pity you should get your living by reckoning. Biron. Upon much it of me.

Cost. O, Lord, for the parties themselves, the actors, sir, will show whereuntil it doth amount: for my own part, I am, as they say, but to perfect one man; I must be sure; for many Pompons, the great, sir. Biron. Art thou one of the worthies? —

Cost. It pleased them, to think me worthy of Pompons the great: for mine own part, I know not the grade of the worthy; but I am to stand for him.

Biron. God bid them prepare.

Cost. We will turn it finely off, sir; we will take some care.

[Exeunt Costard.]

King. Biron, they will shame us, let them not approach.

Biron. We are shame-proof, my lord; and 'tis some policy
To have one show worse than the king's and his company. —

King. I say they shall not come.

Cost. Nay, my good lord, let me o'er-rule you.

Cost. That sport best pleases, that doth least know how: Where zeal strives to contend, and the contents Or the beauty of them for which it, presents.

Their form confounded makes most form in mirth; When great things laboring perish in their birth.

Biron. A right description of our sport, my lord.

Enter ARMADO.

Arm. Anon, I implore so much expense of thy royal sweet breath, as will utter a brace of words.

[Armado converses with the King, and delivers him a paper.]

Prim. Doth this man wear God?

Biron. Why ask you? —

Prim. He speaks not like a man of God's making.

Arm. That's all one, my fair, sweet, honey nauseum: for, I protest, the schoolmaster is exceeding fantastical; too, too vain; too, too vain: but we will put it, as they say, to forfutila della guerra. I wish you the peace of mind, most royal couple, my lord.

King. Here is like-to be a good presence of worthies: He presents Hector of Troy; the swain, Pompey the great; the parson carole, Alexander; Armado, a page, Horweces; the petit, Judas Maciaclaus; And if these four worthies in their first show thrive, These will change habits, and present the other five.

Biron. There is five in the first show. Arm. You are deceived; to so not.

Biron. The pedant, the bragard, the hedge-prast, the fool, and the boy: —

Abate a throw at novum; and the whole world again,
Cannot do out five snae, take each one in his vein.

King. The ship is under sail, and here she comes again.

[Seeds brought for the King, Princess, sir.]

Pagenot of the Nine Worthies.

Enter Costard and armado for Pompey.

Cost. I Pompey am. —

Byon. You lie, you are not he.

Cost. I Pompey am.

Boyet. With lieber's head on knee.

Biron. Well said, old mocher; I must needs be friends with thee.

Cost. I Pompey am. Pompey surround the great. —

Dum. The great.

Cost. I Pompey am. Pompey surround the great, That off in field, with large and shield, did make my foe to sweat:

And, travelling along this coast, here I come and here I am; And lay my arms before the legs of this sweet Ioss of France.

— A game with dice.
If your ladyship would say, Thanks, Pompey, I had done.

Print. Great thanks, great Pompey.

Cost. 'Tis not so much worth; but, I hope, I was perfect; I made a little fault in great. Pompey. My hat to a halfpenny, Pompey proves the best-worthy.

Enter Nathaniel armor'd, for Alexander.

Nath. When in the world I lived, I was the world's commander. By east, west, north, and south, I spread my conquering might:

My soul's been put in declares, that I am Alexander. Pompey. Your nose says, no, you are not; for it stands too right.

Biron. Your nose smells so, in this, most tender smelling knight.

Print. The conqueror is dismay'd. Proceed, good Alexander.

Nath. When in the world I lived, I was the world's commander?

Bogel. Most true; 'tis right; you were so, Alexander.

Biron. Pompey the great.

Cost. Hallo! Ay, servant, and Costard.

Biron. Take away the conqueror, take away Alexander.

Cost. O, sir. [To Nath.] you have overthrown Alexander the conqueror! You will be scraped out of the painted cloth for this: your lion, that holds his paws sitting on a close-stool, will be given to A-jax, he will be the ninth worthy. A conqueror, and a most true; run away for shame, Alexander. [Nath. retires.]

Ther's, an't shall please you; a foolish mild man; an honest man, look you, and soon dash'd! He is a marvelous good neighbor, in earth, and a very good bowler; but, for Alexander, alas, you see, how 'tis;—a little over-parted:—but there are worthies a coming will speak their mind in some other sort.

Print. Stand aside, good Pompey.

Enter Holofernes armor'd, and Morth armor'd, for Hercules.

Hol. Great Hercules is presented by this: Whose club kill'd Cerybirus but three head'd canus;

And when he was a bale, a child, a shrimp, Thirst he'd sparse spells in his manus; Quenian, be strench't in majesty, Ergo, I come with this apology. Keep some state in thy exit, and vanish. [Exit Morth.

Hol. Judas I am—

Dum. A Judas!

Hol. Not Iscariot, sir—

Judes I am, getehip Jahuorbus.

Biron. Tudes Mashabrous clipt, is plain Judas.

Biron. A lesser traitor—how art thou prov'd Judas—

Hol. Judas I am—

Dum. The more shame for you, Judas.

Hol. What mean you, sir?

Biron. To make Judas hang himself.

Hol. Biron, sir, you are my elder.

Biron. Well now'd: Judas was hang'd on an elder.

Hol. I will not be put out of countenance.

Biron. Biron! One of the last face on a dish.

Hol. What is this?

Biron. A eiterian head.

Dum. The head of a bockin.

Biron. A death's head in a ring.

Long. The face of an old Roman coin, scarce seen.

Biron. The pummel of Cesar's fauchion.

Dum. There came both face on a dish.

Biron. St. George's half-check in a brooch.

Dum. Ay, in a brooch of lead.

Biron. Ay, and worn in the cap of a tooth-brush.

Hol. I will not be put out of countenance.

Biron. Biron! Have we given thee faces.

Hol. But you have out-paced them all.

Biron. An thou wert a lion, we would do so.

Biron. Therefore, as he is an ass, let him go.

And so, adieu, sweet Judel! nay, why dost thou stay?

Dum. For the latter end of his name.

Biron. For the use to the Jude; give it him;—

Hol. This is not generous, not gentle, not humble.

Biron. For Monsieur Judas: it grows dark, he may stumble.

Print. Alas, poor Mashabrous, how hath he been bated?

[Exit HOLOFERNES.

Enter Armado armor'd, for Hector.

Biron. Hide thy head, Achillies; here comes Hector in arms.

Dum. Though my mocks come home by me, I will now be merry.

King. I am come, but a Trojan in respect of this.

Judas. But is this Hector?

Dum. I think, Hector was not so clean timber'd

Long. His leg is too big for Hector.

Dum. Lost, thou, certain.

Biron. No; he is best indued in the small.

Biron. This cannot be Hector.

Dum. He's a god or a painter; for he makes faces.

Arm. The armament of Mars, of lanes the almighty.

Gave Hector a gift—

Dum. A gift nutmeg.

Biron. A lemon.

Long. Stuck with cloves.

Hol. No, cloven.

Arm. Peace!

The armament More, of lanes the almighty, Gave Hector a gift, the hair of Lion; A man so breath'd, that certain he would fight, yes, From moro till night, out of his passion.

I am that flower—

Dum. That mint.

Long. That columbine.

Arm. Sweet lord Longaville, rem thy tongue.

Long. I must rather give it thee; for it runs against Hector.

Dum. Ay, and Hector's a greyhound.

Arm. The sweet warman is dead and rotten: sweet charming wife, beat the bones of the hotter when he breasted, he was a man,—but I will forward with my device: sweet royalty, [To the Princess.] bestow on me the sense of hearing.

[BRION whispers COSTARD.

Print. Speak, brave Hector; we are much delighted.

Arm. I do adore thy sweet grace's slipper.

Bogel. Loves her by the foot.

Dum. A man may yield a yard.

Arm. This Hector for surmounted Hamble—

Cost. The party is gone, fellow Hector, she is gone; she is two months on her way.

Arm. What means the least?—

Cost. Faith, unless you play the honest Trojan the poor wench is cast away: she's quick; the child brags in her belly already; 'tis yours.

Arm. That intimates me among potentates! thou shalt die. Cost. Then shall Hector be whip'd, for Jachnelecta that is quick by him; and hanged, for Pompey that is dead by him.

Dum. Most rare Pompey!

Bogel. Renowned Pompey!

Dum. Greater than great, great, great, great Pompey to the living.

Dum. Hector trembles.

Biron. Pompey is mov'd:—More Ates, more Ates; stir them on! stir them on!

Dum. Hector will challenge him.

Biron. Ay, if he have no more man's blood in's belly than will sup a flea.

Arm. By the north pole, I do challenge thee.

Dum. I will not fight with a pole, like a northern man; I'll shed; I'll do it by the sword!—I pray you, let me borrow your arms again.

Dum. Room for the incensed worthies.

Cost. I'll do it in my shirt.

Dum. Most resolute Pompey!

Moth. Master, let me take you a button-hole lower. Do you not see, Pompey is uncoing for the combat? What mean you? you will lose your reputation.

Arm. Gentlemen, and soldiers, pardon me: I will not combat in my shirt.

* Ate was the goddess of discord.
Dum. You may not deny it: Pompey hath made the challenge.

Arm. Sweet bloods, I both may and will.

Biron. What reason have you for it?

Arm. The truth of it is, I have no shirt, I go Woodward for penance.

Bogey. Troth, and it was enjoin'd him in Rome for want of linen: since when, I'll be sworn, he wore none. But if a donkey-cloth shall not do for Zosanna's sake, and that a ears next his heart for a favor.

Enter Mercadie.

Merc. God save you, madam!

Prin. We embrace, Mercadie; But that thou interrupt our friminent.

Merc. I am sorry, madam; for the news I bring, is heavy in my tongue. The king your father—

Prin. Dead, for my life! M. r. Even so; my tale is told.

Biron. Worthies, away; the scene begins to cloud.

Arm. For mine own part, I breathe free breath: I have seen the day of wrong through the little hole of uncertainty, and I will right myself like a soldier.

Exeunt Worthies.

King. How fares your majesty?

Prin. Boyet, prepare; I will away to-night.

King. Madam, not so; I do beseech you, stay.

Prin. Prepare, I say—I thank you, gracious lords.

For all your fair endeavors; and entreat, out of a new-sad soul, that you vouchsafe In your rich wardrobe, to excuse a little, The liberal opposition of our spirits:

If over-boldly we have borne ourselves In the converse of breath, your gentleness With every word of—farewell, worthies! It a heavy heart bears not an humble tongue: Excuse me, so, coming short of thanks For my great suit so easily obtain'd.

Arm. The extreme parts of this extreme form All causes to the purpose of his speed; And often, at his very loose, doth these The long process could not arbitrate: And though the mourning love of procyon

Forbid the smiling courtesy of love,
The holy suit which fain it would convince;

Yet, in the love's argument was lost on lost;

Not the cloud of sorrow just it
From what it purport'd; since, to wall friends lost, Is not by much so wholesome, profligate, As their arrival at friends but newly found.

Prin. I understand you not; my griefs are double.

Biron. Honest plain words best pierce the ear of grief:

And by these badges understand the king. For your fairest sake have we neglected time, Play'd foul play with our natches; your beauty, ladies, Hath much deform'd us, fashioning our6 eyes Even to the opposed end of our intents: And what in us hath seem'd ridiculous,—As love is full of unheeding strains: All wanton as a child, skipping, and vain;

Form'd by the eye, and, therefore, like the eye, Full of strange shapes, of habits, and of forms; Varying in subjects as the eye doth roll To every varied object in his glance.

Which partly-cou'd presence of loose love
Put on us, if, in your heavenly eyes, Have misbecom'd our clothes and gravities, These heavenly eyes, that look with faults, Suggested us to make: Therefore, ladies,Our love being yours, the error that love makes Is likewise yours: we to ourselves prove false, By being once false for ever to be true.

To those that make us both,—fair ladies, you: And even that falsehood, in itself a sin, This purifies itself, and turns to grace. Dismay. We have receiv'd your deep groans, full of love; Your favors, the embassadors of love; And, in our maiden council, rated them At courtship, pleasant jest, and courtesy, As fair as you. But, as honest as we are, But more devout than this, in our respects, Have we not been; and therefore, let your loves In their own fashion, like a mourn watt.

Dism. Our letters, madam, show'd much more than jest.

Long. So did our books.

Clothed in wool, without linen. * Free to excess.

Ros. We did not quote them so.

King. Now, at the latest minute of the hour, Grant us your loves.

Prin. A time, methinks, too short To make a world-without-end last But no, nor my lord, your grace is perjuri'd much. Full of dear guiltiness; and therefore this,— If for my love (as is there is no such cause) Have moni'd, but this shall you have: Your oath I will not trust; but go with speed To some forlorn and naked hermitage, Remote from all the pleasures of the world; There, until the twelve celestial signs Have brought about their annual reckoning; If this astere inscrutable the Change not your offer made in heat of blood; But within the circle of his least, hard lodging, and thin weeds, Nip not the ruddy blossoms of your love, But that it bear this trial, and last love; Then, at the expiration of the year, Come challenge, challenge me by these deserts, And, by this virgin path, new kissing time, I will be thine; and, till that instant, shut My woful self up in a mourning house; Raining the tear of lamentation, For the remembrance of my father's death If this thou do deny, let our hands part;

Ros. O, I am in effect in the other's heart.

King. If this, or more than this, I would deny, To flatten up these powers of mine with rest, The sudden hand of death close up mine eye! Hereafter then my heart is in the Biron. And what to me, my love! and what to me!

Ros. You must be purged too, your sins are rank

You are mispriz'd with shame and perjury,

Therefore, if you my favor mean to get, A twelvemonth you shall spend, and never rest, But seek the weary beds of people seek.

Dism. Good morrow, my love! what shall I do to me?

Kath. A wife!—A beard, fair health, and hon-esly;— With this false love I wish you all these three.

Dum. U, shall I say, I thank you, gentle wife! Kath. Note, so my lord;—a twelvemonth and a day I'll mark no words that smooth-faced wrouers say Counting the king's oath to my lady Biron, Then, if I have much love, I'll give you some.

Dum. I'll serve thee true and faithfully till then.

Kath. Yet swear not, lest you be foreign again.

Long. What says Maria?

Mur. At the twelvemonth's end, I'll change my black gown for a fashional eye, Long. I'll stay with patience; but the time is long. Mur. My lord, your grace! few talier and less.

Biron. Studies my lady! mistress, look on me

Held the window of my heart, mine eye,

What humble suit attends thy answer there?

Impose service on me for thy ladyship.

Ros. Oft have I heard of you, my lord Biron,

Before I saw you: and the world's largc tongue Proclaims you for a man replete with mocks; Full of cuparions and wounding beats,

Which you on all estates will execute, That he within the mercy of your wit:
To forgo this wormwood from your fruitful brain; And, therewithal, to win me, if you please,

(Without the which I am not to be won.) You shall this twelvemonth term from day to day Visit the graceless scaffold, and still converses With grazing wretches; and your task shall be,

With all the fierce endeavor of your wit.

To enforce the paused impatient to smile.

Biron. To have wild laughter in the throat of death!

It cannot be; it is impossible:

Mirth cannot move a soul in agony.

Ros. Yea, that's the way to choke a gibing spirit,

Whose influence is begot of that loose grace,

Which shallow laughing heavers give to fools;

A jest's prosperity lies in the ear

Of him that has not lost it in the tongue

Of him that makes it: if then weekly days,

Dead'd with the calumns of their own dear garoms

Will bear your idle scars, continue them,

And, in the end, you will have nothing and that fault within;

But, if they will, throw away that sport,

And I shall find you empty of that fault,

Right joyful of your reformation.

* Regard. 3 Clothing.
 Scene II.

LOVE'S LABOR'S LOST.

153

Biron. A twelvemonth? well, befall what will befall,
I'll jest a twelvemonth in an hospital.
Froth. Ay, sweet my lord: and so I take my leave.
[To the King.
King. No, madam: we will bring you on your way.
Biron. Our wooing doth not end like an old play;
Jack hath not Jill: these lutes' courtesy
Might well have made our sport a comedy.
King. Come, sir, it wants a twelvemonth and a day.
And then 'twill end.
Biron. That's too long for a play.

Enter Armado.

Arm. Sweet majesty, vouchsafe me,—
Froth. Was not that Hector?
Dum. The worthy knight of Troy.
Arm. I will kiss thy royal finger and take leave:
I am a votary; I have vowed to Jacquemeta to hold the plough for her sweet love three years. But, most esteemed greatness, will you hear the dialogue that the two learned men have compiled, in praise of the owl and the cuckoo? It should have followed in the end of our show.
King. Call them forth quickly, we will do so.
Arm. Holla! approach.

Enter HOLOFERNES, NATHANIEL, MOOTH, COWARD, and others.

This side is Hecuba; winter; this Ver, the spring;
the one maintain'd by the owl, the other by the cuckoo. Ver, begin.

SONG.

I.

Spring. When daisies pied, and violets blue,
And lady smocks all silver-white,
Do paint the meadows with delight,
The cuckoo then, on every tree,
Mocks married men, for thus sings he,
"Cuckoo!
Cuckoo, cuckoo,—O word of fear,
Unpleasing to a married ear!"

II.

When shepherds pipe on yoked straows,
And merry larks are ploughmen's clocks,
When turtles tread, and rocks do dawn,
And maidens bleach their summer snocks
The cuckoo then, on ever tree,
Mocks married men, for thus sings he,
Cuckoo;
Cuckoo, cuckoo,—O word of fear,
Unpleasing to a married ear!

III.

Winter. When icicles hang by the wall,
And loke the shepherd blows his nail,
And Tom bears bags into the hail,
And milk comes frozen home in pail,
When blood is nipp'd, and ways be foul,
Then nightly sings the staring owl,
To whom:

To-who, to-who, a merry note,
White greasy Joan doth keep the pot.

IV.

When all abroad the wind doth blow,
And roughing doth make the parents saw,
And birds all brawling in the snow,
And Marian's nose looks red and raw,
When rattled crows kiss in the bowl,
Then nightly sings the staring owl,
To whom:

To-who, to-who, a merry note,
White greasy Joan doth keep the pot.

Arm. The words of Mercury are harsh after the songs of Apollo. You that way; we, this way.

[Exeunt.}

* Scum.
* Wild apples.
MERCHANT OF VENICE.

PERSONS REPRESENTED.

LUCIO OF VENICE.
PRINCE OF MOROCCO. &c.,
PRINCE OF ARRAGON.
ANTONIO, the Merchant of Venice,
BASSANO, his Friend.

SALANIO.
SALANIO, {Friends to Antonio and Bassano.

GRATIANO.
LORENZO, in Love with Jessica.

SALANIO, &c., his Friend.

LAUNCELOT GOBBO, a Clown, Servant to Shylock.

SCENE, partly at Venice, and partly at Belmont, the Seat of Portia, on the Continent.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Venice. A Street.

Enter Antonio, Salanio, and Salanio.

Ant. In sooth, I know not why I am so sad; It wearies me; you say it wearies you; But, hark! I catch it, found it, or came by it, What staff's its made of, whereof it is born, I am to learn; And such a wond'rous sadness makes of me, That I have much ado to know myself.

Bass. Your mind is tossing on the ocean;
There, where your argosies with partly soil,— Like signior and rich burghers of the flood, Or, as it were, the pages of the sea,—
To overpeer the petty traffickers, That court'sy to them, do them reverence; As they fly by them with their woven wings.

Salan. Believe me, sir, had I such venture forth, The better part of my alecctions would be with my hopes abroad. I should be still Plucking the grass to know where sits the wind; Peering in maps, for ports, and piers, and roads; And every object, that might make me fear Misfortune to my ventures, out of doubt, Would make me sad.

Bass. My wing, cooling my brood, Would blow me to an eagle; when I thought What harm a wind too great might do at sea, I should not see the sandy hour-glass run, But I should think of shallows and of flats; And see my wealthy Andrewock'd in sand. Vailing her huck-top lower than her ribs, To kiss her burial. Should I go to church, And see the holy edifice of stones, And not behinck me straight of dangerous rocks? Which touching but my gentle vessel's side Would scatter all her spices on the stream; Enrobe the roaring waters with my silks; And, in a word, but even now worth this, And now worth nothing! Shall I have the thought To think on this; and shall I lack the thought, That such a thing, being hard, would make me sad? But, tell not me; I know, Antonio. Is sad to think upon his merchandise.

Ant. Believe me, no: I think my fortune for it, My ventures are not in one bottom trusted, Nor to one place; nor is my whole estate Upon the fortune of this present year:
Therefore, my merchandise makes me not sad.

Salan. Why then you are in love.

Ant. Fye, fye! Salan. Not in love neither? Then let's say, you are sad.

| Ships of large burden. | Lowering. |

Because you are not merry; and 'twere as easy For you, to laugh, and leap, and say, you are merry, because you are not sad. Now, by two-headed Janus, Nature hath framed strange fellows in her time: Some that will evermore peep through their eyes, And laugh, like parrots, at a bag-piper; And others of such vinegar aspect, That they'll not show their teeth in way of smile, Though Nestor swear the jest be laughter.

Enter Bassano, Lorenzo, and Gratiano.

Salan. Here comes Bassano, your most noble kinsman, Gratiano, and Lorenzo: Fare you well;
We leave you now with better company.

Bass. I would have stood till I had made you merry, If worthier friends had not prevented me.

Ant. Your worth is very dear in my regard, I take it, your own business calls on you, And you embrace the occasion to depart.

Bass. Good morrow, my good lords.

Grat. Good signiors both, when shall we laugh? Say, when?

You grow exceeding strange: Must it be so?

Bass. We'll make our pleasures to attend on yours.

Lor. My lord Bassano, since you have found Antonio,
We two will leave you; but, at dinner-time, I pray you, have in mind where we must meet.

Bass. 1 will not fail you.

Gra. You look not well, signior Antonio;
You have too much respect upon the world?
They lose it, that do buy it with much care.
Believe me, you are marvellously chang'd,
Ant. I hold the world but as the world, Graiano; A stage where every man must play a part, And mine a sad one.

Gra. Let me play the Fool:
With mirth and laughter let old wrinkles come;
And let my liver rather feast with wine.
Than my heart cool with mortifying groans.
Why should a man, whose blood is warm within,
Sit like his granum'ce cut in alabaster?
Sleep when he wakes, and creep into the jaundice By being peevish? 1 tell thee what, Antonio,—
I love thee, and it is my love that speaks;
There are a sort of men, whose visages
Do cream and mantle, like a standing pond;
And do a wilful stillness entertain,
With purpose to be dressed in an opinion
Of wisdom, gravity, profound conceit;

Obstructe silence.
As who should say, I am sir Oracle,
And, when I open my eyes, let no dog bark!
O, my Antonio, I do know of these,
That therefore only are reputed wise,
For saying nothing; who, I am very sure,
If they should speak, would almost damn those ears,
Which, hearing them, would call their brothers, fools.
I'll tell thee more of this another time:
That is not with this melancholy,
For this bad gudgeon, this opinion—
Come, good Lorenzo:—Fare ye well, a while;
I'll end my exhortation after dinner.

Ant. But shad a please you, thou third dinner-time:
I must be one of these damn'd wise men,
For Gratiano never lets me speak.

Gra. Well, keep me company, but two years more,
That I am wiser, and know nothing of my tongue.

Ant. Farewell! I'll grow a talked for this year.
Gra. Thanks, sir, that, for silence is only commendable.

In a neat's tongue dined, and a maid not vendible.

[Enter Gratiano and Lorenzo.]

Ant. Is that any thing now?

Bass. Gratiano speaks an infinite deal of nothing, much less any man in all Venice:—His reasons are as two grains of wheat hit in two bushels of chaff;
you shall seek all day ere you find them; and, when you have them, they are not worth the search.

Ant. Why, certainly, thou art not guilty of the same
To whom you swore a secret pilgrimage,
That you to-day promis'd to tell me of?

Bass. I'm not unknown to you, Antonio,
But you have done more than you promised,
By something showing a more swelling port
Than what your faults would grant continuance:
Nor do I know what mean to be commended
From such a noble rate; but my chief care
Is, to come fairly off from the great debts,
Wherein my time, something too prodigal,
If you please say: To you, Antonio,
I owe the most, in money, and in love;
And from your love I have a warranty
To unburthen all my plots, and purposes,
For what I have in hand, of love.

Ant. I pray you, good Bassanio, let me know it;
And, if it stand, as you yourself still do,
Within the eye of honor, be assured,
My purse, or my person, my extreme means,
Lie all unlock'd to your occasions.

Bass. In my school-days, when I had lost one shaft
I shot his fellow of the self-same right.
Theirs was the measure, mine the watch,
To find the other forth; and by adventring both,
I oft found both: I urge this childhood proof,
Because what follows is pure innocence,
In so much that person all, and all that,
That which I owe is lost: but if you please
To shoot another arrow that self way
Which you did shoot the first, I do not doubt,
As I assured you, of the same shaft,
Or bring your latter hazard back again,
And thankfully rest debtor for the first.

Ant. You know me well, and herem spend but little time;
To wind about my love with circumstance;
And, out of doubt, you do me now more wrong,
In making question of my utterance.
That all you had made me, or he all I have,
Then do but say to me what I should do,
That in your knowledge may by me be done,
And I am prais'd unto, therefore I speak.

Bass. In Belinn is a lady richly left,
And she is fair, and, fairer than that word,
Of wonderous virtues; sometimes from her eyes
I did receive fair speechless messages:
Her name is Portia: nothing unavailing
To Cato's daughter, Brutus' Portia:
Nor is the wise world ignorant of her worth;
For many are come from the least Renowned suitors; and her sunny locks
Hang on her temples like a golden fleece;
Which makes her seat of Belmont, Calecto's stand,
And makes her bower, in love, the envy of all.
O my Antonio, I had but the means
To hold a rival place with one of them,
I have a mind possess me such fruitful,
That should questionless be fortunate.

Ant. I know not: that all my fortunes are at sea;—
Nor have I money, nor commodity
* Ready. | Formerly.

To raise a present sum: therefore go forth,
Try what my credit can in Venice do;
That shall be lack'd, even to the uttermost,
To furnish thee to Belmont, to fair Portia.
Go, present all this to Calecto, and will wait
Where money is; and I no question make,
To have it of my trust, or for my sake.—Exeunt.

[Scene II. — Belmont. A Room in Portia's House.]

[Enter Portia and Nerissa.]

Por. By my troth, Nerissa, my little body & a-very of this great world.

Ner. You would have my heart, madam, if your miseries were in the same abundance as your good fortunes are:
And yet, for aught I see, they are as sick, that surfeit with too much, as they that starve with too little.
They, that ha' made a fiery virtue of this passion to be seated in the head; superiority comes sooner by white hairs, than competency lives longer.

Por. Good sentences, and well pronounced.

Ner. They would be better, if well followed.

Por. It do to were as easy as to know what were good to do, chapels had been churches, and poor men's cottages, princes' palaces. It is a good device that follows his own instructions: I can easier teach twenty what were good to be done, than be one of the twenty to follow mine own teaching.
The brain may devise laws for the blood; but a hot temper may tell the law to the decree. In a hare is madness: the youth, to skip over the meshes of good counsel the cripple. But this reasoning is not in the fashion to choose me a husband, nor do I choose whom I would, nor refuse whom I dislike; so is the will of a living daughter cur'd by the will of a dead father:—
Is it not hard, Nerissa, that I cannot choose one, nor refuse none?

Por. Your father was ever virtuous; and only men, at their death, have good inspirations; therefore, he beat the laws which he hath devised in these three chests of gold, silver, and lead; whereof who chooses his meaning, chooses you, will, no doubt, never be choosen by any rightly; but one who you shall right, the will be Death's direction towards any of these princely suitors that are already come?

Por. I pray thee over-name them; and as thou namest them, I will describe them: and, according to my description, level at my affection.

Ner. First, there is the Neapolitan prince.

Por. Ay, that's a coat, indeed, for he doth nothing but talk, and talk, and talk, and think. An appro cipation to his own good parts, that he can shoe him himself: I am much afraid, my lady, his mother, played false with a smith.

Ner. I hear it is there does country's natural.
Por. He doth nothing but frown; as who should say,
As if you could not have in a choose; he hears merry tales, and smiles not: I fear he will prove the weeps upon the gown; for you have been so long, and losing, so full of unmanly sadness in his youth. I had rather be married to a death's head with a bone in his mouth than to either of these. God lend me from these two!

Ner. How say you by the French lord, monsieur
Le Bon?

Por. God made him, and therefore, let him pass for a man. In truth, I know it is a sun to be a mocker: But, he! why, he hath a horse better than the Neapolitan's; a better had habit of flowing than the count Palatin's: then, his man in a man; he is every man in an individual soul, he fails straight a capering; he will fence with his own shadow: If I should marry him, I should marry twenty husbands: if he would despise my apprehensions, I would forgive him; for if he love me, and madness, I shall never require him.

Ner. What say you then to Faulconbridge, the young baron of England?

Por. You know no place to hang on to him; for he under stands me not, nor I him: he hath neither Lat tian, French, nor Italian; and you will come into the court and swear, that I have a poor pennyworth in the English vacuum; wherefore he may perish man and horse; but, alas! what can converse with a dumb show! How oddly he is suited! I think he bought his goldcoat in Italy, his round hose in France, his bonnet in Germany, and his hobby for every where.

Ner. What thank you of the Scottish lord, his neighbor!

* Count.
Por. That he hath a neighborly charity in him; for he borrowed a box of the ear of the Englishman, and swore he would pay him again, when he was capable of work; to which purpose he became his surety, and sealed under for another.

Ner. How like you the young German, the duke of Saxony's nephew?

Por. Very well, in the morning when he is sober; and most vainly in the afternoon, when he is drunk: when he is best, he is a little worse than a man; and when he is worst, he is little better than a beast; and the worst fall that ever felt, I hope, I shall make shift to go without him.

Ner. He should offer to choose, and choose the right project, you should refuse to perform your father's will, if you should refuse to accept him.

Por. Therefore, for fear of the worst, I pray thee, set a deep glass of Rhine wine on the contrary case, and if the devil be within, and that temptation without, I know he will choose it. I will do anything, Nerissa, ere I will be married to a sponge.

Ner. You need not fear, lady, the having any of these lords, they have acquainted me with their determinations: which is indeed, to return to their home, and to trouble you with no more suit; unless you may be won by some other soft than your father's proposition, depending on the caskets.

Por. If I live to be as old as Sibyls, I will die as chaste as Diana, unless I be obtained by the manner of your father's will: I am glad this parcel of a thousand ducats is so reasonable: for there is not one among them but I dote on his very absence, and I pray God grant them a fair departure.

Ner. Do you not remember, lady, in your father's time, the Bassetto, a scholar, and a soldier, that came hither in company of the Marquis of Monteferrat?

Por. Yes, yes, it was Bassoano; as I think, so was he called.

Ner. True, madam; he of all the men that ever my foolish eyes looked upon, was the best deserving a fair lady.

Por. I remember him well; and I remember him worthy of thy praise.—How now! what news!

Enter a Servant.

Serv. The four strangers seek for you, madam, to take their leave: and there is a fore-runner come from a fifth, the prince of Morocco; who brings word, the prince, his master, will be here to-night.

Por. If he could but the while welcome with so good heart, as I can bid the other four farewell, I should be glad of his approach: if he have the condition, or that a present to the caskets, he should have the crown of a devil, if he, rather he should shrieve me than receive me. Come, Nerissa,—Sirrah go before. Whiles we shut the gate upon one wooer, another knocks at the door.

Exeunt.
Shy. Signor Antonio, many a time and oft,
In the Rialto you have rated
About my mares, and my usances;*
Shy. I'll have no barter with a vulgar brat; For suference is the badge of all our tribe: You call me — misbeliever, cut-throat dog, And spit upon my Jewish galardine: And all for use of that which is mine own.
Well then, it now appears, you need my help: Go to; then you come to me, and you say,
Shy. I'll — I'll — I'll — I'll — I'll; what say you so?
You, that did void your rheum upon my beard, And foot me, as you spurn a stranger cur Over your threshold; houses is your suit. What am I to say I shall not say, Hath a dog money? is it possible, A ear can't hear three thousand ducats? or Shall I bend low, and in a bondman's key, With a sad breath, and whistling humbleness, Say this—
Fair air, you spied on me on Wednesday last; You spurred me such a dog; another time You called me dog; and if * these courtseyes I'll lend you they much moneys?
Ant. I am as like as I canARI thee so again,
To spied on thee again, to spurn thee too, If thou will lend thee the money, lend it not As to thy friends; for woe on did friendship take A breed for barren metal of his friend! But was it rather for thy conscience; Who if he break, thou may st with better face Exact the penalty.
Shy. Why, how, look, how you stamp!
I would be friends with you, and have your love, Forget the shame that you have stain'd me with, Supply your present wants, and take no dot Of absence for my moneys, and you'll not hear me.
Th is kind I outer. * Ant. This was kindness.
Shy. This kindness will I show:

Go with me to a notary, seal me there
Your son's bond; and, in a merry sport,
If you repay me not on such a day,
In such a place, with such a person, as are Express'd in the condition, let the forfeit
Be nominated for an equal pound
Of your true stock, to be cut off and taken
In what part of your body pleaseth me.
Ant. Content, in faith; I'll seal to such a bond,
And say, there is much kindness in the Jew
Shy. You shall not seal to such a bond for me,
I'll rather dwell in my necessity.
Ant. Why, fear not, man; I will not forfeit it;
Within these two months, that's a month before This bond expires, I do expect return Of three times three times the value of this bond.
Shy. 0 father Abraham, what these Christians are,
Whose own hard dealings teach them this respect
The thoughts and usages they are; you have a face; If he should break his day, what should I gain
By the execution of the forfeiture?
A pound of man's flesh, taken from a man, Is not so estimable, profitable neither,
As dust of sultims, becks, or goats, a say
To buy his favor, I extend this friendship:
If he will take it, so; if not, adieu;
And, for my love, I pray you, wrong me not.
Ant. Yes, Shylock, I will seal unto this bond, Shy. Then meet me forthwith at the negotary's;
Give him my commission for every penny
And I will go and pursue the duces straight;
See to my house, lest in the fearful guard Of an unknown knife, and presently
I will be with you. * [Exit]

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Belmont. A room in Portia's House.

Furnish of Crowns. Enter the Prince of Morocco and his Train; Portia, Nerissa, and other of her Attendants.

Mor. Mislike me not for my complexion,
The shadow'd livery of the burnish'd sun,
To do thee service, and a killing, and,
Bring me the fairest creature northward born,
Where Phoebus' fire scarce thaws the icicles,
And let us make jeem'n? for your love,
To love whose blood is as red as mine,
or mine.
Tell me, Indy, this aspect of mine
Hath fear'd thee, the valiant; by my love, I swear,
The best regarded virgin of our clime
Have love'd it too; I would not change this hue,
Except to steal your thoughts, my gentle queen.
Por. In terms of choice I am not so led
By hate direction of a madam eyes;
Resides, the lottery of my destiny
Bars me the right of voluntary choosing;
But, if my father had not sauntered me,
And held me by his wit, to yield myself
His wife, who wins me by the means I told you,
Yourself, renounced prince, then stood as fair,
As any woman I have look'd on yet,
For collection.

Mor. Even for that I thank you;
Therefore, I pray you, lend me to the caskets,
To try my fancy. - By this seminar,
That son of the Soplic, and a Persian prince,
That won three fields of sultan Soliman,—
I would out-stare the sternest eyes that look,
Out-brave the heart most daring from the earth,
Pluck the most daring cub from the she she-bear,
Yes, mock the lion when he roars for prey,
To win thee, lady: But, alas the while!
If Heracles, and Lichas, play at dice
Allusion to the Eastern custom for lovers to testify their passion by cutting themselves in their misstress' sight.

* Terrified. to be rated by my conscience, I should stay with the Jew my master, who God bless the mark! is a kind of devil; and, to run away from the Jew,
I should be rated by the devil. Hence, I leave my religion, and the devil himself: Certainly, the Jew is the very devil incarnate; and, in my conscience, my conscience is but a kind of hard conscience, to offer to countenance me to stay with him. The more
I give the more friendly counsel: I will run, hend, my heels are at your commandment, I will run.

Enter old Gower, with a Basket.

Gob. Master, young man, you, I pray you;
which is the way to master Jew's?

Laun. [Aside.] O heavens, this is my true-bottom,
the man who, being a poor sand-blind, high-graved blind, knows me not: I will try conclusions with him.

Gob. Master, young gentleman, I pray you,
which is the way to master Jew's?

Laun. Turn up on your right hand, at the next left, but at the next turning of all, on your left;
marry, at the very next turning, turn of no
black, the day, I know you not, your master.

Gob. By God's statutes, twill be a hard way to hit. Can you tell me whether one Launcelot, that dwells with him, doth dwell with the other?

Laun. Talk'd of young master Launcelot?—
Mark me now: [Aside.] Now will I raise the waters:
—Talk you of young master Launcelot?

Gob. So, or Launcelot, but a young gentleman; his father, if I may say it, is an honest exceeding poor man, and, God be thanked, well to live.

Laun. Well, let his father be what he will, we talk of master Launcelot.

Gob. Your worships friend and Launcelot, sir.

Laun. But I pray you ergo, old man, ergo, I be-seen you; Talk you of young master Launcelot?

Gob. Of Launcelot, and please your mastership.

Laun. Ergo, master Launcelot; talk not of master Launcelot, father; for the young gentleman (according to fancies and destinies, and such sorceries, the master's trace, and such branches of learning) is indeed deceased; or, as you would say, in plain terms, gone to heaven.

Gob. Marry, God's will! I told you he was the very starch of my age, and very prop.

Laun. Do I look like a endgel, or a booket-post, or a prop?—Do you know me, father?

Gob. I have no more feeling about it, but give me your blessing; I am Launcelot, your boy, but was your son that is, your child that shall be.

Gob. I cannot thank you are my son.

Laun. But I shall think of that: but I am Launcelot, the Jew's man; and, I am sure,
Marcy, your wife, is my mother.

Gob. Her name is Marcory, indeed; I shall be sworn, if I am Launcelot, thou art none other than him. Lord worship! shall he be this? what a hast thou gone! thou hast got more on thy chin, than Dobbin, my Pnocleauw has on his tail.

Laun. It should seem, then, that Dobbin's tail grows backward! I am sure he had more on his tail, than I have on my face, when I last saw him.

Gob. Lord how art thou changes! How dest thou of thy master's care? I have brought him a present: How care you now?

Laun. Well, well; but for mine own part, as I have set my mind to run away, I will not rest till I have some ground: my master's a very Jew: Give him a present, give him a half; I am familiar with his service; you may tell him every finger I have, rack him! I am glad you are come:
give me your present to one master Bassa-® Experiments.

ne, who indeed, gives rare new leases; if I serve not him, I will run as far as God has any ground.
O rare fortune! here comes the man—to him,
father, for I am a Jew, if I be the Jew any longer.

Enter Bassanio, with Leonato, and other Followers.

Bass. You may do so;—but let it be so lasted, that supper be ready at the farthest by five of the clock: see these letters delivered; put the livestock to making; and desire Gratiano to come hence to us then. [Exit a Servant.

Laun. To him, father.

Bass. God bless your worship! Bass. Gramercy: Wouldst thou aught with me?

Laun. Not a poor boy, sir, but the rich Jew's man; that would, sir, as my father shall specify.

Bass. Hath he a great infection, sir, as one would say, in his master's and he, (saving your worship's reverence) are scarce caterers:

Laun. To be brief, the very truth is, that the Jew having done thee well, hath carry'd off a son, as my father, being hope an old man, shall truly unto
you.

Bass. I have here a dish of doses, that I would bestow upon your worship; and my suit is,— Laun. In very brief, the suit is pertinent to myself, as your worship shall know by this honest old man; and, though I say it, though an old man, yet, press my suit, master. Bass. One speak for both:—What would you?

Laun. Serve you, sir.

Bass. This is the very defect of the matter, sir.

Laun. I know thee well, thou hast obtain'd thy suit:

Shylock, thy master, spoke with me this day,
And hath present'd this, as believing in the Jew's service, to become
The follower of so poor a gentleman.

Laun. The old proverb is very well parted between my master Bassanio and you, sir; you have the grace of God, sir, and he hath enough.

Bass. Thou speakst it well: Go, father, with thy son.

Take leave of the old master and enquire.

My lodging out:—give him a liber.

More guard'd than his followers: see it done.

Laun. Father, I say:—I cannot act a service, no,
—I have no more a tongue in my head:—Well; [shaking on his palate.] if any man in Italy have a fairer table which doth offer to swallow upon a book, let the man kill a lamb;—Go, here a simple line of life! here's a small tribe of wives: Alas, fifteen wives is nothing; eleven widows, and nine maids, is a simple coming in for one man:—Let us, to three, to have seven, and to be in part of my life with the edge of a leather-bed;—here are simple scapes! Well, if fortune be a woman, she's a good wrench for this year.—Father, come; I'll take my leave of thee, in the twinking of an eye.

[Exit LAUNCELOT and old GORBO.

Bass. I pray thee, good Leonardo, think on this.

Theseラン0 comes long nor catch, and order me bestow on,
Rialto, haste, for I do feast tonight.

My best estem'd acquaintance; he thee, go.

Leon. My best endeavors shall be done herein.

Enter Gratiano.

Grat. Where is your master?

Leon. Yonder, sir, he walks.

Grat. Signior Bassanio—

Bass. Gratiano! Grat. I have a suit to you.

Bass. You have obtain'd it.

Grat. You must not deny me; I must go with you to Belmont.

Bass. Why, then you must—but hear thee,
Thou art too wild, too rude, and bold of voice;—
Parts, that become thee happily enough,
And in such eyes as ours appear not faults;—

* Ornamented.  The pain of the hand extended.
MERCHANT OF VENICE

SCENE VI.

But where thou art not known, why, there they show Something too liberal;—pray thee, take pain To alay with some cold drops of modesty Thy skipping spirit; lest, through thy wild be-

I be misconstrued in the place I go to,
And lose my hopes.

Signior Bassanio, hear me: If I do not put on a sober habit, Talk with respect, and swear but now and then, Wear prayer-books in my pocket, look demurely; Nor must I have the air of a vantage and mine eyes Thus with my hat, and sigh, and say, amen. Use all the observance of civility, Like one well studied in a sad ostent To please his grandam, never trust me more. Bass. Well, we shall see your bearing. Gra. Nay, but I bar to-night; you shall not gage me By what we do to-night. Bass. No, that were pity; I would entreat you rather to put on Your boldest suit of mirth, for we have friends That purpose merriment; but fare thee well, I have some business. Gra. And I must to Lorenzo, and the rest; But we will visit you at supper-time. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—A Room in Shylock's House.

Enter Jessica and Launcelot.

Jes. I am sorry, thou wilt leave my father so; Our house is killeth, and thou, a merry devil, Didst rob it of some taste of tediousness: But fare thee well, we will not give thee leave. And Launcelot, soon at supper shalt thou see Lorenzo, who is thy new master's guest: Give him this letter; do it secretly, And to Shylock; I would not have my father See me talk with thee. Laun. Adieu!—t'ears exhibit my tongue,— Most beautiful pagan,—most sweet Jew! If a Christian any play and get thee, I much admire thee; but, adieu! these foolish drops do somewhat drown my manly spirit; adieu! [Exit.] Jes. Farewell, good Launcelot. Alack, what baneful sin it is in me To be ashamed to be my father's child! But though I am a daughter to his blood, I am not to his manners: O Lorenzo, If thou keep promise, I shall end this strife; Become a Christian, and thy loving wife. [Exit.]

SCENE IV.—A Street.

Enter Gratiano, Lorenzo, Salario, and Shylock.

Lor. Nay, we will sink away in supper-time; Disguise us at our lodging, and return All in an hour. Gra. We have not made good preparation. Solar. We have not spicc us yet of torch-bearers Shylock, 'tis use, unless it may bequarter'd; And, better in my mind, not undertaken. Lor. This now but four o'clock; we have two hours To furnish us:—Enter Launcelot, with a Letter.

Friend Launcelot, what's the news? Laun. And it shall please you to break up this, it shall seem to signify. Lor. I know the hand: in faith, 'tis a fair hand; And whiter than the paper it writ on, Is this fair hand that writ. Gra. Love-news, in faith. Laun. By your leave, sir. Lor. Whether guest thou? Laun. Married, sir, to bid my old master the Jew To sup to-night with my new master the Christian. Lor. Hold here, take this;—tell gentle Jessica, I will not fail her;—speak it privately: go. Gentleman Launcelot. Will you prepare you for this masque to-night? I am provided of a torch-bearer. Shylock. Ay, marry, I'll be gone about it straight. Salario. And so will I. Lor. Meet me, and Gratiano, At Gratiano's lodging some hour hence. Salario. This is good we do so. [Exit Salario, and Salario.]

Gra. Was not that letter from fair Jessica? Lor. I have this seeds tell thee all: she hath directed, How I shall take her from her father's house. What gold, and jewels, she is furnish'd with; What cages she is to lay in readiness, Her Jew, how if the other, come to heaven, It will be for his gentle daughter's sake: And never dare mistake cross her foot, Unless she do it under this excuse,— That she's in issue to a betroth'd;— Come, go with me;—persue this, as thou goest. Fair Jessica shall be my torch-bearer. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—Before Shylock's House.

Enter Shylock and Launcelot.

Shy. Well, thou shalt see, thy eyes shall be thy judge, The difference of old Shylock and Bassanio:— What, Jessica!—thine eyes do not gastrulate, As thou hast done with me:—What, Jessica!— And sleep and snore, and rend apparel out Why, Jessica, I say! Laun. Why, Jessica! Shy. Who bids thee call! I do not bid thee call. Laun. Your worship was wont to tell me, I could do nothing without bidding. Enter Jessica.

Jes. Call you! What is your will? Shy. I am betroth'd to Jessica; there are my keys:—but wherefore should I go? I am not betroth'd for love; they flatter me: But yet I'll go in hate, by feet up-wind. The prodigal Christian—Jessica, my girl, Look to my house:—I am not loath to go; There is some ale brewing towards my rest, For I did dream of money bags to-night. Laun. I beseech you, sir, go; my young master doth expect your reproof. Shy. E'en so. Laun. And they have conspired together;—I will not say, you shall see a masque: but if you do, then it was not for nothing that my nose fell a bleeding on Black-Monday last, at six o'clock the morning, falling out that year on Ash-Wednesday was four year in the afternoon. Shy. What! are there masques? Hear you me, Jessica: Lock up thy doors; and when you hear the drum, And the vile squeaking of the wry-neck'd fife, Clamber not you up to the casements then, Nor thrust your head into the public street, To gaze on Christian tools with varnish'd faces; But stop your house's ears, I mean your casements; Let not the sound of shallow toppor enter My sober house.—By thy father's will, I have no mind of leasing forth to-night; But I will go.—Go you before me, sirrah: Say, I will come. Laun. I will go before, sir.—Mistress, look out at window, for all this: There will come a Christian by, Will not worth a Jewess' eye. [Exit Laun.] Shy. What says that fool of Hagar's offspring, ha? Jes. His words were, Farewell mistress; nothing else. Shy. The patch is kind enough; but a huge feeder, Snail-slow in profit, and he sleeps by day More than the wild-cat; drones have not with me; Therefore I am afield with you; and if you go to One that I would have him help to waste His borrow'd purse.—Well, Jessica, go on; Perhaps, I will return immediately; Do, as I bid you, shut doors after you: Fast bind, fast find; A proverb never stale in thrifty mind. [Exit.] Jes. Farewell; and if my fortune be not crost, I have a father, you a daughter, but. [Exit.]

SCENE VI.—The same.

Enter Gratiano and Salario, masked.

Gra. This is the pent-house, under which Lorenzo Don'd us to make stand. Salario. His hour is almost past. Gra. And it is marvel he out-dwells his hour. For lovers ever run before the clock. [Invited.]
Salar. O, ten times faster Venus' pigeons fly
To seal love's bonds new made, than they are wont,
To keep the faith that matrimony entailed.
Gar. Thus the lover's joy.
Who with whom at a feast, With that keen appetite that he sits down! Where is the horse that doth untreach again? Wilt thou now see, if that same tale be true? That he did pace them first? All things that are, Are with more spirit chased than enjoy'd. How like a youngo, or a prodigal, The scurvy bark puts from their native bay! Hugg'd and embraced by the stormy wind! How like the prodigal both she returns; With over-weather'd rib, and ragged sail,
Loin, rent, and beggar'd by the stormy wind!

Enter Lorenzo.

Salar. Here comes Lorenzo;—more of this hereafter.

Lor. Sweet friends, your patience for my long above;
Not I, but my affairs, have made you wait;
When you shall please to play the thieves for wives,
I'll watch as long for you then.—Approach
Here dwells my father Jew—Hol! who's within?

Enter Jessica, in boy's clothes.

Jes. Who are you? I tell me, for more certainty,
Abate your anger, for I do know your tongue.
Lor. Lorenzo, and thy love. Jes. Lorenzo, certain; and my love, indeed;
But now who knows, but you, Lorenzo, whether I am not her.
Lor. Heaven, and thy thoughts, are witness that thou art.
Jes. I shall not rashly catch this casket, it is worth the pains.
I am glad'tis night, you do not look on me;
For I am much ashamed of my exchange;
But love is blind, and lovers cannot see
The pretty follies that love puts them in:
For if they could, Cupid himself would blush
To see me thus transformed to a boy.
Lor. Descend, for you must be my torch-bearer.
Jes. I think I must: and if I would not shun
Their in themselves, good sooth, are too light.
Why, 'tis an office of discovery, love;
And I should be absent'd.
Lor. So are you, sweet,
Even in the lovely garnish of a boy.
But come at once; for the close night doth play the run-away,
And we are stand for at Bassanio's feast.
Jes. I will make fast the doors, and gild myself
With some more ducats, and be with you straight.

Exit, from Lorenzo.

Lor. Beshrew me, but I love her heartily
For she is wise, if I can judge of her;
And fair for she, if that men's eyes are true;
And true she is, as she hath proved herself:
And therefore, like herself, wise, fair and true,
Shall she be placed in my constant soul.

Enter Jessica, below.

What art thou come?—o, gentlemen, away;
Our masquing boats' by the same for us stay.

[Exit, with Jessica and Salario.

[Enter Antonio.

Ant. Who's there? Gra. Signor Antonio? Ant. Fye, fye, Gratiano! where are all the rest?
To time o'clock? Our friends all stay for you.—
Now come you, night;—then, the worse I am come, Bassanio presently will go abroad:
I have sent twenty out to seek for you.
Gar. I am glad on't; I desire no more delight,
Than to be under sail, and gone to-night,

SCENE VII.— Belmont. A Room in Portia's House.

Of Rich of Cornets. Enter Portia, with the Prince of Morocco, and both his Trains.

Por. Go, draw aside the curtains, and discover
The several caskets to this noble prince:—
Now make your choice.
Mor. The first, according to his nature; or, which gold, which this inscription bears;—
Who chooseth me, shall gain what many men desire,
The second, silver, which this promise carres;—
The third, dull lead, with warning all as blunt;—
Who chooseth me, must give and hazard all he hath.
Por. How now! must we do choose the right prince?
Por. The one of them contains my precious pearl;} if you choose that, then I am yours withall.
Por. Some god direct my judgment! Let me see,
I will survey the inscriptions back again:
What says this leaden casket?
Who chooseth me, shall gain as much as he desires.
As much as he desires!—Pause there, Morocco, And weigh thy value with an even hand; If thou best rated by thy estimation,
Thou dost deserve enough; and yet enough May not extend so far as to the lady; And yet to be afraid of thy deserving,
Were but a weak disability of myself.
As much as I deserve!—Why, that's the lady; I do in birth desire her, and in fortunes, In graces, and in qualities of breeding.
But more than these, in love do I deserve.
If what I stray'd no further, but chose here! Let's see once more this saying grav'd in gold:
Who chooseth me, shall gain that is most in desire.
Why, that's the lady; all the world desires her.
From the four corners of the earth they come,
To kiss this shrine, this mortal breathing saint.
The third, a precious desarts, and the vast fields
Of wide Arabia, are as thorough-fares now,
For princes to come view fair Portia:
The watery kingdom, whose ambitious head
Spits the face of heaven, is no far
To stop the foreign spirits; but they come,
As o'er a brook, to see for Portia.
One of these three contains her heavenly picture.
Is't, like, that lead contain'd? Two more estimation
To think so base a thought: it were too gross
To rib her credence in the obscure grave.
Or shall I think, in silver she's unbur'd,
Being ten times undervalued to try gold?
O simul thinck! Never so rich a gem
Was set in worse than gold.
They have in England A coin that bears the figure of an angel
Stamped in gold; but that's meagrely upon;
But here an angel in a golden bed
Lies all within.—Deliver me the key;
Here I choose and thrive I! — I mean, you.
Por. There, take it, prince, and if my form be there,
Then I am yours. [He unlocks the golden casket.
Mor. O hell! that glitters is not gold, O hell! that looks we here! A carrion death, within whose empty eye
There is a written scroll? I'll read the writing,
And that that glitters is not gold,
Often you heard that told:
Many a man his life hath sold,
But my outside to behold,
Gilded names do worse undo,
Had you been as wise as bold;
Young in time, in judgment old;
Your answer had not been inser'ted;
You may trust: your gold is with your other.
Cold; indeed; and labor lost.
Then farewell, heat: and welcome, frost,
Por. Adieu! I have too greatly a heart
To take a tedious leave: thus losers part. [Exit.
Por. A deadly and sad discord:—Draw the curtains; go.]—

Let all of his complexion choose me so. [Exit Portia.]

SCENE VIII.— Venice. A Street.

[Enter Salario and Salanio.

Salar. Why, man, I saw Bassanio under sail;
With him is Gratiano gone along:
And should his ship, I am sure, Lorenzo is not.
Sall. The silver, Jew with our jewels rais'd the duke;
Who went with him to search Bassanio's ship.
Salar. He came too late: the ship was under sail:
But there the duke was given to understand,
That in a gondola were seen together

* 6

Endeavor.
Lorenzo and his amorous Jessica:

Besides, Antonio certitud the duke,

They were not with Bassanio in his ship.

Salar. I never heard in passant his name...laid

So strange, outrageous, and so various,

As the dog Jew did utter in the streets:

My daughter! O my daughter! my daughter!

For no Christian daughter...justice! the law! my daughter and my daughter!

A sealed bag, two sealed bags of ducats,

Of ducats ducats, still from me by my daughter!

As I lived, two stones, two rich and precious stones,

Stole by my daughter! justice! found the girl!

She went to court upon the ducats!

Salar. Why, all the boys in Venice follow him,

Crying, his stones, his daughter, and his ducats.

Salar. Let good Antonio look he keep his day,

Or he shall pay for this.

Marry, well remember'd:

I reason'd with a Frenchman yesterday;

Who told me in the narrow seas, that part

The French and English, there unscared.

A vessel of our country, really fraught;

I thought upon Antonio, when he told me;

And wish'd in silence, that it were not his.

Yet do not suddenly, for it may grieve him.

Salar. A kind gentleman treads not the earth.

I sent Bassanio and aversing you a schedule, I shall read it.

How much unlike art thou to Portia!

How much unlike my hopes, and my deservings!

Who chooseth me shall have as much as he desires.

Did I deserve no more than a fool's head?

Is that my pride! are my deserts no better?

To offend, and judge, are distinct offices,

And of opposed natures.

Ar. What is here! the portrait of a blinking idiot,

Easing Bassanio and aversing you a schedule, I shall read it.

How much unlike art thou to Portia!

How much unlike my hopes, and my deservings!

Who chooseth me shall have as much as he desires.

Did I deserve no more than a fool's head?

Is that my pride! are my deserts no better?

To offend, and judge, are distinct offices,

And of opposed natures.

Ar. What is here! the fire seven times tried this:

Seven times tried that judgment is,

That did never choose unwise.

Some there be that shadows kiss;

Such have but a shadow's bliss;

There he fouls state, I wish

Silver'd over, and so was this.

Take what wise you will to bed,

I will ever be your head:

So beware, sir, you are sped.

Still more fool shall I appear,

By the time I linger here:

With one fool's head I came to woo,

But I go away with two.

Sweet, then! I'll keep my oath,

Patiently to bear my wroth.

Exeunt Arragon, and Train.

Por. Thus hath the candle singular the moth.

O these delicate fools! when they do choose,

They have their wisdom by their wit to lose.

Nec. The ancient saying is no heresy;—

Hanging and wrying goes by destiny.

Por. Come, draw the curtain, Nerissa.

Enter a Servant.

Serr. Where is my lady?

Por. Here; what would my lord?

Serr. Madam, there is elighted at your gate

A young Venetian, one that comes before

To signify the approaching of his lord:

From whom he brings sensible regrets:

To wit, besends commends, and courteously breath,

Gifts of true value have I not seen

So likely an ambassador of love:

A day in April never came so sweet,

To show how cold my heart was ever hard,

As the fore-fourrier comes before his lord.

Por. No more, I pray thee; I am half afraid

Thou wilt say anon, I come kin to thee.

To meet at such high-day as thou dost wishing him.

Come, come, Nerissa; for I long to see

Quick Cupid's post that comes so mannerly

Nec. Bassanio, lord love, if it will be

Agree. Know. Salutations.

Scenes IX. MERCHANT OF VENICE.

161
ACT III.

SCENE I.—Venice. A Street.

Enter SALANIO and SALARINO

Salar., Now, what news on the Rialto?

Salarn. Why, yet it lives there uncheck'd, that Antonio hath a ship of rich hauling wreck'd on the narrow seas; the Goodmans, I think they call the place. A merchant's life is often full of sorrow, where 'tis not the less imminent cases of many a tall ship he buries, as they say, if his gossips'ret an honest woman of her word.

Salar. I would she were as lying a gossip in that as she is true a hangman, or in her neighbours' belief she were kept for the death of a third husband; But it is true,—without any slips of propriety, or crossing the plain high-way of talk,—that the good Antonio, the honest Antonio, out of that I had a little good enough to keep his name company!—

Salar. Come, the full stop.

Salarn. Ha,—what say at thou!—Why the end is, he hath lost a ship.

Salar. I would it might prove the end of his losses.

Salarn. Let me say amen betimes, lest the devil cross my prayer; for here he comes in the likeness of a Jew.—

Enter SHYLOCK.

How now, Shylock! what news among the merchants?

Shy. You know, none so well, none so well as you of my daughter's flight.

Salar. That's certain; I, for my part, knew the tailor that made the wigs she flew with.

Salar. Not, and Shylock, for his own part, knew the bird was fled: and then it is the complexion of them all to leave the dam.

Shy. She is damned for it.

Salar. That's certain, if the devil may be his judge.

Shy. My own flesh and blood to rebel!—

Salarn. Out upon it, old carrion! rebels it at these years old!

Shy. I say, my daughter is my flesh and blood.

Salar. There is more difference between thy cheeks and hers than between jet and ivory; more between your bloods, than there is between red wine and Rhine:—But tell us, do you hear, whether Antonio have had any loss at sea or no?

Shy. There I have another bad match: a bankrupt, a prodigal, who dare scarce show his head on the Rialto;—a beggar, that used to come so sang upon the mart;—let him look to his bond; he was wont to call me usurer;—let him look to his bond: he was wont to call me usurer and money for a Christian courtesy;—let him look to his bond.

Salar. Why, I am sure, if he forfeit, thou wilt not take his flesh: What's that good for?

Shy. To fill fish withal: if it will feed nothing else, it will feed my revenge. He hath disgraced me, and hindered me half a million; laugh'd at my losses, mock'd at my gains, scorned my nation, divvated my bargains, cooled my friends, heated mine enemies; and what's his reason! I am a Jew: Hath not a Jew eyes? Hath not a Jew hands, organs, dimensions, senses, affections, passions? lend with the same food, hurt with the same weapons, subject to the same diseases, healed by the same means, warmed and cooled by the same winter and summer, as a Christian is? If you prick us, do we not bleed? if you prick us, do we not die? and if you wrong us, shall we not revenge? If we are like you in the rest, we will resemble in that. A Jew hath a Christian, what is his humility? revenge; If a Christian wrong a Jew, what should his sufferance be? shall we not revenge? The example you teach me, I will execute; and it shall go hard, but I will better the instruction.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. Gentlemen, my master Antonio is at his house, and desires to speak with you both.

Salar. We have been up and down to seek him.

Enter TUBAL.

Tubal. Salarn. Here comes another of the tribe; a third cannot be matched, unless the devil himself turn Jew. Enter SALANIO, SALARINO, and a Servant.

Shy. How now, Tubal, what news from Genoa? last thou found my daughter?

Tub. I often come where I did hear of her, but cannot find her.

Shy. Why, why, there, there, there! a diamond gone, cost me two thousand ducats in Frankfort! The curse never fell upon our nation till now; I have never felt it till now; and here I am the last of that and other precious, precious jewels—I would, my daughter were dead at my foot, and the jewels in her ear! would she were heard at my foot, and the ducats in her coffin! No news of them!—Why, so:—and I know not what's spent in the search: Why, thou lose upon loss! the thief gone with so much, and so much to find the thief; and no satisfaction, no revenue; nor no ill luck stirring, but what lights o' my shoulders; no sighs, but o' my breathing; no tears, but o' my shedding.

Tubal. Thou hast ill luck too; Antonio, as I heard in Genoa,—

Shy. What, what, what? ill luck, ill luck?

Tub. —hath an argosy cast away, coming from Tripoli.

Shy. I thank God, I thank God:—Is it true? is it true?

Tub. 'Twas spoke with some of the sailors that escaped the wreck.

Shy. I thank thee, good Tubal;—Good news, good news: ha! ha!—Where in Genoa?

Tub. One and twenty ducats spent in Genoa, as I heard, one night, fourscore ducats.

Shy. Thou stick'st a dagger in me:—I shall never see my gold again: Fourscore ducats at a setting, fourscore ducats.

Tub. There came divers of Antonio's creditors in my company to Venice, that swear he cannot choose but break.

Shy. I am very glad of it: I'll plague him; I'll torture him; I am glad of it.

Tub. One of them showed me a ring, that he had of your daughter for a monkey.

Shy. Upon her head! Thou tormentest me, Tubal: it was my torque:—I had it of Leah, when I was a bachelor: I would not have given it for a wilder-ness of monkeys.

Tub. But Antonio is certainly undone.

Shy. Nay that's true, that's very true: Go, Tubal, fee me an officer, bespeak him a fortnight's entertainment in Genoa: this is the heart of things. If he be forth, for were he out of Venice, I can make what mer- chandise I will; Go, go, Tubal, and meet me at our synagogy; go, good Tubal; at our synagoge, Tubal. [Exit.

SCENE II.—Belmont. A Room in Portia's House.

Enter BASSIANO, PORTIA, GRATIANO, NERISSA, and Attendants. The caskets are set out.

Por. I pray you, tarry; pause a day or two, Before you hazard; for in choosing wrong, I lose my company: therefore, forebear a while: There's something tells me, (but it is not love,) I would not lose you; and you know yourself, Hate counsels not in such a quality; But let you should not understand me well, (And yet a maiden hath no tongue but thought,) I would detain you here some month or two, Before you venture for me, I could teach you How to make a prize out of a prize that was not one; So will I never be: So may you miss me; But if you do, you'll make me wish a sin. That's the wish I wish you. That's the wish I wish you. They have o'er-booked me, and divided me; One half of me is yours; the other half yours;— Mine own, I would say; but if mine, then yours, As was within the bargain; and these staunch of yours: Put bars between the owners and their rights; And so, though yours, not yours.—Prove it so,

* A precious stone.
Hard food for Midas, I will none of thee:
Not none of thee, thou pale and poisonous drudge
'Tween me and thee, and therefore make me woe:
Which rather threat'nest than dost promise aught,
Thy plainness mov'd me more than eloquence,
And here ends 12 June, and the conclusion:

Por. How all the other passions flit to air,
As doubtful thoughts, and rash-embraided despair,
And shuddring fear and green-eyed jealousy.
O love, be constant, by thy eyes confess:
In measure thy joy, scant this excess;
I feel too much thy blessing, make it less,
For fear I surfeit.

Bass. What find I here?

Fair Portia's counterfeit! What demi-god
Hath come so near creation? Move these eyes!
Or whether, riddling on the balls of sense,
Seem they in motion? Here are several lips,
Parted with sugar breath; so sweet a bar
Should sunder such sweet friends? Here in her hairs
The painter plucks at; and hath woven
A golden mesh to entrap the hearts of men,
Faster than gnats in clover; but her eyes,—
How could be seen to do them? Haveing made one,
Methinks, it should have power to steal both his,
And leave itself unfurnished: Yet look, how far
The substance of my praise doth wrong this shadow
In understanding, so far this is but shadow.
Both limb behind the substance.—Here's the scroll,
The continent and summary of my fortune.
You that choose not by the view,
Chances pass; and so shall we too.
Since this fortune fails you,
To be content and seek no new.
If you will be pleased with this,
And hold your fortune for your Clo'es,
Then you where your lady is,
And claim her with a loving kiss.
A gentle scroll—Fair lady, by your leave.
Kissing her,
I come by note, to give and to receive.
Like one of two contending in a prize,
That thinks he hath done well in people's eyes,
Hearing applause and universal acclamation,
Giddy in spirit, still gazing, in a doubt
Whether those seals of praise be his or no:
So, three true lady, stand I, even so;
As doubtful whether what I see be true,
Until confirm'd, sign'd, ratified by you.

Por. You see me, lord Bassanio, where I stand,
Such am I: though for myself alone,
I would not be ambitious in my wish,
To wish myself much better; yet, for you,
I would be trebled twenty times myself;
A thousand times more fair, ten thousand times
More rich:
That only to stand high on your account,
I might in virtues, beauties, livings, friends,
Exceed account: but the full sum of me
Is sum of something; which, to term in gross,
Is an unlesser'd girl, unschool'd, unpractis'd;
Happy in this she is not yet so old
But she may learn and apply to others',
She is not bred so dull but she can learn;
Happiest of all, is, that her gentle spirit
Commits itself to yours to be directed,
As from her lord, her governor, her my lord,
Myself and what is mine, to you, and yours,
Is now converted: but now I was the lord
Of this fair mansion, master of my servants,
Myself, myself, alone, unaided, and alone.
This house, these servants, and this same myself,
Are yours, my lord; I give them with this ring;
Which when you part from, lose, or give away,
Let it preserve the name of your love,
And be my vantage to exclaim on you.

Bass. Madam, you have bettered me of all words,
Only my hand and speech weeps in your veins.
And there is such confusion in my powers,
As after some oration fairly spoke
By a beloved prince, there doth appear
Among the many parts of that noble body
Where every thing, being blent together,
Turns to a wild of nothing, save of joy.
Express'd and not express'd: But when this ring
Parts from this finger, then these parts are from hence;
O, then he hold to say, Bassanio's dead.

N.r. My lord and lady, it is now our time,

Blended.
That have stood by, and seen our wishes prosper,
To err, good joy; Good joy, my lord and lady!

For my Lord Bassanio, and my gentle lady,
I wish you all the joy that you can wish;
For I am sure, you can wish none from me;
And wish me what you mean to somebody
The bargain of your faith, I do beseech you,
Even at that time I may be married too.

Bass. With all my heart, so thou canst get a

Gra. I thank your lordship; you have got me one,
My eyes, my lord, can look as swift as yours:
You saw the mistress, I beheld the mail;
When I looked, I loved; for internally
No more pertains to me, my lord, than you.
Your fortune stood upon the caskets there;
And so did mine too, as the matter fails:
For when thou didst go, I followed thee,
And swearing, till my very roof was dry
With oaths of love; at last,—if promise last,—
I got a promise.

To have her love, provided that your fortune
Achiev'd her mistress.

For. Is this true, Nerissa? Is this true?
Nor. Madam, it is, so you stand plein'd withal,
Bass. And do you, Gratiano, mean good faith?
Gra. Yes, faith, my lord.
Bass. Our feast shall be much honord in your marriage.
Gra. We'll play with them, the first boy for a

Ner. What, and shake down?—
Nor. No; we shall never win at the sport, and shake down.

But who comes here? Lorenzo, and his maid
What, my old Venetian friend, Salerio?

Enter Lorenzo, Jessica, and Salerio.

Lorenz. Lorenzo and Salerio, welcome hither;
Nor. Meeting with Salerio by the way,
I bid my very friends and countrymen,
Sweet Portia, welcome.

For. So do I, my lord;
They are entirely welcome.

Lor. I thank your honor:—For my part, my lord,
My purpose was not to have seen you here;
But meeting with Salerio by the way,
He did entreat me, past all saying nay,
To come with him along.

Nor. I did, my lord,
And I have reason for it. Signior Antonio
Commends him to you. [Gives Bassanio a letter]
Bass. Ere I open this letter,
I pray you, tell me how my goods concern you;
Sal. Not, sir, my lord; unless it be in mind; Not well, unless in mind: his letter there
Will show you his estate.
Nor. Miss Salerio, a stranger: bid her welcome.
Your hand, Salerio: What's the news from Venice?
Bass. How doth that royal merchant, good Antonio?
Nor. I know, he will be glad of our success;
We are the Jews, we have won the fleece.

Sale. Would you had won the fleece that he hath lost!
For. There are some shrewd contents in you
That steal the color from Bassanio's cheek:
Some dear friend dead, else nothing in the world
Could turn so much the condition
Of constant man. What, worse and worse?
With leave, Bassanio; I am half yourself,
And I must freely have the half of any thing
That this same paper brings you.

Bass. O sweet Portia, here are a few of the unpleasantst words,
That ever blotted paper! Gentle lady,
What if I did first mix not my love to you,
I feely told you, all the wealth I had
Ran in my veins, I was a gentleman;
And then I told you true: and yet, dear lady,
For I am told, to be yourself, you will see
How much I was a braggart: When I told you
My estate was nothing, I should then have told you
That I was born not nothing; for indeed,
I have craz'd myself to a dear friend,
Engag'd my friend to his mere enemy,
To feed my means. Here is a letter, holy;
The paper as the body of my old friend,
And every word in it a gasping wound,
Issuing life-blood.—But is it true, Salerio?
Have you ventur'd so far? What shall I do?
From Tripolis, from Mexico, and England,
From Lisbon, Barbary, and India!
And not one vessel 'scape the dreadful touch
Of thousand-masting ships. Do not, one, my lord.

Sale. Not one, my lord.
Besides, it should appear, that if he had
The present money to discharge the Jew,
He would not take it; he never did it before.
A creature, that did hear the shape of man,
So keen and greedy to confound a man;
The duke devil he, and the magnificence
Of great Bassanio, have all persuas'd him to it;
But none can drive him from the diabolical plea
Of forfeiture, of justice, and his bond.

Lor. When I was with him, I have heard him swear,
To Trebel, and to Chus, his countrymen,
That he would rather have Antonio's flesh,
Than twenty times the value of the sum
That he did owe him: and I know, my lord,
If I have authority, and power to do it,
It will go hard with poor Antonio.
For. Is it your dear friend, that is thus in trouble?
Bass. The noblest friend to me, the bravest man,
The most invulnerable and unscreened spirit
In doing courtesies; and one in whom
The ancient Roman honor more appears,
Than any that draws breath in Italy.

For. What sum owes he the Jew?
Bass. For me, three thousand ducats.

For. What more?
Bass. Pay 1000 ducats, and deface the bond;
Double six thousand, and then trouble that,
Before a friend of this description
Shall lose a hair through my Bassanio's fault.

First, go with me to church, and call me wife;
And then away to Venice for your friend:
For never shall you lie by Portia's side
With an unquiet soul. You shall have gold
To pay the petty debts twenty times over;
When it is paid, bring your true friend along:
My maid Nerissa, and myself; mean time,
Will see the husbands and wives come away;
For you shall hence upon your wedding-day
Bid your friends welcome, show a merry cheer;* Since you are dear bought, I will love you dearly.
But let me hear the letter of your friend.

Bass. [Reads.] Sweet Bassanio, my ships have all miscarried, my creditors grow cruel, my estate is very low, my bond to the Jew for't & a sister, in justice, nothing. 1 should live, ещё debts are cleared between you and I, if I might but see you at your death: notwithstanding, use your pleasure; if your love do not persuade you to confedurate in my letter.

For. O love, despatch all business, and be gone,
Bass. Since you have good your leisure to go away,
I will make haste; but till I come again,
No bed shall e'er be guilty of my stay.

No rest be interposer twist us twain.

SCENE III.—Venice. A Street.

Enter Shylock, Salario, Antonio, and Gaoler.

Shy. Gaoler, look to him;—Tell not me of
This is the fool that lent out money gratis;
Gaoler, look to him.

And. [Exit]
Hear me yet, good Shylock.
Shy. I'll have my bond; speak not against my bond;
I have sworn an oath, that I will have my bond;
Thou califi'd me dog, before thou hast a cause;
But I am the signior dog, that shall beware thy cause.
The duke shall grant me justice.—I do wonder,
Thou-naughty gaoler, that thou art so fond
To come abroad with him at his request.

And. I wish thee, hear me speak.
Shy. I'll have my bond; I will not hear thee speak,
I'll have my bond; and therefore speak no more.
I'll have my bond; and don't be for' th' law:
To shake the head, relent, and sigh, and yield
To Christian intercessors. Follow not;
I'll have no speaking; I'll have my bond.

[Shylock.]

* The chief men.  — Face.  — Foolish.
Salot. It is the last unpeneetrable cur
That ever kept with me.

Ant. Let him alone;
I'll follow him no more with bootless prayers.
He seeks my death, I know;
I oft deliver'd from his strokes.
Many that have at times made man to me,
Therefore he hates me.

[Exit.]

Por. I am sure the duke
Will never grant this forfeiture to hold.
Ant. The duke cannot deny the course of law;
For the common course of justice have:
With me in Venice, if it be desired.
Will much impeach the justice of the state;
Since that the trade and profit of the city
Consists with all of that, and trade, go;
These griefs and losses have so bated me,
That I shall hardly spare a pound of flesh
To-morrow to my bloody creditor.

Well, goiter, on:—Pray God, Bassanio come to see me pay his debt, and then I care not!

SCENE IV.—Belmont. A room in Portia's house.

Enter Portia, Nerissa, Lorenzo, Jessica, and Bassanio.

Lor. Madam, although I speak it in your presence,
You have a noble and a true content
Of God-like anxiety; which appears most strongly
In bearing this the assurance of your lord.
But if you know to whom you show this honor,
How true a gentleman you send relief,
How dear a lover of my lord your husband,
I know you would be prouder of the work,
Than customary bounty can enforce you,
Por. I never did repent for doing good,
Nor shall now: for in companions
That do converse and waste the time together,
Whose sons's do bear an equal joke of love,
There must be needs a like proportion
Of lineaments, manners, and of sport,
Which makes me think, that this fair man,
Being the bosom lover of my lord,
Must needs be like my lord: if it be so,
How little is the cost I have bestowed,
In purchasing the semblance of my soul
From out the state of hellish cruelty!
This comes too near the praising of myself:
There's no man in the world I would a sworn vow,
To live in prayer and contemplation,
Only attended by Nerissa here,
Until her husband and my lord's return:
This is a most necessary of the course I keep,
And these we will abide. I do desire you,
Not to deny this imposition;
The which my love, and some necessity,
Now lays upon you.

Lor. Madam, with all my heart;
I shall obey in all fair commands.
Por. My people do already know my mind,
And will acknowledge you and Jessica
In place of lord Bassano and myself.
So fare you well, till we shall meet again.
Lor. Fair thoughts, and happy hours, attend on you.

Por. I thank you for your wish, and am well pleased.

Jes. I wish your ladyship all heart's content.
Por. I thank you for your wish, and am well pleased.

Jes. I wish to speak on you: face you well, Jessica.—

[Exit Jessica and Lorenzo.]

Por. Now, Bassanio,
As I have ever found thee honest, true,
So let me find thee still: Take this same letter,
And use it all the endeavor of a man,
In speed to Padua; see thou render this
To my lord's hand, and he shall read it; and,
And, look what notes and garments he doth give thee,
Bring them, I pray thee, with unreserved speed
Unto the count, to the count of Venice,
Which trades to Venice:—waste no time in words,
But get thee gone; I shall be there before thee.

Bass. Madam, I go with all convenient speed.

Por. Come on, Nerissa: I have work in hand,
That you yet know not of: we'll see our husbands,
Before they think of us.

Por. They shall, Nerissa;—but in such a haste,
That they shall think we are accompanied.
With what we lack, I'll hold my thief, and sinner,
When we are both accosted like young men,
And wear our dagger with the braver grace;
And speak, between the house of the Duke of boy,
With a red voice; and turn two cunning steps
Into a manly strafe; and speak of trysts,
Like a fine thing, and do a courteous and touchy lines,
How honorable ladies sought my love.
Which I denying, they fell sick and died;
I could not do with this,—then I'll repent.
And wish, for all that I had not kill'd them:
And twenty of these puny lies I'll tell.
That man shall swear I have discontinued school
Above a twelvemonth—I have within my hand
A thousand raw tricks of these bragging Jacks,
Which I will practise.

Por. Why, shall we turn to men?
Por. Fie! what a question's that,
If thou went near a level interpreter.
But come, I'll tell thee all my whole device,
When I am in my coach, which stays for us
At the park gate; and therefore haste away,
For we must measure twenty miles to-day.

SCENE V.—A garden.

Enter Launcelot and Jessica.

Lau. Yes, truly—for, look you, the sins of the father are to be laid upon the children: therefore, I promise you, I fear you. I was always plain with you, and so now I speak my exposition of the matter: Thou knowest, he be of good cheer: therefore, I think, you are damned. There is but one hope in it that can do you any good; and that is but a kind of bastard hope more.

Jes. And what hope is that, I pray thee?

Lau. Marry, you may partly hope that your father got not you, that you are not the Jew's daughter.

Jes. That were a kind of bastard hope, indeed; so the sins of my mother should be visited upon me.

Lau. Truly. Then I fear you are damned both by father and mother thus when I slum Scilla, your father, I fall into Claribey, your mother: well, you are gone both ways.

Jes. I shall be saved by my husband; he hath made me a Christian woman.

Lau. Truly, the more to blame he; we wore Christians enough before; even as many as could well live, one by another: This making of Christians will raise the price of monasteries; but all to be pork-eaters, we shall not shortly have a rasher on the coals for money.

Enter Lorenzo.

Jes. I shall tell my husband, Launcelot, what you say; here he comes.

Lau. I shall grow jealous of you shortly, Launcelot, if you thus get my wife into corners.

Jes. Nay, you need not fear us, Lorenzo; Launcelot and I are out; he tells me thus, there is no mercy for me in heaven, because I am a Jew's daughter: and he says, you are no good member of the commonwealth; for, in converting Jews to Christians, I frustrate the place of pork-eaters.

Lau. I shall answer that better to the commonwealth, than you can the getting up of the negro's belly: the Moor is with child by you, Launcelot.

Lau. He is, indeed, that the Moor should be more than reason: but if she be less than an honest woman, she is, indeed, more than I took her for.

Lau. How every land can play upon the word! I think, the most grand word will well turn into silence; and discourse grow commendable in none only but parrots.—Go in, errand; bid them prepare for dinner.

Lau. That is done, sir; they have all stomachs, Lau. Goody lord, what a wit-snapper are you then bid them prepare dinner,

Lau. That is done too, sir; only cover is the word.

Lau. Will you cover then, sir?

Lau. Not so, sir, neither; I know my duty.

Lau. Yet more quarrelling with occasion! Wilt thou show the whole weight of thy wit in an in-instant! I pray thee, understand a plain man in his own meaning; go then this fellow, and they shall cover the table, serve in the meat, and we will come in to dinner.

Laun. For the table, sir, it shall be served in; for the meat, sir, it shall be recovered; for your coming in, to dinner, sir, why, let it be as honors and conceits shall govern.

(Exit LAUNCELOT.)

Lor. O dear discretion, how his words are suited! This fool hath planted in his memory An army of good words; and I do know A many fools, that stand in better place, Gainsaid'd like him, that for a trucfly word have lost their matter. How cheer'd thou, Jessica? And now, good sweet, say thy opinion, How dost thou like the lord Bassano's wife? Jen. Past all expressing: It is very meet, The lord Bassano shall have an upright For, having such a blessing in his lady,

He finds the joys of heaven here on earth; And, as the sun outh burns when the earth is reason he should never come to heaven.

Why, if two gods should play some heavenly match, And on the wager by two earthy women, And Portia one, there must be something else Pawn'd with the other; for the poor rude world Hath not her fellow.

Lor. Even such a husband Hast thou of me, as she is for a wife. Jen. Nay, but ask my opinion too of that. Lor. I will anon; first, let us go to dinner.

Jen. Nay, let me praise you, while I have a stomach.

Lor. No, pray thee, let it serve for talk; Then, howsoever thou speakest, 'mong other things I shall digest thee.

Jen. Well, I'll set thee forth. [Exeunt.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Venice. A Court of Justice.

Enter the Duke, the Magnificoes; ANTONIO, BAS- SANIO, GRATIANO, SARALINO, and others.

Duke. I am sorry for thee; thou art come to answer A storyy adversary, an inhuman wretch Unable of pity, void and empty From any drain of mercy.

Jen. I have heard, Your grace hath taken great pains to qualify His rigorous course; but since he stands obdurate, And of so many fearful means can carry Out of his envy's reach, I do oppose My patience to his fury; and am arm'd To suffer, with a quietness of spirit, The very tyranny and rage of his.

Duke. Go on, and call the Jew into the court. Sar. He's ready at the door: he comes, my lord.

Enter Shylock.

Duke. Make room, and let him stand before our face.

Shylo. I see, sir, what world thinks, and I think so too, That thou but lead'st this fashion of thy malice To the last hour of act; and then, 'tis thought, Though shewn thy mercy, and renown'd, 'tis more strange Than thy strange crudity, and where? thou now exactly the penalty, (Which is a pound of this poor merchant's flesh,) Thou wilt not lose the forfeiture, But dost thou with hundred and all love, Forgive a moiety of the principal; Glaring an eye of pity on his losses, That have of late so mulched on his back; Enough to press a royal merchant down, And pluck commissation of his state From brassy bosh of, and rough hearts of frit, From princes and their princes, never taught To offices of tender courtesy. We all expect a gentle answer, Jew.

Shy. I have possessed your grace of what I purpose; And by our holy Sabbath have I sworn, To have thee dote and forfeit of my bond: If you deny it, let the danger light Upon your charter, and your city's freedom. You'll ask me, why I rather choose to have A weight of carrion flesh, than to receive Three thousand ducats; I will not answer that: But, say it is my humor; is it answer'd? What if my house be troubled with a rat, And I be pleas'd to give ten thousand ducats To have it ban'd? What, are you answer'd yet? Some then there are, love not a dog's wag; Some that are mad, if they behold a cat— And others, when the bag-pipe sings to the noise, Cannot contain their urine; for affection.

My messengers, I have not an eye to what it likes, or loathes: Now, for your answer:

Shy. What judgment shall I dreed, doing no wrong? You have among you many a purchasing slave, Which, like your asses, and your dogs, and mules, You use in object and in shoddy parts, Because you bought them:—Shall I say to you, Let them be free, marry them to your heirs? Why sweat they under burdens? Let their beds be made out of yours, and let their patches be seasoned with such viands. You will answer, The slaves are ours:—So do I answer you: The pound of flesh, which I demand of him, Is dearly bought, is mine, and I will have it: If you deny me, fie upon your law! There is no force in the decrees of Venice; I stand for judgment: answer: shall I have it? Duke. Let it be so, Shylo; I will not disguise this case, Unless Bellario, a learned doctor, Whom I have sent for to determine this Come here today.

Sar. My lord, here stays without A messenger with letters from the doctor, New come from Padua.

Duke. Bring us the letters; Call the messenger.

Bass. Good cheer, Antonio! What, man! courage yet!
The Jew shall have my flesh. blood, bones, and all; Ere thou shalt lose for me one drop of blood. This is a cursed bond, and you must go: Meetest for death; the weakest kind of fruit Drops earliest to the ground, and so let me: You cannot better be employ'd d, Bassanio, Than live still and continue thus with me. ENTER NERISSA, dressed like a Lawyer's Clerk. Duke. Came you from Padua, from Bellario? Ner. From both my lord: Bellario greets your grace. [Prepares a biller. Bass. [Aside.] Most wonder what thy kind of study? Say, 'Ty cut the forfeiture from that bankrupt there."

Great. Not on thy sole, but on thy soul, harsh Jew. Thou canst not hurt me, I am Armido cut; Not the_hammer's nx, hear half the keeness Of that sharp easy. Can no prayers pierce thee? Say, none that thou hast wet enough to make. And for thy life let justice be accursed. Thou almost mak'st me waver in my faith, To hold opinion with Pythagoras, That souls of animals infulse themselves Into the trunks of men: thy currying spirit Govern'd a wolf, who, fanced for human_slaughter, Even from the calves did his fell soul fleet, And whilst thou sat'st in thy house, how'd Infus'd itself in thee, for thy desires Are_woluffy, bloody, stady d, and ravenous. Say, till thou canst rail the seal from off my bond, Thou wilt not offend at thy dozen, and say: Repair thy wet, good youth, or it will fail To carecss run:-I stand here for law. Duke. This letter from Bellario doth commend A young and learned doctor to our court; Where is he! Ner. He attendeth here hard by. To know your ances, whether you'll admit him. Duke. With all my heart:—some three or four of you, Go, give him courteous conduct to this place. Mean time, the count shall have our lawyer ready. [Exit Clerk.] Your grace shall understand, that, at the receipt of your letter, I am very sICK: but in the instant that your messenger came, in being_vestigation the with ruch a young doctor of Rome, his name is Bathasar: I acquainted him with the cause in controversy between the Jew and Antonio the merchant; we turned over many books together; I taught him to be a student, and, by my own learning, (the greatness whereof I cannot enough commend,) comes with him, at my importunity, to fill up your grace's request in my absence. He is but young; but one appeal, if he be not, an impertinent to let him lack a reverend estimation; for I never knew so young a body with so a head. I bear him to your gracious acceptance, I have a letter from the learned Bellario. Duke. You hear the learn'd Bellario, what he writes: And here I take it, is the doctor come.—

Enter Portia, dressed like a Doctor of Law. Give me your hand:—Came you from old Bellario? Por. I did, my lord. Duke. You are welcome; take your place. Are you acquainted with the difference? This is the present case in our court? Por. I am informed thoroughly of the cause. Which is the merchant here, and which the Jew? Duke. Antonio and old Shylock, both stand forth. Por. Is your name Shylock? Say. Shylock is my name. Por. Of a strange nature is the suit you follow; Yet in such a rule, that the Venetian law Cannot impose you, as you do impose. You stand within your danger, do you not? [To Antonio.]

Ant. Ay, so he says. Por. Do you confess the bond? Ant. I do. Por. Then must the Jew be merciful. Say, on what compulsion, or upon what ground. The quality of mercy is not strain'd; It dropth, as the gentle rain from heaven, Upon the place beneath: it is twice bless'd; If blessed with the giv'd, and him that takes: This mighty in the mightiest: it becomes Oppose. — Reach or control.

The crowned monarch better than his crown; His sceptre shows the force of temporal power, The attribute to avouch the mighty man. Wherein doth sit the dread and fear of kings; But mercy is above his sceptred sway, It is enthroned in the hearts of men, An attribute to God himself. And earthly power doth then show like God's When mercy seasons justice. Therefore, Jew, Though justice be thy plea Consider this, in the cause of mercy, none of us Should see salvation: we do pray for mercy; And that same prayer doth teach us all to render Thy deeds of mercy even so much, To mitigate the justice of thy plea; Which, if thou follow, this strict court of Venice Must needs give sentence 'gainst the merchant No, thou seest Shy. My deeds upon my head! I crave the law, The penalty and forfeit of my bond. Por. Is he not able to discharge the money? Bass. Yes, here I tender it for him in the court; Yea, twice the sum: if that will not suffice, I will be bound to pay it ten times over, On forfeit of my hands, my head, my heart: If this will not suffice, it must appeal That malice bears down truth. And I beseech you, Wring once the law to your authority: To do a great right, do a little wrong. And curb all wrong, do what we deal it. Por. It must not lie: there is no power in Venice Can alter a decree established: Twill be recorded for a precedent; And many an example, in the same example, Will rush into the state: it cannot be. Shy. A Daniel come to judgment! yea a Daniel!— O wise young judge: how do I hold you in Venice? Por. I pray you, let me take upon the bond. Shy. Here 'tis, most reverend doctor, here it is. Shylock, there's thighs thy money offer'd there. Shy. An oath, an oath, I have an oath in heaven: Shall I lay prayery upon my soul! No, not for Venice. Por. Why, this bond is forfeit. And lawfully by this the Jew may claim A pound of flesh, to be by him cut off Nearest the merchant's heart.—Be merciful! Take thrice thy money; bid me bear the bond. Shy. When it is paid according to the tenor— It doth appear, you are a worthy judge; You know the law, your exposition Hath been most search'd by me, you by the law. Where is a you, you are a well-deserving pillar. Proceed to judgment: by my soul I swear, There is no power in the tongue of man To alter me: I stay the course of my bond. Ant. Most heartily I do beseech the court To give the judgment. Why then, thus it is: You must prepare your bosom for his knife. Shy. O noble judge! O excellent young man! Por. For the intent and purpose of the law Hath full relation to the penalty. Which have appeared due upon the bond. Shy. Tis very true: O wise and upright judge! How much more elder art thou than thy looks? Por. Therefore, lay bare your bosom. Shy. Ay, his breast: So says the bond;—but it not noble judge!— Nearest his heart: those are the very words. Por. It is so. Are there balance here, to weigh The flesh. Shy. I have them ready. Por. Have by some surgeon, Shylock, on your body, To stop his wounds, lest he do bleed to death. Shy. Is it so nominated in the bond? Por. It is not so express'd: But what of that! Were good you do you much for each other. Shy. I cannot find it: 'tis not in the bond. Por. Come, merchant, have you anything to say? Ant. But little; I am arm'd, and well prap'rd. Give me your hand that I may take: fare thee well. Grive not that I am fallen to this for you: For hereon fortune shows herself more kind Than is her custom: it is still her use. To let the wretched man outlive his wealth, To view with hollow eye, and wrinkled brow, An age of poverty: from which lingering penance
Of such a misery doth she cut me off.
Commit one to your honorable care:—
Tell her the process of Antonio's end,
Say, how I loved you, speak me fair in death;
And when the tale is told, bid her be judge,
Whether she who had not once a love
Repeat not you that you shall lose your friend,
And he regrets not that he pays your debt;
For, if the Jew do cut but deep enough,
I'll play it instantly with all my heart.
Bass.  Antonio, I am married to a wife,
Which is as dear to me as life itself;
But life itself, my wife, and all the world,
And I my wife, with me esteem above thy life:
I would lose all, ay, sacrifice them all
Here to this devil, to deliver you.
Por.  Your wife would give you many thanks for
That.
If she were by, to hear you make the offer.
Ces. I have a wife, whom, I protest, I love;
I would therefore, were heaven, so well
Entreat some power to change this cursed Jew.
Ner. "Tis well you offer it behind her back;
The wish would make else an unequal house.
Shy.  These be the Christian husbands: I have a daughter;
Would, any of the stock of Barrabas
Had been her husband, rather than a Christian!
Aside
We trifle time; I pray thee, pursu’d sentence.
Por.  A pound of that same merchant’s flesh is
The court awards it, and the law doth give it.
Shy.  Most rightful judge!—
Por.  And you must cut this flesh from off his
The law allows it, and the court awards it.
Shy.  Most learned judge!—A sentence; come, prepare.
Por.  Truly a little—there is something else.
his bond shall give thee here no jot of blood;
The words expressly are a pound of flesh;
Take then thy bond, take thou thy pound of flesh;
Bid it, if the cutting of it, shall defile
One drop of Christian blood, thy lands and goods
Are, by the laws of Venice, confiscate
Unto the state of Venice.
Gru.  A upright judge!—Mark, Jew;—I learned judge!
Shy.  Is that the law?
Por.  As thou urg’st justice, be assur’d,
Thou shalt have justice more than thou desir’st.
Gru.  O learned judge!—Mark, Jew;—I learned judge Shy.  I take this offer then;—pay the bond thence,
And let the Christian go.
Bass.  Here is the money.
Por.  For so.
Shy.  The Jew shall have all justice;—soft!—no haste;
He shall have nothing but the penalty.
Gru.  O Jew! an upright judge, a learned judge!
Por.  Therefore you see there is but to cut off the flesh.
Shed thou no blood; nor cut thou less, nor more,
But just a pound of flesh: if thou tak’st more,
Or less, than a just pound,—be it but so much
As mak’st it light, or heavy, in the substance,
Or the division of the twentieth part
Of one poor sculp; may, if the scale do turn
But in the estimation of a hair.
That thou dost, and all thy goods are confiscate.
Gru.  A second Daniel! a Daniel, Jew!
Now, indeed, I have thee on the hip.
Por.  I doth the Jew perilous, take the for
Shy.  Give me my principal, and let me go.
Bass.  I have it ready for thee; here it is.
Por.  I do it, I do it in the open court;
He shall have mere justice and his bond.
Gru.  A Daniel, still say I a second Daniel—
I thank thee, Jew, for teaching me that word.
Say, Jew, will I not have bare my principal?
Por.  Thou shalt have nothing but the forfeit,
To be so taken at thy peril, Jew.
Shy.  Why then the devil give him good of it! I’ll say no longer question.
Tarry, Jew;
Por.  The law hath yet another hold on you.
It is enacted in the laws of Venice;—
If it be proved against an alien,
That by direct, or indirect attempts,
He seek the life of your enemy,
The party, gazest the which he doth contrive,
Shall seize one half his goods; the other half
Comes to the privy color of the state;
And the offender’s life lies in the mercy
Of the duke only, against all other voice,
In which predicament, I say, thou stand’st;
For he appears by manifest proceeding,
That that secretly, and directly too,
Thou hast contriv’d against the very life
Of the defendant: and thou hast incurred
The danger formerly by me rehearsed;
Down, therefore, and beg mercy of the duke.
Gru.  Beg, that thou mayst have leave to hang Thyself;
And yet thy wealth being forlorn to the state
Thou hast not left the value of a cord;
Therefore thou must be hang’d at the state’s charge.
Duke.  That thou shalt see the difference of our
I pardon thee thy life before thou ask it;
For half thy wealth, it is Antonio’s;
The other half comes to the general state,
Which stool, may, sess draw into a fine.
Por.  Ay, for the state; not for Antonio.
Shy.  Nay, take my life and all, pardon not that
You mean to do, even when you do to the poor
That doth sustain my house: you take my life,
When you do take the means whereby I live.
Por.  What mercy can you render him, Antonio!  Gru.  Gentleness!—nothing else jewels God’s sake.
Ant.  So please my lord the duke, and all the court;
To quit the fine for one half of his goods;
I am content, so he will let me have
The other half in use,—to render it,
Upon his death, unto the gentleman
That lately stole his daughter;
Two things’s provided more,—That, for this favor,
He presently become a Christian; the other, that he do record a gift,
Here in the court, of all he dies possess’d,
Unto his son Lorenzo, and his daughter.
Duke.  He shall do that; or else do repent
The pardon, that I late pronounced here.
Por.  Art thou contented, Jew, what dost thou say?
Shy.  I am content.
Ces. Clerk, draw a deed of gift.
Shy.  I pray you give me leave to go from hence:
I cannot well; and the deed do I, and
I will sign it.
Duke.  Get thee gone, but do it.
Gru.  In christening thou shalt have two god
Had I been judge thou shouldst have had ten more,
To bring thee to the gallows, not the font.
[Exeunt.Say.]
Duke.  Sir, I entreat you home with me to dinner.
Por.  I humbly do desire your grace of pardon;
I must away this night toward Padua,
And it is meet, I presently set forth.
Duke.  To His heart, what poor leisure serves you not.
Antonio, gratify this gentleman;
For, in my mind, you are much bound to him.
Exeunt Duke, Maffinices, and Train.
Bass.  Most worthy gentleman, I and my friend,
Have by your wisdom been this day acquitted
Of grievous penalties; in lieu whereof,
Three thousand dollars, due unto the Jew,
We freely cope your courteous pains withal.
Ant.  And stand indebted, over and above,
In love and service to you evermore.
Por.  We are well paid, that is well satisfied;
And I, delivering you, am satisfied.
And therein do account myself well paid;
My mind was never yet more mercurial.
I proceed, know me; when we meet again;
I wish you well, and so take me leave.
Bass.  Dear sir, of force I must attempt you fur
Take some remembrance of us as a tribute,
Not as a fee; grant me two things I pray you,
Not to deny me, and to pardon me.
Por.  You proceed far, and therefore will I yield.
Gives me his lawyer, I’ll wear them for your sake;
And, for your love, I’ll take this ring from you:
Do not draw back your hand; I’ll take no more;
And if you say I shall not deny me this.
Bass.  This ring, good sir,—alas, it is a trite;
I will not shame myself to give you this.
Por. I will have nothing else but only this;
And now, methinks, I have a mind to it.
Bass. There's more depends on this, than on the value.
The dearest ring in Venice will you give,
And find it out by proclamation;
Only for this, I pray you, pardon me.
Por. I see, sir, you are liberal in others;
You taught me first to beg; and now, methinks,
You teach me how a beggar should be answer'd.
Bass. Good sir, this ring was given me by my wife:
And, when she put it on, she made me vow,
That I should neither sell, nor give, nor lose it.
Por. This 'tis true; 'tis serves many men to save their gifts;
An if your wife be not a mad woman,
And know how well I have deserved this ring,
I pray you, is my master yet return'd?
For giving it to me. Well, peace be with you!
[Exeunt Portia and Nerissa.]
Ant. My lord Bassanio, let him have the ring;
Let his deservings, and our love withal,
Be valued against your wife's commandment.
Bass. Go, Gratiano, run and overtake him,
Give him the ring; and bring him, if thou canst,
Unto Antonio's house;—away, my lord, haste,
[Exeunt Gratiano.
Come, you and I will thither presently;
And in the morning early will we both

Fly toward Belmont: Come, Antonio. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Street.
Enter Portia and Nerissa.
Por. Inquire the Jew's house out, give him this deed,
And let him sign it: we'll away to-night.
And be a day before our husbands' house:
This deed will be well welcome to Lorenzo.
[Exeunt Gratiano.]
Gra. Fair sir, you are well overtaken:
My lord Bassanio, upon more advice
Hath sent you here this ring; and doth entreat
Your company at dinner. That cannot be:
This ring I do accept most thankfully,
And so, I pray you, tell him: Furthermore,
I pray you, come to my old-schoolhouse.
Gra. That will I do.
Ner. Sir, I would speak with you:—
I'll see if I can get my husband's ring; To Portia.
Which I did make his present, and keep for ever.
Por. Thou may'st, I warrant: We shall have old swearing,
That they did give the rings away to men;
But we'll outtake them, and outspeak them too.
Away, make haste, thou knave! where I will tailor.
Ner. Come, good sir, will you show me to this house!
[Exeunt.*

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Belmont. Access to Portia's House.
Enter Lorenzo and Jessica.
Lor. The moon shines bright:—In such a night as this,
When the sweet wind did gently kiss the trees,
And they did make no sound in such a night,
Trojans, methinks, mounted the Trojan walls,
And sign'd his soul toward the Grecian tents,
Where Cressid lay that night.
Jes. In such a night,
Did Thisbe fearfully o'ertrip the dew;
And saw the horn's shadow ere himself,
And ran dismay'd away.
Lor. In such a night,
Stood Dido with a willow in her hand
Upon the wild sea-banks, and wov'd her love
To come again to Carthage.
Jes. In such a night,
Medea gathered the enchanted herbs
That did renew old Jason.
Lor. In such a night,
Did Jessica steal from the wealthy Jew;
And with an unthrift love did run from Venice,
As far as Belmont.
Jes. And in such a night,
Did young Lorenzo so far as he lov'd her well;
swearing her soul with many vows of faith,
And ne'er a true one.
Lor. And in such a night,
Did pretty Jessica, like a little swan,
Shudder her love, and he forgive her at.
Jes. I would out-night you, did no body come:
But, hark, I hear the footing of a man.

[Enter Stephano.]

Lor. Who comes so fast in silence of the night?
Steph. A friend.
Lor. A friend! what friend? your name, I pray you,
Is Stephano. Stephano is my name; and I bring word,
My mistress will before the break of day
Be here at Belmont: she doth stay about
By holy crosses, where she kneels and prays
For happy wedlock hours.
Steph. Who comes with her?
Lor. None, but a holy hermit, and her maid.
*I pray you, is my master yet return'd?
Steph. Ile is not, nor we have not heard from him—
But go we in, I pray thee, Jessica,
And ceremoniously let us prepare
Some welcome for the mistress of the house.

[Enter Launcelot.

Lau. Sola, sola, woa, ha, lo, sola, sola!
Lor. Who calls?
Lau. Who calls? Did you see master Lorenzo, and mistress Lorenzo? sola, sola!
Lor. Leave holiness, man; here.
Lau. Sola! where! where!
Lor. Here.
Lau. Tell him, there's a post come from my master with his horn full of good news; my master will be here ere morning.
[Exeunt.]

Lor. Sweet soul, let's in, and there expect their coming
And yet no matter:—Why should we go in!
My friend Stephano, signify, I pray you,
Within the house, your mistress is at hand;
And bring your music forth into the air—
[Exeunt Stephano.

How sweet the moonlight steepes upon this bank!
Here will we sit, and let the sounds of music
Creep in our ears; soft stillness, and the night,
Become the touches of sweet harmony.
Scri. Look, how the bowl of heaven
Is thick inlaid with patines of bright gold;
There's not the smallest orb, which thou behold'st,
But in his motion like an angel sings,
Still quiring to the young-eyd cherubins:
Such harmony is in immortal souls;
But, whilst this muddly vesture of decay
Doth grossly close it in, we cannot hear it.

[Enter Musicians.

Come, ho, and wake Diana with a horn;
With sweetest touches pierce your mistress' ear,
And draw her home with music.
Scri. I am more merry when I hear sweet music.

[Music.

Lor. The reason is, your spirits are attentive:
For do but note a wild and wanton herd,
Or race of youthful and unbridled colts,
Fetiching mad bounds, bellowing, and neighing loud,
Which is the hot condition of their blood;
If they but hear pureness a trumpet sound,
Or any air of music touch their ears,
You shall perceive them make a mutual stand,
Their savage eyes turn'd to a modest gaze,
By the sweet power of music: Therefore, the poet
Did reign that lyr'd; he drew trees, stones, and floods;
Since noth'th so stockish, hard, and full of rage,
But music for the time doth change his nature.
The man that hath no music in himself,
Nor is not mov'd with concord of sweet sounds,
Is for serious, serious, serious voices:
The motions of his spirit are dull as night,
And his affections dark as Erebus:
Let no such man be trusted—Mark the music.

Enter Portia and Nerissa, of a distance.

Por. That light we see is burning in my hall.
How that the heart beat, I knew it as I was borne:
So shines a good deed in a naughty world.

Ner. When the moon shone, we did not see the candle.
Por. So much the greater glory dim the less:
A substitute shinesbrightly as a king,
Until a king be by; and then his state
Empties itself, as doth an inland brook
Into the main withof the sea, Music round.

Ner. It is your music, madam, of the house.
Por. Nothing is good, I see, without respect;
Metethinks, it sounds much sweeter than by day.

Ner. Silence bestows that your voice, madam.
Por. The crow doth sing as sweetly as the lark,
When neither is attended; and, I think
The nightingale, if she should sing by day,
When every goose is cackling, would be thought
No better a musician than the wren.
How many names by season season do
To the same mind and true pretension:
Peace, hear! the moon sleeps with Endymion,
And would not be awak'd? [Music ceases.

Por. Over much dreev'd, of Portia.
Por. He knows me as the blind man knows the cuckoo,
By the bad voice.

Lor. Dear lady, welcome home.
Por. We have been praying for our husbands' welfare,
Which speed we hope, the better for our words:
Are they return'd?

Lor. Madam they are not yet;
But there is come a messenger before,
To signify their coming.

Go in, Nerissa,
Give order to my servants that they take
No note at all of our being absent hence;
Nor you Lorenzo—Jessica hasten.

[Aside tunesounds.

Lor. Your husband is not hand, I hear his trumpet:
We are no tell-tales, madam, near you not.
Por. This night, methinks, is but the day-light sick,
It looks a little paler: 'tis day,
Such as the day is when the sun is bid.

Enter Bassanio, Antonio, Gratiano, and their Followers.

Bass. We should hold day with the Antipodes,
If you would walk in absence of the poesy, or not
Por. Let me give light, but let me not be light;
For a light wife doth make a heavy husband,
And never be Bassanio so for me;
But God sort all!—You are welcome home, my lord.

Bass. I thank you, madam; give welcome to my friend,—
This is the man, this is Antonio.
To whom I am so infinitely bound.
Por. You should in all sense be much bound to
It from the man.
Por. As I hear was much bound for you.

Lor. No more than I am well acquitt'd of.
Por. Sir, you are very welcome to our house:
It must appear in other ways than words:
Therefore, I sent this breathing courtesy.

[Gratiano and Nerissa seen to talk apart.

Grat. By yonder moon, I swear, you do me wrong!
In giving me to the judge's ear,
Would be wear such that had it for my part,
Since you do take it, love, so much at heart.
Por. A quarrel, ho, already! what's the matter?
In giving it, I beg of you, the worth of the value
That she did give me; whose posy was
For all the world, like cutler's poetry
Upon a knife, Love me, and leave me not.
Por. If by the posy, beg of me, the worth of the posy
You swore to me, when I did give it you,
That you would wear it until your hour of death;
And that it should lie with you in your grave:
Though not for me, yet for your vehement oaths,

* A flourish on a trumpet. * Verbal, complimentary form.

You should have been respective, and have kept it.
Give it judge's clerk,—but well I know,
The clerk will ne'er wear hair on his face, that had it.

Gran. He will, and if he live to be a man.
Ner. Ay, if a woman live to be a man.
Por. But now, by this hand, I gave to a youth,—
A kind of boy; a little scrubby boy,
No higher than myself, the judge's clerk;
A prattling youth, who did give it as I would have
I could not for my heart deny it him.

Por. You were to blame, I must be plain with you,
To part so slightly with your wife's first gift;
A thing so near to the wantonness of your finger,
And riveted so with faith upon your flesh.
I gave my love a ring, and made him swear
Never to part with it; and here he stands;
I dare not tell him for what, he would not have it,
Nor pluck it from his finger, for the wealth
That the world masters. Now, in faith, Gratiano,
You give your wife too unkind a cause of grief;
And 'tis to me, I should be mad at it.

Bass. Why, I were best to cut my left hand off,
And swear I lost the ring defending it.

Por. My lord Bassanio gave his ring away
Unto the judge that begg'd it, and, indeed,
Deserv'd it too; and then the boy's clerk,
That took some pains in writing, he begg'd mine:
And no man is but a master, would take aught but the two rings.

Por. What ring gave you, my lord?
Bass. Not that, I hope, which you receiv'd of me.

Por. Bass! if I could add to it, I lie unto a oath,
I would deny it; but you see my finger
Hath not the ring upon it, it is gone.

Por. Even so void is your false heart of truth.
By heavens, I will never come in your bed.
Until I see the ring.

Ner. Nor I in yours,
Till I again see mine.

Bass. Sweet Portia,
If you did know to whom I gave the ring,
If you did know for whom I gave the ring,
And would conceive for what I gave the ring,
And her unwindingly left the ring;
When nought would be accepted but the ring,
You would abate the strength of your displeasure.
Por. A friend, who know'd in the virtuousness of the ring,
Or half her worthiness that gave the ring,
Or your own honor to contain the ring,
You would not then have parted with the ring;
What man is there so much unreasonnable,
If you had pleas'd, to have defended it
With any terms of real wanted the modesty
To urge the thing held as a ceremony
Nerissa teach's me what to believe:
I'll die for't, but some woman had the ring.

Bass. No, by mine honor, madam, by my soul,
No woman had it, but a civil doctor,
Which was a man three thousand thousand times of me,
And begg'd the ring: the which I did deny him,
And suffer'd him to go displeas'd away:
Even he that had held up the very life
Of my dear friend, that I say, sweet lady!
I was enforced to send it after him;
I was beset with shame and courtesy:
My honor would not let ingratitude,
So much besear it: Pardon me, good lady;
Por. For, by these blessed candles of the night,
Had you been there, I think, you would have begg'd
The ring of me to give the worthy couple.

Por. Let not that doctor c'erne near our house:
Since he hath got the jewel that I lov'd,
And that which you did swear to keep for me,
I will not deny him any thing I have,
No, nor my body, nor my husband's bed:
Know him I shall, I am well sure of it;
Let not you, as you can, watch me, like Argus,
If you do not, if I be left alone.
Now, by mine honor, which is yet my own,
I'll have that doctor for my bedfellow;
Ner. If he c's, I'll c's; therefore be well advis'd,
How you do leve me to mine own protection.
Por. Well, do ye so: let me take him then;
For, if I do, 'twill mar the young couple.
And, to the unhappy subject of these quarrels.
Por. Sir, grieve not you; you are welcome notwithstanding.

Bass. Portia, forgive me this enforced wrong;
    [bergarful.
And in the hearing of these many friends,
I swear to thee, even by thine own fair eyes,
Wherein I see myself,—

Por. Mark you but that! In both mine eyes he doubly sees himself: In each eye one—swear by your double self, And there's an oath of credit.

Bass. Nay, but hear me: I am quite a cuckold; and by my soul I swear, I never more will break an oath with thee.

Ant. I once did lend my body for his wealth; Which, but for him that had your husband's ring,

To Portia,

Hath quite miscarried: I dare be bound again, My soul upon the forfeit, that your lord Will never more break faith advisedly.

Por. Then you shall be his surety: Give him this; And bid him keep it better than the other.

Ant. Here, lord Bassanio; swear to keep this ring; Bass. By heaven, it is the same I gave the doctor! Por. I had it of him: pardon me, Bassanio; For by this ring the doctor lay with me.

Ner. And pardon me, my gentle Gratiano; For that same scrubbed boy, the doctor's clerk, In lieu of this, last night did lie with me.

Gra. Why, this is like the mending of highways In summer, where the ways are far enough: What I am we cuckolds, e'er we have deserved it? Por. Speak not so grossly:—You are all amaz'd; Here is a letter, read it at your leisure; It comes from Padua, from Bellario: There you shall find that Portia was the doctor; Nerissa there, her clerk; Lorenzo here Shall witness, I set forth as soon as you, And but even now return'd; I have not yet Enter'd my house. —Antonio, you are welcome; And I have better news in store for you,

* Advantage.

Than you expect: unseal this letter soon:
There you shall find, three of your argoses Are richly come to harbor suddenly: You shall not know by what strange accident I chanced on this letter.

Ant. I am dumb.

Bass. Were you the doctor, and I knew you not? Gra. Were you the clerk, that is to make me cuckold?

Ner. Ay; but the clerk that never means to do it, Unless he live until he be a man.

Bass. Sweet doctor, you shall be my bedfellow; When I am absent, then lie with my wife.

Ant. Sweet lady, you have given me life, and living; For hear I read for certain that my ships Are safely come to road.

Por. How now, Lorenzo! My clerk hath some good comforts too for you.

Ner. Ay, and I'll give them him without a fee.— There do I give to you and Jessica. From the rich Jew a special deed of gift, After his death, of all he dies possess d of. * Lor. Fair ladies, you drop manna in the way Of starved people.*

Por. It is almost morning, And yet, I am sure, you are not satisfied Of these events at full: Let us go in; And charge us there upon interrogatories, And we will answer all things faithfully.

Gra. Let it be so: The first interrogatory, That my Nerissa shall be sworn on, is, Whether till the next night she had rather stay; Or go to bed now, being two hours to-day: But were the day come, I should wish it dark, That I were coulling with the doctor's clerk. Well, while I live, I'll fear no utter thing So sore, as keeping safe Nerissa's ring. [Exeunt.
AS YOU LIKE IT.

PERSONS REPRESENTED.

DUKE, living in exile.
FREDERICK, brother to the Duke, and Usurper of his dominions.
AMCIIS, Lords attending upon the Duke in his banishment.
LE BEAU, a Courtier, attending upon Frederick.
CHARLES, his Wrestler.
OLIVER.
JACQUES, Sons of Sir Rowland de Bois.
ORLANDO.
ADAM.
DENNIS, Servants to Oliver.

The SCENE lies, first, near Oliver's House; afterwards, partly in the Usurper's Court, and partly in the Forest of Arden.

ACT I.

SCENE I. — An Orchard, near Oliver's House.

Enter ORLANDO and ADAM.

Orl. As I remember, Adam, it was upon this fashion bequeathed me: by will, but a poor thousand crowns; and, as thou say' st, charged my brother, on his blessing, to breed me well; and there begins my sadness. My brother Jaques he keeps at school, and report speaks solidly of his profit: for my part, he keeps me nakedly at home, or, to speak more properly, stays me here at home unkept: for call you that keeping for a gentleman of my birth, that dares not from the stalling of an ox! His horses are bred better: for, besides that they are fair with their feeding, they are taught their manage, and to that end riders dearly bred: but I, his brother, can do nothing under him but grow; for in the which his animals on his dahoons are as much bound to him as I. Besides this nothing that he so plentifully gives me, the something that nature gave me, his countenance seems to take from me: he lets me live with his hands, bars me the place of a brother, and as much as in him lies mines my gentility with my education. This is it, Adam, that grieves me; and the spirit of my father which I think is within me, begins to mutiny against this servitude: I will no longer endure it, though yet I know no wise remedy how to avoid it.

Enter Oliver.

Adm. Yonder comes my master, your brother.

Orl. Go up, Adam, and thou shalt hear how he will shake me try.'

Orl. Now, sir, what make you here?

Orl. Nothing; I am not taught to make any thing.

Orl. What has you then, sir?

Orl. Marry, sir, I am helping you to mar that which God made: a poor unworthy brother of yours, with idleness.

Orl. Marry, sir, be better employ'd, and be naught awhile.

Orl. Shall I keep your hogs, and eat hucks with them? What prodigious portion have I spent, that I could come to such poverty?

Orl. Know you where you are sir?

Orl. O, so very well; here in your orchard.

Orl. Know you before whom, sir?

Orl. Ay, better than he I am before knows me: I know you are my eldest brother; and, in the gentle condition of blood, you should so know me:

What do you here?

The courtesy of nations allows you better, in that you are the first-born; but the same tradition takes not away my blood, were there twenty brothers betwixt us: I have as much of my father in me, as you; albeit, I confess, your coming before me is nearer to his reverence.

Orl. What, boy!

Orl. Come, come, elder brother, you are too young in this.

Orl. Will you lay hands on me, villain!

Orl. I am no villain: I am the youngest son of Sir Rowland de Bois; he was my father, and he is thrice a villain, that says such a father begot villains: Wert thou not my brother, I would not take this hand from thy throat, till this other hand pulled out thy tongue for saying so; thou hast failed on thyself.

Adm. Sweet masters, be patient; for your father's remembrance, be at accord.

Orl. Let me go, I say.

Orl. I will not, till I please: you shall hear me. My father charged you to his will to give me good education: you have trained me like a peasant, obsequious and hiding from me all gentleman-like sentences: the spirit of my father grows strong in me, and I will no longer endure it: therefore, I will do such exercises as may become a gentleman, or give me the poor alimony my father left me by testament; with that I will go buy my fortunes.

Orl. And what wilt thou do? beg, when that is spent? Well, sir, get you in: I will not long be troubled with you: you shall have some part of your will: I pray you, leave me.

Orl. I will no further offend you than becomes me for my good.

Orl. Get you with him, you old dog.

Adam. Is old dog my reward? most true, I have lost my teeth in your service—God be with my old master! he would not have spoke such a word.

Enter OLIVERT and ADAM.

Orl. Is it even so? begin you to grow upon me! I will physic your rankness, and yet give no thousand crowns neither. Ho! Dennis!

Enter DENNIS.

Orl. Calls your worship?

Orl. Was not Charles, the Duke's wrestler, here, to speak with me?

2 Villain is used in a double sense; by Oliver, for a worthless fellow, and by Orlando, for a man of base extraction.
Scene II. — As You Like It.

Den. So please you, he is here at the door, and importunes access to you.

Oli. Call him in. [Exit Dennis.]—Twill be a good way; and let all appear, as if the wrestling is.

Enter Charles.

Chas. Good morrow to your worship.

Oli. Good monsieur Charles!—what's the new news at the new court?

Chas. There's no news at the court, sir; but the old Duke of Arden, the old Duke of Arden, by his younger brother the new Duke; and three or four loving lords have put themselves into voluntary exile with him, who-ands and revenues enrich the new Duke; therefore he gives them good leave to wander.

Oli. Can you tell, if Rosalind, the duke's daughter, be banished with his father?

Chas. Not, I believe, sir; for the duke's daughter, her cousin, she loves her,—being ever from her cradles bred together,—that she would have followed his exile, or have died to stay behind her. She is at the contact of the least beloved of her uncle than his own daughter; and never two ladies loved as they do.

Oli. Where will the old Duke live?

Chas. They say he is already in the forest of Athyne, hunting many merry men with him; and there they live in the old Robin Hood of England: they say, many young gentlemen flock to him every day; and I do think, and the time carelessly, as they did in the old Calabar world.

Oli. What, you wrestle to-morrow before the new Duke?

Chas. Marry, do I, sir; and I came to acquaint you with a matter. I am given, sir, secretly to understand, that your younger brother, Orlando, hath a disposition to come in discreetly against me to try a fall: To-morrow, sir, I wrestle for my credit, and he that escapes me without some broken limb, shall acquit him well. Your brother is but young, and tender; and, for your love, I would be loth to load him with my own honor, if he come in; therefore, out of my love to you, I came hither to acquaint you withal; that either you might stay him from his infraction, or brook such disgrace well; so you will run into it, not only the interest of his own search, and altogether against my will.

Oli. Charles, I thank thee for thy love to me, which thou saidst I will most kindly require. I had myself notice of my brother's purpose herein, and have by understanding means to dissuade him from it; but he is resolute. I'll tell thee, Charles,—he is the sturdiest young fellow of France, the most industrious, and the strong est force of every man's good parts, a secret and villanous contriver against me his natural brother; therefor use thy discretion; I had as he thou didst break his neck to his finger, and thou best look to it; or, if thou dost him any slight disgrace, or if he doth not gracefully himself on thee, he will practise against thee by poison, entrap thee by some treacherous device, and never leave thee till he hath taken thy life by some indirect means or other; for,
I assure thee, and with almost true I speak it I say,
there is not one so young and so villainous this day living.
I speak, but bitterly of him; but should I analyze him to thee as he is, I must blush and weep, and thou must look pale and wonder.

Oli. I am heartily glad, I came hither to you.
If I were to tell you, you'll give him his payment:
If ever he go alone again, I'll never wrestle for prize more: And so, God keep your worship!

[Exit.

Oli. Farewell, good Charles.—Now will I stir this gauntlet: I hope I shall see an end of it for my soul, yet I know not why, hates nothing more than he. Yet he's gentle, never scolded, and full of notions: full of notions, that are by most enchantingly beloved; and, indeed, so much in the heart of the world, and especially of my own people, who best know him, that I am altogether mis-prized: if God will not be my judge, the rest shall clear all: nothing remains, but that I kindle the boy thither, which now I'll go about. [Exit.

Scene II.—A Lawn before the Duke's Palace.

Enter Rosalind and Celia.

Cle. I pray thee, Rosalind, sweet my coz, be merry.
Roa. Dear Celia, I show more mirth than I am
* frolicsome fellow, of all ranks.

* Sir.}

mistrust oft; and would you yet I were merrier?

Unless you would teach me to forget a banished father, you must not learn me how to remember an exile existing.

Cel. Herein, I see, thou lovest me not with the full weight that I love thee: if my uncle, thy banished father, had banished thy uncle, the duke my father, so I lost him, though I had with my uncle had taught my love to take thy father for mine; so wouldst thou, if the truth of thy love to me were so lightely tempt'd if mine is to thee.

Roa. Well, I will first cut the estate of my repose, to reduce in your power.

Cel. You know my father hath no child but I nor none is like to have; and, truly, when he dies,
I should more than ever wish the good fortune from thy father perish, I will render thee again in affection; by mine honor, I will; and when I break that oath, let me turn traitor: therefore, my next rose, I will put the estate of my repose, to reduce in your power.

Enter Le Beau.

Ros. With his mouth full of news.

Cel. Which he will put on us, as pigeons feed their young.

Ros. Then shall we be news-cram'd.

Cel. All the better; we shall be the more marketable.

Ros. Your pittance, Monsieur Le Beau; What's the news?

Le Beau. Fair princess, you have lost much good sport.

Cel. Sport! Of what color?

Le Beau. What color, madam! How shall I answer you?

Ros. As well and fortune will.

Tuch. Or as the diseases decree.

Cel. Well said; that was laid on with a trawl.

Tuch. Nay, if I keep not my rank,

Ros. Listen to the lowest of the old smell.

Le Beau. You amaze me, ladies; I would have told you of good wrestling, which you have lost the sight of.

Ros. Yet tell us the manner of the wrestling.

Le Beau. I will tell you the beginning, and if it please your ladyships, you may see the end; for the best is yet to do; and here you are, they are sure to perform it.

Cel. Well,—the beginning, that is dead and buried.

Le Beau. There comes an old man, and his three sons.

Cel. I could match this beginning with an old tale.

Le Beau. Three proper young men, of excellent growth and presence.

Ros. With heels on their necks.—Be it known unto all men by these presents.

Le Beau. The eldest of the three wrestled with Charles, the duke of Orléans; which Charles in a moment threw him, and broke three of his ribs, that there is little hope of life in him: so he served the second, and so the third. Yonder they lie; the poor boy, having made his father making such pitiful dol.

Ros. But listen to the lowest of the old smell.

Le Beau. That all the beholders take his part with weeping.

Ros. Absurd. Touch what is the sport, Monsieur, that the ladies have lost!

Le Beau. Why, this that I speak of.

Tuch. Thus men may grow wiser every day! it is the first time that I ever heard, breaking of ribs was sport for ladies.

Cel. Or I, I promise thee.

Ros. But is there any other long to see this broken muscle in his sides? is there yet another dot upon ribs-breaking!—shall we see this wrestling, cousins?

Le Beau. You must, if you stay here; for here is the place appointed for the wrestling, and they are ready to perform it.

Cel. Yonder, sure, they are coming; Let us now stay and see it.

Flourish. Enter Duke Frederick, Lords, Orland, Charles, and Attendants.

Duke F. Come on; since the youth will not be entreated, his own peril on his forwardness.

Ros. Is yonder the man?

Le Beau. Even he, madam.

Cel. Alas, he is too young; yet he looks successively.

Duke F. How now, daughter, and cousin? are you apt hither to see the wrestling?

Ros. Ay, my liege! so please you give us leave.

Duke F. You will take little delight in it, I can tell you: there is such odds in the men; in pity of the challenger's youth, I would fain save him, but he will not be entreated: Speak to him, ladies, see if you can move him.

Cel. But the good Monsieur Le Beau,

Duke F. Do so: I will be by, [Duke goes out.]

Le Beau. Monseigneur the challenger, the princesses call for you.

Cel. I, to attend them, with all respect and duty.

Ros. Young man, have you challenged the wrestler?

Orl. No, fair princess; he is the general challenger.

Cel. It is more but in, as others do, to try with him the strength of your youth.

Cel. Young gentleman, your spirits are too bold for your years; you have seen too much of this man's strength; if you say yourself with your eyes or know yourself with your judgment, the fear of your adventure would cause you to a more equal enterprise. We pray you, for your own sake, to embrace your own safety, and give over this at tempt.

Ros. Duke Frederick, you are safe, your reputation shall not therefore be marred: we will make it suit to the duke, that the wrestling might not go forward.

Orl. I beseech you, punish me not with your hard thought; when I come in such guilty, to deny so fair and excellent ladies my thing. But let your fair eyes, and gentle wakles, go with me to my trial; wherein if I be foiled, there is but one shame that was never gracious: it sikled, but one dead that is willing to be so; I shall do my friends no wrong, for I have none to lament me; the world no injury, for in it I have nothing; only in the world to which I stand, which may be better supplied when I have made it empty.

Ros. The little strength that I have, I would it were to you.

Cel. Any mine, to eke out hers.

Ros. Fare you well. Pray heaven, I be deceived in you.

Cel. Your heart's desires be with you.

Orl. Come where is this young gallant, that is so desirous to lie with his mother earth?

Oro. Ready, sir; but his will hath in it a more modest working.

Duke F. You shall try but one fall.

Orl. No, I warrant your grace; you shall not entreat him to a second, that have so mightily persuaded me in the first.

Orl. You mean to mock me after; you should not have mocked me before: but come your ways.

Ros. Now, hercules be thy speed, young man!

Cel. His ship were invincible, to catch the strong fellow by the leg. [Charles and Orlando wrestle.]

Ros. O excellent young man!

Cel. If I had a tinderbolt in mine eye, I can tell tell why should down [Charles is thrown. Shout.]

Duke F. No more, no more.

Orl. Yes, I beseech your grace; I am not yet well subdued.

Duke F. Bear him away. [Charles is borne out.]

What is thy name, young man?

Orl. Orlando, my liege; the youngest son of Sir Rowland de Bois.

Duke F. I would thou hadst been son to some gentleman else.

The world esteem'd thy father honorable, but I did find him still more enemy: Thou shouldst have better pleased me with this deed.

Hast thou descended from another house. But fare thee well; thou art a gallant youth; I would thou hadst told me of another father.

[Exeunt Duke Frederick, Train, and Le Beau.]

Cel. Were I my father, coz, would I do this?

Orl. I am more proud to be Sir Rowland's son, His youngest son;—and would not change that name.

To be adopted heir to Frederick.

Ros. My father lov'd Sir Rowland as his soul, And all the world was of my father's mourning: Had I not known this young man was so, I should have given him tears unto cutrations, Ere he should thus have ventur'd.

Cel. Gentle cousin, Let us go thank him, and encourage him.

My father's rash and envious disposition Sticks me at heart.—Sir, you have well deserv'd: If you do keep your promises in love, [Exeunt Duke, Train, and Le Beau.

Ros. Damen, a faithful lover.

[Giving him a chaplet from her neck.]

Wear this for me; one out of suits with fortune; That could give more, but that her hand lacks means,—

Shall we go, coz?

Orl. Ay—Fare you well fair gentleman. Orl. Can I not say, I thank you? My better parts Are all thrown down; and that which herestand up, is but a quantità of a mere lifeless block.

Ros. He calls us back. My pride fell with my fortunes:—

* The object to start at in martial exercises.
AS YOU LIKE IT.

Scene III.

I'll ask him what he would.—Did you call, sir?—Sir, you have wrestled well, and overthrown Much more than your enemies.

Cei. Will you go, coz?—Ros. Have with you.—Fare you well.

[Learnt Rosalind and Celia.

O! what passings hangs these weights upon my tongue! I cannot speak to her, yet she urged conference.

Re-enter Le Beau.

Le Beau. O poor Orlando! thou art overthrown! Or Charles, or something weaker, masters thee, Le Beau. Good sir, do in friendship counsel you. To leave this place: Albeit you have deserv'd High commendation, true applause and love; Yet much is now the Duke's condition; That he misconstrues all that you have done. The Duke is humorous; what he is, indeed, More suits you to conceive, than me to speak of. Ros. I cannot, sir; and pray you, tell me this; Which of the two was daughter of the Duke, That here was at the wrestling?—Le Beau. Neither his daughter, if we judge by manners; But yet indeed, the shorter is his daughter: The other is daughter to the banish'd duke, And here detain'd by her usurping uncle, To keep her daughter company. Indeed, loves Are dearer than the natural bond of sisters: But I can tell you, that of late this duke Hath ta'en displeasure 'gainst his gentle niece; Grounded upon no other argument, But that the people praise her for her virtues, And pity her for her good father's sake: And, on my life, his malice 'gainst the lady. Was suddenly, if not quite, by fate, spread, Hereafter, in a better world than this, I shall desire more love and knowledge of you. Ort. I rest much bounden to you; fare you well! [Exit Le Beau. Thus must I swim into the smoke toother; From tyrant duke, into a tyrant brother:— But heavenly Rosalind! [Exit.}

Scene III.—A Room in the Palace.

Enter Rosalind and Cecilia.

Cei. Why, cousin, why, Rosalind,—Cupid have mercy!—Not a word! Ros. No, not one to throw at a dog.

Cei. No, thy words are too precious to be cast away upon ears, throw some of them at me; come, tamer me with reasons.

Ros. Then there were two cousins laid up; when the one should be lamed with reasons, and the other mad without any.

Cei. But is all this for your father? Ros. No, some of it for my father's child: O, how the world is one working-day world! Cei. They are but burs, cousins, thrown upon thee in holiday foolery; if we walk not in the trodden paths, our very Petticoats will catch them. Ros. I will shake them off my coat; these burs are in my heart.

Cei. Hem them away.

Ros. I would try; if I could cry hem, and have him,

Cei. Come, come, wrestle with thy affections. Ros. O, they take the part of a better wrestler than myself.

Cei. She is a good wish upon you! you will try in time, in despite of a fall.—But, turning these joints out of service, let us talk in good earnest: Is it possible on such a sudden, you should fall into so strong a liking with old Sir Rowland's youngest son? Ros. The duke my father lov'd his father dearly.

Cei. Doth it therefore ensue, that you should love his son dearly? By this kind of change, I should hate him, for my father hated his father dearly; yet I hate not Orlando.

Ros. No; hate him not, for my sake.

Cei. Why should I not? doth he not deserve so well?—Ros. Let me love him for that; and do you love him because I do.—Look, here comes the duke.

Cei. What is his eyes full of anger.

Enter Duke Frederick, with Lords.

Duke F. Mistress, dispatch you with your safest haste, ¹Temper, disposition.

And get you from our court.

Ros. Duke F. You, cousin;—Within these ten days if that thou best found So near our public court as twenty miles, Thou diest for it.

Ros. Duke F. Thus do all traitors; If their purgation did consist in words, They are as innocent as grace itself.— Let it suffice thee, that I trust thee not.

Ros. Yet your misgivings cannot make me a traitor: Tell me whereon the likelihood depends. Duke F. Thou art thy father's daughter, there's enough.

Ros. So was I, when your highness took his dukedom; So was I, when your highness banish'd him: Treason is not inherited, my lord; Or if we derive it from our bloods. What's that to me? my father was no traitor: Then, good my heze, mistake me not so much, To think my province is treacherous.

Cei. Dear brother, hear me speak. Duke F. Ay, Celia; we stay'd here for your sake, Else had she with her father ranc'd along. Cei. I did not then entreat to have her stay, It was your pleasure, and her own consent: I was too young that time to value her. But now I know her: if she be traitor, Why so am I: we still have slept together, Rosalind! You, and I have shared a bed; And whereas we went, like Juno's swans, still we went coupled, and inseparable.

Duke F. F. My love is too sublime for thee; and her smoothness, Her very silence, and her patience, Speak to the people, and they pity her. Thou art a fool: thou art in love of thy name: And that wilt show more bright and seem more virtuous, When she is gone: then open not thy lips; Firm and irreproachable is my doom. Which I have pass'd upon her; she is banish'd.

Cei. Pronounce that sentence then on my heze; I cannot live out of her company.

Duke F. You are a fool.—You, niece, provide yourself; If you out-stay the time, upon mine honor And in the greatness of my heart, I'll die. [Exeunt Duke Frederick and Lords.

Cei. O, my poor Rosalind! whether wilt thou go! Witt thou change fathers? I will give thee mine. I charged thee, be not thou more greedy than I am. Ros. I have more cause.

Cei. Thou hast not, cousin;—Pr’ythee, be cheerful: know’st thou not, the duke Hath banish’d me, his daughter?

Ros. That he hath not.

Cei. No! hath not? Rosalind facks then the love Which beareth thee that the duke and I are one: Shall we be sunder! shall we part, sweet girl! No; let my father seek another heir, Therefore devise with me, how we may fly, Whither to go, and what to bear with us. And do not seek to take thy change upon you, To bear your grief yourself, and leave me out. For, by this heaven, now at our sorrow’s pale, Say what thou canst, I’ll go along with thee. Ros. Why, whither shall we go?

Cei. To seek my uncle.

Ros. Als, what danger will it be to us, Mundus as we go, to travel furth so far? Beauty provoketh thieves sooner than cold. Cei. I’ll put myself in poor and mean attire, And with a kind of unsmiléd mimic face, The like do you; so shall we pass along, And never stir assailants.

Ros. Were it not better, Because that I am more common tall, That I did suit me all points like a man;

²Compassion. ³A ducky, yellow colored earth.
A gallant curle-axi up on my thirk.
A boor spear in my hark; and in my heart,
I feel a woman out of my danger's reach.
We'll have a swashbuck and a martial outside;
As many other manly coxcombs have,
That do out play and out-serve to us.
Cel. What shall we call thee when thou art a man?
Ros. I'll have no worse a name than Jove's own page.
And therefore look you call me, Ganymede.
But what will ye be call'd if?
Cel. Something that hath a reference to my state;
No longer Celia, but Alcina.
Ros. But, cousin, what if we essay'd to steal
The clowing fool out of your father's court?
Would he not be a comfort to our travel?
Cel. He'll go about in the wide world with me;
Leave me to take care of him: Let's away,
And get our jewels and our wealth together;
Devise the fittest time, and safest way
To hide out of pursuit, which that will be made
After my flight: how we do in content
To liberty and not to banishment.  [Exeunt.]

ACT II.

SCENE I.—The Forest of Arden.

Enter DUKE, SENIOR, AMIES, and other LORDS, in the dress of Forresters.

DUKE. Now, my comates, and brothers in exile,
Hath not old custom made this life more sweet
Than that of painted pomp? Are not these woods
More free from peril than the envious court?
Here feel we but the penalty of Adam,
The seasons' difference; as, the icy fang,
And sharp Brent's hollow chiding of the winter wind;
Which when it bites and blows upon my body,
Even till I shrink with cold, I smile, and say, —
This is my越ary: these are our counsellors
The comfort and subduing of that which I am.
Sweet are the uses of adversity:
Which, like the toad, ugly and venomous,
Wears yet a precious jewel in his head;
And this our life, exempt from public haunt,
Findes tongues in trees, books in the running brooks,
Sermons in stones, and good in every thing:
And. I would change it not: Happy is your grace,
That can translate the stubbornness of fortune
Into so quiet and so sweet a style.
DUKE. Come, shall we go and visit our vassal
And yet it makes me, the poor dappled faun,—
Being native harbours of this desert city,
Should in their own outfits, with Jouked heads.
Have their round haunches gored.
1 LORD. Better.
The melancholy Jaques grievances at that; And, in that kind, swears you do more usurp
Than doth your brother that hath banished you.
Therefore, my lord of Amiens, and myself,
Did steal behind him, as he lay along
Under an oak, whose antique root peeps out
Upon the brook that browses along this wood:
To him which place a poor sequester'd star,
That from the hunter's aim had taken a hurt,
Did come to lament: and, indeed, my lord,
The wretched mortal, many saw him in his groans,
To shed his discharge did stretch his leathern coat
Almost to bursting; and the big round tears
Cours'd one another down his innocent nose
To pious clauses; and thus the hairy bold,
Much marked of the melancholy Jaques.
Stood on the extremest verge of the swift brook,
Augmenting it with tears.

DUKE. But what said Jaques?
1 LORD. Did he not moralize this spectacle?
1 LORD. O, yes, into a thousand similis.
First, for his weeping in the public brook:
Poacher, quoth he, thou makest a testament
As wrothlings do, giving this sum of more.
To that which had too much; Then, being alone,
Left and abandon'd of his velvet friends,
'Twas right, quoth he, that misery doth part
The fates of company: Amon, a careless herd,
Full of the pasture, jumps along by him.
And never stays to graze, but, quoth Jaques,
'Neath tufted hat and grumy citizens,
'Tis just the fashion: Wherefore do you look
Upon your hat and brooked boorish square there?
Thus most invidious to pierce through
The body of the country, city, court,
Yea, and of this our life: swearing that we
Are mere usurpers, tyrants, and what's worse,
To fright the animals, and to kill them up,
In their assigned and native dwelling-place.

DUKE. And did you leave him in this contemplation?
2 LORD. We did, my lord, weeping and commenting Upon the sobbing deer.
DUKE. Show me the place;
1 LORD. He doth not look fit for his slender sash,
For then he's full of matter.
2 LORD. I'll bring you to him straight.  [Exeunt.

ACT III.—A Room in the Palace.

Enter DUKE FREDERICK, Lords, and Attendants.

DUKE. Can it be possible that no man saw them?
It cannot be: some villains of my court
Are of a certain persiflage and cunning;
1 LORD. I, cannot hear of any that did see her.
The ladies, her attendants of her chamber,
Saw her a-bed; and, in the morning early,
They found the bed untended of their mistress.
2 LORD. My lord, the roynish clown, whom so oft
Your grace was wont to laugh, is also missing.
Hessgan, the princess' gentlewoman,
Confesses, that she secretly aheard
Your daughter and her cousin much commend
The parts and graces of the wrestler
That did but lately fill the snowy Charles;
And she believes, wherever they are gone,
That youth is surely in their company.
DUKE. And send to his brother; fetch that gallant Jaques.
If he be absent, bring his brother to me,
I'll make him find you; do this suddenly;
And let not search and inquisition pause
To bring again these banish'd hinds.  [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Before Clive's House.

Enter ORLANDO and ADAM, meeting.

Ori. Who's there?
Adam. What? my young master?—O, my gentle
O, my sweet master, O you memory!
Of old Sir Rowland! why, what make you here?
Why are you virtuous? why do people love you?
And wherefore are you gentle, strong, and valiant?
Why should you be so fond to overcome
The bony prizer of the humorous duke?
Your praise is come too swiftly home before you.
Know you not, master, to some kind of men
Their graces serve them but as enemies.
No more do yours; your virtues, gentle master,
Are baulk'd and baulk your master's tutors too.
O, what a world is this, when what is comely
Envenoms him that bears it!
Ori. Why, what's the matter?
Adam. O unhappy youth,
Come not within these doors; within this roof
The enemy of all your graces lives:
Your brother,—no, no; your brother; yet the son—
Yet not the son;—I will not call him son—
Of him I was about to call his father.—
Hath heard your praises; and this might he means
To burn the lodging where you use to be,
And you within it? if he fail of that,
He will have other means to cut you off:
I overheard him, and his practices.
This is no place; this house is but a butcherly;
Ah but, it hear it, do not enter it.

AS YOU LIKE IT.

Scene V.—The Forest of Arden.

Enter Rosalind in boy's clothes, Celia dressed like a Shepherdess, and Touchstone.

Ros. O Jupiter! how weary are my spirits!
Touch. I care not for my spirits, if my legs were not weary.
Ros. I could find in my heart to discharge my man-scapery, and to cry like a woman; but I must comfort the weaker vessel, as doublet and hose ought to our coats into a thousand that I have forgotten. * blood turned from its natural course.
* A piece of money stamped with a cross.

Sit. O, thou didst then never love so heartily:
If thou remember'st not the slightest folly
That ever love did make thee run into,
Thou hast not love; or if thou hast not love,
Or if thou hast not sat so I do now,
Weary thy heart in thy mistress' praise,
Thou hast not love; or if thou hast not broken from company,
Abruptly, as my passion now makes me,
Thou hast not love; o from, I heave, I heave!

Ros. Alas, poor shepherd! searching of thy wound,
I have by hard adventure found my own.

Touch. And I nurse: I remember, when I was In love, I had no such consid'ring; and had
He that took that for coming thought to Jane smile:
And I remember, the kissing of her lips, and the cows' dug's that her pretty chop'd hands had milk'd,
And I remember, the woodcock he.
Instead of her: from whom I took two cobs, and giving them again, and saying with weeping tears. Wear these for my sake. We, that are true lovers, run into strange capers; but as all is mortality in folly, Ros. Thou speak'st wiser than thou art aware of.
Touch. Nay, I shall never be more wise of mine own wit, till I break my statutes against it.

Ros. Jove! Jove! this shepherd's passion
Is much upon my fashion.

Touch could not mine; but it gows something stale
With me.

Cel. I pray you, one of you question man,
If he for gold will give us any food;
I will almost wish to see him starve.

Touch. Holla! you clown!
Ros. Peace, fool, he's not thy kinsman.
Cel. Who calls?
Touch. Holla, sir.
Cor. Else are they very wretched.
Ros. Peace, say:—
Good even to you, friend.
Cel. And to you, gentle sir, and to you all.
Ros. I pray thee, shepherd, if that love, or gold,
Can in this desert place buy entertainment,
Bring us where we may rest our-elves, and feed;
Here's a young maid with travel much oppress'd,
And laments for succor.
Cel. Fair sir, I pity her,
And wish for her sale, more than for mine own.
My fortunes were more able to relieve her;
But I am shepherd to another man,
And do not clear the fleeces that I graze;
My master is of church description,
And little rocks to find the way to heaven
By doing deeds of hospitality:
Besides, his estate, his flocks, and bounds of feed,
Are now sold; and we, your shepherd and I,
By reason of his absence, there is nothing
That you will feed on; but what is, come see,
And in my voice most welcome shall you be.
Ros. What is he that shall buy his flock and pasture!
Cel. That young swain that you saw here but crewelwise.
That little cares for buying any thing.
Ros. I pray thee, if it stand with honesty,
Buy thou the cottage, pasture, and the flock,
And thou shalt have to pay for it of us.
Cel. And we will make thy waxes, I like this place,
And willingly could waste my time in it.
Cel. Assuredly, the thing is to be sold;
Go with me; if you like upon report.
The sale of the gold, and this kind of life,
I will your very faithful feeder be.
And buy it with your gold right suddenly. [Exit.]

Scene V.—The same.

Enter Amiens, Jaques, and others.

Song.

Ami. Under the greenwood tree,
Who loves to be with me,
And tune his merry note,
Unto the sweet bird's throat,
Come kithcr, come kithcr, come kithcr;
Here shall he see
No enemy,
But winter and rough weather.

* In the night.

The instrument with which washers beat clothes.
Cares.
Act II.

Scene I.—The same.

Enter Orlando and Auck.

Adam. For master, I can go no farther: 0, 1 die for food! Here lie I down, and measure out my grave. Farewell, kind master.

Orel. Why, how now, Adam? no greater heart in thee? I have a little; comfort a little; cheer thyself a little: If this uncouth forest yield any thing savage, I will either be food for it, or bring it for food to thee. Thy conceit is nearer death than thy power, in my sake, be comfortable; hold death awhile at the arm's end: I will here be with thee presently, and if I bring thee not something to eat, I'll give thee leave to die: but if thou diest before I come thou art a nooker of my labor. Well said! thou look'st cheerfully: and I'll be with thee quickly.—Yet thou best in the bleak air: come, I will bear thee to some shelter: and thou shalt not die, nor lack of a dinner, if there live anything in this desert. Cheerly, good Adam! [Exit.]

Scene VII.—The same.

A table set out. Enter Duke Senior, Amiens, Lords, and others.

Duke. I think he be transform'd into a beast; For I can nowhere find him like a man.

Lords. My lord, his lie is betwixt enow gone hence; Here was he merry, hearing of a song.

Duke. If he, compact of jars, 1 grow musical, 1 Ragged and ragged had formerly the same meaning.

Imputations. * Made up of discords.

We shall have shortly discord in the spheres:—

Go, seek him; tell him, I would speak with him.

Enter Jaques.

Duke. Why, now, how now, monsieur! What a life's discourse?

That your poor friends must woo your company, What! you look merrily.

Jaques. A fool, a fool! — I met a fool in the forest, A merry fool; — a miserable world!— As I do live by food, I met a fool; Who laid him down and bask'd him in the sun, And on his lady Fortune in good waters. In good set terms,—and yet a motley fool Good morrow, fool, quoth I: No, sir, quoth me, Call me not fool, till heaven hath sent me fortune: And he drew a stroke from his disc, and so.

And looking on it with hack-lustre eye, Says, very wisely, It is ten o'clock; Thus may we se, quoth he, how the world songs.

And after on hour more, twill be eleven; And so, from hour to hour, we rip and rape, And then from hour to hour, we're all, and tell, to us the mask'd days and nights.

The motley fool thus moral on the time. My lorns began to crow like chautcheater, That, My Lord should be so deep contemplative; And I did laugh sans intermission.

An hour by his dial,—O noble fool! A worthy fool! Motley's the only wear. Duke. What fool is this?

Jaques. O worthy fool! — One that hath been a counsellor; And says, it ladies be but young and fair, They have the gift to know it: and in his brain,— Which is as dry as the remainder biscuit After a voyage,—he hath strange places cram'd With observation, the which he vending, In man's degrees:—0, that I were a fool! I am ambitious for a motley coat.

Duke. Thou shalt have one. Jaques. Provided, that ye weed your better judgments Of all opinion that grows rank in them, That I am wise. I must have liberty Without a charter as the wind. To blow on whom I please: for so fools have, And they that are most galled with my folly, They must most laugh: And why, sir, must they so? The mean is plain as to mundane church: He, that a fool doth very wisely sit, Doth very foolishly, although he be, Not to seem senseless of the bob: if not, The wise man's folly is anaimed; Even by the surrounding glances of the fool. Invest me in my motley; give me leave To speak my mind, and I will through and through Cleanse the foul blood of the infected world, If they will patiently receive my medicine. Duke. Eye on thee! I can tell what thou wouldst do.

Jaques. What, for a counter, would I do, but good Duke. Most mischievous fool, in chiding sin Thot thou thyself has been a libertine, As solemn as the brunt sing itself: And all the embossed sores, and healed evils That thou with license of free birth hast caught, Wouldst thou disgorge into the general world. Jaques. Why, who cares out em crime, That can there in any private party? Doth it not flow as hugely as the sea, Till that the very, very means of it. What woman in the city do I name, When that I say, The city-woman bears The cost of princes on unworthy shoulders! Who can come in who, he say, that I use to, When such a one as she, such is her neighbor! Or what is he of basest uncertain, That says, his bravery is not on my cost, (Thinking that I mean him,) but the others mean. Is it to the mele of my speech? there then? How, what then? Let me see wherein My tongue hath wrong'd him: if it do him right, Then wrong'd himself, if he be free, Why then, my taxing like a wild goose flies, Unavow'd of any man.—But who comes here?

The fool was suddenly dressed in a party-colored coat * Finary.
Scene II. As you like it.

Enter Orlando, with his sword drawn.

Orl. Forbear, and eat no more.

Jug. W hy, I have eat none yet.

Orl. Nor shalt not, till necessity be serv'd.

Jug. Of what kind should this cock come of?

Duke S. Art thou thus bolden'd man, by thy distress;

Or else a rude dispisser of good manners,

That in civility thou seem'st so empty!

Orl. You touch'd my vein at first; the thorny point

Of bare distress hath ta'en from me the show

Of smooth civility; yet am I inland bred,

And know some nurture: But forbear, I say;

He dares, that touches any of this land,

Till I and my affairs are answered.

Jug. An you will not be answered with reason,

I must die.

Duke S. What would you have? Your gentleness shall force

More than your force move us to gentleness.

Orl. I almost die for food, and let me have it.

Duke S. Sit down and feed, and welcome to our table.

Orl. Speak you so gently? Pardon me, I pray you.

I thought that all things had been savage here;

And therefore put I on the countenance

Of stern commandment: But whate'er you are,

That in this desert inaccessible,

Under the shade of melancholy boughs,

Lost and neglect the creeping hours of time;

If ever you have look'd on better days;

If ever been where bells had knoll'd to church;

If ever sat at any good man's feast;

If ever from your eyelids wiped a tear,

And know what fits to pity, and be pitted;

Let gentleness my strong enforcement be:

In which the hope, I blush, and hide my sword.

Duke S. True is it that we have seen better days,

And have with holy bell been knoll'd to church;

And eat at good man's feast; and wiped our eyes

Of drops that sacred pity hath engender'd:

And therefore sit you down in gentleness,

And take upon command what help we have,

That to your wanting may be minister'd.

Orl. Then, but forbear your food a little while,

Whiles, like a doe, I go to find my fawn,

And give it food. There is an old poor man,

Who after me hath many a weary step

Limp'd in pure love; till he be first sufficed,—

Oppress'd with two weak evils, age and hunger,

I will not touch a bit.

Duke S. Go find him out,

And we will nothing waste till your return.

Orl. I thank ye; and be bless'd for your good comfort!

Duke S. Thou seest, we are not all alone unhappy.

This wide and universal theatre

Presents more woeful pageants than the scene

When we play in.

Jug. All the world's a stage,

And all the men and women merely players:

They have their exits, and their entrances;

And one man in his time plays many parts,

His acts being seven ages. At first, the infant,

Mewling and puking in the nurse's arms;

And then, the whining school-boy, with his satchel,

And shining morning face, creeping like snail

Unwillingly to school: And then, the lover;

Shining like furnace, with a woful ballad

Made to his mistress' eyebrow; Then, a soldier;

Full of strange oaths, and bearded like the pard,

Jealous in honour, sudden and quick in quarrel,

Seeking the bubble reputation

Even in the cannon's mouth: And then, the justice;

In fair round belly, with good capon lin'd,

With eyes severe, and beard of formal cut,

Full of wise saws and modern instances,

And so he plays his part: The sixth age shifts

Into the lean and slipper'd pantaloon;

With spectacles on nose, and pouch on side:

His youthful hose well sav'd, a world too wide

For his shrunk shank; and his big manly voice,

Turning again toward childish treble, pipes

And whistles in his sound last seen.

All That ends this strange eventful history,

Is second childhood, and mere oblivion;

Sans teeth, sans eyes, sans taste, sans everything.

Re-enter Orlando, with Adam.

Duke S. Welcome: set down your venerable burden,

And let him feed.

Orl. Adam. So had you need.

Duke S. I scarce can speak to thank you for myself.

Duke S. Welcome, fall to: I will not trouble

As yet, to question you about your fortunes:—

Give us some music; and, good cousin, sing.

Amiens sings.

Song. I.

Blow, blow, thou winter wind,

Though art not so unkind

As men's ungratitude;

Thy tooth is not so keen,

Because thou art not seen,

If winter come, can spring be far behind?

Heigh, ho! sing, heigh, ho! into the green hollow,

Most friendship is forgiving, most loving merrily:

Then, heigh, ho, the hollow! This life is most jolly.

II.

Freeze, freeze, thou bitter sky,

That dost not bite so nigh

As men forget;

Though thou the waters warst,

Thy sting is not so sharp

As friend canker's do.

Heigh, ho! sing, heigh, ho; &c.

Duke S. If that you were the good Sir Rowland's son,—

As you have whisper'd faithfully, you were;

And as mine eye doth his effigies witness,

Most truly bount'd, and living in your face;

Be truly welcome hither: I am the duke,

That lov'd your father: The residue of your fortune,

Go to my cave and tell me,—Good old man,

Thou art right welcome as the master is;

Support him by the arm.—Give me your hand,

And let me all your fortunes understand.

[Exeunt.]
And thou, thrice-crowned queen of night, survey
With thy chaste eye, from thy pale sphere above
Thy huntress' mantle, that my foul life doth sway.
O Rosalind! these trees shall be my books,
And their barks my thoughts; to them I'll call;
That every eye, which in this forest looks,
Shall see thy virtue witnessed everywhere.
Run, run, Orlando; carve, on every tree.
The fair, the chaste, and inexpres's she. [Exit.

Enter Corin and Touchstone.

Cor. And how like you this shepherd's life master Touchstone?

Touch. Truly, shepherd, in respect of itself, it is a good life; but in respect that it is a shepherd's life, it is naught. In respect that it is solitary, I like it very well; but in respect that it is private, it is hateful. Being alive for life. Now in that respect it is in no field, it pleaseth me well; but in respect it is not in the court, it is tedious. As it is a sparing life, look you, it fits my humour well; but as there is no more plenty in it, it goes much against my stomach. Is any philosopher in thee, shepherd? Cor. No more, but that I know, the more one sickens, the worse at ease he is; and that he that wants money, means, and content, is without three good friends:—That the property of rain is to wet, and fire to burn: That good pasture makes fat sheep, and that a great care of the manger is lack of the sun: That he, that hath learned nothing by nature nor art, may complain of good breeding, or comes of a very dull kind.

Touch. Such a one is a natural philosopher. Was't ever in court, shepherd? Cor. No, truly.

Touch. Then thou art damn'd! Cor. Yes, I do.--

Touch. Truly, thou art damn'd; like an ill-roasted egg, all on one side.

Cor. For not being at court? Your reason.

Touch. Why, if thou never wast at court, thou never sawst good manners; and thou never sawst good manners, then thy manners must be wicked; and wickedness is sin, and sin is damnation: Thou art in a parlous state, shepherd.

Cor. Not a white, Touchstone: those, that are good manners, at the court, are as ridiculous in the country, as the belles of the country is most mockable at the court. You told me, you satiate not at the court, but you kiss your hands; that courtesy was be uncivilly, if courtiers were simpler.

Touch. Instance, briefly; come, instance.

Cor. Wily, we are still handling our eyes; and their tells, you know, are grise.

Touch. Why, do not your courtier's hands sweat? and is not the grease of a mutton all wholesome as the sweat of a man? shallow, shallow: A better instance, I say; come.

Our Besides, our hands are hard.

Touch. Your lips will feel them the sooner.--Shallow, again: A more sonnder instance, come.

Cor. And they are often bard'rd over with the surgery of our sheep; And would you have us kiss tar! Then the courtier's hands are perfumed with civet.

Touch. Most shallow man! Thou worms-inset, in yest is a good piece of flesh: Indeed!—Learn of the wise, and preprnd: Civet is of a baster birth than tar; the very unconlyly flat of a cat. Mend the instance, shepherd.

Cor. You have too coarly a wit for me: I'll rest.

Touch. Wilt thou rest damn'd? God help thee, shallow man! God make decision in thee! thou art true

Cor. Sir, I am a true laborer; I earn that I eat, that I wear; ove no man hate, envy no man happiness; glad of other men's good, content with my own. A contest of my pride is, to see my ewes graze, and my lambs such.

Touch. That is another simple sin in you: to bring the ewes and the rams together, and to offer to get what you may; the population of cattle: to be bawd to a bell-wether; and to betray a shebdam of a twelvemonth, to a crookted-pedled, old, cuckoldly ram, out of all reasonable match. If thou best not, as I did for this, the devil himself will have no shepherds; I cannot see else how thou shouldst scape.

Cor. Here comes young master Ganymade, my new mistresse's brother.

Enter Rosalind, reading a paper.

Ros. From the east to western land,
No jewel is like Rosalind;
Her worth, being crowned on the wind,
Through all the world beareth Rosalind;
All the pictures, fairest lines
Are but black to Rosalind,
Let no face be kept in mind,
The fairest lady is Rosalinda.

Touch. I'll rhyme you so, eight years together: dinners and suppers, and sleeping hours excepted: it is the right better-woman's rank to market.

Ros. Out, fool!

Touch. For a taste:—If a heart do lack a kind,
Let him seek out Rosalind,
The eat will after kind,
So, be sure, will Rosalind.
Winter-garments must be lan'd,
So must slender Rosalinda,
They had spins must sheep and bawd;
Then to car with Rosalind.
Sweetest nut hath sourest rind,
Such a nut is Rosalind,
He that uses one will find,
Must find love's prick, and Rosalinda.

This is the very false gallop of verses; Why do you infect yourself with them!

Ros. Peace, you droll fool! I found them on a tree.

Touch. Truly, the tree yields bad fruit.
Ros. I'll graft it with you, and then I shall graft it with a new root; and then it will be the better fruit in the country: for you'll be rotten ere you be half ripe, and that's the right virtue of the medlar.

Touch. You have said; but whether wisely or no, let the forest judge.

Enter Celia, reading a paper.

Ros. Peace!

Here comes my sister, reading; stand aside.
Cel. Why should this desert allay be? For if unprovided? No Tongues I'll hang on every tree,
That shall civilly saying show
Some, how brief the life of man!
Ruin his erring pilgrimage;
That the stretching of a span
Buckles in his sum of age.
Some, of violated cooks
Tell the souls of friend and friend;
But upon the falsehoods
Or of every sentence end,
Will I Rosalind write;
Teaching all that read, to know
The quintessence of every sprite
Heaven would in little show,
True beauty, and natural worth
That one body should be fill'd
With all graces wide enlarg'd;
Nature present distill'd
Heins's cheek, but not her heart;
Clozpatria's majesty;
Atlanta's better port;
Sad Lucerne's modesty.
Thus Rosalind of many parts
By heavenly sinnot was devis'd;
Of many faces, eyes, and hearts,
To have her face's clearest prize'd.
Rosalind would that she these sights should have
And to live and die her slave.

Ros. O most gentle Jupiter!—what tedium homely of love have you wearied your parishions withal, and never cry &. Have patience, good people! we have not yet heard the rest of the best. There is a digitation of the heavens from the earth; the devil himself will have no shepherds; I cannot see else how thou shouldst scape.

Delincet. | Complexion, beauty.
Grave, solemn. | Features.

[Exit Corin and Touchstone.

Cel. Didst thou hear these verses? Ros. O yes, I heard them all, and more too; for so to the bestd, the devill himself have them more feet than the verses would bear.
Scene II.  AS YOU LIKE IT.

Col. That's no matter; the jest might bear the verses.

Ros. Ay, but the feet were lame, and could not bear themselves without the verse, and therefore stood lamely in the verse.

Col. But dost thou hear, without wondering how thou should be hand'd and carved upon these trees?

Ros. I was seven of the nine days out of the wonder, before you came; for look here what I found on a pine-tree canopy: it was never so be-thymed since Pythagoras' time, that I was an Irish rat, which I can hardly remember.

Col. Try, then, what hath done this?

Ros. Is it a man?

Col. And a chain, that you once wore, about his neck: Change you color?

Ros. I prythee, why?

Col. O lord, lord! it is a hard matter for friends to meet; but mountains may be removed with earthquakes, and so encounter.

Ros. Nay, but why is it?

Col. Is it possible?

Ros. Nay, I pray thee now, with most petitionary vehemence, tell me who it is.

Col. O wonderful, wonderful, and most wonderful, and yet again wonderful, and after that out of all whooping!

Ros. God, my complexion! dost thou think I am possessed? I have a doublet and hose in my disposition! One inch of delay more is a South-sea-off discovery. I p'rythee, tell me, wilt thou send me a sign? I would thou could'st stammer, that thou mightest pour this concealed man out of thy mouth, as wine out of narrow-mouth'd bottle; either too much at once, or none at all. If thy p'rythee take the cork out of thy mouth, that I may drink thy tidings.

Col. So you may put a man in your belly.

Ros. Is he of God's making? What manner of man? Is his head worth a hat, or his chin worth a beard?

Col. Nay, he hath but a little beard.

Ros. Why, God will send more, if the man will be there. He may not be the greatest of his beard, if thou delay me not the knowledge of his chin.

Col. It is young Orlando; that tripp'd up the wrestler's heels, and your heart, both in an instant.

Ros. Nay, but the devil take mocking; speak sad brow, and true maid,

Col. I  faith, coz, 'tis he.

Ros. Orlando!

Col. I cannot.

Ros. Alas the day, what shall I do with my doublet and hose!—What did he, when thou saw'st him? and what shall I do? How will he go? Where went he? What makes he here? Did he ask for me? Where remains he? How parted he with thee? and when shall thou see him again? Answer me in one word.

Col. You must borrow me Garagantua's mouth first; 'tis a word too great for any mouth of this age's size: To say, ay, and no, to these particulars is more than to answer in a catechism.

Ros. But doth he know that I am in this forest, and in man's apparel? Looks he as freshly as he did the day he wrestled?

Col. It is as easy to count atoms; as to resolve the propositions of a lover—but take a taste of my finding him, and relish it with a good observation, I found him under a tree, like a sprigged worm; it may well be called Jove's bee, when it drops forth such fruit.

Ros. Give me audience, good madam.

Col. Proceed.

Col. There lay he, stretch'd along like a wounded knight.

Ros. Though it be pity to see such a sight, it well becomes the ground.

Col. Cry, holla! to thy tongue, I pr'ythee: it curvets very unseasonably. He was furnish'd like a hunter.

Ros. O ominous! he comes to kill my heart.

Col. I would sing my song without a burden: thou bring'st me out of tune.

Ros. Do you not know I am a woman? when I think, I must speak. Sweet, say on.

* Speak seriously and honestly. How was he dressed?

† The Giant of Ravelas.

‡ Atoms.

Enter Orlando and Jaques.

Col. You bring me out—soft! comes he not here?

Ros. 'Tis he; sit by, and note him.

Jaqu. I thank you for your company: but, good faith, I had rather have been myself alone.

Orl. And so had I; but yet, for fashion sake, I thank you too for your society.

Jaqu. God be with you; he's meet as little as possible.

Orl. I do desire we may be better strangers.

Jaqu. I pray you, marry no more trees with writing into-song'en words;—

Orl. I pray you, marry no more of my verses with reading them ill-favorely.

Jaqu. Rosalind is your love's name?

Orl. Ye know, sir.

Jaqu. I do not like her name.

Orl. There was no thought of pleasing you, when she was christened.

Jaqu. What stature is she of?

Orl. Just as high as my heart.

Jaqu. You are full of pretty answers: Have you not been acquainted with goldsmith's wives, and could them out of rings?

Orl. Not so; but I answer you right painted cloths from whence you have studied your questions.

Jaqu. You have a nimble wit; I think it was made of Atlantica's heels. Will you sit down with me? and we two will rule against our mistress the world, and all our superiors.

Orl. I will chide no breather in the world, but myself; against whom I know most faults.

Jaqu. The worst fault you have, is to be in love. Orlando! This a fault I will not change for your best virtue. I am weary of you.

Orl. By my troth, I was seeking for a fool, when I found you.

Orl. He is drown'd in the brook; look but in, and you shall see him.

Jaqu. There shall I see mine own figure.

Orl. Which I take to be either a fool, or a cipher.

Jaqu. I will tarry no longer with you: farewell, good servitor love.

Orl. I am glad of your departure; adieu, good musician melancholy.

[Exit Jaques. — Celia and Rosalind come forward.

Ros. I will speak to him like a saucy lacquey, and under that habit play the knave with him, to you, forester.

Orl. Very well; what would you?

Ros. I will buy, what 'tis o'clock?

Orl. You should ask me what time o' day; there's no clock in the forest.

Ros. Then there is no true lover in the forest; else such a watch, every minute, and grooving every hour, would detect the lazy foot of time, as well as a clock.

Orl. And why not the swift foot of time? had not that been as proper.

Ros. By no means: sir: Time travels in divers paces with divers persons: I tell you who time ambles withal, who time trots withal, who time gallops withal, and gallops who stands still withal.

Orl. I p'rythee, who doth he trot withal?

Ros. Marry, he trots hard with a young maid, between the contrary of her marriage, and the day he was cut off; it is solemnized: if the interim be as a night, time's pace is so hard that it seems the length of seven years.

Orl. Who ambles withal?

Ros. With a priest that lacks Latin, and a rich man that hath not the gout; for the one sleeps easily, because he cannot study; and the other lives merrily, and the one being the burden of lean and wasted learning; the other knowing no burden of heavy tedious penury; These time ambles withal.

Orl. Who doth he gallop withal?

Ros. With a thief to the gallows; for though he go as softly as a foot can fall, he thinks himself too soon there.

* An allusion to the moral sentences issuing from the mouths of figures on old tapestry hangings.
I see the world in a bottomless pit; and to live in a nook merely monastic: And thus I cured him; and thus way will I take upon me to wash your river as clean as a sound sheep's heart, that there shall not be one spot of dirt in it.

Orl. I would not be cured, youth.

Ros. Nay, you must call me Rosalind, and come every day to my cote, and woo me as I have done thus far.

Orl. Now by the faith of my love, I will; tell me where it is.

Ros. Go with me to it, and I'll show it you; and by the way, if you wish I say where in the forest you live: Will you go? Orl. With all my heart, good youth.

Ros. Nay, you must call me Rosalind:—Come sister, will you go with me to the players' encampment?—Excubt.

SCENE III.—The same.

Enter Touchstone and Audrey; Jaques at a distance, observing them.

Touch. Come apace, good Audrey: I willfetch up your goats, Audrey: And how, Audrey! am I the man yet? Doth my simple feature content you? And, your features! Lord warrant us! what features! Touch. Am I here with thee and thy goats, as the most copious poet, honest Ovid, was among the Goths. Jaq. O knowledge ill-inhabited! worse than love in a thistle's bough!

Touch. Therein the man's verses cannot be understood, nor a man's good wit seconderd with the forward child, understanding, it strikes a man more dead to a man's horse's back, than in a little room:—Truly, I would the gods had made thee poetical.

Aud. I do not know what poetical is: In utmost deed, and word! Is it a true thing?

Touch. Truly, truly. And true poettry is the most luminous; and lovers are given to poetry; and what they swear in poetry, may be said, as lovers, do in poetry, And if you wish then, that the gods had made me poetical?

Touch. I do, truly: for thou swearest to me, thou art honest; now, if thou wert a poet, I might have said, thou couldst do thee.

Aud. Would you not have me honest?

Touch. No, truly, unless thou wert hand-in-hand: For honesty coupled to beauty, is to have honey a sauce to sugar. Jaq. A material fool. [Aside. Aud. Well I am not fair, and therefore I pray the gods give me honesty! Touch. Truly, and to cast away honesty upon a foolslout, were to put good meat into an unclean dish.

Aud. I am not a slut, though I thank the gods I can find one. Touch. Well praised be the gods for thy fainess! Shatiness may come hereafter. But be it as it may be, I will marry thee: and to that end, I have been with Sir Oliver Martext, the yeare of the next village; who hath promised to meet me in this place of the forest, and to couple us. Touch. I would him see this meeting; [Aside. Aud. Well, the gods give us joy! Touch. Amen. A man may, if he were of a fearful heart, stagger in this attempt; for here we have no treacle in the wood, no assembly but beasts. But what though! Courage! As horns are odious, they are necessary. It is said,—Many a man knows end of his gods; right, many a man has heard any that he has known; and end of the gods, none knows. Well, that is the dowry of his wife: 'tis none of his own getting, Horns! Even so;—Poor men alone: —No, the noisiest deer hath them more than the mild. As the single man therefore blesses! No: As a wall'd town is more worthier than a village, so is the forefield of a married man more honorable than the barrenness of a bachelor; and by how much better than no skill, by so much is a horn more precious than to want.

Enter Sir Oliver Martext.

Here comes Sir Oliver:—Sir Oliver Martext, you are well met: Will you dispatch us here under this tree, or shall we go with you to your chapel?

[Aside. 1) Ill-bred. 2) A fool with matter in him. 3) Honesty. 4) Lean deer are called racal deer. The art of finding,
Sir Oli. Is there none here to give the woman? Touch. I will not take her on gift of any man. Sir Oli. Truly, she must be given, or the marriage is not lawful.

Jug. [Discovering himself.] Proceed, proceed; I'll give her.

Touch. Good even, good master What ye call it? How do you, sir? I are very well met; God send you for your last company: I am very glad to see you — even a toy in hand here, sir — Nay; pray be covered.

Jug. Will you be married, motley?

Touch. As the ox hath his bow, & the horse his bridle, and when both are then in peace, and as pigeons bill, so wedlock doth not nibble.

Jug. And will you be, being a man of your breeding, be married under a bush, like a beggar? Get you to church, and have a good priest that can tell you what marriage is: this fellow will but join you together as they you wassalot, then once of you will prove a strong panroller, and, like green tumber, warp, warp.

Touch. I am not in the mind but I were better to be married of him than of another: for he is not likely to be a well married, but it will be a good excuse for me hereafter to leave my wife.

Aside. Jug. Go thou with me, and let me counsel thee.

Touch. Come, sweet Audrey;

We must be married, or we must live in bawdry.

Farewell, good master Oliver!

O brave Oliver,

Leave me not behol thee;

But — Wind away,

I will not to wedding win thee.

[Exit Jug, Touch, and Audrey.

Sir Oli. 'Tis no matter; 'tis a fantastical knave of them all shall put me out of my estate.

[Exit.

SCENE IV.—A bower in a cottage.

Enter Rosaline and Celia.

Ros. Never talk to me, I will weep.

Cel. Do, I prithee; but yet have the grace to consider, that tears do not become a man.

Ros. But have I not cause to weep? As good cause as one would desire; therefore weep.

Cel. His very hair is of the dissolving color.

Ros. Something browner than the gladdest, he?

Cel. A pretty hair is of a good color.

Ros. An excellent color: your chesnut is ever the only color.

Cel. And his kissing is as full of sanctity as the touch of holy bread.

Ros. He hath bought a pair of east lips of Diana: a man of winter's kisses gets more religiously; the very ice of chastity in them.

Cel. But why did he swear he would come this morning, and comes not?

Ros. Nay certainly, there is no truth in him.

Cel. Do you think so?

Ros. Yes: I think he is not a pick-purse, nor a horse-stealer; but for his vertity in love, I do think him as covecave as a cover'd goldie, or a worm-eaten nut.

Ros. Not true in love?

Cel. Yes, when he is in; but, I think, he is not in.

Ros. You have heard him swear downright he was.

Cel. Was is not: besides the oath of a lover is is stronger than the word of a tapster: they are both the confirmers of false reckoning: He attends here in the forest on the duke your father.

Ros. I met the duke yesterday, and had much discourse with him; and of a thing that gave me great concern of him, I was told him, of as good as he; so he laugh'd, and let me go. But what talk we of fathers, when there is such a man as Orlando!

Cel. A woman of his heart, I think, would not have him: he writes brave verses, speaks brave words, swears brave oaths, and breaks them bravely, quite traverse, athwart the heart of his lover; as a puny tilter that spurs his horse before another: such a one more side than his stuff like a noble goose; but all's brave, that youth mounts, and folly guides: —Who comes here!

 Enter Corin.

Cor. Mistress, and master, you have oft enquired

After the shepherd that comphand of love;

And you saw sitting on the turf

Praising the proud disdainful shepherdess

That was his mistress.

Cel. Well, and what of him?

Cor. If you will see a pageant truly play'd

Between the pale complexion of true love

And the red glow of scorn and proud disdain,

Go hence a little, and I shall conduct you

If you will mark it.

Ros. O, come, let us remove;

The sight of lovers feedeth those in love;

And if we use this sight, I shall say

I'll prove a busy actor in their play.

[Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Another Part of the Forest.

Enter Silvius and There.

Sil. Sweet shebe, do not scorn me; do not, Phebe,

Say, that you love me not; but say not so

In bitterness: The common executioner,

Whose heart the accustomed night of death makes hard,

Fails not the axe upon the humble neck,

But first it must be wet with blood and tears.

[Enter Rosaline, Celia, and Corin, at a distance.

Phe. I would not be thy executioner;

I fly thee, for I would not injure thee.

Thou tell'st me, there is murder in mine eye:

This pretty colour, and this pretty print;

That eyes, — that are the fraud and softest things,

Who shut their coward gapes on atones,—

Should be called tyrants, butchers, murderers!

Now I do own on all the being in mine eye;

And, if mine eyes can wound, now I them kill thee.

Now counterfeits to swoon: who now how fall down;

Or, if thou canst not, O, for shame, for shame,

Lie not, to say mine eyes are murdered in thee.

Now show the wound mine eye hath made in thee:

Scratch thee but with a pin, and there remains

Some scar of it, lean but upon a rash,

The chaste rose and capable impression.

Thy pain some moment keeps: but now mine eyes

Which I have darted at thee, hurt thee not;

Nor, I am sure, there is no force in eyes

That can do hurt.

Sil. O dear Phebe,

It ever, (as that ever may be near)

You meet in some fresh check the power of fancy,

Then shall you know the wounds invisible

That love's keen arrows make.

Phe. But, till that time,

Come not thou near me; and, when that time comes,

Afflict me with thy mock's, pity me not;

As, till that time I shall not pity thee.

Ros. And why, I pray you! [addressing.] Who is not bit by thy mother?

That you insult, exult, and all at once,

Over the wretched! What though you have more

Beauty: (As, by my faith, I see no more in you

Than without candle my go dark to bed.)

Must be therefore proud and pitious?

Why, what means this? Why do you look on me?

As so many one in you, than in the ordinary

Of nature's safe-work: — of my little life!

I think she means to tame my eyes too: —

No, faith, proud mistresses, hope not aday,

'Tis not your wily brows, your black hair silk,

Your double eye-balls, nor your cheek of cream,

That can cutane my spirits to your worship, —

You foolish shepherd, wherefore do you follow her,

Like foxy youth, pulling with wind and rain?

You are a thousand times a proper man,

Than she a woman: 'Tis such tools as you.

What makes me love her?  By the world full of illbred children:

'Tis not her glass, but that you flatter her:

And out of you she sees herself more proper,

Than any of her lineaments can show her.

But, mistress, these are down those:

Do, dear Corin, give them:

A thousand times a proper man,

And thank heaven, bestowing, for a good man's love:

For I must tell you friendly in your ear,

Sell when you can; you are not for all markets:

Love, marry, fight the match more as you please:

Foul is most foul, being soul to be a scoffer.

So take her to thee, shepherd; fare you well.

ACT IV.

SCENE 1.—The Same.

Enter Rosalind, Celia, and Jaques.

Jaq. I pray thee, pretty youth, let me be better acquainted with thee.

Ros. They say you are a melancholy fellow.

Jaq. I am so; I do love it better than laughing.

Ros. Those that are in extremity of either, are annoyable fellows; and betray themselves to every modern censure, with more than due words.

Jaq. Why, this is good to be said and say nothing.

Ros. Why then, 'tis good to be a past.

Jaq. I have neither the scholar's melancholy, which is a passion; nor the musician's, which is fantastical; nor the courtier's, which is proud; nor the soldier's, which is ambitious; nor the lawyer's, which is politic; nor the lady's, which is scarce; nor the lover's, which is all these: but it is a melancholy of mine own, compounded of many simples, extracted from many objects; and, indeed, the smoky contemplation of my travels, in which my oftener ramification wraps me, is a most humorous sadness.

Ros. A traveler! By my faith, you have great reason to be sad: I fear you have sold your own lands, to see other men's; then, to have seen much, and to have nothing, is to have rich eyes and poor hands.

Jaq. Yes, I have gained my experience.

Enter Orlando.

Ros. And your experience makes you sad: I had rather have a bed to make me merry, than experience to make me sad and to travel for it too.

Orl. God day, and happiness, dear Rosalind!

Jaq. Nay then, God be wi' you, an you talk in blank verse.

Ros. Farewell, monsieur traveller: Look, you lisp, and wear strange suits; deserts all the benefits of your own country; be out of fashion with your maids.

That I shall think it most plenteouscrop
To glean the broken ears after the man
That the main harvest reaps; lose now and then
A scatter'd smile, and that I'll live upon.

Ros. Know'st thou the youth that spoke to me erewhile?

Orl. Not so well, but I have met him oft;
And he hath bought the cottage, and the hounds,
That the old carle once was master of.

Ros. Think not I love him, though I ask for him;
'Tis but a sight that doth bete well:—yet the same work,
But what care I for words! yet words do well,
When he that speaks them pleases those that hear.
It is a pretty young valiant; but, such as he is,
And yet his pride becomes him:
He'll make a proper man: the best thing in him
Is his complexion, and fader than his tongue.
And when he grapples, his eye did heat it up.
He is not tall; yet for his years he's tall:
His leg is but so, and yet 'tis well:
There was a pretty redness in his lip:
A little riper and more lusty red
Than that mixed in his cheeks; 'twas just the difference.

Bewitk the constancy red, and mingled damask.
There be some women, Silvius, had they mark'd him in parcels as I did, would have gone near
To fall in love with him: but for my part,
I love him not, nor hate him not; and yet I have more cause to hate him than to love him:
For what had he to do to chide at me:
He said, mine eyes were black, and my hair black;
And, no, I am remember'd, scold at me:
I marvel, why I answer'd not again:
But that's all one: omittance is no quittance,
I'll write him a very languating letter,
And then shall he read it:—Wilt thou, Silvius?

Slt. Peace, with all my heart.

Orl. I'll write it straight;
The matter's in my head, and in my heart:
I had as lief be won of a snake.

Go with me, Silvius. [Exeunt.]
Scene II.

AS YOU LIKE IT.

185

they are out, they will split; and for lovers, lacking (God warn us!), matter, the chilliest sheet is to kiss.

Orl. How, if the kiss be denied?

Ros. Then use that wiser, and try your new matter.

Orl. Who could be out, being before his beloved mistress?

Ros. Marry, that should you, if I were your mistress, or I should think my honesty rannier than your wit.

Orl. What, of mine suit?

Ros. Not my women's apparel, and yet out of your suit. Am not I your Rosalind?

Orl. I take some joy to say you are, because I would be talking of her.

Ros. Well, in her person, I say—I will not have you.

Orl. Then, in mine own person, I die. Ros. No, faith, die by attorney. The dooer world is almost six thousand years old, and in all this time there was not any man died in his own person, not, that I know, in a love-case. Troilus had his brains dashed out with a Grecian club; yet did he what he could to die before; and he is one of the patterns of love. Leander, he would have lived many a fair year, though Herò had turned nun, if it had not been for a hot midsummer night; for, good youth, he went but forth to wash in the Hellespont, and being taken with the cramp, was drowned; and the foolish chroniclers of that age took him to be there. Here you the most pathetical break-promise, and the most hollow love, and the most unworthy of her you call Rosalind, that may be chosen out of the gross band of the unfaithful: therefore, beware my words, and mend your purpose.

Orl. With no less religion, than if thou wert indeed my Rosalind; so adieu.

Ros. Well, time is the old justice that examines all such offenders, and let time try. Adieu.

Exit Orlando.

Cel. You have simply misused our sex in your love-prate: we must have your double and hose plucked over your head, and show you how the bird hath done to her own nest.

Ros. O coz, coz, coz, my pretty little coze, that thou didst know how many fathom deep I am in love! But this is not to be said!—I'll tell thee, Alena, I cannot be out of the sight of Orlando; I'll go find a shadow, and sigh till he come.

Cel. And I'll sleep.

[Exeunt.]
Enter Silvius.

Silv. My errand is to you, fair youth:—
My gentle Phebe bid me give you this:
A letter.

I know not the contents; but, as I guess,
By the stern brow, and waspish action
Which she did use as she was writing of it,
It bears an angry tenor: pardon me,
I am but as a guiltless messenger.

Ros. Patience herself would struggle at this letter,
And pangs of sweareng never; bear this then all:
She says, I am not true, I that lack manners;
She calls me proud; and, that she could not love me
Were man as rare as phoenix; O my will's my will!
Her kind is not the bare that I do found:
Why writes she so to me!—Well, shepherd, well,
This is a letter of your own device.

Silv. No, I protest, I know not the contents;
Phebe did write it.

Ros. Come, come, come, you are a fool,
And turn'd into the extremity of love;
I saw her hand: she has a leathern hand.
A freestone-colored hand; I verily did think
That her old gloves were on, but twas her hands;
She has a husband's hand: but that's no matter:
I say, she never did invent this letter:
This is a man's invention, and his hand.

Ros. Sure, it is here.

Silv. Why, 's a barometer and a cruel style,
A style of importunity; why does she defies
Like Turk to Christian: woman's gentle brain
Could not forth such giant-rude invention,
Such Ethel's words, blacker in the select
Than in their countenance:—Will you hear the letter?

Silv. So please you, for I never heard it yet;
Yet heard too much of Phebe's cruelty.

Ros. She Phebe's me: Mark how the tyrant writes,

[Reads.]

Art thou got? to shepherd home,
That a wrong'd heart hath burn'd?

Can a woman rant thus?

Silv. Call you this railing?

Ros. Why thy goatherd rail'd apart,
Wear'st thou with a woman's heart?
Did you ever hear such railing?

Whiles the eye of man did woo me,
That could do no vengeance to me.—

Meaning me a beast.—

If the scorn of your bright eye
Have power to raise such love in mine,
Attach me, and yet repel me strong:
Would they work in want aspect?
Whistles you chit, I did love;
How then might your fingers move?
He that brings this love to thee,
Little knows this love in me:
And by his seat up thy mind
Whether that thy youth and kind
Will the faithful offer false
Of me, and all that I can make;
Or else by him my love deny,
And then I'll study how to live.

Silv. Call you this chiding?

Cel. Aha, poor shepherd!

Ros. Do you pity him? no, he deserves no pity —Wilt thou love such a woman?—What, that to make this a name for instrument, and play false strains upon thee? not to be endur'd!—Well, go your way to her, (for I see, love hath made thee a tame snake), and say this to her:—That if she love me, I charge her to kindle; if she will not, I will never have her, unless thou entreat for her.—If you be such a true lover, hence and not a word; for here comes a true company. [Exit Silvius.]

Enter Oliver.

Oli. Good-morrow, fair ones: Pray you, if you know
Where, in the purview of this forest, stands
A sheep-cote, feigned about with olive-trees?

Cel. West of this place; down in the neighbor bottom
The rank of osiers, by the murmuring stream,
Left on your right hand, brings you to the place:
But at this hour the house doth keep itself,
There's none within.

Nature.

Oli. If that an eye may profit by a tongue,
Then I should know you by description:
Such garments, and such years:—The boy is fair,
Of female favour, and besom'd his form:
Like the pale sister: Like the remonstrant
And browner than her brother. Are not you
The owner of the house I did enquire for?
Cel. It is no boast, being ask'd, to say, we are.
Oli. I do both commend him to you both;
And to that youth, he calls Rosalind,
He sends this bloody napkin; Are you he?
Ros. I am: what must we understand by this?
Oli. You are the owner of my shame; if you will know of me
What man I am, and how, and why, and where
This handkerchief was stand'd.

Cel. I pray you tell it.

Oli. When last the young Orlando parted from him,
He left a promise to return again
Within an hour and, pacing through the forest,
Chewing the food of sweet and bitter fancy,
Lo, what betell! he threw his eye aside.
And, mark, what object did present itself:
Under a bush, noblest ever against revenge,
And high top laid with dry antiquity,
A wretched rugged man, o'eggrown with hair,
Lay sleeping on his back; about his neck
A green and sights'd silver had wreath'd itself.
Who with her head, rumble in threats; approach'd
The opening of his mouth; but suddenly
Seeing Orlando, made a spurn't kind itself:
And with incensed glides did slip away
Into a bush: under which bush's shade
A homess, with under all drawn dry,
Lay sleeping, heat on the ground, with a cat-like watch,
When that the sleeping man should stir; for 'tis
The royal disposition of that beast,
To pray on nothing that doth seem as dead!
This man did Orlando approach the man,
And found it was his brother, his elder brother.

Cel. O, I have heard him speak of that same brother,
And he did rend his the most unnatural
That liv'd amongst me.

Oli. And well might he so do,
For well I know he was unnatural.

Ros. But, to Orlando:—But he leave him there,
Food to the sock'd and hungry homess!
Oli. Twice did he turn his back, and purpos'd so:
But no success; whose boughs were moss'd with age,
And nature, stronger than his just occasion,
Made him give battle to the homess,
Who quickly fell before him; in which hunting,
From herser, shepherd, I awak'd.

Cel. Are you his brother?

Ros. Was it you he rescu'd?

Cel. Was't you that did so oft centre to kill him?

Oli. 'Twa's I; but'tis not I; I do not shame
To tell you what I was, since my conversion
So sov'dly tastes; being the thing I am.

Ros. But for the bloody napkin!—

Cel. By, and by.

When from the first to last, betwixt us two,
Tears our recountments had most kindly hath'd
As, how I came into that desert place;
In brief, he led me to the gentle duke,
Who gave me fresh array and entertainment,
Commingling me into my brother's love;
Who led me instantly unto his cave,
There stripp'd himself, and here upon his arm
The homess had summon'd some beasts away,
Which all this while had lidded; and now he fainting,
And cry'd in, turning, upon Rosalind.

Briet, I recover'd him; bound up his wound,
Which shall soon be cure; but in this space, being long at hear,
He sent me hither, stranger as I am,
To tell this story, that you might excuse
His broken promise, and to give this napkin,
Of the green blood, unto the shepherd youth
That he in sport doth call his Rosalind.

Cel. Why, how now, Ganymede! sweet Ganymede!
How now fair Ganymede?

Oli. Shall we swoon when they do look on blood.

Cel. There is more in it:— Cousin—Ganymede!

Oli. Look, he recovers.

Ros. I would, I were at home

Cel. We'll lead you thither:—
I pray you, will you take him by the arm?

* Describe.
Seville.
Act V.

SCENE I.—The same.

Enter TOUCHSTONE and AUDREY.

Touch. We shall find a time, Audrey; patience, gentle Audrey.

Aud. 'Faith, the priest was good enough, for all the old gentleman’s saying.

Touch. But, sir, there goes a most wicked Sir Oliver, Audrey, in a most vile Mar-text. But, Audrey, there is a youth here in the forest lays claim to you.

Aud. Ay, I know who ’tis; he hath no interest in me in the world; here comes the man you meant.

Enter WILLIAM.

Touch. It is meat and drink to me to see a clown; I cannot see we that have good wits, have much to answer for; we shall be flattering; we cannot hold.

Will. Good even, Audrey.

Aud. God ye good even, William.

Touch. God, Goody even, sir. Good, goody, good fellow, cover thy head, cover thy head; nay, pr’ythee, be covered. How old are you, friend?

Will. Five and twenty, sir.

Touch. A ripe age: Is thy name William?

Will. William, sir.

Touch. A fair name; Hast born in the forest here?

Will. Ay, sir, I thank God.

Touch. Thank God;—a good answer: Art rich?

Will. ‘Faith, sir, so so.

Touch. So, so, is good, very good, very excellent good; and yet it is not; it is but so, so. Art thou wise?

Will. Ay, sir, I have a pretty wit.

Touch. Why, thou sayst at well. I do now remember a saying: The fool doth think he is wise, but the wise man knows himself to be a fool. The heathen philosophers, when he had a desire to eat a grape, would open his lips when he put it into his mouth; meaning thereby, that grapes were made to eat, and lips to open. You do love this maid?

Will. I do, sir.

Touch. Give me your hand: Art thou learned?

Will. No, sir.

Touch. Then learn this of me: To have, is to have: For it is a figure in rhetoric, that drink, being poured out of a cup into a glass, by filling the one, doth empty the other: For all your writers do consent, that this is so; now you are not wise, for I am he.

Will. Sir, I am not wise.

Touch. He, sir, that must marry this woman: Therefore, you clown, abandon,—which is, in the vulgar, leave,—the society,—which in the hoobs is, company,—of this female,—which in the common is, woman,—which together is, abandon the society of this female; or, clown, thou perishest; or, to thy better understanding, distress: to wit, I kill thee, make thee away, translate thy life into death, thy liberty into bondage: I will deal in poison with thee, or in bastinado, or in steel; I will bendy with thee in faction; I will o’errun thee with policy; I will kill thee and gouge thee out, sir; therefore tremble and depart.

Aud. Do, good William.

Will. God rest you, merry sir. [Exeunt.]

Enter CORIN.

Cor. Our master and mistress seek you; come, away, away.

Touch. Trip, Audrey, trip, Audrey; I attend. [Exeunt.]

Act V.

SCENE II.—The same.

Enter ORLANDO and OLIVER.

Orl. Is’t possible, that on so little acquaintance, you should like her! that, but, seem, you should love her! I am wrong, woo; and, woos; sheshold grant! and will you persuade to enjoy her?

Oli. Neither call the goodness of it in question, the poverty of her, the small acquaintance, the sudden works, nor her sudden counterfeite; but say with me, I love Alienia; say with her, that she loves me; consent with both, that we may enjoy each other: it shall be to your good: for my father’s name, and, for the sake that was old Sir Rowland’s, I will estate upon you, and here live and die a shepherd.

Enter ROSALIND.

Orl. You have my consent. Let your wedding be to-morrow; thither will I invite the duke, and all his court to see your handkerchief.

Ros. You will not find my lady, or your Aliena; for, look you, here comes my Rosalind.

Orl. God save you, brother.

Aud. And you, fair sister.

Ros. O, my dear Orlando, how it grieves me to see thee wear thy heart in a scarf.

Orl. It is my arm.

Ros. I thought, thy heart had been wounded with the claws of a lion.

Orl. Wounded it is, but with the eyes of a lady.

Ros. Did your daughter tell you how I counterfeited to swoon, when she showed me your handkerchief?

Orl. Ay, and greater wonder than that.

Ros. O, I know where you are:—Nay, ’tis true: there was never any thing so sudden, but the fight of two rams, and Caesar’s thievish beast of a cat came, saw, and overcame: For your brother and my sister no sooner met, but they looked; no sooner looked, but they loved; no sooner loved, but they sighed; no sooner sighed, but they asked one another the reason; no sooner knew the reason, but they sought the remedy; and in these degrees have they made a part of our marriage, which they will climb incontinent, or else be incontinent before marriage: they are in the very wrath of love, and they will together; clubs cannot part them.

Orl. They shall be married to-morrow, and I will bid the duke to the nuptial. But, O, now, how bitter a thing it is to look into happiness through another man’s eyes! by so much the more shall I be wroth, sir, that the new marrier be at the height of heart-beaviness, by how much I shall think my brother happy, in having what he wishes for.

Ros. Why then, to-morrow I cannot serve your turn for Rosalind.

Orl. I can live no longer by thinking.

Ros. I will weary you no longer then with idle talking. Know of me then, (for now I speak to some purpose,) that I know you are; neither do I labor for a greater esteem than may in sores: Go, you assure, draw a belief from me, to do yourself good, and not to grace me. Believe then if you please, that I can do strange things: I have, since I was three years old, conversed with a magician most proficient in this art, and yet not damnable. If you do love Rosalind so near the heart as your gesture crieth it out, when your brother marries Alienia, shall you marry her? I know into what straits of fortune she is driven; and it is not impossible to me, if it appear not inconvenient to you, to set her before your eyes to-morrow, human as she is, and without any discretion.

Orl. Speaketh thou in sober meanings!—
Ros. By my life, I do: which I tender dearly, though I say I am a magician: Therefore, put me in thy best array, bid thy friends farewell, for if you will be married to-morrow, you shall; and to Rosalind, if you will.

Enter Silvius and Phoebe.

Look, here comes a lover of mine, and a lover of hers.

Pho. Youth, you have done me much ungentleness, To show the letter that I wrote to you. —
Ros. I care not, if I have: it is my study To seem despicable and insignificant to you;
You are followed by a faithful shepherd; Look upon him, love him, he worships you.
Pho. Good shepherd, tell this youth what 'tis to love.

Silvius. It is to be made of sighs and tears; —
And so am I for Phoebe.

Pho. And so am I for Ganymede.

Orl. And so I for Rosalind.

Ros. And so am I for no woman.
Silvius. It is to be made of faith and service; —
And so am I for Phoebe.

Pho. And so am I for Ganymede.

Orl. And so am I for Rosalind.

Ros. And so am I for no woman.

Pho. If this be so, why blame you me to love you? [To Rosalind.]

Silvius. If this be so, why blame you me to love you?

Pho. If this be so, why blame you me to love you? [To Phoebe.]

Pho. Who do you speak to, why blame you me to love you?

Silvius. To Phoebe.

Orl. To her, that is not here, nor doth not hear. Rosalind, you no more of this; 'tis like the howling of Irish wolves against the moon— I will help you, [To Silvius.] if I can.—I would love you, [To Phoebe.]: if I could.—To-morrow meet me all together.—I will marry you, [To Phoebe.]: if ever I marry woman, and I shall be married to-morrow: —I will satisfy you, [To Orlando.] if ever I marry woman, and you shall be married to-morrow: —I will content you, [To Silvius.] if what pleasures you content you, and you shall be married to-morrow.—As you [To Orlando.], I love Rosalind, more than you [To Silvius.], I love Phoebe; and as I love no woman, I'll meet.—So fare you well; I have left you commands. Silvius. I'll not fail, if I live.

Scene III.—The same.

Enter Touchstone and Audrey.

Touch. To-morrow is the joyful day; Audrey; To-morrow will we be married.

Aud. I do desire it with all my heart: and hope, it is a wished-for desire, to desire to be a woman of the world. Here comes two of the banished duke's pages.

Enter Two Pages.

Page 1. Well met, honest gentlewoman.

Touch. By my troth, well met: Come, sit, sit, and a song.

Page 2. We are for you: sit 'tis the middle.

Page 1. Shall we clap into' roundly, without hawking, or spitting, or saying we are ursines; which are the only prologues to a bad voice! [Song.]

Page 1. I hate a fad; and in both a time, like two gibes upon a horse.

Song 1. It was a lover and his lass,
With a key, and a ho, and a key nono,
A married woman.

In the spring time, the only pretty runk time,
That o'er the green corn-field doth pass,
When birds do sing, key ding a ding, ding;
Sweet lovers love the spring.

II.

Between the acres of the eye,
With a key, and a ho, and a key nono,
These pretty country folks would live,
In spring time, &c.

III.

This carol they began that hour,
When he sent forth a ho, and a key nono,
Hark that a lute was but a fower
In spring time, &c.

IV.

And therefore take the present time,
With a key, and a ho, and a key nono;
For love is crowned with the prime
In spring time, &c.

Touch. Truly, young gentlemen, though there was no greater matter in the ditty, yet the note was very antinomian for what we were deceived, sir; we kept time, we lost not our time.
Touch. Ay, my troth, yes; I count it but time lost to hear such a Ro-fulish song, and to sing such a song; and God mend your voices.—Come, Audrey.

Scene IV.—Another part of the forest.

Enter Duke Senior, Amiens, Jaques, Orlando, Oliver, and Celia.

Duke S. Dowst thou believe, Orlando, that the boy Can do all this that he hath promised? —
Orl. I sometimes do believe, and sometimes do not;
As those that fear they hope, and know they fear.

Enter Rosalind, Silvius, and Phoebe.

Rosalind. Patience once more, whilst our compact is urg'd—
You say, if I bring in your Rosalind,
You will bestow her on Orlando here! —
Duke S. That would I, had I kingdoms to give with her.

Ros. And, you say, you will have her when I bring her! —
To Orlando.

Orlando. If you say, you'll have me, I'll be willing to marry me.

Phoebe. That will I, should I die the hour after.
Orlando. If you do refuse to marry me, I'll yield you yourself to this most faithful shepherd!
Phoebe. So is the bargain.

Rosalind. You say, that you'll have Phoebe, if she will? —
To Silvius.

Sil. Though to have her and death were both one thing.

Ros. I have promised to make all this matter even.

Keep you your word, O duke, to give your daughter:
Keep your word, Phoebe, that you'll marry me; Or else, refusing me, to wed this shepherd: Keep your word, silvius, that you'll marry her, If she refuse me;—and hence I go, To make these doubts all even.

[Exeunt Rosalind and Celia.

Duke S. I do remember in this shepherd-boy Some lively touches of my daughter's lover.

Orlando, the first time that I ever saw him, Methought he was a brother to your daughter; But my good lord, this boy is forest-born; And hath been taught and in the rudiments Of many desperate studies by his uncle, Whom he reports to be a great magician Obscured in the circle of this forest.

Enter Touchstone and Audrey.

Touch. There is, sure, another flood toward, and these couples are coming to the ark! Here comes a pair of very strange beasts, which in all tongues are called fools.

Touch. Salutation and greeting to you all! —
Jaques. Good my lord, bid him welcome: This is the motley-minded gentleman, that I have so often met in the forest: he hath been a courtier, he swears.
Scene IV.
AS YOU LIKE IT.

Duke. It any man doubt that, let him put me to my purgation. I have trod a measure; I have dethroned a king, have been poll'd with my friend, smooth with mine enemy; I have undone three tailors; I have had four quarrels, and like to have fought one.

Jac. And how was that ta'en up?

Duke, Faith, we met and found the quarrel was upon the seventh cause.

Jac. How seventh cause?— Good my lord, like this fellow,

Duke S. I like him very well.

Duke. God 'lied you, sir; I desire you of the like. I press in here, sir, amongst the rest of the country espousatives, to swear, and to forswear; according as marriage bonds, and blood breaks:— A poor virgin, sir, an ill-favoured thing, sir, but mine own; a poor honour of mine, sir, to take that that none else will: Rich honesty dwells like a miser, sir, in a poor house; as your pearl, in your soul oyster.

Duke S. By my faith, he is very swift and sententious.

Duke. According to the fool's bolt, sir, and such dulcet diseases.

Jac. But, for the seventh cause: how did you find the quarrel on the seventh cause?

Duke. Upon a he seven times removed.—Bare your body more seeming, Audrey.—as thus, sir, I did dislike the cut of a certain courtier's beard; he sent me word, if I said his beard did not cut well, he was in the mind it was: This is called the Retort courteous. If I sent him word again, it was not well cut; he would send me word, he could it to please himself: This is called the Quip modest. If again, it was not well cut, he disabled my judgment: This is called the Reply courteous. If again, it was not well cut, he would answer, I spoke not true: This is called the Reproof vanishing. If again, it was not well cut, he would say, I lie; This is called the Countercheck quarrelsome: and so to the Lie courteous, and the Lie direct.

Jac. And how oft did you say, his beard was not well cut?

Duke. I durst go no further than the Lie courteous; nor he durst not have me the Lie direct; and so we measured swords and parted.

Jac. Can you nominate in order now the degrees of the Lie?

Duke S. We have in print, in the book: as you have books for good manners: I will name you the degrees. The first, the Retort courteous; the second, the Quip modest; the third, the Reply courteous; the fourth, the Reproof vanishing; the fifth, the countercheck quarrelsome; the sixth, the Lie with circumstance; the seventh the Lie direct. All these you may avoid but the Lie direct; and you may know that too many and that seven justices could not take up a quarrel: but when the parties were met themselves, one of them thought but of an Is: If you said so, then I said so; and they shook hands, and were brothers. Your Is is the only peace maker; much virtue in Is.

Jac. Is not this a rare fellow, my lord? he's as good at any thing, and yet a fool.

Duke S. He uses his folly like a strolling-horse, and under the presentation of that he shoots his wit.

Enter Hymen, leading Rosalind in woman's clothes; and Celia.

Hym. Music.

Hymn. Then is there midst in heaven,
When earthly things made even Alone together.

Good duke, receive thy daughter,

Hymen from heaven brought her,

Yet, brought her hither.

That thou mightst join her hand with his

Whose heart within her bosom is.

Ros. To you I give myself, for I am yours.

[To Duke S.]

Duke S. To you I give myself, for I am yours.

[To Orlando,]

Duke S. If there be truth in sight, you are my daughter.

Orl. If there be truth in sight, you are my Rosalind.

Phe. If sight and shape be true,
Why then,—my love, adieu!

* A stately solemn dance.

Ros. I'll have no father, if you be not he.

[To Duke S.]

I'll have no husband, if you be not he.

[To Orlando,]

Nor ne'er wed woman, if you be not she.

[To Phebe.]

Hym. Peace, ho! A bar confusion;
'Tis must make conclusion
Of these most strange events:
Here's eight that must take hands,
To join in Hymen's bands.
If truth holds true contents,
You and you no cross shall part;

[To Orlando and Rosalind.]

You and you are heart in heart.

[To Oliver and Celia.]

You (To Phebe.) to his love must accord,
Or have a woman to your lord:

You and you are sure together.

[To Touchstone and Audrey.]

As the winter to foul weather,
Whiles a wedlock hymn we sung,
Feed yourselves with questioning.
That reason wonder may diminish,
How thus we met, and these things finish.

SONG.

Weding is great Juno's crown:
O blessed bond of heart and bed!
'Tis Hymen's pious every hour;
High honor she then bestows
Honour, high honor and renown,
To Hymen, god of every brow!

Duke S. O my dear niece, welcome thou art come;
Even daughter, welcome in no less degree.

Phe. I will not eat my word, now thou art mine;
Thy faith my fancy to thee doth confirm.

[To Silvius.]

Enter Jaques de Bois.

Jac. de B. Let me have audience for a word, or two:
I am the second son of old Sir Rowland,
That bring these thun'nes to this fair assembly:
Duke Frederick, hearing that every day
Men of great worth resorted to this forest,
Address da mighty power! which were on foot,
In his own conduct, purposely to take
His brother here, and put him to the sword:
And the skirts of that wild wood he came;
Where, meeting with an old religious man,
After some questions with him, was converted
Both from his enterprise, and from the world:
His crown bequeathing to his banish'd brother,
And all their lands restored to them again
That were with him exil'd: This to be true,
I do engage my life.

Duke S. Welcome, young man;
Thou offer'st fairly to thy brothers' wedding:
To one, his lands withheld: and to the other,
A land itself at large, a potent dukedom.
First, in this forest, let us do those ends
That here were well begun, and well begot:
And after, every of this happy number.
That have endured shrewd days and nights with us,
Shall share the good of our returned fortune,
According to the measure of their states.
Meantime, forget this new-fall'n dignity,
And fall into our rustic poverty:
Play, music:—and you drudges and bridgerooms all,
With measure heap'd in joy, to the measures fall.

Jac. Sir, by your patience; if I heard you rightly,
The duke hath put on a religious life,
And thrown into neglect the pompous court?

Jac. de B. He hath.

Jac. To him will I: out of these convites

There is much matter to be heard and learn'd:—

You to your former honor I bequeath;

[To Duke S.]

Your patience, and your virtue, well deserves it:—

You (To Touchstone.) to a love, that your true faith doth merit:—

You (To Oliver.) to your land, and love, and great allies:—

You (To Silvius.) to a long and well deserved bed:—

And you (To Touchstone.) to wrangling, for thy loving voyage.

* Unless truth fall of versatily.
Is but for two months victual'd:—So to your pleasures;
I am for other than for dancing measures.

Duke S. Stay, Jaques, stay.

Jaq. To see no pastime, I:—what you would have

I'll stay to know at your abandon'd cave.

[Duke S. Proceed, proceed: we will begin these rites,
And we do trust they'll end in true delights.]

[A dance.

EPILOGUE.

Ros. It is not the fashion to see the lady the epilogue: but it is no more unhandsome, than to see the lord the prologue. If it be true, that good wine needs no bush, 'tis true, that a good play needs no epilogue: Yet to good wine they do use good bushes; and good plays prove the better by the help of good epilogues. What a case am I in then that am neither a good epilogue, nor cannot insinuate with you in the behalf of a good play! I am not furnished like a beggar, therefore to beg will not become me: my way is, to conjure you; and I'll begin with the women. I charge you, O women, for the love you bear to men, to like as much of this play as pleases them: and so I charge you, O men, for the love you bear to women, (as I perceive by your simpering, none of you hate them,) that between you and the woman, the play may please. If I were a women, I would kiss as many of you as had beards that pleased me, complexions that liked me: * and breaths that I desired not; and, I am sure, as many as have good beards, or good faces, or sweet breaths, will, for my kind oilor when I make curts y, bid me farewell.

* That I liked.
ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

PERSONS REPRESENTED.

King of France.
Duke of Florence.
Bertram, Count of Rousillon.
Lafay, an old Lord.
Parolles, an officer of Bertram.
Several young French Lords, that serve with Bertram in the Florentine War.
Steward,
Cown,

SCENE,—partly in France, and partly in Tuscany.

ACT 1.

SCENE 1.—Rousillon. A room in the Countess' Palace.

Enter Bertram, the Countess of Rousillon, Helena, and Lafay, in mourning.

Countess. In delivering my son from me, I bury a second husband.

Ber. And I, in going, madam, weep o'er my father's death anew: but I must attend his majesty's command, to whom I am now in ward; evermore in subjection.

Laf. You shall find of the king a husband, madam—you, sir, a father: He that so generally is at all times good, must of necessity hold his virtue to you: whose worthiness would stir it up where it wanted, rather than lack it where there is such abundance.

Count. What hope is there of his majesty's amendment?

Laf. He hath abandoned his physicians, madam; under whose practices he hath persecuted time with hope; and finds no other advantage in the process but only the losing of hope by time.

Count. This young gentlewoman had a father, (O, that had! how sad a passage 'tis!) whose skill was almost as great as his honesty: had it stretched so far, would have made nature immortal, and death should have play for lack of work. 'Would for the king's sake, he were living! I think, it would be the death of the king's disease.

Laf. How called you the man you speak of, madam?

Count. He was famous, sir, in his profession, and it was his great right to be so: Gerard de Narbon.

Laf. He was excellent, indeed, madam; the king very lately spoke of him, admiringly, and mourningly; he was skillful enough to have lived still, if knowledge could be set up against mortality.

Ber. What is it, my good lord, the king languishes of?

Laf. A fistula, my lord.

Ber. I heard not of it before.

Laf. I would, it were not notorious.—Was this gentlewoman the daughter of Gerard de Narbon?

Count. His sole child, my lord; and bequeathed to my looking over. I have those hopes of her good, that her education promises; her dispositions she inherits, which make fair gifts fairer; for where an unclean mind carries virtuous qualities, there recommendations go with pity, they are virtues and traitors too; in her they are the better for their simpleness: she derives her honesty, and achieves her goodness.

Laf. Your recommendations, madam, get from her tears.

Count. 'Tis the best bane a maiden can season

Under his particular care, as my guardian.

her praise in. The remembrance of her father never approaches her heart, but the tyranny of her sorrows takes all livelihood from her cheek. No more of this, Helena, 'go to, no more: lest it be rather thought you affect a sorrow, than to have.

Hel. I do affect a sorrow indeed, but I have it too.

Laf. Moderate lamentation is the right of the dead, excessive grief the enemy to the living.

Count. If the living be enemy to the grief, the excess makes it soon mortal.

Ber. Madam, I desire your holy wishes.

Laf. How understand we that?

Count. Be thou blest, Bertram! and succeed thy father

In manners, as in shape! thy blood, and virtue, Contend for empire in thee; and thy goodness Share with thy birthright! Love all, trust a few, Do wrong to none: be able for thine enemy Rather in power, than use; and keep thy friend Under thy own life's key: be check'd for silence, But never tax'd for speech. What heaven more will, That bee may furnish, and my prayers pluck down, Fall on thy head! Farewell.—My lord.

Laf. Tis an unspeak'd courtesie: good my lord, Advise him.

Laf. He cannot want the best

That shall attend his love.

Count. Heaven bless him!—Farewell, Bertram.

[Exit Countess.]

Ber. The best wishes that can be forg'd in your thoughts. [To Helena.] be servants to you! Be comfortable to my mother, your mistress, and make much of her.

Left. Farewell, pretty lady: You must hold the credit of your father.

[Exit Bertram and Lafay.]

Hel. O, were that all!—I think not on my father; And these great tears grace his remembrance more Than those I shed for him. What was he like?

I have forgot him: my imagination Carries no favor in it, but Bertram's. I am undone; there is no living, none,

If Bertram be away. It were all one.

That I should love a bright particular star, And think to wed it, is so above me,

In his bright radiance and collateral light Must I be comforted, not in his sphere.

The ambition in my love thus plagues itself:

The hand that would be stained by the lion.

Must die for love. 'Twas pretty, though a plague,

To see him every hour; to sit and draw

His arched brows, his hawkwing eye, his curls,

In our heart's table; heart, too capable.

Of every line and trick of his sweet favor:

But now he's gone, and my idolatrous fancy Must sanctify his relics. Who comes here?

* Peculiarity of feature.

2 Consequence.
Enter Parolles.

One that goes with him: I love him for his sake: And yet I know him a notorious liar, The which is a great way foole, solely coward; Yet these fix'd evils sit so fit in him, That they take place, when virtue's steely bones Look break in the cold wind: within, full oft we see Coldness of wheat among the blustering folly.

Parl. Save you, fair queen.

Hel. And you, monarch.

Parl. No.

Hel. And no.

Parl. Are you meditating on virginity?

Hel. Ay. You have some station of soldier in you; let me ask you a question: Man is enemy to virginity; how may we barriergo it against him?

Parl. Keep him out.

Hel. But he assail's; and our virginity, though valuable once lost, yet is weak: unfo'd to us some warlike resistance.

Parl. There is none; man, sitting down before you, will undermine you, and blow you up. Hel. Bless our poor virginity from underminers, and blowers up!—is there no military policy, how virgin might blow up men?

Parl. Virginity, being blown down, will quickly blow up; in blowing him down again, with the break yourselves made, you lose your city. It is not politic in the commonwealth of nature, to preserve virginity. Loss of virginity makes a general increase; and there was never virgin cot, till virginity was first lost. That, you were made of, is useful to make virgins. Virginity, by being once lost, may be taken by: but being ever kept, it is ever lost; 'tis too cold a companion: away with it.

Hel. I will stand for a little, though therefore I dei's virgin.

Parl. There's little can be said in't; 'tis against the rule of nature. To speak on the part of virginity, is to accuse your mothers: which is most high, and b'lesse disobedience. He that hangs himself, is a virgin: virginity murders itself; and should be buried in highways out of all sanctified limit, as a desperate offence against nature. Virginity broods notes, much like a cheese; consumes itself to the very purging, and so dies with feeding his own stomach. Besides, virginity is peevish, proud, idle, made of self-love, which is not only malitious sin in the eye of the creator. Keep it not; you cannot choose but lose by; out with it; within ten years it will make itself ten, which is a goodly increase: and the principle of such the worse with it.

Hel. How might one do, sir, to lose it to her own liking?

Parl. Let me see: Marry, ill, to like him that be a commodity we have the gloss with lying; the longer kept, the less worth: off with it, while 'tis vendible: answer the time of request. Virginity, like an old courter, wears her castle base and antique, a real rust, a suitable, just like the brooch and toothpick, which wear not now: Your date is better in your pie and your porridge; than in your cheek: And your virginity, your old virginity, is like one of our French withered pears; it looks ill; it eats dryly; marry, 'tis a withered pear; it was formerly better; marry, yet, 'tis a withered pear. Will you any thing with it?

Hel. All of my virginity yet.

There shall your master have a thousand loves, A mother, and a mistress, and a friend, A captain, a captain, and an enemy, A judge, a goddess, and a sovereign, A counsellor, a traitress, and a dear; His humble ambition, proud humility, His happy record, and his deservèd track, His faith, his sweet distress; with a world Of pity, fond, adoptant Christendoms.

That blanking Cupid's gospel. Now shall he be—

Parl. God send him well!—The court's a learning place; and he is one.

Hel. What one, faith?

Parl. —'Tis pity.

Hel. —'Tis pity.

Parl. —'Tis pity.

Hel. That wishing well had not a body in't, Which might be felt: that we, the poorer born, Who are dependent, and confounded use,

And show what we alone must think; which never Returns us thanks.

Enter a Page.

Parl. Little Helen, farewell! If I can remember thee, I will think of thee at court.

Hel. Monseur Parolles, you were born under a charmed star.

Parl. Under Mars, 1.

Hel. I especially think under Mars.

Parl. Why under Mars?

Hel. The wars have as so kept you under, that you must needs be born under Mars.

Parl. When he was predominant.

Hel. When he was reigned, I think, rather.

Parl. Why you think so?

Hel. You go so much backward, when you fight.

Parl. That's for advantage.

Parl. I am so full of business, I cannot answer you aceutely: I will return perfect courtier; in the which, my instruction shall serve to naturalize thee, so thou wilt be capable of a courtier's counsel, and understand what advantage shall thrust upon thee; else thou dost in thine unthankfulness, and thine ignorance makes thee away: farewell. When thou hast leisure, say thy prayers; when thou hast none, say thy psalms; get thee a good husband, and use him as he uses thee: so farewell.

Hel. Our remedies oft in ourselves do lie. What make we see, and cannot find mine eye? The fairest body, and the fairest face. Gave us free scope; only, doth backward pull. Our slow designs, when we ourselves are dull.

Parl. What power is it, which mounts my love so high, That makes me see, and cannot find mine eye? The mightiest space in fortune nature brings To join like likes, and has like native things, Impossible be strange attempts, to those That with their persons in sense; to suppose What hath been cannot be: Who ever strove To show her merit, that did miss her love? The king's disease—my project may deceive me, But my intents are fix'd, and will not leave me.

Exit.

SCENE II.—Paris. A Room in the King's Palace.

FLOURISH of Cornets. Enter the King of France and the Ladies and others attending.

King. The Florentines and Senays are by the cats; have fought with equal fortune, and continue A braving war.

1. Lord. So 'tis reported, sir.

King. Nay, 'tis most credible: we here receive it A certainty, touch'd from our cousin Austria, With caution, that the Florentine will move us For that which he has; which our nearest friend Prejudicates the business, and would seem To have us make denial.

1 Lord. His love and wisdom, Approv'd so to your majesty, may plead For surest credence.

King. He hath arm'd our answer, And therefore is denied before he comes: Yet for our gentlemen, that mean to see The Tuscan service, freely have they leave To stand on either part.

Parl. It may well serve A nursery to our gentry, who are sick For breathing and explicit.

King. What's he comes here?

Enter BERTRAM, LAFEU, and PAROLLES.

Lord. It is the count Rosillon, my good lord, Your son Bertram.

King. Youth, thou hast 'till thy father's face; Every nature, rather curious than in haste, Hath made thee see, Thy father's mortal parts Mayst thou inherit too! Welcome to Paris.

Ber. My thanks and duty are your majesty's.

King. I would I had that corporal sonness now As when thy father, and myself, in nuptialship Things formed by nature for each other. The citizens of the small republic of which Sienna is the capital.
Scene I.
All's well that ends well.

First try'd our soldier'ship! He did look far into the service of the time, and was disciples of the bravest: he tasted long; but on us both did hangage station. All we were out of heart. It much repairs me to talk of your good father: In his youth he had the wit, which I can well observe. To one of our country lords; but they may jest. Till our own scorn return to them unmoved, Else they can hide their leavy in honor. So like a courtier, contempt nor bitterness Were the pride of his dress; if they were, His equal had awak'd them; and his honor, clock to itself, knew the true minute when exception bid him speak: and, at this time, Him not to be in his land: When were below him He need as creatures of another place; and how'd his eminent top to their low ranks, Making them proud of his humility, I'll shorten as he was such: A man Might be a copy to these younger times; Which, follow'd well, would demonstrate them now. But goes backward.

Ber. His good remembrance, sir, Lies richer in your thoughts, than on his tomb; So in approach lives not his epitaph, As in your royal speech.

King. Would I were ever with him! He would always say, (Methinks, I hear him now: his plain words He scatter'd not in ears, but in actions) To go there, and to bear.—Let me not live Thus his good melancholy oft began. On the catastrophe and heat of passions. When it was out,—let me not live too much he, After my flames lick'd out, to be the stuff Of younger spirits, whose apprehensive All but new things disdain: whose judgments are Mere fancies of their surmises; whose constantures. Expire before their fashions:—This he wish'd: I, after him, do after him wish too, Since I nor wax, nor honey, can bring home, I was dissold from my love, To give some labors room.

2 Lord. You are lov'd, sir: They, that least lend it, shall lack you first. King. I fill a place, I know 't.—How long is, count, Since the physician at your father's death? He was much fam'd. Ber. Some six months since, my lord.

King. If he were living, I would try him yet:— Lend me an arm;—the rest have worn me out With several applications: nature and sickness Debate it at their leisure. Welcome, count; More's no nearer. Thank your majesty.

Excit. Furlow.

SCENE III.—Rouillon. A Room in the Countess's Palace.

Enter COUNTESS, Steward, and Clown.

Count. I will now hear: what say you of this gentleman?

Stew. Madam, the rare I have to bad to even your content? I wish might be found in the calendar of my past endeavors; for then we wound our modesty, and make feel the clearness of our deserving when of ourselves we publish them. Count. What doth this knave here? Get you gone, sirrah: The complaints, I have heard of you, I do not all believe: in my opinion, I do not: for I have a great love to you, and I esteem you, and have ability enough to make such knaves yours. Clos. Tis not unknown to you, madam, I am a poor man.

Count. Well, sir.

Clos. No, madam, 'tis not so well, that I am poor; though many of the rich are dum'd: But, if I may have your ladyship's good will to do the world; label the woman and I will do as we may. Count. What will thon needs be a beggar? Clos. I do beg your good will in this case. Count. In what case?

Clos. In Isbel's case, and mine own. Service is no heritage: and, I think, I shall never have the blessing of God, till I have issue of my body; for, they say, 'twixt many are blessings.

*Approbation.

To act up to your desires.

To be married.

Children.

Count. Tell me the reason why thou wilt marry.

Clos. My poor body, madam; requires it: I am driven on by the flesh; and as I must needs go, that the devil drive on.

Count. Is this all your worship's reason?

Clos. Faith, madam, I have other holy reasons, such as they are. Count. May your world know them!

Clos. I have been, madam, a wicked creature: as you all flesh and blood are; and, indeed, I do marry, that I may repent.

Count. Thy marriage, sooner than thy wickedness.

Clos. I am out of friends, madam; and I hope to have friends for my wife's sake. Count. Such fondness the same enemies, knife.

Clos. You are shallow, madam; e'en great friends; for the knives come to do that for me, which I am a-ways of. He, that cares my land, praises my team, and gives me love to win the crop: If he be his cuckold, he's my drudge: He, that comforts my wife, is the cherisher of my flesh and blood; he, that cherishes my flesh and blood, loves my flesh and blood; he, that loves my flesh and blood, is my friend: ergo, he that kisses my wife, is my friend. If man could be contented to be what they are, there were no fear in marriage; for young (Charon the Charon) woman, in the past year, howsoever their hearts are several in religion, their heads are both one, they may roll horns together, like I can: and there, so much the better, it is.

Count. Wilt thou ever be a fou-mouthed and calumnious knife?

Clos. A prophet I, madam; and I speak the truth the next way.

For the ballad will repent.

West. Why the Greeks sucked Troy? Find done and done.

Clos. Was this King Priam's joy?

With that she sigh'd as she stood, With that she sigh'd as she stood, And gave this sentence then; Among nine bad if one be good. Among nine bad if one be good, There's yet one good in ten.

Count. What, one good in ten? you corrupt the song, sirrah.

Clos. One good woman in ten, Madam; which is a purifying of the song: 'Would God serve the world so all the year? we'd find no fault with the tyto-woman, if I were the person; One in ten, a noble truth! an we might have a good woman born but every blazing star, or at an earthquake, 'Twould mend the lottery well; a man may draw his heart ere he pluck once.

Count. You'll be gone, sir, and do as I command you?

Clos. That man should be at woman's command, and yet no hurt done! Though honesty by no means will hurt, yet it will wear the surprize of humanity over the black gown of a big heart,—I am going, forsooth: the business is for Helen to come hitler.

Exit Clown.

Clos. What say you?

Stew. I know, madam, you love your gentlewoman entirely.

Count. Indeed I do; her father besought her to me; and she herself, without other advantage, may lawfully make title to as much love as she finds: there is more owing her, than is paid; and more shall be done her, than she'll demand.

Stew. Madam, I was very late more near her than, I think, she wished me: alone she was, and did communicate to herself, her own words to her own ears; she thought, I dare vow for her, they touched not any stranger sense. Her matter was, she loved your son: Fortune, she said, was no goddess, that had put such difference betwixt their two fathers: Love for God, that would not extend his might, or whose qualities were level: Diana, no queen of virtue, that would suffer her poor knight to be surprised, without rescue, in the first assault, of passion, in the least. This she delivered in the most bitter touch of sorrow, that e'er I heard exclaim in: which I held my duty, speedily to acquaint you withal: silence, in the loss that may happen: if concerns you: I forget not: Pray you, leave me; still this in your bosom, and I thank you for your honest care: I will speak with you further anon.

[Exeunt Steward.

Enter Helen.

Count. Even so it was with me, when I was young; if we are nature's, these are ours: thus thorn Doth to our rose of youth rightly belong: Our blood to us, this to our blood is born; It is the show and seal of nature's truth. What's that, strong impressions is impressed in youth: By our remembrances of days forgone, Such were our faults: or then we thought them none. Her eye still on t'ee: I observe her now.

Hel. What is your pleasure, madam?

Count. I am a mother to you.

Helen, the honorable mistress.

Nay a mother? Why not a mother? When I said, a mother, Methought I saw a serpent! What's in mother, That you start at it? I say, I am your mother; And put you in the catalogue of those That were enowmed mine: 'Tis often seen, Among the fears which nature's care breeds A native slip to us from foreign seeds: You ne'er oppress'd me with a mother's groan Yet I express to you a mother's care: God's mercy, madam! does it cery thy blood, To say I am thy mother! What's the matter, That this distemper'd messenger of wet, The many color'd Iris, rounds thine eye? Why, - that you are my daughter!

Hel. That I am not.

Count. I say, I am your mother.

Hel. The count Rousillon cannot be my brother: I am from humble, he from honest name; No note upon my parents, his all noble: My master, my dear bird he is; and Steward. His servant live, and will his vassal die: He must not be my brother.

Count. Nor your mother!

Hel. You are my mother, madam; 'Would you were

(80) That so my lord, your son, were not my brother,) Indeed, my mother! or were you both our mothers, Than I do yourself. So I were not his sister: Can I no other. But I, your daughter, he must be my brother!

Count. Yes, Helen, you might be my daughter,

Steward. God shield, you mean it not! daughter, and mother So strive upon your pulse: That, pale again! My fear hath catch'd your fondness: Now I see The mystery of your loneliness, and find Your salt tears' head. Now to all sense 'tis gross, You love my son; invention is asham'd, Against the proclamation of thy passion, To say thou dost not: therefore tell me true: But tell me then, 'tis so: - for, thy look thys Contests it, one to the other; and thine eyes

Count. Thou dost grossly show thy being there: That in their kind they speak it; only sin And hellish obstinacy tie thy tongue, That truth should be suspected: speak, is't so? If she so, you have wounded a god's heart: If he be not, forswear: how ever, I charge thee, Sire, i.e. I care as much for: I wish it equally.

Contend. The source, the cause of your grief.

As heaven shall work in me for thine avail, To tell me truly.

Hel. Good madam, pardon me!

Count. Do you love our son?

Hel. Your pardon noble mistress!

Count. Love, you my son!

Hel. Do not you love him, madam?

Count. Why, madam, - good. Go not about your love, father, Whereof the world takes note: come, come, disclose The state of your affection; for your passions Have to the follow approach'd.

Hel. Then I confess,

Here on my knee, before high heaven and you, That before you, and next unto high heaven, I love your son;

Steward. My friends were poor, but honest; so's my love. Be not offended: for it hurts not him. That he is lov'd of me: I follow him not By any of presumptuous suit.

Nor would I have him, till I do desire him, Yet never know how that desert should be I know I love in vain, strive against hope; Yet in this case for love and intemperate I still pour in the waters of my love, And lack not to base still: thus, Indian-like, Religious in mine error, I adore

The son, that looks upon his worshiper, But knows of him no more. My dearest madam, Let not your late encounter: with my love, For loving where you do: but, if yourself, Whose aged honor entitles a virtuous youth, Did ever, in so true a flame of liking, Wish chastely, and love dearly, that your Dian Was born herself and love: Great Hel-

Steward. To her, whose state is such it cannot choose But tend and give, where she is sure to lose; That seeks not to find that her search implies, But, rather, lives sweetly where she is.

Count. Had you not lately an intent, speak truly, To go to Paris!

Hel. Madam, I had.

Count. Wherefore? tell true.

You know, my father left me some prescriptions Of rare and provident effects, such as his reading, And manifold experience, had collected For general sovereignty; and that he will'd me In heedsfullest reservation to bestow them, As not to the person, but in his estate or

Count. More than they were in note: amongst the rest, There is a remedy, approvd, set down, To cure the desperate languishes, whereof The king is render'd lost. This was thy motive

For Paris, was it? speak.

Hel. My lord, your son, made me to think of Steward. Else Paris, and the medicine, and the king, Had, from the conversation of my thoughts, Happily, been absent then.

Count. But think you, Helen,

If you should tender your supposed aid, He would receive it? He and his physicians Are of a mind; he, that they cannot help him: They, that they cannot help: How shall they credit A poor unlearned virgin, when the schools, Embowelled of their doctrine, have left all The danger to itself.

Hel. There's something hints

More than my father's skill, which was the greatest Of his profession, that his good receipt Shall, for my legacy be sanctified By the keenest stars in heaven: and, would your honor

But give me leave to try success, I'd venture The well-laid life of mine on the grace's cure, By such a day and hour.

Count. Dost thou believe it?

Hel. Ay, madam, knowingly.

Count. Why, Helen, thou shalt have my leave, and love,

Steward. Means, and attendants, and my loving greetings To the poor mute in love, I'll stay that long, And pray God's blessing into thy attempt; Be gone to-morrow; and be sure of this, What I can help thee to, thou shalt not miss.

[Exeunt.
SCENE I.—Paris, A room in the King's Palace.

FLOURISH. Enter King, with young Lords taking leave for the Frenshine war; BERTRAM, PAROLLES, and Attendants.

King. Farewell, young lord; these warlike principles
Do not throw from you: and you, my lord, farewell.

Share the advice betwixt you; if both gain all,
The gift doth stretch itself as 'tis receiv'd,
And is enough for both.

1 Lord. It is our hope, sir, after well-enter'd soldiers, to return
And find your grace in health.

King. No, no, it cannot be; and yet my heart
Will not confesse he owes the malady
That doth my life besiege. Farewell, young lords;
Whether I live or die, be you the sons
Of worthy Freswhoen: let bifer Delaier
(Those list, that inherit but the fall
Of the last monarchy) see, that you come
Not to too honor, but to wed it; when
The braveuest joint, its shrinks, and what you seek,
That fame may eray you loud: I say, farewell.

2 Lord. Health, at your bidding, serve your majesty!

King. These girls of Italy, take heed of them;
They say, our French lack langauage to deny,
If they demand: beware of being captives,
Before you serve.

Both. Our hearts receive your warnings.

King. Farewell.—Come hither to me.

The King refires to a couch.

1 Lord. O my sweet lord, that you will stay behind

Par. 'Tis not his fault; the spark—

2 Lord. O, his brave wars.

Par. Most admirable: I have seen those wars.

Ber. I commanded here, and kept a coil, with Too young, and the next year, and 'Tis too early.

Par. An thy mind stand to it, boy, steal away bravely.

Ber. I shall stay here the forenoon to a smock,
Creaking my shoes on the plain masonry,
Till honor be bought up, and no sword worn,
But to dance with! By heaven, I shall steal away.

1 Lord. There's honour in the theft.

Par. Commit it, count.

2 Lord. I am your necessary; and so farewell.

Ber. I grow to you, and our parting is a tortured body.

1 Lord. Farewell, captain.

2 Lord. Sweet massacre Parolles!

Par. Noble he's, my sword and yours are kin.
Good sparks and lustrous, a word, good metals:—
You shall find in the regiment of the Spinu, one Captain Spino, with his excellence, an emblem of war here on his sinister check: it was this very sword entrenched it: say to him, I live; and observe his reports for me.

2 Lord. We shall, noble captain.

Par. Mars date on you for his novices! [Exeunt Lords.] What will you do?

Par. Be not more sanguine: ere this the noble lords;
you have restrained yourself within the list of too cold an advice: be more expressive to them;
for they wear themselves in the cap of the time:
there, do most true guilt stand, speak, and move, under the influence of the most received star; and though the devil fed the measure, such are to be followed: after them, and take a more dilated firew.

Ber. And I will do so.

Par. Worthy fellows; and like to prove most sinewy sword-men.

Enter BERTRAM and PAROLLES.

1. i.e. The Roman empire.
2. Seeker, enquirer.
3. Do not capture before you are soldiers.
4. In a bustle.
5. They are the foremost in the fashion.
6. The dance.
7. A kind of dance.
8. I am like Pandarus.
9. Well informed.
10. A third eye.
Though, more to know, could not be more to trust;
From whence thou sayst so lightly tended.—But rest
I question'd it welcome, and undoubtèd blest—
Give it some believing so, he is our right
As high as word, my deed shall match thy deed.

[Flourish. Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—Rousillon. A Room in the Countess's Palace.

Enter COUNTESS and Clown.

Count. Come on, sir; I shall now put you to the highest of your breeding.

Cleo. I will show myself highly fed and lowly taught. I know my way to business is to the court.

Count. To the court! why, what place make you special, when you put off with such contempt? But to the court!

Cleo. No, madam, if God have lent a man any manners, he may easily put it off at court; he that cannot make a leg, put off a cap, kiss his hand, and say holiness, has neither leg, hands, hips, nor cap; and, indeed, such a fellow, to say precisely, were not for the court: but, for me, I have an answer will serve all men.

Count. Marry, that's a bountiful answer, that fits all occasions.

Cleo. It is like a barber's chair, that fits all buttocks; the pin buttock, the quach-buttock, the brawn-buttock, or any buttock.

Count. Will you press your answer fit to all questions?

Cleo. As fit as ten groats is for the hand of an attorney, as your French crown for your taffata punk, as Tho's rush, as Jov's forefinger, as a pancake for Shrove-Tuesday, a morris for May-day, as the nail to his hole, the euckold to his horn, as a scolding queen to a wrangling knave, as the man's part to the fair's mouth; nay, as the pudding to his skin.

Count. Have you, I say, an answer of such fitness for all questions?

Cleo. From below your duke, to beneath your constable, it will fit any question.

Count. It must be an answer of most monstrous size, that must fit all demands.

Cleo. But a little mettler, in good faith, if the learned should speak truth of it; and here it is, all that belongs to it: Ask me, if I am a courtier, it shall do you no harm to learn.

Count. To be young again, if we could: I will be a fool in question, hoping to be the wiser by your answer. I pray you sir are you a courtier?

Cleo. Sir, there's a simple putting off:—more, more, a hundred of them.

Count. Sir, I am a poor friend of yours that loves you.

Cleo. O Lord, sir,—Thick, thick, spare not me.

Count. I think sir, you can eat none of this homely meat.

Cleo. O Lord, sir,—Nay, put me to't: I warrant you.

Count. You are senseless, I am sure; for, as I think.

Cleo. O Lord, sir,—Spare not me.

Count. Do you cry, O Lord, sir, at your whipping; and spare not me? Indeed, your O Lord, sir, is very frequent to your whipping; you would answer very well to a whipping, if you were but bound to.

Cleo. I never had worse luck in my life; in my—O Lord, sir: I see, things may serve long, but not serve ever.

Count. I play the noble housewife with the time to rub off with, and so properly with a fool.

Cleo. O Lord, sir,—Why, there's serves well again.

Count. An end, sir, to your business: Give Helen this.

And urge her to a present answer back:

Command me to your kinsmen, and my son;

This is not much.

Cleo. Not much commendation to them.

Count. I much employement for you: You understand me?

Cleo. Most truthfully; I am there before my legs.

Count. Haste you again. [Exeunt severally.]

[Scene III.—Paris. A Room in the king's Palace.

Enter BERTRAM, LAFAY, and PAROLLES.

Los. They say, miracles are past; and we have our philosophical persons to make modern and ordinary.

Scene III.

All's well that ends well.

familiar things supernatural and causeless. Hence is it, that we make trifles of terrors; encompassing ourselves into seeming knowledge when we should submit ourselves to an unspoken fear.

Par. Why, 'tis the greatest circle of wonder that hath shot out in our latter times.

Ber. And so 'tis.

Par. To be refreshed by the pleasures of the arts.

Par. Thus did both of Galen and Paracelsus.

Par. Of all the learned and ancient authorities, --

Par. Right, so I say.

Par. That gave him out incurable.

Par. Why, there 'tis; so say I too.

Par. Not to be helped,--

Par. Right: as 'twere a man assured of an

Par. In life, and more death.

Par. Just, you say well; so would I have said.

Par. I may truly say, it is a novelty to the world.

Par. It is, indeed: if you will have it in showing, you shall read it in — What do you call there? --

Par. A showing of a heavily elect in an earthly actor.

Par. That 'tis I would have said; the very same.

Par. Why, your dolphin is not hustler: for me, I speak in respect—

Par. Nay, 'tis strange, 'tis very strange, that is the brief and the tedious of it; and he is of a most furious spirit, that will not acknowledge it to be the—

Par. Very hand of heaven.

Par. Ay, so I say.

Par. In a most weak—

Par. And debi minister, great power, great transcendence: which should, indeed, give us a further use to be made, than alone the recovery of the king as to—

Par. Generally thankful.

Enter King, Helena, and Attendants.

Par. I would have said it; you say well. Here comes the king.

Par. Lusties, as the Dutchman says: I'll like a maid the better, whilst I have a tooth in my head: Who can be able to her a coranto.

Par. Mort du Vinagre! Is not this Helen?

Par. Fore God, I think so.

King. Go, call before me all the lords in court.—

Par. Enters an Attendant.

Sit, my preserver, by thy patient's side; and with this healthful hand, whose banish'd sense

Thou hast repeated, a second time receive

This confirmation of my great estate, well, which but attains thy name.

Enter several Lords.

Fair maid, send forth thine eye: this youthful parcel

Of noble bachelors stand at my bestowing.

Our whom both sovereign power and father's voice

I have to use: thy frank election make;

Then hast power to choose, and they owe to forsake.

Hel. To each of you one fair and virtuous mistress

Fat, when love please!—marry, to each, but one!

Par. I'll give day Curtal5 and his furniture.

Maidens more to were broken than these boys;

And writ as little heard.

King. Peruse them well.

Not one of those but had a nobler father.

Gentlemen.

Heaven hath through me restored the king to health.

All. We understand it and thank heaven for you.

Hel. I am a simple maid; and therein wealthiest.

Den. Proved, I simply am a maid: please it your majesty, I have done already:

The blusses in my checks thus whisper me,

We blush, that thou shouldn't choose; but be resol'd,

Let the death of love by thy choice take; we'll come there again.

King. Make choice; and see,

Who shuns thy love, shuns all his love in me.

Now, Helen, from the altar do I fly: And to imperial Love, that god most high,

Do my sighs stream.—Sir, will you hear my suit? --

Lord, and grant it.

Hel. This is sir; all the rest is mute.

Laf. I had rather be in this choice, than throw amces—^for my life.

Hel. The honest sir, that fancies in your eyes,

Before I speak, too threateningly replies:

Love make your fortunes twenty times above

Her that so wishes, and her humble love;

To Lord. No better, if you please.

Hel. My wish receive, Which great love grant; and so I take my leave.

L. f. Do you deny her? an they were sons of mine, I'd kill them then and after; and would send them to the Turk, to make enunciats of.

L. k. Be not afraid! [To a Lord.] that if your hand should take,

I'll never say you were for your own sake; blossing upon your vows! and in your bed,

Find fairer fortune, if you ever well!

L. a. These boys are boys of thee, they'll none have her: sure, these are bad coats to the English; the French never got them.

Hel. You are too young, too happy, and too good,

To make yourself a son out of my blood.

L. d. Lord, fair one, I think not.

Hel. There's one grape yet,—I am sure, thy father drank wine:—but it thou best'st not an a. I am a youth of fourteen; I have known thee already. I shall say, I take you; [To Bertram] but I give Me, and my service, ever whilst I live,

Into thy strong power.—This is the man.

King. Why then, young Bertram take her, she's thy wife.

Ber. My wife, my liege! I shall beseech your highness

In such a business give me leave to use

The help of mine own eyes.

King. Know'st thou not, Bertram,

What she has done for me?

Ber. Yes, my good lord;

But never hope to know why I should marry her. King. Thou know'st she has raised me from my sickly bed.

Ber. But follows, it my lord, to bring me down

Must answer for your raisin? I know her well;

She had her breeding at my father's charge:

A poor physician's daughter: by thy wife!—Disdain rather corrupt me ever!

Kings. This only title thou disclaimst in her, the which

I can build up. Strange is it that our bloods,

Of color, weight, and heat, pour'd all together,

Would quite confound distinction, yet stand off

In differences so small:—if she be

All that is this—thou hadst will with thou diskist,

A poor physician's daughter, thou disdinst,

Of virtue for the name: but do not so:

From lowest place when virtuous things proceed,

The place is sanctified by the decay of

Where great additions swell, and virtue none.

It is a dropped honor: good alone

Is good; without a name, vileness is so:

This property by what it is should go

Not by the title. She is young, wise, fair;

In those to nature she's immediate heir;

And these bred honor: that is honor's scorn,

Which calls itself as I'm born, and

And is not like the sire: Honors but thrive,

When neither from our acts we derive

Than our fore-goes: the more a word a slave,

Delusions' every tomb; of every grave,

A lying trophy, and as oft is dunnish

Where dust, and cannaed oblivion is the tomb

Of honor'd bones indeed. What should be said?

If thou canst make this green, I care as a maid,

I can create the rest: virtue, and she

Is her own dower; honor and wealth from me.

Ber. I cannot love her, nor will strive to do't.

King. Then let him dissemble thyself, if thou should'st strive to choose

Hel. That you are well restor'd, my lord, I am glad:

Let the rest.

King. My honor's at the stake: which to defeat,

I must produce my power: Here, take her hand,

Polin, score boy: and this: a truly good gift

That dost in vile misprision shake up

My love and her desert; that canst not dream,

We, poising us in her defective scale.

Shall reach thee to the beam: that will not know

It is in us to plant thine honor, where

ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

Act II.

We please to have it grow: Check thy contempt! Obey our will, which travels in thy good.

Believe not my disclaimers, but proceed.

Do thine own fortunes that obsequious right
Which both thy duty owes, and our power claims;
Or I will throw thee from my care for ever,
Into the cords, and that careless lapse
Of youth and ignorance; both my remedy and hate,
Loosing upon thee in the name of justice,
Without all terms of pity: Speak; thou answer.

I would thou couldst recant, my gracious lord,
To a pure conscience; and thy present sin
My fancy to thy eyes: When I consider,
What great creation, and what dote of honor,
Lies where you but it, I find, that she, which late
As this matter, in a proper light most new
The praise of the king; who, so condemed,
Is, as twere, born so.

King. And to her, she is thine: to whom I promise
A counterpoise; if not to thy estate,
A balance more replete.

Pur. I take my hand.

King. Good fortune, and the favor of the king,
Smile upon this contract; whose ceremony
Shall seem expedient on the now-born brief,
And shall be formed to light: that is least
Shall more attend upon the coming spare,
Expecting absent friends. As thou lov'st her,
Thy love's to me religious; else, dost crr.

[Enter KING, BERTRAM, HELENA, Lords, and Attendants.]

Luf. Do you hear, monsieur? I warn with you.
Par. Your pleasure, sir?

Luf. Your lord and master did well to make his recantation.

Par. Recantation!—my lord?—my master?
Luf. Ay: Is it not a language, I speak?
Par. A most harsh one; and not to be understood
Without bloody succeeding. My master!
Luf. Are you companion to the count Rousillon?
Par. To any count: all counts to what is man.
Luf. To what is count's man; count's master is of what is man.
Par. You are two old, sir; let it satisfy you,
You are too old.

Luf. I must tell thee, sirrah, I write man; to whom thee are not able to bring thee.
Par. What I dare too well do, I dare not do.
Luf. I did think thee for two ordinarie; to be a pretty wise fellow: thou didst make tolerable vent of thy travel: it could pass: yet the scars, and the banerets, about thee, did manfully dissuade me from believing thee a vessel of too great a burden.
I have known, and seen, where I list: I care not:
yet art thou good for nothing but taking up;
and that thou art scarce worth.

Luf.Hadst thou not the privilege of antiquity upon thee,
Par. Do not plunge thyself too far in anger, lest then hasten thy trial; which if—Lord have mercy on thee for a! so my good window of lattice, fare thee weal; yet need not open, for
I look through thee. Give me thy hand.
Par. My lord, you give me most egregious indecency.

Luf. Ay, with all my heart; and thon art worthy of it.
Par. I have not, my lord, deserved it.

Luf. Yet, good faith, every dram of it; and I will not late thee a scribble.
Par. Well, I shall be wiser.

Luf. Even as soon as thou canst, for thou hast to pull at a snare or the contrary. If ever thou be'st bound in thy scarfs, and beaten, thou shalt find what it is to be proud of thy bondage. I have a desire to hold my acquaintance with thee, or rather my knowledge:
that I may say, in the default he is a man I know.

Par. My lord, you do me most insupportable vexation.

Luf. If it would be heart-pains for thy sake, and my poor doing eternal; for doing I aim at; as
I will by them, in what motion age will give me leave.
Par. Well, thou hast a son shall take this disgrace off me; scurvy, old, filthy, scurvy lord!—
Well, I must be patient; there is no tutoring of authority: I'll beat him by my life, if I can meet him with any convenience, and he were double and double a lord. I'll have no more pity of his age, than I would have of—i'll beat him, as an if could but meet him against it. I'm master.

Reciter LAFEU.

Luf. Sirrah, your lord and master's sold, there's news for you; you have a new mistress.
Par. I most unequally beseech your lordship to make some reservation of your wrongs: He is my good lord: whom I serve above is my master.

Luf. Who? God!
Par. Ay, sir.

Luf. More than that, is it; that's thy master: Why dost thou garter up thy arms o this fashion? dost make hole of thy sleeves? do other servants so? Thou wert best set thy lower part where thy nose stands.
By my name! if I were but two hours younger,
I'll beat thee; methinks, thou art a general offence, and every man should beat thee. I think, thou wrist created for men to breathe; themselves upon thee.
Par. This is hard and undeserved measure, my lord.
Luf. Go to, sir: you were beaten in Italy for picking a kernel out of a pomegranate; you are a vagabond, and no true traveller: you are more sauce with lords, and honorable personages, than the heraldry of your birth and virtue gives you mission. Can you say: I have made any other word: I call you knave. I leave you.

[Enter BERTRAM.]

Par. Good, very good; it is so then.—Good, very good; let it be concealed a while.

Ber. Undone, and forfeited to cares for ever!
Par. What is the matter, sweet-heart?—
Ber. Although before the solemn priest I have sworn,
I will not be her.
Par. What? what, sweet-heart?
Ber. O, my Paroles, they have married me:
I'll to the Tuscan wars, and never bed her.
Par. She's a deep-hole, and more to merit
The tread of a man's foot: to the wars!
Ber. There's letters from my mother; what the import is,
I know not yet.
Par. Ay, that would be known: To the wars, my boy, to the wars!

Ber. He wears his honor in a box unopen,
That loses his kicky-wicky, here at home;—
Spending his mainy narrow in her arms,
Which should sustain the bond and high current
Of house and name. O, Mars, what! is Monsieur
France is a stable; we dwell in ínades;—
Therefore, to the war!

Ber. It shall be so; I'll send her to my house;
Acquaint my mother with my hat to her,
And wherefore I am fled; write to the king
That which I durst not speak: His present gift
Shall furnish me to those Italian fields,
Where more fellows strike: War is no strife
To the dark house, and the detested wife.
Par. Will this capricio hold in thee, art sure!
Ber. Go with me to my chamber, and advise me,
I'll send her straight away: To-morrow,
I'll to the wars, she to her single sorrow.
Par. Why, these balls bound; there's noise in it.

[Enter PAROLLES, DOBINE, and CLYSDENNE.
A young man, married, is a man that marr'd;
Therefore away, and leave her bravely: go;
The king has done you wrong; but, hush! 'tis so.

SCENE IV.—Another Room in the same.

Enter HELENA and CLAUDIA.

Hei. My mother greets me kindly: Is she well?
Cla. She is not well, but yet she has her health;
she is not past fifty, but yet she is not well: but tha's be given, she's very well, and wants nothing i the world: but yet she is not well!

Hei. If she be very well, what does she all, that she's not well?

Cla. Truly, she's very well, indeed, but for two things.

Hei. What two things?

Cla. 1. a cent term for a wife.
2. The house made gloomy by discontent.
Scene V.

ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

Co. One, that she's not in heaven, whither God send her quickly! the other, that she's in earth, whence God send her quickly!

Enter PAROLLES.

Par. Bless you, my fortunate lady!

Hel. I hope, sir, I have your good will to have mine own good fortunes.

Par. You had my prayers to lead them on: and to keep them on, you still.—O, my knife! How does my old lady?

Clo. So that you had her wrinkles, and her morn, I would she did as you say.

Par. Why, I say nothing.

Clo. Marry, you are the wiser man; for many a man's tongue shakes out his master's undoing: To say nothing, to do nothing, to know nothing, and to have nothing, is to be a great part of your title; which is within a very little of nothing.

Par. Away, then! it's a knife.

Clo. You should have said, sir, before a knife thou art a knife: that is, before me thou art a knife: this had been truth, sir.

Par. Go to, thou art a witty fool, I have found thee.

Clo. Did you find me in yourself, sir? or were you taught to find me? The search, sir, was profitable; and much fool may you find in you, even to the world's pleasures, and the increase of laughter.

Par. A good knife, faith, and well fed.—Madam, my lord will so away tonight;

A very serious business calls on him.

The great prerogative and right of love,
Which, as your due, time claims, he does acknowledge;
But puts it off by a compell'd restraint;
Whose want, and whose delay, is stewed with savours,
Which they distil now in the curbed time,
To make the coming hour o'erflow with joy,
And pleasure drown the brim.

Hel. What's he wills else?

Par. That you will take your instant leave o' the king,

And make this haste as your own good proceeding,
Strength'nd with what apology you think
May make it probable need.

Hel. What more commands he?

Par. That, having this obtained, you presently
Attend his further pleasure.

Hel. In every thing I wait upon his will.

Par. I shall report it.

Hel. I pray you.—Come, sirrah.

[Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Another Room in the same.

Enter LAFFEE and BERTRAM.

Laf. But I hope, your lordship thinks not him a soldier.

Ber. Yes, my lord, and of very valiant approbation.

Laf. You have it from his own deliverance.

Ber. And by other warranted testimony.

Laf. Then my dial goes not true; I took this lark for a bunting.«

Ber. I do assure you, my lord, he is very great in knowledge, and accordingly valiant.

Laf. I have then sinned against his experience, and transgressed against his valor; and my state that way dangerous, since I cannot yet find in my heart to repent. Here he comes; I pray you, make us friends, I will pursue the amity.

[Exit PAROLLES.

Par. These things shall be done, sir.«

[To BERTRAM.

Par. Pray you, sir, who's his tailor?

Ber. Sir?

Par. 0, I know him well: Ay, sir; he, sir, is a good workman, a very good tailor.

Ber. Is she gone to the king?«

[Aside to PAROLLES.

Par. She is.

Ber. Will she away to-night?«

[Enter PAROLLES.

Par. As you'll have her.

Ber. I have two more letters, casketed my treasure,

Given order for our horses; to-night.

When I should take possession of the bride,

And, ere I do begin,—

Laf. A young lady is something at the latter end of a dinner; but one that loses three thirds, and uses a known truth to pass a thousand wantings with, should be once heard, and thrice beaten.—

God save your captivation!

Ber. Is there anyunkindness between my lord and you, monsieur?

Par. I know not how I have deserved to run into my lord's displeasure.

Laf. You have made shift to run into, roots and spurs and all, like him that leaped into the custard; and out of it you'll run again, rather than suffer questions for your renouned innocence.

Ber. It may be, you have mistaken him, my lord.

Laf. And shall do so ever, though I took him at his prayers. Fare you well, my lord; and believe this of me, there can be no kernel in this light nut; the soul of this man is his clothes: trust him not in matter of heavy consequence: I have kept of them tame, and know their natures.—Farewell, monsieur! I have spoke better of you, than you have or will deserve at my hand; but we must do good against evil.

[Exit PAROLLES.

Ber. Little lord, I swear.

Par. I think so.

Ber. Why, do you not know him?

Par. Yes, I do know him well; and common speech

Gives him a worthye pass. Here comes my cog.

[Enter HELena.

Hel. I have, sir, as I was commanded from you,

Spoke with the king, and have procured his leave

For present parting; only, he desires

Some private speech with you.

Ber. I shall obey his will.

You must not marvel, Helen, at my course,

Which holds not color with the time, nor does

The munition of the required office

On my particular: prepar'd I was not

For such a business; therefore am I found

So much unsettled: This drives me to entreat you,

That pressure you be your way for home;

And rather muse, than ask, why I entreat you:

For my respects are better than they seem;

And my appointments have in them a need,

Greater than shows itself, at the time new,

To you that know them not. This to my mother.

[Giving a letter.

’Twill be two days ere I shall see you again; so

I leave you to your wisdom.

Sir, I can nothing say,

But that I am your most obedient servant.

Ber. Come, come, no more of that.

Hel. And ever shall

With true observance seek to eke out that,

Wherein toward me my homely stars have fail'd

To equal my great fortune.

Let that go:

My haste is very great: Farewell; lie home.

Hel. Pray, sir, your pardon.

Ber. Well, what would you say?

Hel. I am not worthy of the wealth I owe;

Nor dare I say, ’tis mine; and yet it is;

but, like a timorous thief, most fear would steal

What law does vouch name own.

What would you have!

Hel. Something; and scarce so much.—nothing, indeed,—

I would now ask you what I would: my lord—faith, yes:—

Strangers, and foes, do sounder, and not kiss.

Ber. I pray you, stay not, but in haste to horse.

Hel. I shall not break your building, good my lord.

Ber. Where are my other men, monsieur?—

Farewell.

[Exit HELena.

Go thou toward home; where I will never come,

Whilst I can shake my sword, or hear the drum,—

Away and for our flight.

[Par. Bravely, coraggio! [Exit.]

Wonder.

I possess.
ACT III.

Flourish. Enter: the Duke of Florence, attended; two French Lords, and others.

Duke. So that, from point to point, now have you heard
The fundamental reasons of this war;
Whose great decision hath much blood let forth,
And more thirsts after.

1 Lord. Holy seems the quarrel
Upon your grace's part: black and fearful
On the opposite.

Duke. Therefore we marvel much, our cousin
Would, in so just a business, shut his bosom
Against our borrowing prayers.

2 Lord. Good my lord
The consuls of our state I cannot yield,
But like a common and an outward man,
That the great figure of a council frames
By self-unseen motion; therefore dare not Say what I think of it; since I have found Myself in my uncertain grounds to fail
As often as I guessed.

Duke. Be it his pleasure.

2 Lord. But I am sure, the younger of our nature,
That surfeit on their case, will, day by day,
Come here for physic.

Duke. Welcome shall they be;
And all the honors, that can fly from us,
Shall on them settle. You know your places well;
When better fall, for your avails they fall:
To-morrow to the field.

[Flourish. Exit Clowns.

SCENE II.—Rousillon. A room in the Count's Palace.

Enter Countess and Clown.

Count. It hath happened all as I would have had it, save, that he comes not along with her.

Clown. by my troth, I take my young lord to be a very melancholy man,

Count. by what observance, I pray you?

Clown. Alas, he will look upon his boat, and sing;
Mend the rift, and sing: ask questions, and sing;
Pick his teeth, and sing; I know a man that had this trick of melancholy, sold a goodly manor for a
song.

Count. Let me see what he writes, and when he means to come.

[Reads.]

[Exit Clown.

Open a letter.

Count. I was more mind to Isbel, since I was at court: our old line and our Issue o' the country are nothing like your old line and your Issue o' the court; the brains of my Cupid's knocked out; and I begin to love, as an old man loves money, with no stomach.

Count. What have we here?

Clown. E'en that you have here.

[Exit Clown.

[Reads.] I have sent you a daughter-in-law; she hath recovered the king, and undone me.
I have tricked her, not beheaded her; and sworn to make the not eternal. You shall hear, I am run away; know it, before the report come. If there be been enough in the world, I will hold a long dispose.

My duty to you. Your unfortunate son.

Bertram.

This is not well, rash and unbridled boy,
To fly the favors of so good a king;
To place his indignation on thy head,
By the misprizing of a mad too vicious
For the contempt of empire.

[Enter Clown.

Clown. O madam, wonder is heavy news within, between two soldiers and my young lady.

Count. What is the matter?

Clown. Nay, there is some comfort in the news, some comfort; your son will not be killed so soon as I thought he would.

Count. Why should he be killed?

* The folding at the top of the book,

Clown. So say I, madam, if he run away, as I hear he does: the danger is in standing to't; that's the loss of men, though it be the getting of children.
Here they come, will you tell me more: for my part,
I only hear, your son was run away.

[Exit Clown.

Enter Helena and two Gentlemen.

1 Gent. Save you, good madam.

Hel. Madam, my lord is gone, for ever gone.

2 Gent. I do not say so.

Count. Think upon patience.—Pray you, gentlemen.—

I have felt so many quirks of joy and grief,
That the first face of neither, on the start,
Can wear the mask.—Where is my son, I pray
you?

2 Gent. Madam, he's gone to serve the duke of Florence.

We met him thitherward; from thence we came,
And after some dispatch in hand at court,
Thither we lend again.

Hel. Look on this letter, madam; here's my passport.

[Reads.] When thou canst get the ring upon my finger, which never shall come off, and show me a child begotten of thy body, that I am father to, then
I call me husband: but in such a case I live a never.
This is a most lawful sentence.

Count. Brought you this letter, gentlemen?

1 Gent. Ay, madam;

And, for the contents' sake, are sorry for our pains.

2 Gent. Such is his noble purpose: and, believe't,
The duke will lay upon him all the honor,
That good convenience claims.

Count. Return you thither!

1 Gent. Ay, madam, with the swiftest wings of speed.

Hel. [Reads.] Till I have no wife, I have nothing in France.

'Tis bitter.

Count. Find you that there?

Hel. Ay, madam.

1 Gent. 'Tis but the boldness of his hand, haply
which
His heart was not consenting to.

Count. Nothing in France, until he have no wife!
There's nothing here that is too good for him,
But only she; and she deserves a lord.
That twenty such rude boys might tend upon,
And call her hourly, mistress. Who was with him?

1 Gent. A servant only, and a gentleman,
Which I have some time known.

Count. Paroles, wasn't not?

1 Gent. Ay, my good lady, he.

Count. A very tainted fellow, and full of wickedness.

My son corrupts a well-derived nature
With his indocility.

1 Gent. Indeed, good lady,
The fellow has a deal of that, too much,
Which holds him much to have.

Count. You are welcome, gentlemen.
I will treat you, when you see my son,
To tell him, that his sword can never win
The honor that he loses; more I'll entreat you
Written to bear along.

2 Gent. We serve you, madam,
In that and all your worthiest affairs.

Count. Not so, but as we change our courtesies
Will you do hear?—

[Exit Countess and Gentlemen.

Hel. Till I have no wife, I have nothing in France.

Nothing in France, until he has no wife!

* Exchange.
Scene V.  All's Well That Ends Well.

Thou shalt have none, Rousillon, none in France, Then hast thou all again. Poor lord! it is I, That chace thee from thy country, and expose Those tender limbs of thine to the event Of the non-sparing war; and bid thee take That dastardly course from the sportive court, where thou Wast shot at with fair eyes, to be the mark Of snaky muskets! O you leaden messengers, That met the raven horn when he too roar'd, With sharp constraint of hunger; better 'were That all the aspersions, which nature owes, Were mine at once: No, come thou home, Rousillon, Whence honor but of danger wins a scar, As oft it loses all: I will be gone; My being here it is that holds thee hence; Shall I stay hence to die? no, no, although The air of paradise did fan the house, And angels offered all: I will be gone; That pitiful rumor may report my flight, To precipitate that ear. Come, bid her end, day! For, with the dark, poor thief, I'll steal away. [Exit.]

Flourish. Enter the Duke of Florence, Bertram, Lords, Officers, Soldiers, and others.

Renaud. The general of our horse thou art; and we, Great as our hope, lay our best love and credence Upon thy promising fortune.

Bertram. Sir, it is A charge too heavy for my strength; but yet With much desire I bear it for thy worthy sake, To the extreme edge of hazard.

Renaud. Then go thou forth; And fortune play upon thy prosperous helm, As thy auspicious master! This very day, Great Mars, I put my self into thy tile; Make me but like my thoughts; and I shall prove A lover of thy thun, hater of his death. [Exeunt.]

Scene IV.—Rousillon. A room in the Countess's Palace.

Enter Countess and Steward.

Countess. Alas! and would you take the letter of her? Master count, thou know'st she would be done, By sending me a letter? Read it again.

Steward. I am sure saint Jacques' pilgrim, thither gone: Ambitious love hath so me offended,

That barefoot pilot I the cold ground upon,

With solemn vow my faults to have amended.

Write, write, that from the bloody course of war,

My dearest master, your dear son may die;

Bless him at home in peace, whilst I from far,

In some amiableendoza feeling kindly;

His taken tears but him I forgive;

I, his dishonorable Jest, send forth

From courtly friends, with camping to live,

Held yet by dear and dying words of worth;

He's too good and far for death and me:

Whom I myself embrace, to set him free.

Countess. Ah, what sharp stings are in her midstest words?

Rinaldo, you did never lack advice so much, As letting her pass so; had I spoke with her, I could have well divertid her intents, Which thus she hath prevented.

Steward. Pardon me, madam; If I had given you this at over night, She might have been o'ertein; and yet she writes, Her love to grant, reprieve him from the wrath Of greatest justice.—Write, write, Rinaldo, * Ravnous. * Alluding to the story of Hercules. * Discretion or thought.

To this unworthy husband of his wife; Let every word weigh heavy on her worth, That he does weigh too light: my greatest grief, Though little he do feel it, set down sharply, Dispatch the most convenient means to that. When, haply, he sheld beer that she is gone, He will return; and hope I may, that she, Harming so much, will speed her lost again, And hinder her, where by her advice she was Here, she is nearest to me, I have no skill in sense To make distinction:—Provide this messenger:—My heart is heavy, and mine age is weak; Grief would have tears, and sorrow bids me speak.

Scene VI.—Without the walls of Florence.

A Tucket afar off: Enter an old Widow of Florence, Diana, Violante, Marianna, and other citizens.

Widow. Nay, come; for if they do approach the city, we shall lose all the sight.

Diana. They say, the French count has done most honorable service.

Wid. It is reported that he has taken their greatest commander; and that with his own hand he slew the duke's brother. We have lost our labor: they are gone a contrary way: hark! you may know by their trumpets.

Mari. Come let's return again, and suffice ourselves with the report of it. Well, Diana, take heed of this French Earl; the honor of a maid is her name; and this legacy is so rich and agreeable.

Wid. I had told my neighbor, how you have been solicited by a gentleman, her companion.

Mari. I know that knife; hang him! one of those fellows is a spy; I have been told that they have such agents for the young earl.—Beware of them, Diana; their promises, entertainments, oaths, tokens, and all these engines of lust, are not the things they go under: * make your mind both be seduced by them; and the misery is, example, that so terrible shows in the wreck of maidenhood, cannot for all that dissipate succession, but that they are lined with the twigs that threaten them. I hope, I need not to advise you further; but I hope, my own grace will keep you where you are, though there were no further danger known, but the modesty which is so lost.

Diana. You shall not need to fear me.

Enter Helena, in the dress of a Pilgrim.

Wid. I hope so.—Look, here comes a pilgrim. I know she will lie at my house: thither they send one another: I'll question her:—

God save you, pilgrim! What are you bound? Hel. To Jacques' grand.

Wid. Where do the palmer's lodge, I do beseech you? Hel. At the Saint Francis here, beside the port.

Wid. Is this the way?

Hel. Ay, marry, is it—Hark you! [A murch afar off.]

They come this way.—If you will carry, holy pilgrim,

But till the troops come by,

I will conduct you where you shall be lodg'd.

The rather, for, I think, I know your hostess

As ample as myself.

Hel. Is it yourself? Wid. If you shall please so, pilgrim. Hel. I thank you, and will stay upon your leisure.

Wid. Here you shall see a countryman of yours, That has done worthy service.

Hel. His name, I pray you?

Diana. The count Rousillon: know you such one? Hel. But by the ear, that hears most nobly of him: His face I know not.

Wid. Whatsoe'er he is,

He's bravely taken here. He stole from France, As 'ts reported, fort the king had marred him Against his liking: Think you it is so? Hel. Ay, the rage that men have to the truth, makes the lady. Dian. There is a gentleman, that serves the count, Reports but cursorily of her.

Hel. What's his name?

Diana. Monsieur Paroles.

Temptations. * Not what their names express. * Pilgrims; so called from a staff or bough of palm they were wont to carry. * Because.
Act III.

SCENE VI.—Camp before Florence.

Enter Bertram, and the two French Lords.

1 Lord. Nay, good my lord, put him to't; let him have his way.

2 Lord. If your lordship find him not a biding, I hold me no more in your respect.

1 Lord. He is a bubble, a mere bubble.

Ber. Do you think, I am so far deceived in him?

1 Lord. Believe it, my lord; in mine own direct knowledge, without any malice but to speak of him as my kinsman, he's a most notable coward, an infinite and endless liar, an hourly promise-breaker, the owner of no one good quality worthy your lordship's observation.

2 Lord. He were not so you knew him; lest repose too far in his virtue, which he hath not, he might at some great and trusty business, in a main danger, forsook it.

Ber. I would I knew in what particular action to try him.

2 Lord. None better than to let him fetch off his drum, which you hear him so confidently undertake to do.

1 Lord. 1, with a troop of Florentines, will suddenly surprise him; such I will have, whom, I am

Deals. 2 A pauly's fellow, a coward.

Sure, he knew not from the enemy: we will bind and head him so that, he shall suppose no other but that be carried into the least of his adversaries, when we bring him to our tents: be your lordship present at his examination; if he do not, as becoming a man of his life, and in the highest compulsion of base fear, offer to betray you, and deliver all the intelligence in his power against you, and that with the divine forfit of his soul upon oath, never less, let him be convicted in any thing.

2 Lord. O, for the love of laughter, let him fetch his drum; he says he has a stratagem for't: when your lordship sees the bottom of his success in't, and that it is the common business of war, be not melted, if you give him not John Drum's entertainment, your inclining cannot be removed. Here he comes.

Enter PAROLLES.

1 Lord. O, for the love of laughter, hinder not the humor of his design; let him fetch off his drum in any hand.

Ber. A poor Monsieur? this drum sticks sorely in your disposition.

2 Lord. A pass on't, let it go: 'tis but a drum.

Par. But a drum! 'is't but a drum! A drum so lost! I there was an excellent command! to charge in with our horse upon our own wings, and to rend our own soldiers.

2 Lord. That was not to be blamed in the command of such; there is a dice of war that Caesar himself could not have prevented, if he had been there to command.

Ber. Well, we cannot greatly condemn our success; some major harm had in the loss of that drum: but it is not to be recovered.

Par. It might have been recovered.

Ber. It might, but it is not now.

Par. It is recovered; but that the merit of service is seldom attributed to the true and exact performer, I would have that drum or another, or his coat.

Ber. Why, if you have a stomach to't, Monsieur, if you think your mystery in stragelam can bring this instrument of honor again into its native quarter, be magnificent in the enterprise, and go on: I will grace the attempt for a worthy exploit; if you speed well in it, the duke shall both speak of it, and extend to you what further becomes his greatness, even to the utmost syllable of your worthiness.

Par. By the hand of a soldier, I will undertake it.

Ber. But you must not now slumber in it.

Par. About it this evening; and I will presently, you do not listen, mine own discretion, swear myself in my certainty, put myself into my mortal preparation, and by midnight, look to hear further from me.

Ber. He is to obey his grace, you are gone about it?

Par. I knew not what the success will be, my lord; but the attempt I vow.

Ber. I know thou art valiant; and, to the possibility of thy soldiership, will subscribe for thee.

Farewell.

Par. I love not many words.

[Exit.

1 Lord. No more than a fish loves water—is not this a strange fellow, my lord! that so confidently seems to undertake this business, which he knows is not to be done; damn his himself to do, and dare bet in a venture more than to do.'

2 Lord. You do not know him, my lord, as we do; certain it is, that he will steal himself into a man's favor, and, for a week, escape a great deal of discovery; when you find him out, you have him ever after.

Ber. Why, do you think he will make no deed at all of this, that so seriously he does address himself unto?

1 Lord. None in the world; but return with an invention, and clap upon you two or three probable lists; but we have almost enticed him: you shall see his face, sir, this night; for, indeed, he is not for your lordship's respect.

2 Lord. We'll make you some sport with the for, ere we caution him. He was first smothered by the old lord Latour: when his discourse and he is parted, tell me what, a sprat you shall find him; which you shall see this very night.

* The lines encomememt in \[ t \] i An Epithlap.

To enlise a dog is to enlise him in a wood.

Before we strip him naked.
Scene I.—All's Well That Ends Well.

1 Lord. I must go look my twigs; he shall be caught.

B. Your brother, he shall go along with me.

1 Lord. As't please your lordship: I'll leave you. [Exit.

Ber. Now will I lead you to the house, and show you the last I spoke of.

2 Lord. But, you say, she's honest.

Ber. That's all the fault: I spoke with her but once, and found her wondrous cold; but I sent to her, by this same cocconbe that we have 't the wind, tokens and letters which she did re-send; and this is all I have done: she's a fair creature;
Will you so see her?

2 Lord. With all my heart, my lord. [Exit.

Scene VII.—Florence. A Room in the Widow's House.

Enter Helena and Widow.

Hel. If you misdoubt me that I am not she,
I know not how I shall assure you further,
But shall lose the ground I would make upon you.
Wid. Though my estate be fallen, I was well born,
Nothing acquainted with these businesses;
And would not put my reputation now
In my staining act.

Hel. Nor would I wish you,
First, give me trust, the count he is my husband;
And what to your purpose I have spoken,
Is so, from word to word: and then you cannot,
By the good aid that I of you shall borrow,
Err in bestowing it.

I should believe you;
For you have shov'd me that, which well approves
You are great in fortune.

Hel. Take this purse of gold,
And let me buy your friendly help this far,
Which I will ever-pay, and pay again
When I have found it. The count he woos your daughter,
Lays down an ample siege before her beauty,
Resolves to carry her; let her, in fine, consent,
As we'll direct her how'tis best to bear it.
Now, his important blood will not easily deny
That shall she demand; that downward hath succeeded
In his house, from son to son, some four or five descents
Since the first father wore it; this ring he holds
In most rich clasp; yet in his idle fire,
To buy his will, it would not seem too dear,
Howard repenting after.

Wid. Now I see
The bottom of your purpose.

Hel. You see it lawful then: It is no more.
But that your daughter, ere she seems as won,
Desires this ring: appoints him an encounter;
In fine, delivers me to fill the time
Herself most chastely absent: after this,
To marry her, I'll add three thousand crowns
To that is past already.

Wid. I have yielded:
Instruct my daughter how she shall perserue.
That time and place, with this direct so lawful,
May prove as convenient. Every night comes
With musics of all sorts, and songs compos'd
To her unworthiness: it nothing steady's,
To chide him from our caves; for he persists,
As his life lay on.

Hel. Why then to-night
Let us assay our plot; which, if it speed,
Is wicked meaning in a lawful deed.
And lawful meaning in a lawful act,
Where both not sin, and yet a sinful fact:
But let's about it. [Exit.

Act IV.

Scene I.—Without the Florentine Camp.

Enter first Lord, with five or six soldiers in ambush.

1 Lord. He can come no other way but by this hedge corner: When you softly upon him, speak what terrible language you will: though you understand it not yourselves, no matter; for we must not seem to understand him; unless some one among us, whom we must produce for an interpreter.

1 Sold. Good captain, let me be the interpreter.

1 Lord. Art not acquainted with him? knows he not thy voice?

1 Sold. No, sir, I warrant you.

1 Lord. But what lousy-wooley hast thou to speak us again?

1 Sold. Even such as you speak to me.

1 Lord. He must think us some band of strangers if the adversary's entertainment. 2 Now he hath a smack of all neighboring languages; therefore we must every one be a man of his own fancy, not to know what we speak one to another; so we seem to know; it's to know straight our purpose: chough's language, gable enough, and good enough.
As for you, interpreter, you must seem very politic.
But couch, hold here he comes; to beguile him in a sleep, and then to return and swear the lies he forges.

Enter Parolles.

Par. Ten o'clock: within these three hours twill be time enough to go home. What shall I say I have done! It must be a very plausible invention that carries it: They begin to smoke me; and disguise is necessary. I am a late knocked-up door.
If I find, my tongue is too foolishly but my heart the fear of Mars before it, and of his creatures, not daring the reports of my tongue.

1 Lord. This is the first truth that ever thine own tongue was guilty of.

As'd.

Par. What the devil should move me to undertake the recovery of this drum; being not ignorant of the impossibility, and knowing I had no such purpose! I must give myself some hurts, and say,

* 104. Foreign troops in the enemy's pay.
* 105. A bird like a Jack-daw.

I cot them in exploit: Yet slight ones will not carry it: They will say, Came you off with so little! and great ones I dare not give. Wherefore, what's the instance? 1 Tongue, I must put you into a butter-woman's mouth, and buy another of Baja-set's mule, if you prattle me into these perils.

1 Lord. Is it possible, he should know what he is,
and be told in this wise? [Aside.

Par. Would the cutting of my garments would serve the turn; or the breaking of my Spanish sword might have a better effect.

1 Lord. We cannot afford you so. [Aside.

Par. Or the baring of my beard; and to say, it was in stragazing.

1 Lord. You should not do. [Aside.

Par. O' to drown my clothes, and say, I was stripped.

Lord. Hardly serve. [Aside

Par. Though I swore I leaped from the window of the citadel.

1 Lord. How deep? [Aside

Par. Thirty fathom.

1 Lord. Three great oaths would scarce make that be believed. [Aside.

Par. I would I had any drum of the enemy's,
I would swear I recovered it.

Par. A drum now of the enemy's! [Eclare within 1 Lord. Thence men are coming, cargo, cargo, cargo.

All cargo, cargo, villianda par cargo, cargo.
Par. If ransom, ransom.—Do not hide mine eyes. [They seize him, and blindfold him.

1 Sold. Baskos tromuldo baskos, Par. I know you are the Muskos' regiment.
And I shall lose my life for want of language:
If there be here German, or Dane, low Dutch,
Italian, or French, let him speak to me,
I will discover that which shall undo
The Floretine.

1 Sold. Baskos varrudo:—

Par. I understand thee, and can speak thy tongue:—

Kercipbouo —Sir:—

Let take thee to thy faith, for seventeen puniards
Are at thy bosom.

ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

Par. Oh! 1. Sold. O, pray pray, pray.—
Manko verania duiche.

1. Lord. Oscorbi dulcios veloxerat.
1. Sold. The general is content to spare thee yet; And I'll have thee in, as thou wilt have thee on. To gather from thee: happily, thou mayst inform Something to save thy life.

Par. O, let me live, And all the secrets of our camp I'll show, Their force, their purposes: may, I'll speak that Which you will wonder at.
1. Sold. But will thou faithfully? 1. Par If I do not, damn me.
Come on, thou art granted space.

Enter his council, with PAROLLES guarded.

1. Lord. Go, tell the count Rosaline, and my brother.
We have caught the woodcock, and will keep him uniled.
Till we do hear from them.

2. Sold. Captain, I will.
1. Lord. He will betray us all unto ourselves—
Inform them that.

2. Sold. So I will, sir.
1. Lord. Till then, I'll keep him dark, and safely lock'd. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Florence. A Room in the Widow's House.

Enter BERTRAND and DIANA.

Ber. They told me, that your name was Fontefell.
Diu. No, my good lord, Diana.

Ber. And worth it, with addition! But, forlorn,
In your live frame hath love no quality?
If the quick fire of youth light not your mind,
You are no maiden, but it monument:
When you are dead, you should be known the one
As you are now, for you are cold and stern;
And now you should be as your mother was,
When your sweet self was got.
Diu. She then was honest.

Ber. So should you be. No.

My mother did but duty: such, my lord,
As you owe to your wife.

Ber. No more of that! I pray thee, do not strive against my vows:
I was compell'd to her; but I love thee,
By love's own sweet constraint, and will for ever
Do thee all rights of service.

Diu. Ay, so serve you; but when you have our roses,
You barely leave our thorns to prick ourselves,
And mock us with our bareness.

Ber. How have I sworn! 1. Diu. Tis not thy many oaths that make the truth:
But the plain simple vow, that is vow'd true.
What is not holy, that we swear not by,
But take the highest to witness: then, pray you,
If I should swear by Jove's great attributes,
I lov'd you dearly, would you believe my oaths,
When I did love you ill! this has no holding,
To swear by him whom I protest to love,
That I will work against him: Therefore, your oath
Are words and poor conditions; but unseal'd;
At least, in my opinion.

Ber. Change it, change it; Be not so holy-cruel; love is holy;
And my integrity n'er knew the crafts,
That you do charge men with! Stand no more off,
But give thyself into my sick desires.
Who then recover: say, thou art mine, and ever
My love, as it begins, shall so persevere.

Diu. I see, that not my hopes, in such affairs,
That we'll formake ourselves. Give me that ring.

Ber. I'll lend thee it, my dear, but have no power
To give it from me.

Diu. Will you not, my lord? 1. Ber. It is an honor belonging to our house,
Bequested down from many ancestors;
Which were the greatest obloquy the world
In me to lose.

Diu. Mine honor's such a ring:
My charity's the jewel of our house,
Bequested down from many ancestors;

Which were the greatest obloquy the world
In me to lose.

To whom the greatest obloquy the world
In me to lose.

Diu. Mine honor's such a ring:
My charity's the jewel of our house,
Bequested down from many ancestors;

Which were the greatest obloquy the world
In me to lose.
...and her. All's muffled! Sold. The third. I know, if I am this mean, half will be - Sold. the death; if I were to live, I have this moment to speak. He is, in all the world. the master, of a hundred and fifty, Sebastian so many, Coriolanus so many; Gullion, Cosmo, Lodowick, and Grant, two hundred and fifty each; mine own company, Chichester, Vauaund, Benti, two hundred and fifty each: so that the master, in life, rotten and sound, upon my life, amounts not to fifteen thousand gold: half of which dare not shake the snow from off their cassocks; lest they shake themselves to pieces.

Ber. What can he believe to him?

1 Lord. Nothing but let him have thanks. Demand of him my conditions, and what credit I have with the duke.

1 Sold. Well, that's set down. You shall demand of him whether one Captain Daumain be the was but, what his reputation is with the duke, what his valour, honesty, and experience, is it or is it not, that he was amongst the lesser and between these two names scattered, equal to the weight of the minds of God, to corrupt him for ever. What say you to this? What do you know of it?

Par. I beseech you, let me answer to the particular of the interrogatories: Demand them singly.

1 Sold. Do you know this chant Daumain?

Par. I know him; he was a beadle's prentice in Paris, from whence he was whipped for getting the sheriff's fool with child; a durnb innocent, that could not say him, nay.

Ber. Nay, by your leave, hold your tongue; though I know, his brains are forfeit to the next tile that falls.

1 Sold. Well, is this the captain in the duke of Florence's camp?

Par. I pen my knowledge, he is, and haviourly. Lord, Nay, look not so upon me; we shall hear of your lordship, most modestly, and the patience to hear it.

1 Sold. What is the reputation with the duke?

Par. The duke knows him from no other but a poor officer of mine; and will to me the other day, to turn him out of the hand: I think I have his letter in my pocket.

1 Sold. Marrs, we'll search.

Par. In good sadness, I do not know; either it is there, or it is upon a slip, with the duke's other letters in my tent.

1 Sold. Here's tis; here's a paper. Shall I read it to you?

Par. I do not know if it be it or no.

Ber. Our interpreter does it well.

1 Lord. Excellently.
2 Sold. Dan. The count's a fool, and full of gold. Par. That is not the duke's letter, sir; that is an argument to a proper man and one, Diane, to take heed of the allurements of one count Rousillon, a foolish idle boy, but, for all that, very rutilish; I pray you, sir, put it up again.
3 Lord. Nor that, but by your favor.
Par. My meaning int', I protest, was very honest in the behalf of the maid; for I knew the young count to be a dangerous and lascivious boy: who is a whelp to virginity, and devours up all the try it finds.
Ber. Damnable, both sides rogue!
1 Sold. When he sweats oaths, bet him drop gold, and take it: After he scores he never pays the score; Half won, is match well made; match, and well make it. We're past pages after deals, take it before; And say a soldier, Dan, told thee this, Men are to well with, boys are not to kiss.
Par. For count of this, the count of a foot, I know it. Who pays before, but when he does once it. Taint, as he could to thee in thine ear, Parolles. Ber. He shall be whipped through the army, with this rhyme in his forehead.
2 Lord. This is your devoted friend, sir, the manchild linguis, and the armament soldier.
3 Lord. And make them a thing before but a cat, and now he's a cat to me.
1 Sold. I perceive, sir, by the general's looks, we shall be fain to hang you.
Ber. My Lord, or in any case; not that I am afraid to die; but that, my offences being many, I would repunt out the remainder of nature: let me live, sir, in a dungeon, if the stock's, or any where, so I may live.
2 Sold. We'll see what may be done, so you confess freely; therefore, once more to this captain Duman. You have answered to his repetition with the thing very bragging to his wit; What is his honesty.
Par. He will steal, sir, an egg out of a clasper, for rapes and ravishments he parallels Nessus; He proves out of shame, and in breaking them, he is stronger than Hercules. He will lie, sir, with such volubility, that you would think truth were a fowl; drums comes; it is his virtue; for he will be sworn-drunk; and in his sleep he does little harm; save to his bed-clothes about him; but they know his conditions, and by him in straw. I have but little more to say, sir, of his honesty: he has every man from that an honest man may not have; what an honest man should have, he has nothing.
1 Lord. I begin to love him for this. Ber. For this description of thine honesty! A parrot's words more surely; shall he know, that a cat, for his chaff.
2 Sold. What say you to his expertise in war! Par. Youth, sir, he has led the drum before the English tragedians— to belpe him, I will not,—and more of his soldierly I know not; except, in that country he had the honor to be the officer at a place there called Miloseul, to instruct for the doubling of nes; I would do the man what honor I can, but this I am not certain.
1 Lord. He hath out-villainied villainy so far, that the rarity redeems him.
Ber. A patch on him, he's a cat still.
2 Sold. His qualities being at this poor price, I need not ask you, if gold will corrupt him to revoke.
Ner. Sir, far a quair d'ceut, he will sell the fes- simples of his salvation, the inheritance of it; and cut the entail from all remainders, and a perpetual succession for it perpetually.
1 Sold. What's his brother, the other captain Duman?
2 Lord. Why does he ask him of me?
3 Sold. What's he?
Par. He's the brother of the same nest; not altogether so great as the first in goodness, but greater a great deal in evil. He excels his brother for a coward, yet his brother is reputed one of the best that is. In it he returns any lackey; marry, in coming on he los the eramp.
1 Sold. If your life he saved, will you undertake to betray the Florentine?

Par. Ay, and the captain of his horse, count Rousillon.
1 Sold. I'll whisper with the general, and know his piece.
Par. I'll no more drumming: a plague of all drums! only to seem to deserve well, and to beguile the supposition of that lascivious young boy, the count, and to run into this danger: you would have suspected an ambush where I was taken! [Aside.]
1 Sold. There is no remedy, sir, but you must die: the general says, you that have so trariously discovered the secrets of your army, and made such pestiferous reports of men very nobly held, can for no more reasons than honesty, that you must die. Come, headman, with his head.
Par. O Lord, sir; let me live, or let me see my death.
1 Sold. That shall you, and take your leave of all your friends. [Unmeanfully him.] So, look about you; know you any here!
Ber. Good morrow, noble captain.
2 Lord. God bless you, captain Parolles.
1 Lord. God save you, noble captain.
2 Lord. Captain, what greeting will you to my lord Laen? I am for France.
1 Lord. Lord, captain, well you give me a copy of the sonnet you writ to Diana in behalf of the count Rousillon; and I was not a very cowardy, I'd compel it of you; but fare you well.
[Exit.]

Par. Yet am I thankful: if my heart were,
Two words might be good: but I'll not;
I'll be a man of more dignity,
As captain shall: simply the thing I am
Shall make me live.
Who knows himself a braggart,
Let him fear this; for it will come to pass,
That every braggart shall be found an ass.

Rust, sword! cool, blushed! and, Parolles, live
Saistest in shame! being fool'd, by foolery thrive!
There's place, and means, for every man alive.

SCENE V. —Rosillion. A Room in the Countess’s Palace.

Enter Countess, Lafeu, and Clown.

Lafeu. No, no, your son was misled with a snip, talked to his aton; whose villous sallamon would have made all the unbaked and dry stuff of a nation in his color: your daughter-in-law had been alive at this hour: and your son here at home, more advanced in my thinking, than by that red-tailed hum-ble-bee I speak of.

Count. I would, I had not known him! it was the death of the most virtuous gentlewoman that ever nature had praise for creating: if she had partaken of my flesh, and cost me the dearest grains of a mother, I could not have owed her a more rooted love.

Lafeu. I was a good lady, ’twas a good lady: we may pick a thousand salad, cress we light on such another herb.

Count. Indeed, sir, she was the sweet-marjoram of the salammon, and, or, rather, the herb of grace.

Lafeu. They are not salad-herbs, you know, they are rose-herbs.

Count. To no great Nebuchadnezzar, sir, I have not much skill in grass.

Lafeu. Whether dot thou profess thyself; a knave or a fool.

Count. A fool, sir, at a woman’s service, and a knave at a man’s.

Lafeu. Your distinction?

Count. I would cozen the man of his wife, and do his service.

Lafeu. So you were a knave at his service, indeed.

Count. And I would give his wife my bauble, sir, to do her service.

Lafeu. I will subscribe for thee; thou art both knave and fool.

Count. At your service.

Lafeu. No, no, no.

Count. Why, sir, if I cannot serve you, I can serve as great a prince as you are.

Lafeu. Who’s that? a Frenchman!

Count. Faith, sir, he has an English name; but his profession is more honest in France, than there.

Lafeu. What prince is that?

Count. The black prince, sir; alas, the prince of darkness; at the devil.

Lafeu. Hold there, there’s my purse; I give thee not this to suggest thee from thy master thou talkest of; serve him still.

Count. I am a woodland fellow, sir, that always loved a great fire: and the master I speak of, ever keeps a good fire. But sure, he is the prince of the world, let him pretend in his court. I am for the house with the narrow gate, which I take to be too little for pomp to enter: some, that humble themselves, may; but the many will be too tall and tender; and they be for the lowery way, that leads to the broad gate, and the great fire.

Lafeu. Go thy ways, I begin to be a weary of thee, and I tell thee so before, because I would not fall out with thee. Go thy ways; let my horses be well looked to, without any tricks.

Count. If I put any tricks upon thee, sir, they shall be jades’ tricks; which are their own right by the law of nature.

Lafeu. A shrewed knave, and an unhappy.

Count. So be it. My lord, that’s gone, made himself much sport out of him; by his authority he remains here, which he thinks is his patron for his sauciness; and, indeed, he has no pace, but runs where he will.

Lafeu. I like him well; ’tis not amiss: and I was about to tell you. Since I heard of the good lady’s death, and that my lord your son was upon his home, I moved the king my master, to speak in the behalf of my daughter: which in the minor-ity of them both, his majesty, out of a self-gracious remembrance, did first propose: his hunchness hath promised me to do it; and, to stop up the displeasure he hath against you, in the wise, there is no filler matter. How does your ladyship like at it?

Count. With very much content, my lord, and I wish it happily effected.

Lafeu. His horse’s cases post from Marseilles, of as able body as when he numbered thirty; he will be here to-morrow, or I am deceived by him that in such intelligence hath seldom failed.

Count. It rejubes me; I hope I shall see him ere I die. I have letters, that my son will be here to-night: I shall beseech your lordship, to remain with me till they meet together.

Lafeu. Madam, I was thinking, with what manners I might safely be admitted.

Count. You need but plead your honorable privilege.

Lafeu. Lady, of that I have made a bold character; but, I thank my God, it holds yet.

Re-enter Clown.

Count. O madam yonder’s my lord your son with a patch of velvet on his face: whether there be a scar under it, or not, the velvet knows; but us a goodly patch of velvet: his left cheek is a patch of two pyle and a half, but his right cheek is worn bare.

Lafeu. A scar nobly got, or a noble scar, is a good livery of honor: I say, there is that.

Count. But it is your carbuncle’s face.

Lafeu. Let us see your son. I pray you; I long to talk with the young noble soldier.

Count. Faith, there’s a dozen of er, with delicate fine hats, and most courteous feathers, which bow the head and nod at every man.

SCENE I.—Marresilles. A Street.

Enter Helena, Widow, and Diana, with two Attendants.

Hel. But this exceeding posting, day and night, May wear your spirits low: we cannot help it: But since you have made the days as minutes as one, To wear your gentle limbs in my affairs, Be bold, you do so grow in my requital, As nothing can unroot you. In happy time; —

Enter a gentle Astringer.

This man may help me to his majesty’s ear, If he would spend his power—god save you, sir. God. And you.

Hel. Sir, I have seen you in the court of France.

God. I have been sometimes there.

From the report that goes upon your goodness; And therefore, goaded with most sharp occasions, Which by nice manners by, I put you to The use of your abilities, for which I shall continue thankful.

God. What’s your will?

Hel. That it will please you To give this poor petition to the king, And aid me with that share of power you have, To come into his presence.

God. The king’s not here.

Hel. Not here, sir?

God. Not, indeed.

Hel. He hence remov’d last night, and with more haste Than is his use.

Helt. I do beseech you sir,

Clo. Truly, fortune's displeasure is but sluttish,
If it smell so strong as thou speakest of: I will therefore eat no fish of fortune's buttering—
Pray thee, allow the word.
Par. Nay, you need not stop your nose, sir; I spake but by a metaphor.
Clo. Indeed, sir, if your metaphor stink, I will stop my nose; or against any man's metaphor—
Pray then, get thee further.
Par. Pray you, sir, deliver me this paper.
Clo. Foh! pray thee, stand away: A payer from fortune's close-stool to give to a homely man! Look, he comes himself.

Exeunt Clown and Paroles.

Par. Good monsieur Lavatch, give my lord LaFen this letter: I have, ere now, sir, been better known to you, when I have held familiarity with fresher lovers; but I am now, sir, in just the same state as I was then. The good that is lost, is lost.

Scene III.

ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

Ber. Here it was not. I am afraid, the lie of Helen, lady, was no such snare.
Count. Now, justice on the doors! Eenter BERTRAM, guarded.

King. I wonder, sir, since wives are monsters to you, and that you fly them as you swear them lordship, yet you desire to marry.—What woman's that?
Re-enter Gentleman, with WIDOW and DIANA.
Dian. I am, my lord, a wretched Florentine, derived from the ancient Capulet; my suit, as I do understand, you know, and therefore you know I may be pitied.
Ber. I am her mother, sir, whose age and honor both suffer under this complaint we bring, and both shall cease, without your remedy.
King. Come, hidler, count: Do you know these women?
Ber. My lord, I neither can, nor will deny but that I know them: Do they charme me further?
Dian. Why do you look a substance upon your wife?
Ber. She's none of mine, my lord.
Dian. If you shall marry, you must give away this hand, and that is mine; you give away heaven's own vows and myself is mine; you give away yourself, which I own mine; for I by vow am so embodied yours, that she, which I reserve you, must marry me, either both or none.
Laf. Your reputation [To BERTRAM] comes too short for my daughter; you are no husband for her.
Ber. My lord, this is a fand and desperate creature, whom sometime I have laugh'd with: Let your highness lay a more noble thought upon mine honor.
Laf. Than for to think that I would sink it here.
King. Sir, for my thoughts, you have them ill to friend, till your deeds gain them: Fairer prove your honor, than in my thought it lies!
Dian. Good my lord, ask him upon his oath, if he doth think he had not my virginity.
King. What sayest thou to her?
Ber. She's impudent, my lord, and was a common gamester to the camp.
Dian. He does me wrong, my lord; if I were so, he might have bought me at a common price: Do not believe him: O, behold this ring, whose high respect, and chargeable value, Did lack a parallel; yet, for all that, he give it to a compeer of the camp, if I be one.
Count. He brushes, and 'tis it: Of six preceding ancestors, that gem Contended by testament to the subsequent issue, Hath it been worn and worn. This is his wife; That ring's a thousand proofs: Methought, you said, you saw one here in court could witness it.
Dian. I did, my lord, but heath am to produce
So bad an instrument, but mine's fairer.
Laf. I saw the man to-day, if man he be.
King. Find him, and bring him hither.
Ber. What of him? He's quoted for a most perfidious wretch.
With all the spots o' the world tax'd and debase'd: Whose nature sickens, but to speak a truth: Am I or that, or this, what he'll utter, that will speak any thing?
King. She hath that ring of yours.
Ber. I think she has; certain it is, I liked her, and hearded her, if the wanton way of youth: She knew her distance, and did angle for me, Maddening my cærseness with her restraint, As all impediments in fancy's course Are motives of more regard, in, as her insuit coming with her modern grace, Subdued me to her rate: she got the ring And I had that, which any inferior might At market price have bought.
Laf. Because, die.
Count. As gamester, when applied to a female, then meant a common woman.
Ber. Debauch'd.
Laf. Her solicitation concurring with her appearance of being common.
Diar. | I must be patient
You that turn'd off a first so noble wife,
May justly det me. I pray you yet,
(Since you lack virtue, I will lose a husband.)
Send for your ring, I will return it home,
And give me mine again.
Ber. | I have it not.
Kinf. | What ring was yours, I pray you?
Diar. | Sir, much like
The same upon your finger.
Kinf. | Know you this ring? This ring was his of late.
Diar. | And this it was I gave him, being a-loved.
Kinf. | The story then goes false, you tire it him
Out of a casement.
Diar. | I have spoke the truth.

Enter PAROLLES.
Ber. | My lord, I do confess, the ring was hers.
Kinf. | You boggle shrewdly, every feather starts
you.
Is this the man you speak of?
Diar. | Ay, my lord.
Kinf. | Tell me, sirrah, but tell me true, I charge
you.
Not fearing the displeasure of your master,
(Which, on your just proceeding, I'll keep off.)
By him, and by this woman here, what know you?
Pur. | So please your majesty, my master had been an honorable gentleman; tricks he hath had in him, which gentlemen have.
Kinf. | Come, come, to the purpose: Did he love
this woman?
Pur. | Faith, sir, he did love her; but how?
Kinf. | How. I pray you!
Pur. | He did love her, sir, as a gentleman loves a woman.
Kinf. | How is that?
Pur. | He loved her, sir, and loved her not.
Kinf. | As thou art a knave, and no knave:—
What an equivocal companion is this?
Pur. | I am a poor man, and at your majesty's command.
Lof. | He's a good drum, my lord, but a naughty oracle.
Diar. | Do you know, he promised me marriage?
Pur. | Faith, I know more than I'll speak.
Kinf. | But wilt thou not speak all thou knowest?
Pur. | Yes, so please your majesty; I did go between them, as I said: but more than that, he loved her,—for indeed he was mad for her, and thanked of Satan, and of limbo, and of furies, and I know not what; yet I was in that credit with them at that time, that I knew of their going to bed;
and of other motions, as promising her marriage, and things that would derive me till I will to speak of,
therefore I will not speak what I know.
Kinf. | Thou hast spoken all already, unless thou canst say they are married: but then art too fine in thy evidence; therefore stand aside.—
This ring, you say, was yours?
Diar. | Ay, my good lord.
Kinf. | Where did you buy it? or who gave it you?
Diar. | It was not given me, nor do I did not buy it.
Kinf. | Who lent it you?
Diar. | It was not lent me neither.
Kinf. | Where did you find it then?
Diar. | I found it not.
Kinf. | If it were yours by none of all these ways,
How could you give it him?
Diar. | I never gave it him.
Kinf. | This woman's an easy glove, my lord; she goes off and on at pleasure.
Diar. | This ring was mine, I gave it his first wife.
Diar. | It might be yours or hers for aught I know.
Kinf. | This take away, I do not like her now:
To prison with her, and away with him.—

Unless thou tell'st me where thou hast this ring;
Thou diest within this hour.
Diar. | I'll never tell you.
Kinf. | Take her away.
Diar. | I'll put in bail, my liege.
Kinf. | I think thee now some common customer
Diar. | By Jove, if ever I knew man, twas you.
Kinf. | Wherewith hast thou accused him all this hour?
Diar. | Because he's guilty, and he is not guilty:
He knows I am no mad, and he'll swear to t.
I'll swear I am a mad, and he knows not.
Great king, I am no strumpet, by my life;
I am either mad, or else this old man's wife.

[Pointing to LAFLEUR.]
Kinf. | She does abuse our ears; to prison with
Diar. | Good mother, fetch my bail.—Say, royalsir;
[Exit Widow.
The jeweler, that owes the ring, is sent for,
And he shall surety. But for this lord,
Who hath abused me, as he knows himself,
Though yet he never harm'd me, here I quit him:
He knows himself, my bed he hath defil'd;
And at that time he got his wife with child;
Dead though she be, she feels her young one kick,
So there's my riddle, one, that's dead, is quick:
And now behold the meaning.

Re-enter Widow, with HELENA.
Kinf. | Is there no exorcist
Besides the truer office of mine eyes?
It's real, that I see!—
Hel. | No, my good lord;
'Tis but the shadow of a wife you see,
The name, and not the thing.
Ber. | Both, both; O, pardon!
Hel. | O, my good lord, when I was like this maid,
I found you wondrous kind. There is your ring,
And, look you, here's your letter: This it says,
When from my finger you can get this ring,
And are by me with child, &c.—This is done:
Will you be mine, now you are doubly won?
Ber. | If she, my liege, can make me know this clearly,
I'll love her dearly, ever dearly.
Hel. | If it appear not plain, and prove untrue,
Deadly divorce step between me and you!—
O, my dear mother, do I see you here?
Lof. | Mine eyes smell onions, I shall weep anon;
Good Tom Drum, [To PAROLLES], lend me a handkerchief; So, I thank thee; wait on me home, I'll make sport with thee: Let thy courtesies alone,
They are sevyne ous.
Kinf. | Let us from point to point this story know,
To make the even truth in pleasure flow:
If thou best yet a fresh uncropted flower,
[To DIANA.
Choose thou thy husband, and I'll pay thy dower;
For I can guess, that, by thy honest aid,
Thou kest:' a wife herself, thyself a maid.—
Of that, and all the progress, more and less,
Resolvedly more leisure shall express;
All yet seems well, and if it end so meet,
The latter past, more welcome is the sweet.

[Exeunt.

Advancing.

The king's a beggar, now the play is done:
All is well ended, if this suit be you,
That you express content; which we will pay,
With stirs to please you, day ensuing day.
Ours be your patience, then, and yours our parts;1
Your gentle hands lend us, and take our hearts.

[Exeunt.

1 Owes. | t. e. Take our parts, support and defend his.

INDUCTION.

SCENE I.—Before an alehouse on a heath.

Enter Hostess and Sly.

Sly. I'll phrase 'tou, you, in faith.
Host. A pair of stocks, you rogue!
Sly. Y'are a baggage; the Slys are no rogues.
Look in the chronicles, we came in with Richard Conqueror. Therefore pass these paltriness; let the world side: See! ?
Host. You will not pay for the glasses you have burst!
Sly. No, not a denier: Go by, says Jeronimo;—
Go to thy cold bed, and warm thee.
Host. I know my remedy; I must go fetch the third borough,
Sly. Third, or fourth, or fifth borough. 1 shall answer him by law: I'll not budge an inch, boy; let him come, and kindly.
[Dies down on the ground, and falls asleep.

Wind blows. Enter a Lord from hunting, with Huntsman and Servants.

Lord. Huntsman, I charge thee, tender well my hounds!
Brach: Merriman,—the poor cur is embossed,—
And couple clover with the deep-mouthed brach.
Sawst thou not, boy, how Silver made it good.
At the hedge corner, in the coldest frost?
I would not lose the dog for twenty pound.
1. Hunt. Why, Belman is as good as he, my lord;
He cried upon it at the nearest loss,
And twice today picked out the dullest scent:—
Trust me, I take him for the better dog.
Lord. Thou art a fool; if Echo were as fleet,
I would esteem him worth a dozen such.
But say them well, and look unto them all;
To morrow I intend to hunt again.
1. Hunt. I will, my lord.
Lord. What's here? One dead, or drunk? See, doth he breathe?
2. Hunt. He breathes, my lord: Were he not Warm'd with ale.
This was a bed but cold to sleep so soundly.
Lord. O monstros beast! how like a swine he lies!
Grime death, how foul and boathsome is thine image!
Sirs, I will practise on this drunken man,—
What think you, if he were convey'd to bed,
Wrapped in sweet clothes, rings put upon his fingers,
A most delicious banquet by his bed,
1. Beat or knock. 2 Few words. 3 Be quiet. 4 This line and word in Spanish is used in burlesque from an old play called Hieronymo or the Spanish Tragedy.
5 An officer whose authority equals that of a constable. 6 Ditch. 7 Strained.

And brave attendants near him when he wakes,
Would not the beggar then forget himself?
2. Hunt. It would seem strange unto him when he wak'd.
Lord. Even as a flattering dream, or worthless fancy.
Then take him up, and manage well the jest:—
Cry him gently to my fairest chamber,
And hang it round with all my wonton pictures:
Balm his foul head with warm distilled waters,
And burn sweet wood to make the lodging sweet.
Procure me music ready when he wakes,
To make a duet and a heavenly sound;
And let he chance to speak, be ready straight,
And, with a low submissive reverence,
Say,—What is it your honor will command?
Let one attend him with a silver bason,
Full of rose-water, and bestrew'd with flowers;
Another bear the euer, the third a diaper,
And say,—Will't please your lordship cool your hands?
Some one be ready with a costly suit,
And ask him what apparel he will wear;
Another tell him of his hounds and horse,
And that his lady mourns at his disease;
Persuade him that he hath been lunatic;
And, when he says he is,—say that he dreams,
For he is nothing but a mighty lord.
This do, and do it kindly, gentle sir;
It will be pastime passing excellent,
If it be handfasted with modesty. 1
1. Hunt. My lord, I warrant you, we'll play our part.
As he shall think, by our true diligence,
He is no less than what we say he is.
Lord. Take him up gently, and to bed with him,
And each one to his office when he wakes.—
[Some bear out Sly. A trumpett sounds.
Sirrah, go see what trumpett 'tis that sounds:—
[Exit Servant.
Belike, some noble gentleman; that means,
Traveling some journey, to repose him here.—

Re-enter a Servant.

How now? who is it?
Sirs. Players that offer service to your lordship.
Lord. But them come near:—

Enter Players.

Now, fellows, you are welcome.
1. Play. We thank your honor.
Lord. Do you intend to stay with me to-night?
2. Play. So please your lordship to accept our duty
6 Moderation.
by birth a pedlar, by education a card-maker, by transmutation a bear-baiter, and now a present profession a tinker! Ask Marzen Hacket, the fat alewife of Winchot, if she know me not: if she say I am not fourteen pence on the score for sheet ale, or ask her by name. I come no more for the nearest knave in Christendom.

What, I am not bestraught? Here's—

1 Serv. 0, this is it that makes your lady mourn.
2 Serv. O, this it is that makes your servants wonder.

Lord. Hence comes it that your kindred shun your house.

As beauteous by your strange infancy.

0, noble lord, be thankful of thy birth!

Call home thy ancient thoughts from banishment,

And banish hence these object lovelv dreams:

Look, and observe how they do attend thee,

Each in his office ready at thy beck.

Wilt thou have music? bark! Apollo plays.

[Music.

And twenty caged nightingales do sing:

Or wilt thou sleep? we'll have thee to a couch,

Sofer and sweeter than the lustful bed

On purpose trimm'd up for Semiramis.

Say, thou wilt walk; we will bestrew the ground:

Or wilt thou ride! thy horses shall be trap'd,

Their harness stuffed all with gold and pearl.

Dost thou love hawking! thou hast hawks will soar

Above the bounding hawk's, thy hand shall droop.

Thy hounds shall make the wellkin answer them,

And fetch shrill echoes from the hollow earth.

1 Serv. Say, thou wilt course; thy greyhounds

As before stags, ay, fester than the roe.

2 Serv. Dost thou love pictures? we will fetch

Thee there straight!

Adonis, painted by a running brook:

And Cytherea all in sedges hid;

Which seem to move and wander with her breath,

Even as the waving sedges play with wind.

Lord. I shall shun thee, as she was a maid;

And how she was bewildered and surpris'd,

As lively painted as the deed was done.

3 Serv. Or Daphne, running through a thorny

Scratching her legs that one shall swear she bleeds:

And at that sight shall said Apollo weep,

So worketh the blood and tears are drawn.

Lord. Thou art a lord, and nothing but a lord:

Thou hast a lady far more beautiful

Than any woman in this waning age.

1 Serv. Shall, till the tears that she had shed for thee,

Like envious floods, o'er-run her lovely face.

She was the fairest creature in the world;

And she is inferior to none.

Sly. Am I a lord? and have I such a lady?

Or do I dream? or have I dream'd till now?

I do not sleep; I see, I hear, I speak;

I am in my senses; and I feel all things:

Upon my life, I am a lord, indeed;

And not a tinker, nor Cristopher Sly.—

Well, bring our lady hither to our sight:

And more anon, a pot of the smallest ale.

2 Serv. Will ye please your mightiness to wash

Your hands?

Servants present on ever, basin and napkin.

O, how we will see you in thy restor'd

O, that once more you knew but what you are!

These fifteen years, you have been in a dream;

Or, when you wak'd, so wak'd as if you slept.

Now, gentlemen, I am a gentleman by my bay, a goodly nap.

But did I never speak of all that time?

1 Serv. O, yes, my lord; but very idle words:—

For though you lay here in this goodly chamber,

Yet you were never so much as to look through the door;

And raii upon the hostess of the house;

And say, you would present her at the feet,

Because she brought stone jars and moss'd d'quarts.

Sometimes you should call out have no stock;

Serv. Aye, the woman's maid of the house.

3 Serv. Why, sir, you know no house, nor no

Nor no such men, as you have reck't on:—

As Stephen Sly, and old John Naps of Greece,

And Peter Torr, and Henry Pipermell;

And twenty more such names and men as these,

Which never were, nor no man ever saw.

Sly. Now, Lord be thanked for my good amends;

Distracted.

Court-leet.
For how I firmly am resolved you know; that is, not to bestow my youngest daughter, before I have a husband for the elder: if either of you both love Katharine, because I know you well, and love you well, you shall have to court her at your pleasure. To make a state of me amongst these mates! Hor. Mates, madam! how mean you that! no mates for you, unless you were of gentler, milder mould. Kath. I faith, sir, you shall never need to fear; I wish it is not half way to her heart: but, if it were, doubt not her care should be to comb your nozzle with a three-legged spool, and paint your face, and use you like a fool. Hor. From all such devils, good Lord, deliver us! Kath. And me, too, good Lord! Tranio. Hugh, master! here is some good pastime toward; that wench is stark mad, or wonderful froward. Luc. But in the other's silence I do see Maid's mild behavior and sobriety. Peace, Tranio. Tranio. Well said, master: mum! and gaze your fill. Bap. Gentlemen, that I may soon make good What I have said.—Bianca, get you in: and let it not displease thee, good Bianca; For I will love thee never the less, my girl. Kath. A pretty plot! 'tis best Put finger in the eye,—an she knew why. Biana. Sister, content you in my discontent— Sir, to your pleasure humbly I subscribe; My books, my instruments shall be my company; On them to look, and practice by myself. Luc. Hark, Tranio! thou mayst hear Minerva speak: [Aside. Hor. Signor Baptista, wilt thou be so strange! Sorry am I, that our good will effects Bianca's grief. Grat. Why will you weep, her up, Signor Baptista, for this kind of hell, And make her bear the penance of her tongue?— Bap. Gentlemen, content ye; I am resolved— Go in, Bianca. [Aside. Exit Bianca. And for I know, she taketh most delight In music, instruments, and poetry, Schoolmasters will I keep within my house To instruct her youth. If you, Hortensio, Signor Gremio, you know any such Prefer them hither; for to cunning men I will be very kind, and liberal To mine own children in good bring up;
And therefore has he closely mewed her up,
Because she shall not be annoy’d with suitors.
Luc. Ah, Tranio, what a cruel father’s he!
But all thou not advised, he took some care
To give thee (not a fit one) to instruct her.
Tra. Ay, marry, an I, sir; and now this plotted.
Luc. I have it, Tranio.
Tra. Master, for my hand,
Keep your inventions meet and jump in one.
Luc. Tell me thine first.
Tra. You will be schoolmaster
And undertake the teaching of the maid:
That’s thy device.
Luc. It is: May it be done?
Tra. Not possible: For who shall bear your part,
And be in Padua here Vincenzo’s son?
Keep your books, sir; take your welcome friends,
Visit his countrymen, and banquet them!
Luc. Basta! content thee; for I have it full.
We yet have been often in my lady’s house.
Luc. Marry, sir, to get a husband for her sister.
Gre. A husband! a devil.
Luc. I say, a husband.
Gre. I say, a devil: Think’st thou, Hortensio, though her father be very rich, any man is so very a fool to be married to her?
Hor. Tush, Gremio; though it pass your patience,
And mine, for this and many other reasons;
yet, what’tis, poor fellow, in the world, man, there be good fellows in the world; an any man could light on them, would take with her all faults, and money enough.
Gre. Why, that’s true, tell; but I had as lief take her dowry with this condition,—to be whipt at the high-cross, every morning.
Hor. Faith as you say, there’s small choice in round apples. But, come! since this bar in law makes us friends, it shall be so far forth friendly maintained,—till by helping Baptista’s eldest daughter to a husband, we set his youngest free for a husband, and then have to airesh.—Sweet Bianca!—Happy man be his dole. How say you, signor Gremio?
Hor. I am assured; and would I had given him the best horse in Padua to begin his wooing, that would thoroughly woo her, wed her, and bed her, and rid the house of her. Come on.

Enter Gremio and Hortensio.

Tra. [Advancing.] I pray, sir, tell me,—is it possible
That love of a sudden take such hold?
Luc. O Tranio, till I found it to be true,
I never thought it possible, or likely; But see! while only I stood looking on,
I found the effect of love in madness; For, when I spoke to a plain youth, and asked him whether he had seen me,
That art to me as secret, and as dear,
As Anna to the queen of Carthage was,—
Tra. Tell me, I am sure, I am marvilled.
Gre. I am sure, I am sure, I am marvilled.
If I achieve not this young modest girl:
Counsel me, Tranio, for I know thou canst,
Assist me, Tranio, for I know thou wilt.
Tra. What is it now, I pray thee chuse now;
Affection is not rated from the heart:
If love have touched you, nought remains but so—
Redimite te captura quam quos mihid.
Luc. Gremio, go forward: this contains;
The rest will comfort, for thy counsel’s sound.
Tra. Master, you look’d so longly on the maid,
Perhaps you mark’d not what’s the pith of all.
Luc. You take a sweet beauty, sir, for face,
Such as the daughter of Agemem had,
That made great Jove toumbles him to her hand,
When with his knees he kissed the Cretan strand.
Gre. Say you no more? mark’d you not how, her sister
Began to scoot, and raise up such a storm,
That no man could in the world end it?
Luc. Tranio, I saw her coral lips to move,
And with her breath she did perfume the air;
That sacred and sweet was all I saw in her.
Gre. Nay, then, I dare not strive with his trance.
Luc. I pray awake, sir; if you love the maid,
Bend thoughts and wits to achieve her. Thus it stands:
Her oldest sister is so curt and shrueful,
That, till the father rid his hands of her,
Master, your love must live a maid at home;
E endorsements. *consideration. *gain or lot.
Scene II. TAMING OF THE SHREW.

My best beloved and approved friend, Hortensio; and, I trow, this is his house:—
Here, sirrah Grumio: knock, I say.
Hort. Knock, sir! whom should I knock! is there any man in or out of the gate?—
Pet. Villain, I say, knock me here soundly. These glasses shew me the way by the cars.
Gru. Knock you here, sir? why, sir, what am I sir, that I should knock you here, sir?—
Pet. Villain, I say, knock me out of this gate, and tap me well, or I'll knock your knave’s pate.
Gru. My master is grown quarrelsome: I should knock you first, and then I know who comes by the worst.
Pet. Will it not be?—
Pet. Right, sirrah, an you not knock, I'll wring it; I'll try how you can set, fix, and sing it.
Pet. Know what?—
Hort. And there he goes by the cars.
Pet. Help, masters, help! my master is mad.
Pet. Now, knock when I bid you, sirrah villain!—
Pet. A senseless villain!—
Hort. And there he goes by the cars.
Pet. Since Hortensio, come you to part the fray! Can't tell what more trevolo, may I say.
Hort. Alt-a nostra casa bene venuto, Molto onorato signore mio Petruchio.
Gru. Rise, rise up, sirrah, if you owe, or have or aren’t this quarrel.
—If this be not a lawful cause for me to leave his service.—Look you, sir, he bad me knock him, and I would not. Well, I'll fit for a service vant to use him myself; being, perhaps, (for aught I see,) two-and-thirty, a pinchpot! Whom would to God, I had well knock’d at first, and not found not fit for a service vant to use him myself: being—perhaps, (for aught I see,) two-and-thirty—'
Gru. If I knock, I knock at the house's door.
Pet. Speak me those words plain—
Pet. Sirrah, knock me here.
Gru. Rap me well, knock me well, and knock me where you please.
And come you now with—knocking at the gate.
Pet. Sirrah, be gone, or talk not, I advise you.
Pet. Petruchio, patience; I am Grumio's pledge;
What would I do if it were not for him and you; An your ancient, trusty, pleasant servant Grumio,
And tell me now, sweet friend, what happy gale Blows you to Padua here, from old Verona?
Pet. I knock and wind as scatters young men through the world.
To seek their fortunes further than at home,
Where small experience grows. But, in a word,
Signior Hortensio, this it stands with me:—
Antonio, my father, is deceas’d:
And I have trust myself into this maze,
Haply to thrive, and thrive as I best may.
Gutting in my purse I have, and good at home,
And so am come abroad to see the world.
Hort. Petruchio, shall I then come roundly to thee,
And wish thee to a shrewd ill-favored wife?
That's thank me but a little for my counsel.
And yet I'll promise thee she shall be rich,
And very rich:—but thou'rt too much my friend,
And I'll not wish thee to her.
Pet. Signior Hortensio, who is this that talketh such friends as we,
Few words suffice: and therefore, if thou know
One rich enough to be Petruchio's wife
(As wealth is burthen of my waging-dance),
Be as my soul as was Florizel’s partner, sir,
As old as Sybil, and as curt and shrewd
As Socrates' Xantippe, or a worse,
She moves not, or not removes at least,
A letter's edge in me: were she as rough
As are the swelling Adriatic seas:
I come to wife it wealthy in Padua;
If wealthy, then happily in Padua:
For he, or whom he tells you what is his mind: Why, give him gold enough and marry him to a puppet, or an aglet baby; or an old troth with ne'er a tooth in her head, and as many spaces as two and fifty horses; why nothing comes amiss, so money comes withal.
Pet. Petruchio, since we have stepped thus far in,
I will continue that I broach'd in jest.

Can, Petruchio, help thee to a wife
With wealth enough, and young, and beauteous:
Brought up on as best becomes a gentlewoman:
Her only fault (and that is fault enough)
Is,—that she is inordinately young.
And shrewd, and froward; and so beyond all measure,
That, were my state far worse than it is,
I would not wed her for a mine of gold.
Pet. True, peace, peace; thou know'rt not gold's effect:—
Tell me her father's name, and 'tis enough:
For I will board her, though she chide as hard
As any where when the change is at an end of crick.
Hort. Her father is Baptista Minola,
An affable and courteous gentleman:
Her name is Katharina Minola,
Renewed in Padua after her seducing tourne.
Pet. I know her father, though I know not her;
And he knew my deceased father well:—
I will not sleep, Hortensio, I'll see her;
And therefore let me be thus bold with you,
To give you over at this first encounter,
Unless you will accompany me thither.
Pet. I pray you, sir, let him go while the humor lasts. O' my word, an she knew him as well as I, she would think scolding would do little good upon her: She may, perhaps, call him half a score or so, and he be born once, he'll rail in his rope-tricks. I'll tell you what, sir,—and she stand him but a little, he will throw a figure in her face, and so desig-nire her with it, that weak eyes to see withal than a cat: You know him not, sir.
Hort. Tarry, Petruchio, I must go with thee;
For in Baptista's keep my treasure is:
He hath the jewell of my life in for his; his youngest daughter, beautiful Bianca;
And her withholds from me, and other more suitors to her, and rivals in my love: A thing impossible.
(For those defects I have before rehearsed,
That ever Katharina will be wound;
Therefore this order hath Baptista bin;
That none shall have access unto my lady,
Till Katharine the curst have got a husband.
Gru. Katharine the curst!
A title for a mad, of all titles the worst.
Hort. Now shall I my friend Petruchio do me grace;
And offer me displeas'd in sober robes,
To old Baptista as a schoolmaster.
Well seen in music, to instruct Bianca.
That so I may by this devise, at least,
Have leave and leisure to make love to her,
And, unsuspected, court her herself.

Enter Gremio: with him Lucentio, disguised, with books under his arm.
Gru. Here's no knavery! See; to beguile the old folks, how the young folks lay their heads together! Master, master, look about you: Who goes there! ha! ha!
Hort. Peace, Grumio, 'tis the rival of my love:—
Petruchio, stand by a while.
Pet. A proper stridling, and an amorous! [They retire.]

Gru. O, very well; I have persued the note.
Hark you, sir; I'll have them fairly bound:
All books of love, send me, but any kind!
And see you read no other lectures to her;
You understand me;—over and beside Signior Baptista's liberality.
I'll mend it was no means:—Take your papers too,
And let me have them very well perfum'd;
For she is sweeter than perfum'd itself,
To whom they go. What will you read to her!—
Pet. Writ'thout, unless you, sir, be a scholar, sir.
Gru. O this learning! what a thing it is!—
Gru. O this woolecock! what an ass it is!
Gru. Peace, Katharina, man!—God save you, signior Gremio!—
Gru. And you are well met, signior Hortensio:—
Trow you, Whither I am going?—To Baptista Minola.

I promised to enquire carefully.

About a schoolmaster for fair Bianca:
And, by good fortune, I have lighted well
On this young man: for learning and behavior,
Fit for her turn; well read in poetry
And other books,—good ears I warrant you.

Hor. 'Tis well: and I have met a gentleman,
Hath promised me to help me to another,
A finer musician, to instruct our mistress;
So shall I no whit be behind in duty.
To fair Bianca, so belov'd of me.

Gre. Belov'd of me,—and that my deeds shall prove.

Gre. And that his bags shall prove. [Aside.

Gre. Her, Gremio! 'tis now no time to vent our love:
Listen to me, and if you speak me fair,
I'll tell you news indifferently good or ill.
Here is a gentleman, whom by chance I met,
Upon agreement from us to his liking,
Will undertake to woo our fair Katharine;
Yea, and to marry her, if her dowry please.

Gre. So said, so done, is well:

Hortensio, have you told him all her faults?

Pet. I know she is an urchine, bawling scold;
If that be all, masters, I bear no harm.

Gre. No, say'st me so, friend! What countryman?

Pet. Born in Verona, old Antonio's son:
My father dead, my fortune lives for me;
And I do hope good days, and long, to see.

Gre. O, sir, such a hire, with such a wife, were strange.

But, if you have a stomach, to, O, God's name;
You shall have me assisting you in all.

Gre. And will you this wild-cat?

Pet. Will he woo her? ay, or I'll hang her. [Aside.

Pet. Why came I hither, but to that intent?

Tell you, a little din can drown mine ears.
Have I not in my time heard lions roar?
Have I not heard the sea, pull'd up with winds,
Rage like an angry boar, chased with sweat?

Hor. I have not heard great ordinance in the field,
And heav'n's artillery thunder in the skies!
Have I not in a pitched battle heard
Loud 'larums, neighing steeds, and trumpets' clang?
And you tell me of a woman's tongue:
That gives not half so great a blow to the ear,
As will a chestnut in a farmer's fire!

Tush! tush! fear boys with bugs.

Gre. For he fears none. [Aside.

Gre. Hortensio, hark! This gentleman is happily arriv'd.

My mind presumes, for his own good, and ours.

Hor. I promised we would be contributors,
And bear his charge of wooing, whatsoever.

Gre. And so we will; provided he win her.

Gre. I would, I were as sure of a good dinner.

[Aside. Enter Tranio, bravely apparelled; and Biondello.

Tran. Gentlemen, God save you! If I may be bold,
Tell me, I beseech you, which is the readiest way
To the house of signor Baptista Minola?

Gre. He that has the two fair daughters,—is he [Aside to Tranio], you mean!

Tea. Even be, Biondello!

Gre. Hark you, sir; you mean not her to—

Tran. Perhaps, him and her, sir; What have you to do?

Pet. Not her that chides, sir, at any hand, I pray.

Tran. Sir, I have no chiders, sir;—Biondello, let's be away.

Luc. Well begun, Tranio.

Hor. If a word end it you go;—

Are you a suitor to the maid you talk of, yea, or no?

Tran. And if I be, sir, is it any offence?

Gre. No; if without more words, you will get none.

Tran. Why, sir, I pray, are not the streets as free
For me, as for you!

Tran. For what reason, I beseech you?

Gre. For this reason if you'll know,—

That she's the choice love of signor Gremio.

Hor. That she's the choice one of signor Hortensio.

Tran. Softly, my master! if you be gentlemen,
Do me this right,—hear me with patience.

Baptista is a noble gentleman,
To whom my father is not all unknown;
And, were his daughter fairer than she is,
She may more suitors have, and me for one.

Fair Leda's daughter had a thousand wooers;
Then well one more may fair Bianca have;
And so she shall; Lucentio shall make one,
Though Paris came, in hope to speed alone.

Gre. What! this gentleman will out-talk us all.

Luc. Sir, give him head; I know he'll prove a jade.

Pet. Hortensio, to what end are all these words?

Hor. Sir, let me be so bold as to ask you,
Did you ever yet see a baptista's daughter?

Tran. No, sir; but hear me, that he hath two;
The one as famous for a scalding tongue,
As is the other for her heart's modesty.

Pet. Sir, he is the first's for me; let her go by.

Gre. Yea, leave that labor to great Hercules.

And let it be more than Aidesio's twelve.

Pet. Sir, understand you this of me, in sooth—

The youngest daughter whom you hearken for,
Her father keeps from all access of suitors;
And will not promise her to any man,
Until the eldest sister be wed;

The younger then is free, and not before.

Tran. If it be so, sir, that you are the man
Must steady us all, and me among the rest;
And if you break the ice, and do this fact,—

Achieve the elder, set the younger free.

For our access,—whose habitation shall be to have her,
Will not so graceless be, to be ingratitude.

Hor. Sir, you say well, and well you do conceive;

And since you do profess to be a suitor,
You must, as we do, gratify this gentleman,
To whom we all respect generally beheld.

Tran. Sir, I shall not be slack in sign whereof,
Please ye we may confine this afternoon,
And quail cour aus to our mistress' health,
And do as adversaries do in law—

Strive mightily, but eat and drink as friends.

Gre. Bion. O excellent motion! Fellows, let's

Join in the breach,

Hor. The motion's good indeed, and be it so—

Petruchio, I shall be your ben venuto. [Exit.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—A Room in Baptista's House.

Enter Katharine and Bianca.

Bian. Good sister, wrong me not, nor wrong yourself.

To make a bondmaid and a slave of me:

That I disdain; but for these other gaws, I

Unlike you, a little din can drown mine ears.

Yea, all my raiment, to my petticoat;

Or, what you will command me, will I do,

So well I know my duty to my elders.

Kath. Of all thy suitors, here I charge thee, tell

Whom thou lov'st best: see thou dissemble not.

*Feitb boys with bugbears.

*Telling ornaments.

Bian. Believe me, sister, of all the men alive,
I never yet beheld that special face
Which could fancy me more than any other.

Kath. Minion, thon fast; let's not Hortensio?

Bian. If you affect him, sister, here I swear,

I'll plight him to myself, but you shall have him.

Kath. O then, belike, you fancy riches more;

You will have Gremio to keep you fair.

Bian. Is it for him you do envy me so?

Kath. Nay, when you jest and now I do believe,

You have but jested with me all this while.

I prithee sister Kate, untie my hands.

Kath. If that be jest, then all the rest was so.

Bian. Companions.

Kath. Strikes her

Love.

In the presence of the eldest sister:
This liberty is all that I request,
That, upon knowledge of my parentage,
I may have welcome amongst the rest that you,
And free access and favor as the rest.
And, toward the education of your daughters,
I here bestow a simple instrument,
And this small packet of Greek and Latin books:
If you accept them, then their worth is great.

Bap. Lucio is your name! of presence, I pray!
Tri. Of Pis is; sir: son to Vincento.
Bap. A mighty man of Pis: by report
I know him well: you are very welcome, sir.
Take you [i.e. [To Hor.], the lute, and you [i.e. Euc.]
the set of books.
You shall go see your pupils presently.
Hofal! within: Enter a Servant.
Sirrah, lead
These gentlemen to my daughters: and tell them both:
These are their tutors: bid them use them well.

Enter Horatio, with Hortensio, Lucentio, and Biondello.
We will go walk a little in the orchard,
And then to dinner: you are passing welcome,
And so I pray you all to thank yourselves.
Pet. Signior Baptist, my business asketh haste,
And every day I cannot come to you.
You knew my father well; and in him, me,
Left solely heir to all his lands and goods,
Which I have better'd rather than decreas'd:
Then tell me what you do for my daughter Bianca,
What dowry shall I have with her to win?—
Bap. After my death, the one-half of my lands:
And, in possession, twenty thousand crowns.
Pet. And, for that dowry, I'll assure you,
Of her widowhood,—be it that she survive me,—
In all my lands and leases whatsoever:
Let speculations be therefore drawn between us,
That covenant may be fixed on either hand.
Bap. Ay, when theเศl thing is well obtain'd,
This is,—her love; for that is all in all.
Pet. Why, that is nothing; for I tell you, father,
I am as parently as she proud-minded,
And where two rages meet together,
They do consume the thing that feeds their fury:
Though little fire grows great with little wind,
Yet extreme gusts will blow out fire and all:
So I to her, and so she yields to me;
For I am rough, and woe not like a blade.
Bap. Well mayst thou woo, and happy be thy speech;
But be thou armed for some unhappy words.
Pet. Ay, to the proof: as mountains are for winds,
That shake not, though they blow perpetually.

Re-enter Hortensio, with his head broken.
Bap. How now, my friend? why dost thou look so pale?
Hor. For fear, I promise you, if I look pale.
Bap. What, will my daughter prove a good musician?
Hor. I think she'll sooner prove a soldier;
iron may hold with her, but never lutes.
Bap. Why, then thou canst not break her to the lute?
Hor. Why, no; for she hath broke the lute to me.
I did but tell her, she mistook her frets,
And bow'd her neck, and break'd her finger strings;
When, with a most impatient devilish spirit,
Frets call you these? quoth she: 'Twill frame with them.
And, with that word, she struck me on the head,
And through the instrument my pate made way;
And there I stood amazed for a while,
As on a pillory, looking through the little hole she did twist her lute and fiddle at:
And—twanging Jack! with twenty such vile terms,
As she had studied to misuse me so.
Pet. Now, by the world, it is a lusty wench!
I love her tenderer than all other's did:
O, how I long to have some chat with her!
Bap. Well, so with me, and be not so discontented:
Proceed in practice with my younger daughter;
She's apt to learn, and thankful for good turns—

A feet in music is the stop which causes or regulates the vibration of the string.
TAMING OF THE SHREW.

Act II.

Signior Petruchio, will you go with us?
Signior Petruchio: Will you go then?

Pet. I pray you do; I will attend her here.—

[Enter Baptista, Gremio, Tranio, and Hortensio.]

And woo her with some spirit when she comes.

Signior Petruchio: Say, that she rath: Why, then I'll tell her plain,
She is a woman, as sweetly as a nightingale:
Say, that she sworn: I'll say, she looks as clear
As morning roses newly washed with dew:
Say, that she be rude, and will not speak a word;
Then I'll commend her volubility.

Enter Katharina.

Good-morrow, Kate; for that's your name, I hear.

Kath. Well have you heard, but something hard of hearing;

They call me—Katharine, that do talk of me.

Pet. You lie, in faith; for you are call'd plain Kate,
And bonny Kate, and sometimes Kate the curst;
But Kate, the prettiest Kate in Christendom,
Kate, the Kate, that doth sit in my super-dain, my super-dain.
For dainties are all cates; and therefore, Kate,
Take this of me, Kate of my consolation;

Hearing thy mildness praised in every town,
That e'er I spoke of, and thy beauty man'd,

(Yet not so deep by as to thee belongs.)

Myself am now do to woo thee for my wife.

Kath. Mov'd! in good time: let him that mov'd you first,
Remove you hence: I knew you at the first,
You were a moveable.

Pet. Thou hast hit it: come, sit on me.

Kath. Asses are made to bear, and so are you.

Pet. False is the heart that one may make a bear, and so are you.

Kath. No such jade, sir, as you, if me you mean.

Pet. Alas, good Kate! I will not burden thee:
For, knowing thee to be but young and light,

Kath. Too light for such a sworn as you to catch;
And yet as heavy as my weight should be.

Pet. Should be! should buzz.

Kath. O, slow-wing'd turtle! shall a buzzard take thee?

Pet. Kath. Ay, for a turtle; as he takes a buzzard.

Pet. Come, come, you wassp; 'Tis faith, you are too angry.

Kath. If I waspish, best beware of my sting.

Pet. My remedy is then to pluck it out.

Kath. Ay, if the fool could find it where it lies.

Pet. Who knows not where a wasp doth wear his sting!

In his tail.

Kath. In his tongue.

Pet. Whose tongue?

Kath. Yours, if you talk of tails; and so farewell.

Pet. What, with your tongue in your tail? nay, come again,

Good Kate; I am a gentleman.

Kath. That 'lill try.

Pet. I swear I'll cuff you, if you strike again.

Kath. So may you lose your arms:
If you strike me, you are no gentleman;
And if no gentleman, why, then no arms.

Pet. A herald, Kate! Go, put me in thy books.

Kath. What is your crest? a cocomb? a cocomb?

Pet. A combless cock, so Kate will be my hen.

Kath. No cock of mine, you crow too like a vermin.

Pet. Nay, come, Kate, come; you must not look so sour.

Kath. It is my fashion, when I see a crab.

Kath. There is, there is.

Pet. Then show it me.

Kath. Had I a glass, I would.

Pet. What, you mean my face?

Kath. Well aim'd of such a young one.

* A degenerate cock.

Kath. Yet you are with'er'd.

Pet. Tis with cares.

Kath. I care not.

Pet. Nay, hear you, Kate; in sooth, you 'scape me so

Kath. I chafe you, if I tarry; let me go.

Pet. No, not a wight; I find you passing gentle.

Twas told me, you were rough, and coy, and sullen,
And now I find report a very lie;

For thou art pleasant, gamesome, passing courteous;

But slow in speech, yet sweet as spring-time flower.

Thou canst not frown, thou canst not look askance,
Nor bite the lip, as angry wenches will;

Nor hast thou pleasure to be cross in talk;

But thou with mildness entertain'st thy woeers;

With gentle conference, soft and affable.

Why does the world report, that Kate doth imp?

Shameless world! Kate, like the hazel-twixt,
Is straight and slender: and as brown in hue
As hazel-nuts, and sweeter than the kernels.

O, let me see thee walk: thou dost not bait.

Kath. Go, bring me straight, and with whom thou keepest command.

Pet. Did ever Duon so become a grove,
As Kate this chamber with her princely gait?
O, be thou Duon, and let her be Kate;

And let Kate be Duon, and Duon sportful!

Kath. Where did you study all this goodly speech?

Pet. It is extemporised, from my mother-wit.

Kath. A witty mother! writeless else her son.

Pet. Am I not wise?

Kath. Yes; keep you warm.

Pet. Marry, so I mean, sweet Katharine, in thy bed;

And therefore, setting all this chat aside,
Thus in plain terms,—Your father hath consented that I be your wife; your dowry's greed on;
And, will you, will you, I will marry you.

Now, Kate, I am a husband for your turn;

For, by this light, whereby I see thy beauty.

(Thy beauty, that so make me like this love;) Thou must be married to no man but me:

For I am he, an born to tame you, Kate;

And bring you from a wild-cat to a Kate

Conformable, as other household Kate.

Here comes your father; never make denial;

I must and will have Katharine to my wife.

Re-enter Baptista, Gremio, and Tranio.

Bap. Now, Signior Petruchio: How speed you with my daughter?

Pet. How but well, sir? how but well?

It were impossible I should speed amiss.

Bap. Why, how now, daughter Katharine? in thy father's dumps?

Kath. Call me, thee, daughter! now I promise you,
You have show'd a tender fatherly regard,
To wish me we'd to one-half lunatic.

A mope, a ruffian, and a swearing Jack,

That thinks with oaths to face the matter out.

Pet. Father, thus,—yourself and all the world,
That talk'd of her, have talk'd amiss of her;

It shall be curst, it is for policy;

For she's not froward, but modest as the dove;
She is not hot, but temperate as the morn;

For hence she will she will grave (now grave) the girsl,
And Roman Lucrece for her chastity:

And to conclude,—we have 'greed so well together,
That upon Sunday is the wedding-day.

Kath. I'll see that too, and preen me on Sunday first.

Gre. Hark, Petruchio! she says, she'll see thee hang'd first.

Tra. Is this your speeding? nay, then, good and great departure.

Pet. Be patient, gentlemen! I choose her for myself;

If she and I are pleas'd, what's that to you?

'Tis bargain'd! twist us twain, being alone.

That she shall still be curst in company.

I tell you 'ts incredible to believe,

How well she loves me! (0, the kindest Kate!)

She hung about my neck; and kiss on kiss

She vied so fast, protesting oath on oath,

To yere and ret ye were terms at cards, now superseded

By the word brag.
ACT III.  SCENE I.  TAMING OF THE SHREW.

That in a twinkle she won me to her love.
O, you are novices! 'tis a world to see.
How time, when men and women are alone,
A marcellus wretch can make the curtsey shrew.
Give me thy hand, Kate: I will unto Venice,
To buy apparel 'gainst the wedding-day:
Provide for feast, father, and bid the guests.
And I will be sure, thy riches will inform
Bap. I know not what to say; give me your hands.

God send you joy, Petruchio! 'tis a match.
Gra.  Tra. Amen, say we; we will be witnesses.
Pet. Fatther, and wife, and gentlemen, adieu;
I will to Venice. Sunday comes space:
We will have rings, and things, and fine array;
And kiss me. Kate, we will be married Sunday.
[Enter Petruchio and Katharina, serenely.
Gra.  Was ever match clapp'd up so suddenly?
Bap. Faith, gentleman, now I play a merchant's part,
And venture madly on a desperate mart.

Tra. 'Twas a commodity lay fretting by you;
Twixt bring you gain, or perish on the sea.
Bap. The gain I seek is—quiet in the match.
Gra. No doubt but he hath got a quiet catch.
But now, Baptista, to your younger daughter:
Now is the day we long for—future; I am your neighbor, and was suitor first.
Tra. And I am one, that love Bianca more
Than words can witness, or your thoughts can guess.

Bianca. Brasons, and coven, to have her dainty hands;
My hangings all of Tyrian tapestry :
In ivory covers I have stuff'd my crowns;
In crystal chess my arms, counterpoints,
Costly apparel, tents, and canopies,
Fine linen, Turkey cushions, boss'd with pearl,
Valence of Venetian gold in needle-work.
Fewer and brass, and all things that belong
To house, or housekeeper: then, at my turn,
I have a hundred march-kine to the pull,
So scarce fat oxen standing in my stalls,
And all things unsewable to this portion.

Myself am struck in years, I must confess;
And, if I die to-morrow, this is hers,
I whilst I live, she will be only mine.
Tra. That is a far well wish; but, sir, list to me;
I am your father's heir, and only son:
If I may have your daughter to my wife,
I'll leave her houses three or four as good,
Within rich Pallad, and a new church;
Old signior Gremio has in Padua;
Besides two thousand ducats by the year.
Of fruitful land, all which shall be her jointure.—
What, have I mis'rd you, signior Gremio?
Gra. Two thousand ducats by the year, and land
My land amounts not to so much in all:
That now is lying in Marseilles a road—
What, have I chok'd you with an acrey?
Tra. Gremio, 'tis known, my father hath no less Than three great argosies; besides two galliasses,
And twelve tall galleys: these I will assure her,
And twice as much, whate'er thou offer'st next.
Gra. Nay, I have offer'd all, I have no more;
And she can have no more than all I have;
If you like me, she shall have me and mine.

Tra. Why, then the maid is mine from all the world
By your firm promise; Gremio is out-vied.
Bap. I must confess, your offer is the les.
And, let your father make her the assurance,
She is your own; else, you must pardon me.
If you should think the offer too small to save?
Tra. That's but a cavil; he is odd, I young.
Gra. And may not young men die as well as old?
Bap. Well, gentleman,
I am the ready, in Sunday next you know,
My daughter Katharine is to be married:
Now, on the Sunday following, shall Bianca
Be bride to you, if you make this assurance;
If not, to signior Gremio:
And so I take my leave, and thank you both.

[Exit.

Gra. Adieu, good neighbor.—Now I fear thee not;
Sirrah, young gamer, your father was a fool.
To give thee all, and in his wanning age,
Set loot under thy table: Tut! a toy!
An old Italian fox is not so kind, my boy.
[Exit.

Lut. A vengeance on your evil, widder'd hate!
Yet I have faced it with a card of ten.
Tis in my head to do my master good,
I see no reason, but supposed Lucentio
Must get a father, calleth as any of Venecio;
And that's a wonder: fathers, commonly,
Do get their children; but in this case of wooing,
A child shall get a sire, if I fail not of my cunning
[Exit.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—A Room in Baptista's House.

Enter Lucentio, Hortensio, and Bianca.

Lut. Fiddler, forbear; you grow too forward, sir;
Have you so soon forgot the entertainment
Her sister Katharine welcome'd you withal?
Hor. But, wrangling pedant, this is
The patrician of heaven's city's comeliness;
Then give me leave to have prerogative;
And when in music we have spent an hour,
Your wifery shall have place for as much.
Lut. Preposterously! that never read so far
To know the cause why music was ordain'd;
Was it not to refresh the mind of pain
And bring thee back, or thy usual path?
Then give me leave to read philosophy,
And while I pause, serve in your harmony.

Sirrah. Sire, I will not hear these braves of thine.
Hort. Gentlemen, you do not go wrong,
To strive for that which reacheth in my choice:
I am no breeching scholars in the schools;
I'll not be tied to hours, nor pointed times,
But learn my lessons as I please myself.
And to cut off all strife, here sit we down:

* It is well worth seeing.  *

 A distinctly erasure.  **

* Coverings for beds; now called counterpanes.  *

* No schoolboy, liable to be whipped.  *

Take you my instrument, play you the whiles;
His lecture will be done, ere you have tun'd.
Hor. You'll leave his lecture when I am in tune!
[Luc. Hortensio retirers.

Luc. That will be never; tune your instrument.

[Exit.  Where left we last!

Lut. Here, madam:—
Hor. ho! Simo! ho! est Sigilia felix:
He struteth, megalos regis ecalce senis.

Bien. Construe this: they will see the meaning.

Luc. ho! as I told you before.—Simo! I am Lucentio.—hicest, son unto Lucentio of Pisa.—
Sigilia felix, discussed thus to his own love:—
He struteth, and that Lucentio that were wenching.—
Pianist, is my man Trianio.—regia, bearing your port, ecacela senis, that we might begale the old pantaloons.

Hor. Madam, my instrument's in tune.

[Returning.  Bien: Let's hear;

[Hor. Tuentsio plays.

O live! O the treble bars.

Lut. Spit in the hole, man, and tune again.
Bien. Now let me see if I can construe it: Hoc ho! Simo! I know you not; hoc est Sigilia felix,

* A large merchant-ship.  *

* A vessel of further length both with sails and oars.  *

* The highest card.

* The old cullly in Italian forces.
TAMING

I trust you not;—his sister Priam, take heed he hear us not;—regia, presume not;—cessa sedis, despair not.

Hor. Madam, 'tis now in tune.

Luc. Why, all but the base,

Hor. The base is right; 'tis the base knave that jars.

How fiery and forward our pedant is!

Now, for my life, the knave doth court my love: Polacheke, I'll watch you better yet.

Bian. in time I may believe, yet I mistrust.

Luc. I mistrust it not; for sure, Zaccis

Was Ajax, call'd so from his grandfather.

Bian. I must believe my master; else I promise you,

I should be arguing still upon that doubt:

But let it rest.—Now, Lucio, to you:—

Good masters, take it not unkindly, pray,

That I have been thus pleasant with you both.

Hor. You may go walk, [To Lucentio], and give me leave awhile:

My lessons make no music in three parts.

Luc. Are you so formal, sir? well, I must wait,

And watch withal; for, but I be deceived,

Our fine musician growths amorous.

Aside.

Hor. Madam, before you touch the instrument,

To learn the order of my fingering,

I must begin the rudiments of art;

To teach you gamut in a brief sort,

More pleasant, pitiful, and effectual,

Then hath been taught by any of my trade:

And, I know, 'tis in writing, fairly drawn.

Bian. Why, I am past my gamut long ago.

Hor. Yet read the gamut of Hortensio.

Bian. [Reads.] Gamut I am, the ground of all inventions.

Are, to plead Hortensio's passion: B mi, Bianca, take him for thy lord,

C, fact, that love with all affection: D sol re, one of the two Note Have I?

E la mi, show pity, or I die.

Call you this—gamut!—tut! like it not:

Old fashion to please me best: I am not so nice,

To change true rules for odd inventions.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. Mistress, your father prays you leave your books,

And help to dress your sister's chamber up;

To-morrow is the wedding day.

Bian. Farewell, sweet masters, both; I must be gone.

Luc. Faith, mistress, then I have no cause to stay.

Exeunt.

Hor. But I have cause to pry into this pedant;

Methinks, he looks as though he were in love:

Yet if thy thoughts, Bianca, be so humble,

And thy wandering eyes so warily be seiz'd,

Thee, that list: If once I find thee ranging,

Hortensio will be quit with thee by changing.

Exeunt.

SCENE II. Before Baptista's House.

Enter Baptista, Gremio, Tranio, Katharina,

Blanca, Lucentio, and Attendants.

Bap. Sennior Lucentio, [To Tranio.] I have this day

Told you not;—His sister Priam, take heed he hear us not;—regia, presume not;—cessa sedis, despair not.

Scene II. TAMING OF THE SHREW. 221

Fye! doth this habit, shame to your estate,
An eyesore to our eye, an insult to the festal
Tru. And tell us, what occasion of import
Hath all so long detained you from your wife,
And sent you hither so unlike yourself?

Fye. Falsehood will not well, and truth to hear:
Sufficient, I am come to keep my word,
Though in some part enforced to degrees,
Which, at your pleasure, I will now excuse.
As you shall well be satisfied withal,
But, where is Kate? I stay too long from her;
The morning wears, 'tis time we were at church.
Tru. See ye not your bride in these unrevocable robes?
Go to my chamber, put on clothes of mine.
Pet. Not I, believe me; thus I'll visit her.
Bapt. And I, thus, I trust, you will attend her.
Pet. Good sooth, even thus; therefore have done with words;
To me she's married, not unto my clothes:
Could I repair what she will wear in tow,
As I can change these poor accoutrements,
'Twere well for Kate, and better for myself.
But what a fool am I, to talk with you,
When I should had good-norow to my bride,
And seal the title with a lovely kiss!
[Exeunt Petruchio, Gremio, and Rionello.

Tru. He hath some meaning in his mad attire,
We will perceive him, how it is possible,
To put on better lace he go to church.
Bap. I'll after him, and see the event of this.

Enter Lucentio.

Tru. But, sir, to her love concerneth us to add
Her father's liking: Which to bring to pass,
As I before imparted to your worship,
I am to meet,—what er he be,
Rhetorics not much; we'll bid him to our turn,—
And he shall be in concert of Petru.
And make assurance, here in Padua,
Of greater sums than I have promised,
So shall you quittance solemnly to your hope,
And marry sweet Bianca with consent.
Luc. Were it not that my fellow-schoolmaster
Doth watch Bianca's steps so narrowly,
'Twixt verse and math, to steal our acquaintance;
Which once perform'd, let all the world say,—no,
I'll keep mine own, despite of all the world.
Tru. That by degrees we mean to look into,
And watch our venture in this business:
We'll over-roach the grey-beard, Gremio;
The narrow-paring father, Maffio;
The quaintly-musicked, amorous Lucentio;
All for my master's sake, Lucentio.—

Recenti Gremio.

Senior Gremio, came you from the church?
Grem. It was with some of the school.
Tru. And is the bride and bridegroom coming home?

Grem. A bridegroom say you? 'tis a groom, indeed,
A groaning groom, and that the girl shall find.
Tru. Curster than she! why, 'tis impossible.

Grem. Why, he's a devil, a devil, a very fiend.

Tru. Why, she's a devil, a devil, the devil's dam.

Grem. That's it! she's a harlot, a dove, a harlot, to him.
I'll tell you, sir Lucentio: When the priest
Should ask—if Katharine should be his wife,
Ay, by goss-grooms, quoth he; and swore so loud,
That he thought done, and swore he was done.
And as he stooped again to take it up,
The mad-brain'd bridegroom took him such a cuff,
That down fell priest and book, and book and priest.
Not, What have you taken up, quoth he, if ever
Tru. What said the wench, when he arose again?
Grem. Trembled and shook; for, why he stamp'd and swore,
As if the vicar meant to cozen him.
But after many ceremonies done,
He calls for wine:—a health, quoth he; as if
He had been asleep carousing to his mates
After dinner.—Quoth he, and quoth he;
And threw the sops all in the sexton's face;
Having no other reason,—
But that his head grew thin and hungerly,
And seemed to ask him sops as he was drinking.
This done, he took the bride about the neck;

I Matters.

Strange. It was the custom for the company present to drink wine immediately after the marriage ceremony.

And kiss'd her lips with such a clamorous smack,
That, at the parting, all the church did echo,
I, seeing that, came thence for very shame;
And, after me, I know the route is coming;
Such a mad marriage never was before:

Luc. happy, sir, I'll go to mischief play.

Enter Petruchio, Katharine, Bianca, Baptista, Hugues, and Truett.

Pet. Gentlemen and friends, I thank you for your pains:
I know, you thank to dine with me to-day,
And have prepared great store of wedding cheer;
But so it is, our wedding of the jumble,
And therefore here I mean to take my leave.

Bap. 1st possible, you will away tonight?

Pet. I must away to-morrow, before mid-coming:
Make it no wedding more; if you know in business;
You would entreat me rather go than stay;
And, honest company, I thank you all,
That have boused me give away my self.
To the most patient, sweet, and virtuous wife;
Dine with my father, drink a health to me;
For I must hence: and farewell to you all.

Tru. Let us entreat you stay till after dinner.

Pet. It may not be.

Let me entreat you.

Bap. It cannot be.

Pet. I am content.

Kath. Are you content to stay?

Pet. I am content you shall entreat me to stay;
But yet not stay, entreat me you can.

Kath. Now, if you love me, stay.

Grat. Ay, sir, they be ready; the oars have eaten the horses.

Kath. Nay, then, do what thou canst, I will not go today;
No, no, nor tomorrow, nor to-morrow too: I please myself.
The door is open, there enters my way;
You may be pegging, whilst your heads are green;
For me, I'll be gone, till I please myself:
'Tis like, you If prove a jolly surly groom,
That take it on you to be so odd a party.

Pet. O, Kate, content thee; pray thee be not angry.

Kath. I will be angry: What hast thou to do?
Father, be quiet; he shall stay my licens.

Grat. Ay, marry, sir: now it begins to work.

Kath. Gentlemen, forward to the banial dinner;
I see, a woman may be made a fool,
If she had not a spirit to resist.

Pet. They shall go forward, Kate, at thy command.

Obey the bride, you that attend on her:
Go to the feast, revel and domineer,
Carouse full measure to his merriment!
Be mad and merry,—or go hang yourselves;
But for my hony Kate, she must with me,

Nay, look not bag, not stamp, nor stare, nor fret;
I will be master on what is mine own;
She is my goods, my chattels; she is my house,
My household stuff, my head, my farm,
My bowe, my ox, my horse my any thing;
And here she stands, touch her wherever dare;
I'll bring my action on the proudest he.
That stops my way in Faunia—Gremio,
Draw for thyself, who art worst with thieves.

Rescue thy mistress, thou shalt be a friend;
Fear not, sweet wenches, they shall not touch thee;

Kath. I'll buckle thee against a million.

Recenti Petruchio, Katharina, and Gremio.

Bap. Nay, let them go, a couple of quiet ones.

Grat. Went they not quickly, I should die with laughing.

Tru. Of all mad matches, never was the like!

Luc. Mistress, what's your opinion of your sister?

Bian. That being mad herself, she's madly mated.

Grat. I warrant you, in God's name.

Bap. Neighbors and friends, though bride and bridegroom wants
For to supply the places at the table,
You know, there want not junipers among the feast;

Lucentio, you shall supply the bridegroom's place;
And let Bianca take her sister's room.

Tru. Shall sweet Bianca practise how to bride it?

Bap. She shall, Lucentio.—Come, gentlemen, let's go.
SCENE I.—A Hall in Petruchio's Country House.

Enter Gremio.

Gru. Fare ye well, ye wise; on all your heads, and on all eyes! Was ever man so beaten? Was ever man so rayed? was ever man so weary? I am sent before to make a fire, and they are slated to warm them. To be so, were it not a little pit, and soon hot, my very lips might freeze to my teeth, my tongue to the roof of my mouth, my heart in my belly; ere I should come by a fire to warm me. Tell thou the priest, I, with blowing the fire, shall warm myself: for, considering the weather, a taller man than I will take cold. Holia, hoa! Curtius!

Enter Curtius.

Curt. Who is that, calls so coldly?

Gru. A piece of ice: If thou doubt it, thou mayst slide from my shoulder to my heel, with no greater a run but my head and my neck. A fire, good Curtius.

Curt. Is my master and his wife coming, Gremio?

Gru. Ay, ay, Curtius: and therefore fire, fire; cast on no water.

Curt. Is she so hot a shrew as she's reported? Gru. She was, good Curtius, before this frost; but thou know'st, winter stames man, woman, and beast; for he be better to warm them. Beaten Globes, my old master, and my new mistress, and myself, fellow Curtius.

Curt. Away, you three-inch fool! I am old! Am I but three inches? why, thy horn is a foot; and so long am I, at the least. But wilt thou make a fire, or shall I complain on thee to our mistress, whose hand (she being now at hand) thou shalt soon feel, to thy cold comfort, for being slow in thy hot office!

Curt. I praythee, good Gremio, tell me, How goes the world!

Gru. A cold world, Curtius, in every office but thine; and therefore, fire: Do thy duty, and have thy duty; for my master and mistress are almost frozen to death.

Curt. There's fire ready: And therefore, good Gremio, the news?

Gru. Why, Jack boy! ho boy! and as much news as thou wilt.

Curt. Come, you are so full of coyness—

Gru. Why, therefore, fire; for I have caught extreme cold. Where's the cook? is supper ready, the house trimmed, rushes strewn, cowpeas swept, the fire laid, in some new fashion, their white stockings, and every officer his wedding-garment on? Be the jackals within, the jills within, the carpets laid, and every thing in order? Curt. All ready and therefore, I pray thee, news? Gru. First, know my horse is tired; my master and mistress fallen out.

Curt. How?

Enter. [Striking kim. Curt. This is to feel a tale, not to hear a tale. Gru. And therefore this is called a sensible tale: and this ear was but to knock at your ear, and beseech listening. Now I begin: Improvisus, we came down a foul hill, my master riding behind my mistress—

Curt. Both on one horse!

Gru. What's that to thee?

Curt. Why, a horse.

Gru. Tell thou the tale—but hast thou not crossed me, thou shouldst have heard how her horse fell, and she under her horse; thou shouldst have heard in how sorry a place: how she was bemooned: how she left her with the horse upon her; how he beat me because her horse stumbled; how she waded through the dirt to pluck him out; how she swore; how she prayed—that never prayed before; how I mourned; how the horses ran away; how her bridle was burst; how I lost my crupper; with many things of worthy memory; which now shall die in oblivion, and thou return unexperienced to thy grave.

Curt. By this reckoning, he is more shrew than she.

Gru. Ay: and that, thou and the proudest of you all shall find, when he comes home. But what talk I of this?—call forth Nathaniel, Joseph, Nicholas, Philip, Walter, Sugarsop, and the rest: let their heads be sleekly combed, their blue coats brushed, and their feathers of an indifferent hue: let them curtey with their left legs; and not presume to touch a hair of my master's horse-tail, till they kiss their hands. Are they all ready? Curt. They are.

Gru. Call them forth.

Curt. Do you hear, ho! you must meet my master, to condescend my mistress.

Gru. Why, she hath a face of her own.

Curt. Who knows not that?

Gru. Thou, it seems; that eellit for company to condescend her.

Curt. I call them forth to credit her.

Gru. Why, she comes to borrow nothing of them.

Enter several servants.

Nath. All things are ready: How near are our master?

Gru. Even at hand, alighted by this; and therefore be not—Cock's passion, silence!—I hear my master.

Enter Petruchio and Katharin.

Pet. Where be these knives? What, no man at door?

To hold my stirrup, nor to take my horse?

Where is Nathaniel, Gregory, Philip?—

All Servs. Here, here, sir; here, sir.

Pet. Let me see you one by one! here, sir! here, sir! You younger-headed and unpolish'd! What, no attendance! no regard! no duty!—Where is the foolish knave I sent before?

Nath. Here, sir; as foolish I was before.

Pet. You peasant swain! you whoreson mount-horse drudge! Did not I bid thee meet me in the park, And bring along these rabble knives with thee?

Gru. Nathaniel's coat, sir, was not fully made, And Gabriel's pumps were all unpink'd: the heel There was no link to color Peter's hat, And Jone's dagger was not come from sheathing There were none fine, but Adam, Ralph, and GRE- GORY; The rest were ragged, old, and beggarly: Yet, as they are, here are they come to meet you. Pet. Go, raspels, go, and fetch my supper in.—[Exeunt some of the servants Where is the life that told I told?—[Songs Where are those— Sit down, Kate, and welcome Soud, sand, soul!—

Re-enter Serveants with Supper.

Whye, when, I say!—Nay, good sweet Kate, be merry.

Off with my boots, you rogues, you villains; Why?

It was the frier of orders gray, [Songs As he forth walked on his way. [Strikes kim.

Be merry, Kate.—Some water, here; what, ho!—

Not different one from another. 2 A torch of pitch.

A word coined by Shakespeare to express the noise made by a person heated and fatigued.
Where's my spaniel Triolus!—Sirrah, get you hence,
And bid my cousin Ford come hither:—

One, Kate, that you must kiss, and be acquainted with.

Where are my slippers!—Shall I have some water?

[Exeunt Servant.

Come, Kate, and wash, and welcome!—

[Kate lets the ever fall.

You whoreson villain! will you let it fall?

[Strikes him.

Kath. Patience, I pray you; 'twas a fault unwilling.

Pet. A whoreson beefe-held, flap-eard knave! Come, Kate; set down; I know you have a stomach; Will you give thanks, sweet Kate; or else shall I!—
What is this! mutton?

1 Ser. Ay.

Pet. Who brought it!

1 Ser. Ay.

Pet. 'Tis burnt; and so is all the meat;
What doezes are these!—Where is the rascal cook?
How doute you, villains, bring it from the dresser, And serve it thus to me that love it not?
There, take it to you, trenchers, cups and all:

[Throes the meat, &c. about the stage.

You heeded bolheads, and unworthy slaves! What, do you grumble! I'll be with you straight.
Kath. I pray, you husband, be not so disquiet;
The meat was well, if you were so contented.

Pet. Once tell me, Kate, 'twas burnt away; And I expressly am forbid to touch it.
For it engenders choleric, plaintful anez; And better 'twer, that both of us did fast,— Since you yourselves, ourselves are all choleric.
Thus feed it with such over-roasted tesh,
Be patient; to-morrow it shall be mended,
And, for this night, we'll fast for company:
Come, Kate, and wash, and welcome. [Exeunt Petruchio, Katharine, and Curtis.

Kath. [Advancing.] Peter, didst ever see the like?

Peter. He kills her in her own humor.

Re-enter Curtis.

Gru. Where is he?

Curt. In her chamber.

Making a sermon of continency to her:
And rants, and swears, and rates; that she, poor soul,
Knows not which way to stand, to look, to speak; And sits as one new-risen from a dream.
Away, away! for he is coming hither. [Exeunt.

Re-enter Petruchio.

Pet. Thus have I politically begun my reign,
And 'tis my hope to end successfully:
My falcon now is sharp, and passing empty;
And though she stoop, she must not be full-gorged;
For then she never looks upon her hare.

Another way have I to man my hagard,
To make her come, and know her keeper's call,
That is, to watch her, as we watch these kites,
That bate, and beat, and will not be obedient.
She eat no meat to-day, nor none shall eat;
Last night she slept not, nor to-night she shall not; As with the meat, some undeserved praise
I'll find about the making of the bed;
And here I'll fling the pillow, there the bolster,
This way the coverlet, another way the sheets:

Ay, and amid this hurly, I intend,
That all is done in reverend care of her;
And, in conclusion, she shall watch all night;
And, if she chance to nod, 'll raii and brawl,
And make the chamber keep her bedside awake.
This is the way to kill a wife with kindness;
And thus I'll curb her mad and headstrong humor:
He that knows better how to tame a shrew,
Now let him speak; 'tis charity to shew.'—

[Exit.

Enter Tranio and Hortensio.

Tr. Is't possible, friend Licio, that Bianca
Both fancy any other but Lucentio?

Hor. Sir, to satisfy you in what I have said,
Stand by, and mark the manner of my teaching.

[They stand aside.

Enter Bianca and Lucentio.

Luc. Now, mistress, profit you in what you read?
Bian. What, master, read you! first resolve me that,
Luc. I read that I profess, the art of love.
Bian. And may you prove, sir, master of your art?
Luc. While you, sweet dear, prove mistress of your heart.
[They retire.

Hor. Quie, and proceed, master! Now, tell me, I pray,
You that burst swear that your mistress Bianca
Love none in the world so well as Lucentio.

Tr. O despicable love! unconstaut woman-kind;
I tell the, Licio, this is wonderfull.

Hor. Mistake no more: I am not Licio,
Nor a musician as I am not teaching:
But one that scorn to live in this disguise,
For such a one as leaves a gentleman,
And makes a god of such a cullion?—

Know, sir, that I am not—Hortensio.

Tr. Signior Hortensio, I have often heard
Of your entire affection to Bianca,
And since my eyes are witness of her lightness, I will with you,—if you be so contented,— Forswear Bianca and her love for ever.

Hor. See, how they kiss and court!—Signior Lucentio,
Here is my hand, and here I firmly vowe—
Never to wo her more; but to forswear her,
As one unworthy all the former favors
That I have fondly flattered her with.

Tr. And here I take the like unsound oath,—
Never to marry with her though she would entic'e
Fie on her! see, how beastly she doth count him.
Hor. 'Would all the world, but he, had quite forsworn!—
For me, that I may surely keep mine oath,
I will be married to a wealthy widow,
Which three days past, which hath as long: lovd me,
As I have lovd this proud disdainful hagard:
And so farewell, signior Lucentio,—
Kindness in women, not their beauteous looks,
Shall win my love—and so I take my leave,
In resolution as I swore before.

[Exit Hortensio—Lucentio and Bianca advance.

Tr. Mistress Bianca, bless you with such grace
As longeth to a lover's blessed case!
Nay, I have taken you napping, gentle love;
And have forsworn you with Hortensio.
Bian. Tranio, jest you: But have you both forsworn me?

Tr. Mistress, we have.

Luc. When we are rid of Licio,
Shall that be sworn and wedded in a day.
Bian. God give him joy!
Tr. Ay, and he'll take her.
Bian. He says so, Tranio.

Tr. 'Faith he is gone unto the taming-school.
Bian. The taming-school! what, is there such a place?

Tr. Ay, mistress, and Petruchio is the master;
That teacheth tricks eleven and twenty long,—
To tame a shrew, and charm her chattering tongue.

Enter Biondello, running.

Bion. O master, master, I have watch'd so long
That I'm dog-weary; but at last I spied
An ancient angel coming down the hill,
Will serve the turn.

Tr. What is he, Biondello?
Bion. Master, a mercantile, or a pedant?

I know not what; but tall in apparel,
In gown and capacious coat, and countenancly sure,
I take him for a father.

Luc. And what of him, Tranio?
Tr. If he be eruditious, and trust my tale,
I'll make him glad to see Vincentio;
And give assurance to Bianca Minito.

As if he were the right Vincentio.
Take in your love, and then let me alone.

[Exeunt Lucentio and Bianca.

Enter a Pedant.

Ped. God save you, sir.
Tr. And you, sir! you are welcome
Travel you far on, or are you at the furthest!

Despicable fellow, Messenger.

A merchant or a schoolmaster.

[Exeunt.
Ped. Sir, at the farthest for a week or two:
But then up further; and as far as you please;
And so to Trojoly, if God lend one life.

Tart. What countryman, I pray you?

Ped. Of Mantua.

Tart. Of Mantua, sir?—marry, God forbid!
And come to Padua, careless of your life!

Ped. My life, sir! how, I pray! for that goes hard.

Tart. This death for any one in Mantua.
To come to Padua; know you not the cause?
Your ships are stand at Venice: and the duke
(For private quarrel twist your duke and him)
Has given, and proclaimed it openly:
'Tis marvell; but that you're but a youth,
You might have heard it else proclaimed about.

Ped. Alas, sir, it is worse for me than so;
I have falls for nothing to no profit.

From Florence, and must here deliver them.

Tart. Well, sir, to do you courtesy,
This shall I do, and this will I advise you:—
For to be lost, have you not entreated?

Ped. Ay, sir, in Pisa I have often been;
Pisa, renowned for grave citizens.

Tart. Among them, know you one Vincenzo?

Ped. I know him not, but I have heard of him;
A merchant of incomparable wealti.

Tart. He is my father, sir; and, sooth to say,
I esteem somewhat sooth doth resemble you.

Eloise. As much as an apple doth an oyster,
And all one.

Tart. To save your life in this extremity,
That' s my father's will for his sake.
And think not the worst of all your fortunes,
That you are like to sir Vincenzo.
His name and credit shall you undertake,
And in your house you shall be friendly looked on—
Look that you take upon you as you should;
You understand me, sir;—so shall you stay
Till you have done your business in the city:
This be courte-ly, sir, accept of me.

Ped. O, sir, I do; and will repay you ever
The patron of my life and liberty.

Tart. Then go with me, to make the matter good.
Then I need not you should entreat.

Werest for meat, stilly for lack of sleep:
With oaths kept waking, and with brawling fed:
And that which spares me more than all these wants,
Has been the name of perfect love:
As who should say,—If I should sleep, or eat,

Were deadly sickness, or else present death,—
I prythee go, and get me some repast;
I cannot be moved, for I am fashion'd thus.

Grum. What say you to a meat's foot?

Kath. Ths passing good; I prythee let me have it.

Grum. I fear it is too choler in a meat—

How say you to a fat tripe, finely broiled?

Kath. I like it well; good Grumio, fetch it me.

Grum. I cannot tell; I fear 'ts cholerine.

What say you to a piece of beef, and mustard?

Kath. Ay, I do wish that thou didst to the point.

Grum. Ay, but the mustard is too hot a little.

Kath. Why, then the beef, and let the mustard rest.

Grum. Nay, then I will not; you shall have the mustard,
Or else you get no beef of Grumio.

Kath. Nay, I'll both or on one, or anything thou wilt.

Grum. Why then the mustard without the beef.

Kath. Go, get thee gone, then fake detaining slave.

[Bras t him.

That feed at me with the very name of meat:

Sorrow on thee, and all the pack of you,
That through this upon my misery!

Go, sans repose, I say.

Enter Petruchio with a dish of meat; and Hortensio.

Ped. How fares my Kate! What, sweeting, all

Kath. Mistress, what cheer?

Hor. Faith, as cold as can be

Ped. Puck up thy spirits, look cheerfully upon me.

Here, love; thou see'st how diligent I am,
To dress thy meat myself, and bear the fayre;—

[sets the dish on a table.

I am sure, sweet Kate, this kindness merits thanks.
What, not a word! Nay then, thou hast it not;
And all my pains is parted to no profit.

Here, take away this dish.

Kath. Pray you, let it stand.

Ped. The poorest service is repaid with thanks;
And so shall name before you touch the meat.

Kath. I thank you, sir.

Hor. Signor Petruchio, you are to blame.
Come, Mistress Kate, I'll bear you company.

Ped. Eat it up all, Hortensio, if thou love me.—

[Aside.

Much good do it unto thy gentle heart!

Kate, my sweet!—and now, my fair love,
Will we return unto thy father's house:
And revel it as bravely as the best,
With silken coats and caps, and golden rings.

With a velvet belt, and furbishing, and things;
With scents, and fans, and double change of bravery—

With amber bracelets, beads, and all this knavery.

What then? if thou hast done The tailor's office,
To dock thy body with his ruffling tracery.

Enter Tailor.

Come, tailor, let us see these ornaments;

Enter Haberdasher.

Lay forth the gown.—What news with you, sir?

Hub. Here is the cap your worship did bespeak.

Ped. Why, this was moulded on a porringel!

A velvet dish; fie, for it's lewd and filthy!

Tis, why a cockle, or a walnut shell,
A Knack, a toy, a trick, a baby's cap;
Away with it, rogue, let me have a bigger.

Kath. I'll have no bigger; this doth fit the time,
And gentlewomen wear such caps as these.

Ped. When you are gentle, you shall have one too,
And not till then.

Hor. That will not be in haste. [Aside.

Ped. Why, sir, I say, I may have leave to speak;
And speak I will; I am no child, no babe;
Your speeches have empowered me say my mind.
And if, you cannot, best stop your ears.
My tongue will tell the anger of my heart;
Or else my heart, concealing it, will break;
And rather than it should, I will be stilled.
Ev'n to the uttermost, as I please, in words.

Ped. Why, thou say'st true; it is a pultry cap,
A bastard-colour, a bartable, a silken pie:
I love thee well, in that thou lik'st it not.

Kath. Love me, or love me not, I like the cap;

And if I will have, or I will have none.

Ped. Thy gown? why 'ay; Come, tailor, let us see 't.

[Aside.

O mercy, tell us what masking stuff is here? What's this? a sleeve? 'tis a dam-cannon;
What's up and down, and ear's like an appietant—
Here's a garland, an, and one, and cut, and slash, and slash,
Lace to a censer in a barber's shop—

Why, what, o'head's name, tailor, call'st thou this?

Hor. I see, she's like to have neither cap nor gown.

[Aside.

Tal. You bid me make it orderly and well,
According to the fashion, and the time.

Ped. Marry and did; but if you be remember'd,
I did not make you to be taken to the point.

Go, hop me over every kennel home,
For you shall hop without my custom, sir,
I'll none of it; hence make your best of it.

Kate. I never saw a better-fashion'd gown,
More quaint; more pleasing, nor more commendable;
Belike, you mean to make a puppet of me.

[Dispraise; a tallerseem.

Finery.

A cellar was the culinary term for raised crust.

These corners resembled our banners in shape.

Curious.
Let's see: I think 'tis now some seven o'clock, and we may come there by dinner-time.

Kath. I dare assure you, sir, this almost two; and I'll be supper made ere you come there.

Pet. It shall be seven, ere I go to horse:

Look, what I speak, or do, or think to do,
You are still crossing it—Sir, let alone:
I will not speak to you to-day; I do,
It shall be what o'clock I say it is.

Hor. Why, so! this gallant will command the sun.

Enter TRAMIO, and the Pedant dressed like Vincentio.

Tre. Sir, this is the house: please it, that I call?

Pet. Ay, what else? and, but I be deceived,
Signior Baptist may remember me,
Near twenty years ago, in Genoa, where
We were lodgers at the Pegasus.

Tre. Tis well; and hold your own, in any case, with such Austerity as longeth to a father.

Enter Biondello.

Pet. I warrant you: but, sir, here comes your boy;
'Twere good, he were school'd.

Tre. Fear you not him. Sirrah, Biondello
Now do your duty thoroughly, I advise you;
Imagine 'tis the real Lucentio.

Bion. Tut! fear not me.

Tre. But hast thou done thy errand to Baptist? Bion. I have done two; one proper unto father; and That you look'd for him this day in Padua.

Tre. Thou'rt a tall fellow; hold thee that to drunk.

Here comes Baptist;—set your countenance, sir,—

Enter Baptista and Lucentio.

Signior Baptist, you are happily met;—
Sir, I to the Pedant.

This is the gentleman I told you of;
I pray you, stand good father to me now,
Give me Bianca for my pattimony.

Pet. Soft, son!—

Sir, by your leave; having come to Padua to gather in some debts, my son Lucentio
Made me acquainted with a weighty cause
Of love between your daughter and himself:
And,—for the good report I hear of you;
And for the love he beareth to your daughter,
And she to him,—to stay him not too long,
I am content, in a good father's care,
To have him match'd; and,—if you please to allow
No worse than I, sir,—upon some agreement,
You shall find your daughter married and most willing
With one consent to have her so bestowed;
For curious 3 I cannot be with you.

Signior Baptist, of whom I hear so well.

Bap. Sir, pardon me in what I have to say;—
Your plainness, and your shortness, please me well.
Right true it is, your son, Lucentio here,
Both love my daughter, and she loveth him,
Or both dissemble deeply their affections:
And therefore, if you say no more than this,
That like a father you will deal with him,
And pass my daughter a sufficient dowry,
The match being fully made, and all is done;
Your son shall have my daughter with consent.

Tre. I thank you, sir. Where then do you know best
We be aiding; 4 and such assurance t'en,
As shall with either part's agreement stand?

Bap. Not in my house, Lucentio; for you know,
Fighters have ears, and I have many servants:
Besides, old Bruto is harkening still;
And, happily, 5 we might be interrupted.

Tre. Then at my lodging, an it like you, sir:
There both my father he; and there, this night,
We'll pass the business privately and well;
Send for your daughter by your servant here,
My boy shall fetch the scrivener presently.

Bap. This is this;—this, at so solemn a season,
You're like to have a thither and slender pittance.

Bap. It likes me well,—Cambio, hie you home,
And bid Bianca make her ready straight;

8 Bonamassa.       * Measuring yard.

1 Bravo.       * Scrupulous.       * Assure or convey.

2 Detracted.       * Haply, perhaps.

SCENE IV.—TAMING OF THE SHREW

Pet. Why, true; he means to make a puppet of thee.

Tat. She says your worship means to make a puppet of himself.

Thou blinde, thou base-damsel, half-yard, quarter, nail, thou flean, thou nit, thou winter cricket thou—

Braved in mine own house with a skein of thread!

Away thou rag, thou quantity, thou remnant:

Or here's the so-meter thee with thy yard.

As thou shalt think on prating whilst thou liv'st!

I tell thee, I, that thou hast marr'd her gown.

Tat. Thy worship is deceived; the gown is made Justhow thy master had directed.

Gruino gave order how it should be done.

Gru. I gave him no order, I gave him the stuff.

Tat. But how did you desire it should be made?

Gru. Marry, sir, with needle and thread.

Tat. But did you not request to have it cut?

Gru. Thou hast faced many things.

Tat. I have.

Gru. Face not me: thou hast braved many men; brave not me: I will neither be faced nor braved.

I say unto thee—I bad thy master cut out the gown; but did I not bid him cut to pieces: ergo, thou liest.

Tat. Why, here is the note of the fashion to testify.

Pet. Read it.

Gru. The note lies in his breast, if he says I said so.

Tat. Imprudence, a loose-bodied gown.

Gru. Master, if ever I said loose-bodied gown, sew him in the skirts of it, and beat me to death with a yard of brown thread: I said, a gown.

Tat. With a small compassed cape;

Gru. I confess the cape.

Tat. With a frumpy sleeve,

Gru. I confess two sleeves.

Tat. The sleeves curiously cut.

Pet. Ay, there's the villain.

Gru. Error! the ball, sir; error! the ball. I commanded the sleeves should be cut out, and sewed up again; and that I will prove upon thee, though thy little finger be armed in a thimble.

Tat. This is true, that I say: an I had thee in place where, thou shouldst know it.

Gru. I am for thee straight; take thou the ball, give me the meteyards, and spare not me.

Pet. God-o-mercy, Gruino! then he shall have no ills.

Pet. Well, sir, in brief, the gown is not for me.

Gru. You are the right, sir: 'tis for my mistress.

Pet. What! for me! in a good master's case?

Gru. Villain, not for thy life: Take up my mistress' gown for thy master's use!

Pet. Why, sir, what's your conceit in that?

Gru. Or, sir, the conceit is deeper than you think for:

Take up my mistress' gown to his master's use!

O, fie, fie, fie.

Pet. Hortensio, say thou wilt see the tailor paid:

[Aside.

Go, take it hence; be gone, and say no more.

Hor. Tailor, I'll pay thee for thy gown to-morrow.

Take no unkindness of his hasty words:

Away, I say; command me to thy master.

[Exit Tailor.

Pet. Well, come, my Kate; we will unto your father's,

Even in these honest mean habiliments;

Our purses shall be proud, our garments poor:

For the mind that makes the bodily rich;

And as the sun breaks through the darkest clouds,

Be honor peereth in the meanest habit.

What is, the jay more precious than the lark,

Because his feathers are more brilliant?

Or is the adder better than the eel,

Because his painted skin contains the eye?

O, no, good Kate: neither art thou the worse

For the poor furniture, and mean array.

If thou account'st it shame, lay it on me:

And therefore frolic; we will henceforth,

To feast and sport us at thy father's house,

Go, call the fiddlers, and let us saunter there:

And bring our horses unto Long-late-end here.

There will we mount, and thither walk on foot.

---
And, if you will, tell what hath happened:—
Lucentio's father is arrived in Padua,
And how she's like to be Lucentio's wife.
Luc. I pray the gods may, with all my heart!

Tra. Dally not with the gods, but get thee gone.
Signior Baptista, shall I lead the way?
Welcome! one mess is like to be your cheer:
Come, sir; we'll better it in Padua.

Bap. [Exit TRAVILO, Pedant, and BATTISTA.

Luc. What say'st thou, Biondello?
Bion. You saw my master wink and laugh upon you?
Luc. Biondello, what of that?
Bion. 'Faith nothing: but he has left me here behind, to expound the meaning or moral of his signs and tokens.
Luc. I will be moralized them.

Bion. Then thus. Baptista is safe, talking with the deceiving father of a deceitful son.
Luc. And what of him?
Bion. His daughter is to be brought to you to the supper.

Luc. And then?
Bion. The old priest at Saint Luke's church is at your command at all hours.
Luc. And what of all this?
Bion. I cannot tell: except they are busied about a counterfactual assurance. Take your assurance of her, and you may her assurance of you. Take the priest—take the priest, clerk, and some sufficient honest witnesses:
If this be not what you look for, I have no more to say.

But, bid Bianca farewell for ever and a day.

[Exit.]

Luc. Hear'st thou, Biondello?
Bion. I cannot fancy: I knew a wenches married in an afternoon as she went to the garden for parsley to stuff a rabbit; and so may you, sir; and so done, sir. My master hath appointed me to Saint Luke's, to bid the priest be ready to come against you come with your appendix.
[Exeunt Luc. and Bion.]
Luc. I may, and will, if she be contented;
She shall be pleased, then whereabout should I doubt?
Hap what hap may. I'll roundly go about her.
It shall go hard, if Cambio go without her.
[Exit.]

SCENE V.—A public Room.

Enter PETRUCHIO, KATHARINA, and HORTENSIO.

Pet. Come on, God's name! once more toward our father's,
Good lord, how bright and goodly shines the moon!

Kath. The moon! the sun! it is not moonlight
now.

Pet. I say, it is the moon that shines so bright.
Kath. I know, it is the sun that shines so bright.
Pet. Now, by my mother's son, and that's myself,
It shall be moon, or star, or what I list,

Pet. Nay, then you lie; it is the blessed sun.

Kath. Then, God be blessed, it is the blessed sun—
But sun it is not, when you say it is not;
And the moon changes, even as your mind.
Let them say they discerned, even as it is;
And so it shall be so, for Katharine.

Hor. Petruchio, go thy ways; the field is won.

Pet. Well, forward, forward: thus the bowl should run.
And not unluckily against the bias—
But soft; what company is coming here?

Enter VINCENTIO, in a travelling dress.

Good morrow, gentle mistress: Where away—?

Tell me, sweet Kate, and tell me truly too,
Hast thou beheld a fresher gentlewoman?
Such war of white and red within her cheeks!
What stars do sparkle heaven with such beauty,
As these two eyes become that heavenly face?
Fair lady maid, once more good day to thee—
Sweet Kate, embrace her for her beauty's sake.

Hor. A will make the man mad, to make a woman of him.

Kath. Young budding virgin, fair, and fresh, and sweet,
Whither away; or where is thy abode?
Happy the parents of so fair a child;
Happier the man, whom favourable stars
Allot thee for his lovely bed-fellow!

Pet. Yonder, Kate! I hope thou art not mad:
This is a man, old, wrinkled, faded, wither'd;
And not a maiden, as thou say'st he is.

Kath. Petruchio, old father, my mistaking eyes,
That have been so bedazzled with the sun,
That every thing I look on seemeth green;
Now I perceive, thou art a reverend father;
Pardon, pray thee, for my mad mistaking.

Pet. Do, good old grandsire; and, wittal, make known
Which way thou travellest: if along with us,
We shall be joyful of thy company.

Vim. Fair sir—and you, my merry mistress.—
That with your strange encounter much amaz'd me,
My name's Petruchio—My name Petruchio,
That with your strange encounter much amaz'd
e—Petruchio.
And bound I am to Padua; there to visit
A son of mine, which long I have not seen.

Pet. What is his name?

Vim. Lucentio, gentle sir
Pet. Happily met; the happier for thy son.
And now by law, as well as reverend age,
I may entitle thee—my loving father;
The son to my wife, this gentlewoman,
Thy son by this lawful marriage: Wunder not,
Nor be not grieved; she is of good esteem,
Her dowry wealthy, and of worthy birth;
Besides, so equalled as may beleaguer
The spouse of any noble gentleman.
Let me embrace with old Vincentio;
And wander we to see thy honest sons,
Who well of thy arrival be full joyous.

Pet. But is this true? or is it else your pleasure,
Like pleasant travellers, to break a jest
Upon the company you overtake?

Hor. I do assure thee, father, so it is.

Pet. Come, go alone, and see the truth hereof;
For our first accosting hath made me jealous.

[Exit PETRUCHIO, KATHARINA, and VINCENTIO.

Hor. Well, Petruchio, this hath put me in heart.
Have to my widow; and if she be braward,
Then hast thou taught Hortensio to be untoward.

ACT V.

Enter on one side BIONDELLO, LUCENTIO, and
BLANCA; GLEMIUS walking on the other side.

Bion. So softly and swiftly, sir; for the priest is ready.
Luc. I fly, Biondello; but they may chance to need thee at home, therefore leave us.
Bion. Nay, faith, I'll see the church o' your back;
and then come back to my master as soon as I can.

[Exeunt LUCENTIO, BLANCA, and BIONDELLO.

Gle. I marzel Cambio comes not all this while.

Enter PETRUCHIO, KATHARINA, VINCENTIO, and Attendants.

Pet. Sir, here's the door, this is Lucentio's house;
My father bears more toward the market place;
Thither must I, and here I leave you, sir.

Vim. You shall not choose but drink before you go;
I think, I shall command your wine here;
And by all likelihood, some cheer is toward.

[Knocks.

Gle. They're busy within, you were best knock louder.
Scene I. TAMING OF THE SHREW.

Enter Pedant above, at a window.

Ped. What's he, that knocks as he would beat down the gate?

Vin. Is signor Lucentio within, sir?

Ped. He's within, sir, but not to be spoken withal.

Vin. What if a man bring him a hundred pounds or two, to make me melancholical?

Ped. Keep your hundred pounds to yourself; he shall need none, so long as I live.

Ped. Nay, I told you, your son was belov'd in Padua—Do you hear, sir?—to have frivolous circumstances,—I pray you, tell signor Lucentio, that his father is come from Pisa, and is here at the door to speak with him.

Ped. Thou least; his father is come from Pisa, and here looking out at the window.

Vin. Art thou his father?

Ped. Ay, sir; so his mother says, if I may believe her.

Ped. Why, how now, gentleman? [To VINCENTIO.] why, this is that knavery, to take upon you another man's name?

Ped. Lay hands on the villain; I believe 'a means to cozen somebody in this city under my countenance.

Re-enter Biancino.

Bian. I have seen them in the church together:

But who is here? mine old master, Vincentio? now we are undone, and brought to nothing.

Vin. Come hither, catch-hen.

[Seeing Biondello.

Bian. I hope, I may choose, sir.

Vin. Come hither, you rogue: What, have you forgot whom you are?

Bian. Forgot you? no, sir; I could not forget you, for I never saw you before in all my life.

Vin. What, you notorious villain, dost thou never regard thy master's, Vincentio? Bian. What, my old, worshipful old master? yes, marry, sir; see where he looks out of the window.

Vin. Is't so, indeed? [To Biondello.]

[Exeunt Biondello and Pedant.

Bian. Help, son! help, signior Baptista! [Exit from the window.

[Exeunt Pedant below; Baptista, Tranio, and Servants.

Tran. Sir, what are you, that offer to best my servant?

Vin. What am I, sir? may what are you, sir?—O immortal gods! O fine villain! a silken doublet, a velvet hose! a scarlet cloak! and a capon's hate—O, I am undone! I am undone! while I play the good husband at home, my son and my servant spend all at the university.

Tran. How now! what's the matter?

Bian. What's the man?—Tran. Sir, you seem a sober ancient gentleman by your habit, but your words show you a madman: Why, sir, what concerns it to you, if I wear pearl and gold? I thank my good father, I am able to maintain it.

Tran. Thy father? O, villain! he is a sail-maker in Bergamo.

Bian. You mistake, sir; you mistake, sir: Pray, what do you think is his name?

Vin. His name? as if I knew not his name! I have brought him up ever since he was three years old, and I know him well.

Ped. Away, away, mad ass! his name is Lucentio; and he is mine only son, and heir to the lands of me, signior Vincentio.

Bian. Lucentio! O, he hath murdered his master!—Lay hold on him, I charge you, in the duke's name:—O, my son, my son!—tell me, thou villain, where is my son Lucentio?

Tran. My lord, sir, I'll call our captain,—[Enter one with an Officer.] Carry this mad knave to the gaol:—Father Baptista, I charge you, see that he be forthcoming.

Vin. Carry me to the gaol? [To the Officer.]

Gre. Stay, officers: he shall not go to prison.

Bian. Talk not, signior Gremio; I say he shall go to prison.

Gre. Take heed, signior Baptista, lest you be cheated in this business; I dare swear, this is the right Vincentio.

Ped. Swear, if thou dar'st.

Gre. Nay, I dare not swear it.

Tran. Then thou wast best say, that I am not Lucentio.

Gre. Yes, I know thee to be signior Lucentio.

Bian. Away with the dotard; to the good with him.

Vin. Thus a stranger may be hated and abused—O monstrous villain!

Re-enter Biondello, with Lucentio and Bianca.

Bian. O, we are spoiled, and—Vonder he is; deny him, forswear him, or else we are all undone.

Luc. Pardon, sweet father. [Kneeling.

Vin. Lu., I live, my sweetest son!

Bian. And pardon, dear father. [Kneeling.

Luc. Where's Lucentio?

Vin. Here's Lucentio, Right son unto the right Vincentio; That have by marriage made thy daughter mine;

While counterfeits suppose her'd them rise;—

Gre. Here's packing, with a witness, to deceive us all!

Vin. Where is that damned villain Tranio, That fared and deceived in this matter so?

Bian. Why, tell me, is not this my Cambio?

Bian. Cambio is changed into Lucentio.

Luc. Love wrought these miracles, Bianca's love Made me examine my state with Tranio.

While he did bear my countenance in the town; And happily I have arrived at last Into the wished haven of my bliss.

What Tranio knoweth, myself enjoyed him to; Then pardon him, sweet father, for my sake.

Vin. I'll slit the villain's nose, that would have sent me to their gaol.

Bian. But do you hear, sir? [To Lucentio.] Have you married my daughter without asking my good-will?

Vin. Fear not, Baptista; we will content you, go to: But I will in, to be revenged for this villain.

[Exit.]

Bian. And I, to sound the depth of this knavery.

[Exit.

Luc. Look not pale, Bianca; thy father will not frown.

[Exeunt Luc., and Bian.

Gre. My cake is done:—But I'll in among the rest:

Out of hope of all,—but my share of the feast.

[Exit.

PETRUCHIO and Katharina advance.

Kath. Husband, let's follow, to see the end of this ado.

Pet. First kiss me, Kate, and we will.

Kath. What, in the midst of the street?

Pet. What, art thou ashamed of me?

Kath. No, sir; but I am, and—her face blushed to kiss,

Pet. Why, then let's home again:—Come, sitraph, let's away.

Kath. Nay, I will give thee a kiss: now pray thee, love, stay.

Pet. Is not this well?—Come, my sweet Kate; Better once than never, for never too late.

[Exit.

SCENE II.—A Room in Lucentio's House.

A Banquet set out. Enter Baptista, Vincentio, Gremio, the Pedant, Lucentio, Bianca, Petruchio, Katharina, Hortensio, and Widow; Tranio, Biondello, Gremio, and others, attending.

Luc. At last, though long, our jarring notes agree; And time it is, when raging war is done, To smile at 'scapes and perils overflow'd,— My fair Bianca, but my father we come, While I with self-same kindness welcome thee:—

Brother Petruchio,—sister Katharina,— And thou, Hortensio, with thy loving widow, Are best entertained with this feast; and welcome to my house: My banquet is to close our stomachs up. After our great good cheer. Pray you, sit down, For now we sit to chat as well as eat.

[They sit at table.

Pet. Nothing but sit and sit, and eat and eat! Bianca, Padua afford this kindness, son Petruchio.

1 Deceived thine eyes.

2 Tricking, underhand contrivances.

3 Proverbial expression, repeated after a disappointment.
Pet.        Patrizio affords nothing but what is kind.
Hor.    For both our sakes, I would that word were true.
Pet.        Now, for my life, Hortensio fears his widow.
Wid.   Then never trust me! I'll be afraid.
Pet.    You are sensible, and yet you miss my sense; I mean Hortensio is afraid of you.
Wid. He that is giddy, thinks the world turns round.
Kath.  Mistress, how mean you that?
Pet.    Thus I conceive by him.
Pet.    Conveys me!—How likes Hortensio that?
Hor.    My widow says, thus she conceives her life.
Pet.    Very well mended: Kiss him for that, good widow.
Kath. He that is giddy, thinks the world turns round:
I pray you, tell me what you meant by that.
Pet.        Your husband, being troubled with a shrew,
Measures his husband's sorrows by his voice:
And now you know my meaning.
Kath.    A very mean meaning.
Kath.    And I am mean, indeed, respecting you.
Pet. To her, Kate!
Hor.    To her, widow!
Pet.    A hundred marks, my Kate does put her down.
Hor. That's my office.
Pet.    spoke like an officer:—Ha, to thee, aud.
[Drinks to Hortensio.
Bap.    How likes Gremio these quick-witted folks!
Gre.    Believe me, sir, they butt together well.
Blon. Head, and butt a hard-witted body.
Wid.    Would not have her head and butt were head and born.
Pet.    Ay, mistresse bride, bath that awakened!
Blon.    Ay, but not frighted me; therefore I'll sleep again.
Pet. Nay, that you shall not; since you have begun.
Have at you for a bitter jest or two.
Blon.    Am I your lord? I mean to shift my bush,
And then pursue me as you draw your bow:—
You are welcome all.
[Enter Blanca, Katharina, and Widow.
Pet.    She hath prevented me. Here signor Tranio,
This bird you aimed at, though you hit her not;
Therefore, a health to all that shot and missed.
Tra.    O sir, Lucentio slip'd me like his grey-hound,
Which runs himself, and catches for his master.
Pet.    A good swift single, but something curriish.
Tra.    Think that you hunt for yourself;
'Tis thought, your deer does hold you at a bay.
Bap.    O ho, Petrucho, Tranio hits you now.
Luc.    I think thee for that girl, good Tranio.
Hor.    Confess, confess, hast he not hit you here?
Pet.    'A has a little gall'd me, I confess;
And as the jest did glance away from me,
'Tis ten to one it ma'm'd you two outright.
Blon.    In good sickness, an Petrucho, I think thou hast the veriest shrew of all.
Pet.    Well, I say:—and therefore, for assurance,
Let each one send unto his wife;
And he, whose wife is most obedient
To come at first when he doth send for her,
Shall win the wager which we will propose.
Hor.    Content: What is the wager?
Luc.    Twenty crowns.
Pet.    Twenty crowns!
I'll venture so much on my hawk, or hound,
But twenty times so much upon my wife.
Hor.    A hundred then.
Luc.    Content.
Pet.    A match; 'tis done.
Hor.    Who shall begin?
Luc.    That will I. Go,
Biondello, bid your mistress come to me.
Bion.    [Exit.
Bap.    Son, I will be your half, Bianca comes on.
Luc.    I'll have no halves: I'll bear it all myself.
[Re-enter Biondello.
Pet. How! what news!
Bian.    Sir, my mistress sends you word
That she is busy, and she cannot come!
Sarcasm.
And craves no other tribute at thy hands,
But love, fair looks, and true obedience;—
Too little payment for so great a debt.
Such duty as the subject owes the prince,
Even such, a woman oweth to her husband:
And when she's froward, peevish, sullen, sour,
And not obedient to his honest will,
What is she, but a foul contending rebel,
And graceless traitor to her loving lord!
I am ashamed, that women are so simple
To offer war, where they should kneel for peace:
Or seek for rule, supremacy, and sway,
When they are bound to serve, love, and obey.
Why are our bodies soft, and weak, and smooth,
Unapt to toil and trouble in the world;
But that our soft conditions and our hearts,
Should well agree with our external parts!
Come, come, you froward and unable worms!
My mind hath been as big as one of yours,
My heart as great; my reason, haply more
To bandy-word for word, and frown for frown:
But now, I see our lances are but straws;
Our strength as weak, our weakness past compare,—

That seeming to be most, which we least are.
Then vail your stomachs; for it is no boot;
And place your hands below your husband's foot:
In token of which duty, if he please,
My hand is ready, may it do him ease.
Pet. Why, there's a wench!—Come on, and kiss me, Kate.
Luc. Well, go thy ways, old lad; for thou shalt ha'nt.
Vin. 'Tis a good hearing, when children are toward.
Lac. But a harsh hearing, when women are toward.
Pet. Come, Kate, we'll to bed:—
We three are married, but you two are sped.
'Twas I won the wager, though you hit the white:
[To Lucetio.
And, being a winner, God give you good night!
[Exeunt Petrucio and Kath.
Hor. Now go thy ways, thou hast tamed a curst shrew.
Luc. 'Tis a wonder, by your leave, she will be tamed so.
[Exeunt.
WINTER'S TALE.

PERSONS REPRESENTED.

LEONTES, King of Sicilia.
ANTIPHRIS, his Son.
CAMILLO, Sir Eobemian Lord.
ANTITONIUS, Sicilian Lord.
CLEOXMES, another Sicilian Lord.
DORCIA, another Sicilian Lord.
ROGERIO, a Sicilian Gentleman.

SCENE, sometimes in Sicilia, sometimes in Bohemia.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Sicilia. An Antechamber in Leontes' Palace.

Enter Camillo and Archibamus.

Cam. If you shall chance, Camillo, to visit Bohemia, on the like occasion wherein my services are now on foot, you shall see, as I have said, great difference betwixt our Bohemia and your Sicilia.

Arch. I think this coming summer, the King of Sicilia means to pay Bohemia the visitation which he justly owes him.

Cam. Wherein our entertainment shall shame us, we will be justly satisfied: for, indeed—

Cam. Beseech you—

Arch. Verily, I speak it in the freedom of my knowledge: we cannot with such magnificence as the Sicilians have, make separation of their society, their compliments, nor can we afford what which cannot choose but branch now. Since their more mature dignities, and royal necessities, made separation of their society, their entertainments, though not personal, have been royally authorized, by interchange of gifts, letters, loving embassades; that they have seemed to be together, though absent; shook hands, as over a vast and embraced as it were, from the ends of opposed winds. The heavens continue their loves.

Arch. I think, there is not in the world either malice, or matter, to alter it. You have an unspeakable comfort of your young prince Mamillius; it is a gentleman of the greatest promise, that ever came into my note.

Cam. I very well agree with you in the hopes of him: it is a gallant child; one that, indeed, physics the subjects make him hearts fresh: they, that went on crutches ere he was born, desire yet their life, to see him a man.

Arch. Would they else be content to die?

Cam. Yes: if there were no other excuse why they should desire to live.

Arch. If the king had no son, they would desire to live on crutches till he had one. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Room of State in the Palace.

Enter Leontes, Polixenes, Hermione, Camillo, and Attendants.

Pol. Nine changes of the watery star have been the shepherd's note, since we have left our throne Without a burden: time as long again Would be fill'd up, my brother, with our thanks; And yet we should, for perpetuity, Go hence in debt: And therefore, like a cipher, Yet standing in rich place, I multiply, With one we-thank-you, many thousands more That go before it.

Leons. Stay your thanks awhile; And pay them when you part.

Pol. Sir, that's to-morrow.

Leons. I am question'd of my fears, of what may chance, for breed upon our absence: That may blow No snapping winds at home, to make us say,

This is put forth too truly! Besides, I have stay'd To tire your royalty. We are tougher, brother, Than you can put us to.

Pol. No longer stay.

Leons. One seven-night longer.

Pol. Very sooth, to-morrow.

Leons. We'll part the time between's then; and in that I'll no gain-saying.

Pol. Press me not, 'scape you so: There is no tongue that moves, none, none I the world.

So soon as yours, could win me; so it should now, Were there necessity in your request, although They were needful I denied it. My affairs To even drag me homeward: which to hinder, Were, in your love, a whip to me; my stay, To you a charge, and trouble: to save both, Farewell, our brother.

Leons. Tongued-diced, our queen! speak you.

Pol. I had thought, sir, to have held my peace, until You had drawn oaths from him, not to stay. Yest. Charge him too coldly: Tell him, you are sure, Nipping.
Scene II. WINTER'S TALE.

All in Bohemia's well: this satisfaction
The by-gone day proclaims:—say this to him,
He's best from his best bard.

Leo. What?—Well said, Hermione.

Her. To tell, he longs to see his son, are strong;
But let him say so then, and let him go;
But let him swear so, and he shall not stay,
We'll trick him hence with needless partials,
Yet of your royal presence [To POLIXENES] I'll adventure
The borrow of a week. When at Bohemia
You take my lord, I'll give him my commission,
To let him there a month, behind the jests,
Prefixed for his parting: yet good deed,
Leontes, I love thee not a jot of the clock behold
But lady she her lord.—You'll stay!—

Pol. No, madam.

Her. Nay, but you will.

Pol. Verily.

You put me oil with limmer vows: But I,
Though you would seek to unsphare the stars with oaths,
Should yet say, Sir, no going, Verily.
You shall not go; a lady's verily is
As potent as a lord's. Will you go yet?
Force me to keep you as a prisoner,
Not like a guest; so you shall pay your fees,
When you depart, and save your thanks.
How say you?
My prisoner! or my guest? by your dread verity,
One of them you shall be.

Pol. Your guest then, madam;—
To be your prisoner, should import ointling;
Which is for me less easy to commit,
Than to you to punish.

Her. Not your guest then,
But your kind hostess. Come, I'll question you
Of my lord's tricks, and yours, when you were boys:
You were pretty fooling;—thine.

Pol. We were, fair queen,
Two lads, that thought there was no more trouble,
But such a day boomerang as to day,
And to be boy eternal.

Her. Was not my lord the wender wag o'the two?
Pol. We were as twinn'd lambs, that did frisk
The sun,
And beat the one at the other: what we changed,
Was innocence for innocence; we knew not
The doctrine of all-hoing, no, nor dream'd
That any did:—Had we pursued that life,
And our weak spirits never been higher reared
With stronger blood, we should have answer'd
Boldly. Not guilty: the imposition clear'd, Hereditary ours.

Her. By this we gather,
You have tripp'd since.

Pol. O my most sacred lady,
Sensations have since then been born to us: for
In those unfeeling days was my wife a girl;
Your precious self had then not crossed the eyes
Of my young play-fellow.

Her. Grace to boot!
Of this make this jest; lest you say,
Your queen and I are devils: Yet go on;
The others we have made you do, we'll answer:
If you first smud with us, and that with us
You did continue faith, and that you slipp'd not
With any but us.

Pol. Is he won yet?

Her. He'll stay, my lord.

Leo. With my request, he would not.

Hermione, my dearest, thou never spok'st,
To better purpose.

Her. Never?

Leo. Never, but once.

Her. What! have I twice said well? when was twice before
I pritchy, tell me: Cran us with praise, and make us
As fat as tame things: One good deed, dying tongueless,
Slaughters a thousand, waiting upon that.
Our praises are our wage: You may ride us,
With one soft kiss, a thousand murmurs, ere
We have any heart aotec. But to the goal—
My last good deed was, to excel his stay;—

1. Gest's were the names of the stages where the king spoke to us, during a royal progress.
2. Indeed.

A Dumitive of lords.
Are you so fond of your young prince, as we Do seem to be of ours?

Pol. Yes, at home, sir;
He's all my exercise, my mirth, my matter:
Now my sworn friend, and then mine enemy;
My parasite, my soldier, statesman, all;
He makes a July's day short as December;
And, in this having childishness, cues in me
Thoughts that would thicken my blood.

Leon. So stands this squire
Offends with me: we two will walk, my lord,
And leave you to your gracious steps—Hermione,
How thou hast us, show in our brother's welcome;
Let what is dear in Sicily be cheap:
Next to thyself, and to a young rover, he's Apparent to my heart.

Her. If you would seek us,
We are your's the garden Shall's attend you there!

Leon. Do your own arts dispose you: you'll be Found beneath the sky:—I am angling now,
Though you perceive not how I give line.

Go to, go to!—

[Aside. Observing POLICENNES and HERMIONE.
How she holds up the neck, the bill to him,
And arms her with the bending of a wife.
To her allowing husband! Gone already;
Inch-thick, knee-deep; o'er head and ears a fork'd one.

[Enter POLICENNES, HERMIONE, and Attendants.

Go, play, boy, play,—thy mother plays, and
I Play too; but so disgraced a part, whose issue
Will bring the grace, and grace the shame of a wife.
Then will I play, and grace the shame of a wife,
Will be my kinsm,—Go, go, boy, play:—There have been,
Or I am much deceived, courtiers ere now;
And many a man there is, even at this present,
Now, while I speak this, holds his wife by the arm,
That little thinks she has been sluced in his absence,
And his pond fish'd by his next neighbor, by
Not her this neighbor: say, there's comfort in't,
Whiles other men have gates; and those gates open'd,
As mine, against their will: should all despair.
That have revolted wives, the tenth of mankind
Would hang themselves. Physick for there is none;
It is a bawdy planet that will strike
Where 'tis predominant: and 'tis powerful, think it,
From east, west, north, and south; Be it concluded,
No barraco for a belly; know it;
It will let in and out the enemy,
With bag and baggage, damme, a thousand of us
Have there a sense, and feel not—How now, boy?

Mam. I am like you, they say.

Leon. Why, that's some comfort.—
What! Camillo there?

Cam. Ay, my good lord;
Leon. Go play, Mamillius; thou'rt an honest man.

[Exit MAMILIUS.

Cam. Go you had much ado to make his anchor hold:
When you cast out, it still came home.

Leon. Didst note it?

Cam. Yes, he would not stay at your petitions; made
His business more material.

Leon. Didst perceive it?

They're here with me already; whispering, round-

SCELISIA is so forth. 'Tis far gone.
When shall I gust it last—How can't, Camillo,
That he did stay?

Cam. At the great queen's entire.

Leon. At the queen's bed? good should be perceiv-bent but so it, is it not. Was this taken

By any understanding but that thing
For thy conceit is seeking, will draw in
More than the common blocks:—Not noted, is't,
But that the finer nature, I by some several,
Of head-piece extraordinary! lower messes,
Perchance, are to this business portend: say.

Cam. Business, my lord! I think, most understand-

Bohemia stays here longer.
* To heir apparent, next claimant.
Mouth.
A horned one, a coeack.
* To round in the ear was to tell secretly.
Twice.

Leon. Ha! Stays here longer.

Cam. Ay, but why?

Leon. To satisfy your highness, and the entertain-

Of our most gracious mistress.

Leon. Satisfy the entertainments of your mistress:—

Let that suffice. I have trusted thee, Camillo,
With all the nearest things to my heart, as well
My chamber counsellors: wherein, preistshe, thou
Hast cleared my bosom, and from hence departed
Thy penitent reform'd: but we have been Deceived in thy integrity, deceived
In that which seems so.

Leon. Be it for好, my lord!

Leon. To hide upon't:—Thou art not honest or,
If thou inclin'st that way, thou art a coward;
Which honest honesty behind, restraints and clanker
From course required: Or else thou must be counted
A servant,crafted in my serious trust,
And therein neglectful; or else a fool,
That says a game play'd home, the rich stake drawn,
And tak't it all for jest.

Cam. My gracious lord,
May I be negligent, foolish, and fain; in Every one of these no man is free,
But that his negligence, his folly, fear,
Amongst the minute doings of the world,
Sometimes puts forth: Do you your subjects, my lord,
If ever I was wilful-neglectful,
It was my folly; if industriously
I play'd the fool, it was my negligence,
Not wanting well the end; and if ever fearful
To do a thing, where I the issue doubted,
Whereof the execution did cry out
Against the non-performance, 'twas a fear
And nothing else: Which all to the honest; these, my lord,
Are such allow'd intimates, that honesty
Is never free of. But, beseech your grace,
The plainer with me: let me know my trespass
By its own visage, if I then decay it,
'tis none of mine.

Leon. Have not you seen Camillo, (But that's but past doubt, you have;) or your eye-glass
Is thicker than a cocks-horn, or heard,
(For, to a vision so apparent, rumor
Cannot be mute,) or thought, (for cogitation
Hesides not in that man, that does not think it.)
My wife is slippery! if thou wilt confes,
(Or else be impudently negative,
To have nor eyes, nor ears, nor thought,) then say
Why wilt give a hobby-horse, and take the same
As rank as any flax wench, that puts to
Before her troth-plight: say it, and justify it.

Cam. I would not be a stander-by, to hear
My sovereign mistress clouded so, without
My present vengeance taken:—shew my heart,
You never spoke what did become you less
Than this: which to reterate, were sin
As deep as that, though true.

Leon. Is whispering nothing?
Is leaning cheek to cheek? is meeting noses!
Kissing with inside lip? spitting the career
Of /anger with a sigh? (a note inalute
Of breaking honesty;) horsing foot on foot!
Shaking in corners! wishing clocks more swift!
Hours, minutes! noon, midnight, and all eyes blind
With the pin and wheel, but theirs, theirs only,
That would unseen be wicked! is this nothing?
Why, then the world, and all that's in't, is nothing;
The crying sky is nothing: Bohemia nothing;
My wife is nothing; nor have those things these,
That be nothing.

Cam. Good my lord, be cured
Of this disease, and banish it; for
Its most dangerous.

Leon. Say, it be; 'tis true.

Cam. No, no, my lord.

Leon. It is: you lie, you lie,
I say, thouliest, Camillo, and I hate thee;
Proneounce thee a grass butt, a mindless slave:
Or else a lowering temperizer, that
Canst with thine eye canst not once see good and evil,
Inclining to them both. Were my wife's liver
At her life, she would not live
The running of one glass.

Cam. Who does infect her?

* To hoe is to hamstring. * Disorders of the eye.
Your changed complections are to me a mirror, Which shows me mine changed too; for I must be A party in this alteration, finding Myself thus alter’d with it.

Cam. There is a sickness
Which puts some of us in distemper; but I cannot name the disease; and it is caught Of you that yet are well.

Pol. How came I to be of this? I make me not sighted like the basilisk. I have look’d on thousands, who have spelt the better By my regard, but kild’ne none so. Camillo, As you are certainly a gentleman; therefore Clerk-like, experienced, which no less adorns Our gentry, than our parents noble names, In whose success we are genteel—i. beseech you, If you know aught which does behave my knowledge Thereof to be infor’d, imprison it not.

In Ignorant concealment.

Cam. I may not answer. Pol. A sickness catch’d of me, and yet I well! I must be answered.—Dost thou hear, Camillo, I conjure thee, by all the parts of man, Which honor does acknowledge,—whereof the least Is not this suit of mine,—that thou declare What incedency thou dost guess of harm Is creeping toward me; how far off, how near; Which way to be prevented, if to be; If not, how best to bear it.

Cam. Sir, I’ll tell you; since I am charg’d in honor, and by him That I think honorable: Therefore, mark my counsel; Which must be even as swiftly follow’d, as I mean to utter it: or both yourself and me Cry lost, and so good night.

Pol. On, good Camillo. Cam. I am appointed him to murder you. Pol. By whom, Camillo? By the king.

Pol. For what?

Cam. He thinks, nay, with all confidence he swears To as he had seen, or been an instrument To vice you to;—that you have touch’d his queen Forbidingly.

Pol. O, then my best blood turn To an infected jelly; and my name Be yok’d with his, that did betray the best! Turn then my freshest reputation To soveraigns, thus strike the duldest nostril Where I arrive; and my approach be shunn’d, Nay, hated too, worse than the greatest infection That e’er was heard, or read.

Camillo. Swear his thought over By each particular star in heaven, and By all their influences, you may as well Forbid the sea for to obey the moon. As a potion follow’d, or by oath, remove, or counsel, shake The fabric of his folly; whose foundation Is piled upon his faith, and will continue The standing of his body.

Pol. How should this grow! Cam. I know not: but, I am sure, ’tis safer To avoid what’s grown, than question how it’s born. If therefore you dare trust my honesty, That lies enclosed in this trunk, which you shall bear along impaw’d,—away to-night. Your followers I will whisper to the business; And well, by thos, and all at several posts, Clear them o’ the city; for myself, I’ll put My fortunes to your service, which are here By this discovery lost. Be not uncertain; For, by the honor of my parents, I have utter’d truth: which if you seek to prove, I dare not stand by; nor shall you be safer Than one condem’d by the king’s own mouth, there.

His execution sworn.

Pol. I do believe thee: I saw his heart in his face. Give me thy hand: Be pilot to none but me, the world at several posts, Still neighbor mine: My ships are ready, and My people did expect my hence departure Two days ago.—This jealousy Is for a precious creature: as she’s rare, For succession. Gentle was opposed to simple; well born. I. e. The person.

Scene II.
Act II.

Scene 1.—The same.

Enter Hermion, Mamilles, and Ladies.

Her. Take the boy to you; he so troubles me,
'Tis past enduring.

1 Lady. Come, my gracious lord,
Shall I be your play-fellow?—Pray now,

2 Lady. Why, my sweet lord!

Mam. No, I'll none of you.

Lady. You'll kiss me hard, and speak to me as if I were a baby still,—I love you better.

Lady. And why so, my good lord?

Mam. Not for because Your brows are blacker; yet black brows, they say,
Become some women best; so that there be not Too much hair there, but in a semi-circle,
Or half-moon made with a pen.

2 Lady. Who taught you this?

Mam. I learn'd it out of women's faces. —Pray
Now,

What color are your eye-brows?

1 Lady. Blue, my lord.

Mam. Nay, that's a mock; I have seen a lady's

That hath been blue, but not her eye-brows.

2 Lady. Hark ye;

The queen, your mother, round aspace we shall Present our services to a fine new prince,
One of these days; and then you'd wanton with us
If we would have you.

1 Lady. She is spread of late
Into a godly bulk: Good time encounter her!

Her. What wisdom stirs amongst you! Come, sir,
now
I am for you again: Pray you, sit by us,
And tell's a tale.

Mam. Merry, or sad, shall I be?

Her. As merry as you will.

Mam. A sad tale's best for winter;

I have one of sprites and goblings.

Her. Let's have that, sir.

Come on, sit down.—Come on, and do your best
To trig me with your sprites: you're powerful
At it.

Mam. There was a man.—

Her. Nay, come, sit down; then on.

Mam. Dwelt by a church-yard; —I will tell it nottily:

You crickets shall not hear it.

Her. Come on, then,

And give me in mine ear.

Enter Leon, Antigonus, Lords, and others.

Leon. Was he met there? his train Camillo with him?

1 Lord. Behind the tuft of pines I met them;
Or his ill-ta'en suspicion! Come, Camillo;—I will respect thee as father, if Thou bearst my life off hence: Let us avoid Camilo. Yet it is mine authority, my command
The keys of all the posterns: Please your highness,
To take the urgent hour: come, sir, away.

[Exit.

ACT II.

He has discover'd my design, and I
Remain a pinch'd thing; yea, a very trick
For them to play at will.—How came the posterns
So easily open?

1 Lord. By his great authority;
Which often hath no less prevailed than so,
On your command.

Leon. I know't too well.—
Give me the boy; I am glad, you did not nurse him:
Though he does bear some signs of me, yet you
Have too much blood in him.

Her. What is this? sport!

Leon. Bear the boy hence, he shall not come
About her;
Away with him;—and let her sport herself
With that she's big with; for his Polixenes
Has made thee swell thus.

Her. But I'd say he had not,
And, I'll be sworn, you would believe my saying,
However you lean to the wayward.

Leon. You, my lords,
Look on her, mark her well; he but about,
To say, she is a goodly lady, and
The justice of your hearts will thereto add,
'Tis pity she's not honest, honorable.

Fraise her but for this her without-doors form,
(Which, on my faith, deserves high speech),
and straight
The shrill shrill of hum, or ha; these petty bands,
That calumnies doth use,—I am out,
That mercy does; for calumni will bear
Virtue itself.—These shrugs, these hums, and ha's,
When you have said, she's goodly, come between,
'Fe you can say she's honest: but be it known,
From him that has most cause to grieve it should be,
She's an adulteress.

Her. Should a villain say so,
The most replenish'd villain in the world,
He were as much more villain: you, my lord,
Do but mistake.

You have mistook, my lady,

Polixenes for Leon; 0 thin thing,
Which I'll not call a creature of thy place,
Lost barbarism, making me the precedent,
Should a like language use to all degrees,
And mannerly distinction leave out
Betwixt the prince and beggar—I have said,
She's an adulteress; I have said with whom:
More, she's a traitor; and Camillo is
A seducer; with her; and one that knows
What she should shame to know herself,
But with her most vile principal, that she's
A bed-sweaver, even as bad as those
That vulgar give bold tattle; ay, and privy
To this their late escape.

Her. No, by my life,
Privy to none of this: How will this grieve you,
When you shall come to clearer knowledge, that
You thus have publish'd me! Gentle my lord,
You can right me thoroughly then, to say
You did mistake.

Leon. No, no; if I mistake
In those foundations which I build upon,
The centre is not big enough to bear
A school-boy's top.—Away with her to prison:
He, who shall speak for her, is afar off guilty,2
But that he speaks.

Her. There's some ill planet reigns:
I must be patient, till the heavens look
With an aspect more favorable. Good my lords,
I am not prone to weeping, as our sex
Commonly are; the want of which vain dew,
Perchance, shall dry our pities: but I have
That honorable grief lodg'd here, which burns

1 A thing jinched out of charts, a puppet.
2 Brand as infamous. 1 Confused. 2 Only.
3 Remotely guilty. 4 In merely speaking.
Scene II. WINTER'S TALE.

Worse than tears-drown: Beseech you all, my lords,
With thoughts so qualified as your charities
Shall best instruct you, measure me; and so
The king's will be performed.

Leon. Shall I be heard?

[To the Guards.]

Her Wh. is't that goes with me!—Beseech your highness,
My women may be with me; for, you see,
My plight requires it. Do not weep, good folks;
There is no cause: when you shall know your mistresses.

Leon. Has deserved prison, then abound in tears,
As I come out: this action, I now go on,
For my better grace.—Alas, my lord; I
Never wish'd to see you sorry for me.
I trust, I shall.—My women come; you have leave.

Leon. Go do your bidding; hence.

[Exit Queen and Ladies.

1 Lord. Beseech your highness, call the queen again.

Ant. Be certain what you do, sir, lest your justice
Prove violence; in which three great oncers suffer,
Yourself, your queen, your son.

1 Lord. For her, my lord,—

Ant. I dare my life lay down, and will do't, sir,
Please you to accept it, that the queen is spotless
The eyes of heaven, and to you; I mean,
In this which you accuse her.

Ant. If it prove
She's otherwise, I'll keep my stables where
I leave my wife; I'll go in couple with her;
When I see her, and her, no further trust her;
For every inch of woman in the world,
Ay, every dram of woman's flesh, is false,
If she be the be.

Leon. Hold your peace.

1 Lord. Good my lord,—

Ant. It is for you we speak, not for ourselves:
Your dearest, and by some putter on,
That will be damn'd for't; would I knew the villain,
I would hand-damn him: Be he honor'd—

Ant. I have three daughters; the eldest is eleven;
The second, and the third, nine: if the true
If this prove true, they will pay for't' by mine honor,
I'll geld them all; fourteen they shall not see,
To bring false generations: they are co-heirs;
And I had rather die myself, than they Should not produce fair issue.

Leon. Cease; no more.

Ant. You smell this business with a sense as cold
As is a dead man's nose: I see your soul,
As you feel doing thus; and see withal
The instruments that fell.

Leon. What! lack I credit?

1 Lord. I had rather you did lack, than I, my lord.
Upon this ground: and more it would content me
To have her honor true, than your suspicion;
Be blam'd for't how you might.

Leon. Why, what need we Commune with you of this? but rather follow
Our forceful instigation! our prerogative
Calls not your counsels; but our natural goodness
Imparts us pleas, which,—if you studied,
Or seeming so in skill), cannot or will not,
Relish as truth, like us: inform yourselves,
We have no more of your advice; the matter,
The loss, the gain, the ordering on't, is all Properly ours.

Ant. And I wish, my liege,
You had only in your silent judgment tried it,
Without more o'ercourse.

Leon. How could that be?

Either thou art most ignorant by age,
Or we have bear too much Camilla's light,
Added to their familiarity.
(Which was as gross as ever touched conjecture,
That lack'd sight only, sought for approbation.)
But, if they seeing, all other not only
(Mad: up to the deed.) doth push on this proceeding:
Yet, for a greater confirmation,
(For, in act of this importance, were Most plebeus to be wild;) I have despatch'd in post,
To sacred Delphes, to Apollo's temple,
Cloenemes and Dion, whom you know

Proof of stuff'd sufficiency: Now, from the oracle
They will bring all; whose spiritual counsel had,
Shall stop or spur me. Have I done well?

1 Lord. Well done, my lord.

Leon. Though I am satisfied, and need no more
Than what I know, yet shall the oracle
Give rest to the minds of others; such as he,
Whose ignorant credulity will not Come up to the truth! So we have thought it good,
From our free person she should be confined;
Lest the treachery of the two, fed hence,
Be left to ponder alone; that follow us,
We are to speak in public: for this business
Will raise us all.

Ant. [Aside.] To laughter, as I take it,
If the good truth were known.

[Exeunt.

Scene II.—The outer Room of a Prison.

Enter PAULINA and Attendants.

Paul. The keeper of the prison,—call to him—

[Exit an Attendant.

Let him have knowledge who I am.—Good lady!
No court in Europe is too good for thee,
What dost thou then in prison!—Now, good sir,

Re-enter Attendant, with the Keeper.

You know me, do you not?

Keep. For a worthy lady,

Ant. And one whom much I honor.

Paul. Pray you, then,

Conduct me to the queen.

Keep. I may not, madam; to the contrary
I have express commandment.

Paul. Here's ado,

To lock up honesty and honor from
The access of gentle visitors!—Is it lawful,
Pray you, to see her women? any of them?
Emilia?

Keep. So please you, madam, to put Apart these your attendants, I shall bring Emilia thence.

Paul. I pray now, call her.

Withdraw yourselves.

[Exit Attendant.

Keep. And, madam,

I must be present at your conference.

Paul. Well, be it so, pricketh.

[Exit Keeper.

Here's such ado to make me stain a stain,
As passes coloring.

Re-enter Keeper, with EMILIA.

Dear gentlewoman, how fares our gracious lady?

Emil. A well as one so great, and so forlorn,
May hold together: On her frights and groans,
(Which never would her lady born have greater)
She is, something before her time, deliver'd.

Paul. A boy!

Ant. A daughter, and a goodly babe,

Paul. And, like to live! the queen resolves
Much comfort in't: says, My poor prisoner,
I am innocent as you.

Paul. I dare be sworn—

These dangerous unsafe Une's o' the king! beshrew them!
They must be told on, and he shall: the office
Becomes a woman's best; I'll take'um up;
If I prove hony-mouth'd, let my tongue blister;
And never to my red look'd anger be
The trumpet any more: Pray you, Emilia,
Comfort my best obedience to the queen;
If she dare trust me with her little babe,
I'll show't the king, and undertake to be
Her advocate to the highest: We do not know
How he may soften at the sight of the child,
The silence offer of pure innocence
Persuades, when speaking fails.

Emil. Most worthy madam,
Your honor, and your goodness, is so evident,
That your true undertaking cannot mislead
A thriving issue; there is no lady living
So meet for this great errand: Please your ladyship
To visit the next room, I'll presently
To that queen; all Queen's shall stand on the noble offer;
Who, but to-day, hammer'd of this design;
But durst not tempt a minister of honor,
Lest she should be denied.

Tell her, Emilia,
I'll use that tongue I have: if wit flow from it,
Of abilities more than sufficient.

Lunacies, ills of madness.
As boldness from my bosom, let it not be doubted
I shall do good.

Enr. Now, be you best for it!
I'll to the queen: Please you, come something nearer.

Keep. Madam, if 't please the queen to send the babe,
I know not what I shall incur, to pass it,
Having no warrant.

You need not fear it, sir: the Child was prisoner to the wound; and is,
By law and process of great nature, thence Freed and enfranchised: not a party to the Anzer of the king; nor guilty of,
If any be, the trespass of the queen.

Keep. I do believe it.

Paul. Do not you fear: upon
Mine honor, I will stand twixt you and danger.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—A Room in the Palace.

Enter Leontes, Antigonus, Lords, and other
Attendants.

Leom. Nor night, nor day, no rest: It is but weakness
To hear the matter thus; mere weakness, if
The cause were not in being:—part of the cause,
She, the adulteress,—for the hard king
Is quite beyond mine arm, out of the dark
And level of my brain, plot-proof: but she
I can look to: Say, that she were gone,
Given to the fire, a moiety of my rest
Much come to me again.—Who's there?

I. Att. My lord.

Leom. How does the boy?

I. Att. He took good rest to-night:
'Tis hop'd, his sickness is discharged.

Leom. To see
His nobleness!
Conceiving the dishonor of his mother,
He straight declined, dropp'd, 'tis took it deeply;
Fasten'd and fix'd the shame out in himself;
Throw off his spirit, his appetite, his sleep,
And durst not laugh'n.—Leave me solely:—go See how he fares. [Exit Attendant.—] Eyo, ye! no thought of him;
The very thought of my revenges that way
Recollect upon me: in himself too mighty;
And in his parties, his alliance.—Let him be,
Until a time may serve: for present vengeance,
Take to you, Camillo and Polxenes.
Laugh at me: make their pastime at my sorrow;
They should not laugh if I could reach them; nor Shall she, within my power.

Enter Paulina, with a Child.

1 Lord. You must not enter.

Paul. Nay, rather, good my lords, be second to me:
Fear you his tyrannous passion more, alas,
Than the queen's life! a gracious innocent soul!
More free, than he is jealous.

Ant. That's enough.

I. Att. Madam, he hath not slept to-night; commanded
None should come at him.

Paul. Not so hot, good sir; I come to bring him sleep. 'Tis such as you,—
That creep like shadows by him, and do nigh
At each his needless hearing,—such as you
Nourish the cause of his awaking: I
Do come with words as medicinal as true;
Honest, as either, to purge him of that humor,
That presses him from sleep.

No noise, my lord; but needful conference,
About some gossips for your highness.

Paul. How!—

Ant. With that audacious lady: Antigonus
I charg'd thee, that she should not come about me;
I knew, she would.

Ant. I told her so, my lord,
On your displeasure's peril, and on mine,
She should not visit you.

Paul. What, canst not rule her?

Paul. From all dishonesty, he can; in this (Unless he take the course that you have done,

* * * * *

Commit me, for committing honor,) trust it,
He shall not rule me.

Ant. Lo you now; you hear!
When she will take the rein, I let her run;
But she'll not stumble.

Paul. Good; good, my liege, I come.—
And, I beseech you, hear me, who profess
Myself your loyal servant, your physician,
Your most obedient counsellor; yet that dare
Less bear so, in comforting your evils;
Such as from most seem yours:—I say, I come
From your good queen.

Paul. Good, good queen: I say good queen;
And would by combat make her good, so were I
A man the worth about you.

Ant. Let him, that makes but trifles of his eyes,
First hand me: on mine own accord, I'll soft;
But the issue of my errand:—The good queen,
For she is good, hath brought you forth a daughter;
Here 'tis; commits it to your blessing.

[Leaving down the Child.]

Out! A very maim'd bitch! Hence with her, out, outdoor! A most intelligence bawd!

Paul. Not so:
I am as ignorant in that, as you are
In so entitling me: and no less honest
Than you are mad: which is enough, I'll warrant,
As this world goes, to pass for honesty.

Ant. Traitors! Will you not push her out? Give her the bastard:—
Thou, dotard, [To Antigonus.] thou art womanish
Unroosted by thy dame Partlet;—here, take up the bastard;
' Take it up, I say; give it to thy crone.
For ever Unnevarable be thy hands, if thou
Takest up the princess, by that forced baseness
Which he has put upon it.

Paul. So, I would, you did: then, 'twere past all doubt,
You'd call your children yours.

Ant. A nest of traitors! I am none, by this good light.

Paul. Nor I: nor any,
But one, that's here; and that's himself: for he
The sacred honor of himself, his queen's,
His happy son's, his babe's, betrays to slander,
Whose sting is sharper than the sword's: and will not
(For as the case now stands, it is a curse
He cannot be compell'd to,) once remove
The root of his opinion, which is rotten,
As ever oak, or stone, was sound.

Paul. A cull; of boundless tongue; who late hath beat her husband,
And now haunts me!—This brat is none of mine; It
Is a prodigy of Polxenes:—Hence with it; and, together with the dam, Commit them to the fire.

Paul. It is yours:
And, might we lay the old prove to your charge,
So like you, 'tis the worse.—Behold, my lords,
Although the print he little, the whole matter
And copy of the father: eye, nose, lip,
The touch of his form, his forehead; now, the valley,
The pretty dimples of his chin, and check; his smiles;
The very mould and frame of hand, nail, finger:—
And thou, good goddess nature, which hast made it
So like to him that got it, if thou hast
The ordering of the mind too, most honest colors
No year of six, bett'st she suspect as he does, Her children not her husband's!

Paul. A gross lie!—

And, loz; thou art worthy to be hang'd. That Might not stay her tongue.

Ant. Hang all the husbands That cannot do that fact, you'll leave yourself
Hardly one subject.

*Accounting your ill course, lowest.

*Masculine.

*Worn out woman.

*Forced is false; uttered with violence to truth.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—A Street in some Town.

Enter Cleomenes and Dion.

Cle. The climate's delicate, the air most sweet; Fertile is the soil; the temple much surpassing The common praise it bears.

Dion. I shall report, For most it caught me, the celestial habits, (Methinks; I should so term them,) and the reverence Of the grave wearers. O, the sacrifice! How ceremonious, solemn, and unearthly It was; the offering!

Cle. But, of all the burst And the ear-deafening voice o' the oracle. Kin to Jove's thunder, so surprised my sense. That I was nothing.

Dion. If the event of the journey Prove as successful to the queen,—O, bettso!— As it hath been to us, rare, pleasant, speedy, The time is worth the use of.

Cle. Great Apollo, Turn all to the best! These proclamations, So forcing faults upon Hermione, I little like.

Dion. The violent carriage of it Will clear, or end, the business: When the oracle, With lady Marceiving, your midwife, there, To save this bastard's life,—for 'tis a bastard. So sure as this head's gray,—what will you adventure To save this brat's life?

Any thing, my lord, That my ability may under, And nobleness impose: at least thus much: I'll pawn the little blood which I have left, To save the innocent: any thing possible. It shall be possible: swear by this sword, Thou wilt perform my bidding.

Ant. I will, my lord.

Leon. Mark, and perform it; (see thou) for the fault Of any point it shall not only be Death to thyself, but to thy low-born-tongued wife; Whom, for this time, we pardon. We enjoin thee, As thou art liege-man to us, that thou carry This female bastard hence; and that thou bear it To some remote and desert place, quite out Of all of our sight; and that there thou leave it, Without more mercy, to its own protection. And favor of the climate. As by strange fortune It came to us, I do in justice charge thee,— On thy soul's peril, and thy body's torture,— That thou commend it strangelv to some place, Where chance may nurse or end it: Take it up.

Ant. I swear to do this, though a present death Had been more merciful: come on, poor babe! Some powerful spirit instruct the kites and ravens, To be thy nurses! Wolves and bears, they say, Casting their swarhness aside, have done Like officers of pity,—Sir, be prosperous In more than this deed doth require! and blessing Against this cruelty, fight on thy side. Poor thing, condemn'd to lose.

Leon. Exit with the Child.

No, I'll not rear Another's issue.

Ant. I swear. Please your highness, posts, From those you sent to the oracle, are come An hour since: Cleomenes and Dion, Being well arriv'd from Delphos, are both hand'd, Hasting to the court.

Leon. So please you, sir, their speed Hath been beyond account.

Ant. Twenty-three days They have been absent: 'Tis good speed; foretells, The great Apollo suddenly will have the truth of this appear. Prepare you, lords; Summon a session, that we may arraign Our most dishonour'd self, for as she beheld, Been publicly accused, so shall she have A just and open trial. While she lives, My heart will be a burden to me. Leave me; And thank upon my bidding.

Enter Beaumonts, Lords, and Officers, appeared properly seated.

Leon. This sessions (to our great grief, we proune) Even presses against our heart: The party tried, The daughter of a king; our wife; and one Of us too much beloved,—let us be eler Of being tyrannous, since we so openly Proceed in justice; which shall have due course, Even to the guilt, or the purgation.— Produce the prisoner.

Off. It is his highness' pleasure, that the queen Appear in person here in court—Silence!

Hermione is brought in, surroun'd; Paulina and ladies attending.

Leon. Read the indictment.

[It was amusingly a practice to swear by the cross at the bilt of the sword, to commit it to some place as a stranger.]}
Off. Hermione, queen to the worthy Leonatus,
King of Sicilia, how art here accused and arraigned
Of high presumption, in being betrothed with Poixenes, king of Bohemia: and complying with Camillo to take away the life of our sovereign lord
The king, thy royal husband; the prince, whereof beholds most truly, is from my breast.
Hermione, contrary to the faith and allegiance of a true subject, dost causeth and thee,
This, how at thy royal request,
Her, since what I said to thee, must be but that Which contradicts my accusation; and
The testimony on my part, no other
But what comes from myself: if thine ear be not Happily to me,
Say, Not guilty: mine integrity,
Being counted falsehood, shall, as I express it,
Be so receiv'd. But thus,—It powers divine
Befit our human actions, but for mine own
I doubt not then, but innocence shall make False accusation blush, and tyranny
Tremble at patience.—I, my lord, best know,
Who least will seem to do so, my past life
Hath been as continent, as chaste, as true,
As I am now unhappy; which is more
Than history can pattern, though deserved,
And play'd to take spectators: for behold me,—
A fellow of the royal bed, which owes
A moiety of the throne, a great prince's daughter,
To Ophelia, a well-born prince's consort;
To prove and talk for life, and honor, fore
Who please to come and hear. For life, I prize,
As I weigh grief, which I would spare: for honor,
I am a deriva'tive from mine to submission,
And only that I stand for. I appeal
To you: conscience, sir, before Poisixenes
Came to your court, how I was in your grace,
How mar'tled to be so; since he came,
With what encounter so unconcern'd I
Have strain'd to appear thus: if one jot beyond
The bond of honor; or, in act, or word,
That way meanings: harder'd be the hearts
Of all that hear me, and my heart's of kin
Cry, I live upon my grace.
Her. I ne'er heard yet,
That any of these bold vices wanted
Less imputation to gue'sty what they did,
Than to perform it.
Her. That's true enough;
Though 'tis a saying, sir, not true to me.
Leon. You will not own it.
Her. More than mistress of,
Which comes to me in name of fault, I must not
At all acknowledge. For Poisixenes,
(With whom I am accusation.) I do confess,
I lov'd him, as in honor be required:
With so much a kind of love, as his life,
A lady like me; with a love, even such,
So, and no other, as yourself command'd:
Which not to have done, I think, had been in me
Both disobedience and iniquity.
To you, and toward your friend; whose love had spoken,
Even since it could speak, from an infant, freely,
That it was yours: now, for conspiracy,
I know not it was taste; though: it be disd'n
For me to try how: all I know of it
Is, that Camillo was an honest man;
And, why he left your court, the gods themselves,
Wotting no more than I, are ignorant.
Leon. You knew of his departure, as you know
What you have undert'ned to do mildly absolute.
Her, Sir.
You speak a language that I understand not:
My life stands in the level, of your dreams,
Which I try'd down.
Leon. Your actions are my dreams;
You had a bastard by Poisixenes,
And I but dream'd it. As you perceiv't past all shame,
That's my truth, of all you do; so past all truth:
Which to deny, concerns more than avails:
For so
That trait hath been cast out, like to itself;
No father owning it, (which is, indeed,
More criminal in thee, than it.) so thou
Shalt feel your just'r; in whose casette passage,
Leon, for no less than death.
Her.
Sir, bear your threats;
The bag, which you would fright me with, I seek.
2 Scheme laid.
3 Own possess.
4 Is within the reach.
5 They have done like you.
Scene III.—Winter's Tale.

My friend Polixenes: which had been done,
But that the good mind of Camillo tarried,
My own commendation, though I with death, and with Reward, did threaten and encourage him,
Not doing it, and being done: he, most humane,
And child with honor, to my kind requite,
Unsealed my practice: quit his fortunes here,
Which you knew great; and to the certain hazard
Of all incertainties himself committed,
Nor rather than his honor—How he clusters
Through my rust! and how his piety
Does my deeds make the blacker!

Re-enter Paulina.

Paul. Woe the while! O, cut my lace; lest my heart, cracking it, Break too!

1 Lord. What fit is this, good lady? What studied torments, tyrant, hurt for me?
My wheels! racks! fierce! What faying! boiling,
In leads, or oiled? what old, or newer torture
Must I receive; whose every word deserves
To taste of thy most worst! Thy tyranny
Together working with thy jealousies,—
Fancies too weak for boys, too green and idle
For girls of nine!—0, think, what they have done,
And then run mad; indeed: stark mad! for all
They by chance are answerable; and surest of it.
That thou betray'st Polixenes, twas nothing;
That did but show thee, of a fool, inconsistent,
And damnable ungrateful; nor was much,
The sport I would have had good Polixenes's honor,
To have him kill a king; poor trespasses,
More monstrous standing by: whereof I reckon
The growing to the crown thy baby daughter,
To be or none, or little; till a dear dear,
Would have shed water out of fire, ere done:
Nor is't directly had to thee, the death
Of the young prince, whose honest good thoughts
(Thoughts high for one so tender) cleat the heart
That could conceive, a gross and foolish sire
Blemish'd his gracious dam: this is not, no,
Not to be answer. But the lost—0, lords,
When I have said, ere, woe!—the queen, the queen,
The sweetest, dearest, creature's death; and vengeance
Not dropped down yet.

1 Lord. The higher powers forbid! Say more; nor oath,
Prevail not, do, go and see: if you can bring Tincture or lustre, in her lips, her eye,
Heat outwardly, or breath within, you serve
As I would do the gods.—But, O thou tyrant!
Didst thou not cross these her and me,
Than all thy woes can surr: therefore betake thee
To nothing but despair. A thousand knees
Ten thousand years together, naked, fasting,
Under barrels men, and in storm perpetual,
In storm perpetual, could not move the gods
To look that way thou wert.

Enter Leon. Go on, go on:
Thou canst not speak too much: I have deserv'd
All tongues to talk their bitterest.

1 Lord. Say no more;
Howe'er the business goes, you have made fault
I boldness of your speech.

Paul. I am sorry for't;
All faults I make, when I shall come to know them,
I do repent: Alas, I have have show'd
The rashness of a woman: he is touch'd
To the noble heart.—What's gone, and what's past
Help, should be past grief: Do not receive affliction
At my petition, I beseech you; rather
Let me be punish'd, that have mind'd you
Of what you should forget. Now, good my liege,
Sir, royal sir, forgive a foolish woman.
The love I bore your queen,—lo, fool again!
I'll speak of her no more, nor of your children;
I'll not remember you of my own lord,
Who is lost too: Take your patience to you,
And I'll say nothing.

Leon. Thou didst speak but well,
When most the truth; which I receive much better
Than to be pitted of thee. Pr'ythee, bring me
To the dead bodies of my queen and son:
One grave shall be for both; upon them shall Sit: a devil would have shed tears of pity, ere he
Would have perpetrated such a ton.

The causes of their death appear, unto
Our shame perpetual: One day I'll visit
The chapel where they lie; and tears shed there,
Shall be my recreation: So long as Nature will bear with this exercise,
So long I daily vow to use it. Come,
And lead me to these sorrows.

Exeunt.

Scene III.—Bohemia. A desert Country near the Sea.

Enter Antigonus, with the Child; and a Mariner.

Ant. Thou art 'perfect' then, our ship hath touch'd upon
The deserts of Bohemia?

Mar. Ay, my lord, and fear we have landed in ill time: the skies look gravely,
And threaten present labors. In my conscience,
The heavens with that we have in hand are angry,
And frown upon us.

Ant. Their sacred wills be done!—Go, set aboard;
Look to thy bark; I'll not be long, before I call upon thee.

Mar. Make thy best haste; and go not Too far in the land: 'tis like to be loud we other,
Besides, this place is famous for the creatures
Of prey, that keep upon thee.

Ant. Go thou away: I'll follow instantly.

Thou, I am glad at heart
To be so rid o' the business.

[Exit.]

Mar. Come, poor baboon,
I have heard, (but not believe d') the spirits of the dead
May wear again; if such thing be, thy mother
Appeard to me last night; for never was dream
So like a waking. To me comes a creature,
Sometimes her head on one side, some another;
I never saw a vessel of like sorrow,
So fli'd, and so becoming: in pure white robes
Like very sanctity, she did approach
My cabin where I lay: thrice bow'd before me;
And gasping to begin, with me the speech, her eyes
Became two spots: the fury spent, anon
Did this break from her; Good Antigonus,
Sister fate, against thy kind dispositions,
Hath made this person for the thrice-ou'd
Of my poor baboon, according to those oath,—
Placed remote enough in Bohemia.

There were, and ears of wrestling; and, for the bab
Counted food too early for Perdita,
I rather, call'd; for this unsalute business,
Put on thee by my lord, thou never shall see
This wife Paulina wince;—and so, with shrieks,
She melted into air. Allrighted much,
I did in time collect myself; and thought
This was so, and no slumber. I reams are toys:
Yet, for this one and this, I will Be well squared by this. I do believe,
Hermione hath suffer'd death; and that
Apollo would, this being indeed the issue
Of Polixenes, it should here be bad,
Either for life, or death, upon the earth
Of its right father.—Blessom, speed thee well!

[Leaving the Child.]

There lie; and there thy characters there these;

Which may, if fortune please, both breed thee,
And still rest thine.—The storm begins;—Poor wretched,
That, for thy mother's fault, art thus expos'd
To loss, and what may follow!—Weep I cannot,
But my heart bleeds and most accrues I am I,
To be by oath enjoin'd to this.—Farewell!—
The day frowns more and more: thou art like to have A Bolton too rough:—No
The heavens so dim by day. A savage clamor!—
Well may I get aboard!—This is the close;
I am gone forever.

[Exit, pursued by B. ar.

Enter an old Shepherd.

Shep. I would there were no aze between ten and three and twenty; or that youth would sleep out the rest; for there is nothing in the between but getting wench's with child, wrangling the ANCIENTURY, stealing, fighting.—Hark you now!—Would any but these boiled brains of nineteen, and two and twenty, hunt this weather? They have scared away two of my best sheep; which, I fear, their lives will reach, unless the master: it any where I have them, 'ts by the sea-side, bounding on ivy. Good luck, an' th' sky will! what have we here! [Taking up the child.] Mercy o'irs, a barne; a very ornamental. A boy or a child, I wonder. A pretty one; a very pretty one; Sure, some scope: though I am not bookish, yet I can read wating-gentlewoman in the play. This has been some state-work; some trunk-work, some behind-door-work: they were warmer that got this, than the poor thing is here. I'll take it up for pity: Yet I'll bary till my son come; he halloed but even now. Who, ho boy!

Enter Clown.

Clo. Hill. ooo.

Shr. What, art so near? if thou 'lt see a thing to talk on when thou art dead and rotten, come hither. What adest thou, man?

Clo. I have seen two such sights, by sea and by land—but I am not to say, it is a sea, for it is now the sky; between the mount and the boat, thou hast not a brothman's point.

Shr. Why, boy, how is it?

Clo. I would you did but see how it shapes, how it moves, how it takes up the shore; but that's not to the point: O, the most piteous cry of the poor souls; sometimes to see em, and not to see em: now they're lowering the moon with her mastmast; and anon swallow'd with yest and froth, as you'd thrust a cork into a hose. And then for the land's sake, I see how the boat tore out his shoulders: how he cried to me for help, and said his name was Antigonus, a nobleman:—But to make an end of the ship: to see how the sea flapp'd and crossed it.—first, first, how the poor souls roar'd, and the sea mock'd them; and how the poor gentleman roar'd, and the bear mock'd him, both roaring louder than sea or weather.

Shr. Name of mercy, when was this, boy?

Clo. Now, now; I have not winked since I saw these sights: the men are not yet cold under water, nor the bear half dined on the gentleman: he's at nought.

Shr. Would I had been by, to have helped the old man!

Clo. I should you had been by the ship side, to have helped her; there your charity would have lacked.

Shr. Heavy matters! heavy matters! but look thee here, boy. Now bless thyself: thou meet'st with things dying, I with things new-born. Here's a sight for thee: look then, a bearing-cloth for a squire's child! Look thee here: take up, take up, boy; oper't. So, let's see: It was told me, I should be rich by the tames: this is some changelings—opened, and a poor boy, a late born.

Clo. You're a made old man: if the sins of your youth are forgiven you, you're well to live. Gold! and gold.

Shr. This is fair gold, boy, and 'twill prove so: with it, keep it close; home, home, the next way. We are lucky, boy: and to be so still, requires nothing but secrecy.—Let my sheep go! Come thee, my sheep, the next way home.

Clo. Go you the next way with your findings; I'll go see if the bear be gone from the gentleman, and how much he hath eaten: they are never estrat but where they are hungry: if there be any of him left, I'll bury it.

Shr. That's a good deed: if thou mayst dis, boy: for thou hast left of him, what he is, fetch me to the sight of him.

Clo. Marry, will I; and you shall help to put him 'r the ground.

Shr. He's a lucky day, boy; and we'll do good deeds on't. [Exeunt.

ACT IV.

Enter Time, as Chorus.

Time. I, that please some, try all; both joy and terror,
Of good and bad; that make, and unfold error,— Now take upon me, in the name of Time, To thus my ways. I have done it in a course, To me, or my swift passage, that I slide
O'er sixteen years, and leave the growth untied Of that wide gap: since it is in my power To thus my ways, and have, and in some one hour To plant and o'erwhelm custom: let me pass
The same I am, ere ancient'st order was, Or what is now received: I write to shew The times that brought them in; so shall I do To the finished times now reigning; and make stable The glistering of this present, as my tale.
Now seems to it. Your patience this allowing, I turn my glass; and give my scene such growing, As you had slept between. Leontes leaving The effects of his bold jealousies; so grieving, That he shus up himself; imagine me, Gentle spectators, that I now may be
In fair Bohemia; and remember well, I mentioned a son o' the king's, which Florizel I now name to you: and with so peace so pace To speak of Perdita, now grown in grace Equal with wonderings: What of her enmies, I list not prophecies; but let Time's new'says, Be known, when his brought forth:—a shepherd's daughter, And what to her adheres which follows after, Is the argument of: Time of that: that If I have spent any time worse ere now; If never yet, that Time himself doth say, That he wishes e'er after, you never may. [Exit.

SCENE I.—Bohemia. A Room in the Palace of Polixenes.

Enter Polixenes and Camillo.

Pol. I pray thee, good Camillo, be no more importunate: its a sickness, denying thee anything; a death, to grant this.

A Child. a Female infant. a Swallowed. a Subject.

Com. It is fifteen years, since I saw my country, though I have, for the most part, been ailed abroad I desire to lay my bones there. Besides, the penitent king, my master, hath sent me to: whose feeling sorrows I might be some alloy, or I overween to think so; which is another spur to my deporture.

Pol. Thou lovest me, Camillo, wipe not out the rest of thy services, by leaving me now: the need I have of thee, thine own goodness hath made better not to have had thee, than this to want thee: thou seest how far thou art in my affairs, without thee, can sufficiently manage, must either stay to execute them thyself, or take away with thee the very services thou hast done: when I have not enough considered, (as too much I cannot,) to bear more thankful to thee, shall be my study; and my profit therein, the heaping friendships. Of that fatal country, Sicilia, prythee speak no more: whose very naming pains me with the remembrance of that penitent, as thou call'st him, and reconciled king, my brother; whose loss of his most precious queen, and children, are even now to be afraid unmeant. Say to me, when saw'st then the prince Florizel, my son? Kings are no less unhappy, their issue not being gracious, than they are in losing them. Their losses have not pleased them.

Com. Sir, it is three days, since I saw the prince: What his happier affairs may be, are to me unknown: but I have, missingly, noted, he is of late much addicted to the princely exercises, than formerly he bath appeared.

Pol. I have considered so much, Camillo; and, with some care; so far, that I have eyes under my heart: and have served upon his royal person, whom I have this intelligence: That he is seldom from the house of a most homely shepherd: a man they say, that from very nothing, and beyond the imagination of his neighbors, is grown into an unspeakable estate.

Com. I have heard, sir, of such a man, who hath a daughter of most rare note: the report of her is

* The mantle in which a child was carried to be baptized.
* Think too highly of myself. * Observed at intervals.
extended more, than can be thought to begin from such a source.

Poe. That's likewise part of my intelligencer. But, I fear the angle that pleases our son thither. Thou shalt accompany us to the place: where we will, not appearing what we are, I think it not uneasy to get the cause of my son's resort thither. Try thee, be my present partner in this business, and lay aside the thoughts of Siblius.

Curt. I willingly obey your command.

Poe. My best Camillo!—We must disguise ourselves.

SCENE II.—A Road near the Shepherd's Cottage. [Exeunt.

ENTER AYOLYCUIS, SINGING.

When daffodils begin to peer,—

With height! the doxy over the date,—

For the red blood reigns in the winter's pale.

The white sheet blossoming on the height.

With hey, with hey! the thrush and the joy.

Are wees songs for me and my auntie,

While we lie tumbling in the hay.

I have served prince Florizel, and, in my time, wore three-pile; but now I am out of service:

But shall I go mourn for that, my dear? [Sings.

The pale moon shines by night:

And when I wander here and there,

Then must I go to rest.

If tinkers may have leave to live,

And bear nonsense in their shoe;

Then my account I well may give,

And in the stocks voueh it.

My traffic is sheets; when the kite builds, look to lesser linen. My father named me, Autolycus; who, being, as I am, huddled under Mercury, was likewise a snapper-up of unconsidered trifles. With die and drab, I purchased this expansion; and my revenue is the silly chest. Gallows, and knock, are too powerful on the highway; beating and hanging, are terrors to me; for the life to come, I sleep out the thought of it.—A prize! a prize!

Enter Clown.

C10. Let me see:—Every 'leven weather—tod's: every bold yeilds—pound and odd shillings: fifteen hundred shillings.—What comes the cool to?

A10. If the spring hold, the cook's mine.

[Aside.

C10. I cannot do without counters.—Let me see: you can i, to buy for our sheep-shearing feast?

Three pounds of sugar; five pounds of currants; rice;—

What will this sister of mine do with rice? But my father hath made her mistress of the feast, and she, in her turn, hath, in her turn, made me four-and-twenty nosegays for the shearers: three-man song-men all, and very good ones; but they are most of them mean'; and thus: but one Parnassian amongst them, and he sings psalms to hindraps. I must hang saffron, to color the warden piece;—lace, laces;—none; that's out of my note: wadding, seven; a race, or two, or ginger; but that I may be,—four pieces of money, and as many as retain of the sun.

A10. Of that, ever I was born!

[Groveling on the ground.

C10. The name of me?

A10. Oh, help me! I must pluck off these races; and then, death, death!

C10. Alack, poor soul! thou hast need of more races to lay on thee: rather than have these off.

A10. O, sir, the falsehood of them offenses me more than the stripes I have received; which are mighty ones and mulchers.

C10. Alas, poor man! a million of beating may come to him of yealtie; and then die, and then die.

A10. I am robbed, sir, and beaten; my money, and apparel taken from me, and these decent things put upon me.

C10. What, by a horse-man, or a foot-man?

A10. A foot-man, sweet sir, a foot-man.

C10. But, sir, is there to be a foot-man by the garments he hath left with thee; if this be a horse-man's coat, it hath seen very hot service. Lend me thy hand, I'll help thee: come, lend me thy hand.

[Holding him up.

A10. O! go'd sir, tenderly, oh!

C10. Alas, poor soul.

A10. Good sir, softly, good sir: I fear, sir, my shoulder-blade is out.

C10. How now! canst stand?

A10. Softly, dear sir; [picks his pocket], good sir, softly: you ha' done me a charitable office.

Buck. Dost lack any money! I have a little money for thee.

A10. No, good sweet sir; no, I beseech you, sir. I have a kinsman not past three-quarters of a mile hence, unto which I am going: I shall there have money, or anything I want; offer me no money, I pray thee; that kills my heart.

C10. What manner of fellow was he that robbed you?

A10. A fellow, sir, that I have known to go about with trol-ly-dames! I knew him once a servant of the prince; I cannot tell, good sir, for which of his virtues it was, but he was certainly whipped out of the court.

C10. His vicces, you would say; there's no virtue whipped out of the court: they can't; because they can't stay there; and yet it will no more but abide.

A10. Vices I would say, sir. I know this man well: he hath been since an ape-beerer; then a toad-slayer; after that, he compassed a motion of the prodigal son, and married a winder's wife within a mile where my land and living lies; and, having flown down over many knaves professions, he settled only in rogue: some call him Autolycus.

C10. Out upon him! Prig, for my life, prig: he haunts wakes, fairs, and bear-baitings.

A10. Very true, sir; he, sir; that's the rogue, that put me into this apparel.

C10. Not a more cowardly rogue in all Bohemia: if you had but looked big, and spit at him, he'd have run.

A10. I must confess to you, sir, I am no fighter: I am false of heart that way; and that he knew, I warrant him.

C10. How do you now?

A10. Sweet sir, much better than I was; I can stand, and walk: I will even take my leave of you, and pace softly towards my kinsman.

C10. Shall I bring thee on the way, sir?

A10. No, good-faced sir; no, sweet sir.

C10. Then fare thee well; I must go buy spices for our sheep-shearing.

A10. Prithee, let me see sweet! — [Exit Clown.

Your purse is not hot enough to purchase your spice. He'll be with you at your sheep-shearing too; if I make not this cheat bring out another, and the shearsers prove sheep, let me be unrolled, and my name put in the book of virtue!

Jog on, jog on, the foot-path near,

And merrily melts the strie:

A merry heart goes all the day,

Your soul lives in a smile.

[Exit.

SCENE III.—A Shepherd's Cottage.

Enter FLORIZEL and BERTRAND.

Flor. These your unusual needs to each part of you Do give a life: no shepherdess, but Floria, Previn: in April's front. This your sheep-shearing Doth have a meeting of the pretty gods, And you the queen on't.

Per. Sir, my gracious lord, To chide at your extremes? it is not becomes me: I, pardon me, I name thee: your back sits The gracious mark o' the land, you have obscured With a swain's wearing; and me, poor lovely maid, Most goddess-like prank'd up: But that our feasts Are as dear as any, and the shepherdesses Ingest it with a custom, I should blush To see you so attired; sworn, I think, To show myself a glass.

[The machine used in the game of pigeon holes.

A puppet show.

A Take hold of.

A Object of all men's noise.

A Dress'd with catteneation.
WINTER'S TALE.

Act IV.

Flo.  I bless the time,
When my good falcon made her flight across
Thy father's ground.

Per.  Now Jove afford you cause!
To me the difference forgives dread; your greatness
Hath not been used to fear. Even now I tremble
To think of thy father, by thy sorrow,
Should pass this way, as you did: O, the fatal!
How would he look, to see his work, so noble?
Vibly bound up? What would he say! Or how Should he not think, of thine old saints, Hence
The sternness of his presence!

Flo.  Apprehend
Nothing but jollity. The gods themselves,
Rending their deities to love, before them
The shapes of beasts upon them: Jupiter
Become a bull, and bellow'd: the green Neptune
A ram, and bleated: and the fire-bred'god,
Gods! Apollon, a poor humbled swan.
As I seem now: Their transformations
Were never for a piece of beauty racer;
A way to make us better friends, more known.
Rum not before mine honor; nor my lusts
Burn better nor my faith.

Flo.  Thou dearest Perdita,
With these forced thoughts, I pry thee, darken not
The mirth of the heart; Or I'll be thine, my fair,
Or not my father's: for I cannot be Mine own, nor any thing to any. If
I be thine then: to this I am most constant,
And I will harden my heart, to none. He not joyous;
Strange such thoughts as these, with any thing
That you behold the while. Our guests are coming:
Let up your contenance as it were the day
Of celebration of that mystical, which
We two have sworn shall come.

Per.  Stand you auspicious!
O lady fortune,

Enter Shepherd with Polixenes and Camillo, disguised; Clown, Ministers, Hymen and others.

Flo.  See your guests approach:
Your resolution cannot hold, when its
Opposed, as it must be, by the power o' the king.
One of these two must be necessities,
Which then will speak; that you must change this Purpose, or my life.

Flo.  Then dearest Perdita,

Per.  Stand you auspicious!
O lady fortune,
Cau. He tells her something;
That makes her blood look out: Good sooth, she is
The queen of cards and cream.
Clo. Come on, strike up.
Dor. Mopsa must be your mistress; marry, garlic,
To mend her kissing with.--
Mops. Now, in good time.
Clo. Not a word, a word; we stand upon our Came, strike up.
[Music.
Here a dance of Shepherds and Shepherdesses.
Pol. Fran, good shepherd, what
Fair swan is this, which dances with your daughter?
Sheep. Why, tell him Dorincle; and he bosets
To have a worthy feeding: but I have it
Upon his own request, and I believe it;
That should be silent: if young Dorincle
Do light upon her, she shall bring him that
Which he does not dream of.

Enter a Servant.
Serc. O master, if you did but hear the pedlar at the door, you would never dance again after a labor and a month, nor the barbecue could not move you:
he sings several tunes, faster than you'll tell money:
he utters them as he had eaten ballads, and all my ears grew to his tunes.
Clo. Here's the master's name to: he shall come in: I love a ballad but even too well: if it be doeful matter, merrily set down; or a very pleasant thing indeed, and sung lamentably.
Serc. He hath songs, for man, or woman, of all sizes; no milliner can so fit his customers with gloves: he has the prettiest love songs for maids; so withowit, music, which is not so strong with such delicate burdens of didoes and falshes; jump her and thump her; and where some stretch-mouth'd rascal would, as it were, mean mischief, and break a foul gap into the matter, he makes the maid to answer, Whoop, do me no harm, good man; puts him off, slights him, with Whoop, do me no harm, goodman.
Pol. This is a brave fellow.
Clo. Believe me thou takes of an adorable considered fellow. Has he any unbridled wares?
Serc. He hath rhumbs of all the colors! in the rainbow. He saw how the lawyers in Bloomsbury carefully handled, though they come to him by the gross; inkle, caddies, cambrics, lawns; why, sings them over, as they were gods or goddesses;
you would think a sower was she sang; he so chants to the sleeve-hand, and the work about the square on.
Pol. Prythee, bring him in; and let him appre-
chace singing.
Per. Forewarn him, that he use no scrupulous words in his tunes.
Clo. You have no these pedlars, that have more in them than you'd think, sister.
Per. Ay, good brother, or go about to think.

Enter Autolycus, singing.
Lawn, as white as driven snow;
Cyprus, block as ever was crown;
Gloves, as sweet as damask roses;
Masks for faces, and for noses;
Bangle bracelets, and ribands,
Perfume for a lady's chamber;
Golden quills, and stomachers,
For my lack to give their dears;
Pins and pricking-sticks of steel.
What maids lack from head to heel:
Come, buy of me, come; come buy, come buy;
Buy, lads, or else your lasses cry;
Come, buy, &c.

* A valuable tract of pasturage.
 Neatly.
 Plain goods.
* Kind of tape.
* The call.
* The work about the bosom.

Clo. If I were not in love with Mopsa, thou shouldst take no money of me; but being enthralled as I am,
will also be the bondage of certain ribands and gloves.
Mops. I was promised them against the feast; but they come not too late now.
Dor. He hath promised you more than that:
or there be lies.
Mops. He hath paid you all he promised you:
may be he hath paid you more; which will shame
you to give him again.
Clo. Is there no manner left among maims? will they wear their plackets, where they should bear their faces? Is there not milking-time, when you and your cozeners are gone away with thieves to whistle off these secrets; but you must be tittle-tattling before all our guests? 'Tis well they are whispering: Clam-mer your tongues, and not a word more.
Mops. I know no other time, thou promised me a tawdry lace and a pair of sweet gloves.
Clo. Have I not told thee, how I was cozened by the way, and lost all my money?
Per. And, indeed, sir, there are cozeners abroad;
therefore it behoves men to be wary.
Clo. Fear not thou, man, thou shalt lose nothing
here.
Per. I hope so, sir; for I have about me many parcels of charge.
Serc. What hast here! ballads!
Mops. Pray now, buy some: I love a ballad in print, a-chap, then we are sure they are true.
Per. Here's one to a very doeful tune, How a maurer's wife was brought to-bed of twenty-money-bags at a barrier; and how she longed to eat ad-des' heads, and loaded herself with.
Mops. Is it true, think you?
Per. Very true; and but a month old.
Dor. Bless me from marrying a usurer!
Aut. Here's a ballad, the name to, one mistres Talperleoner; and five or six honest waves, that were present: Why should I carry'bes abroad?
Mops. Pray you now, buy it.
Serc. Come on, lay it be: And let's first see more ballets; we'll buy the other things anon.
Per. Where is this, another ballad, of a fish, that appeared upon the coast, on Wednesday the fourscore of April, and caught fish in a sea of blood.
Serc. I have sworn, and sung this ballad against the hard hearts of maids: it was thought, she was a woman, and was turned into a cold fish, for she would not exchange flesh with one that loved her: The ballet is very pitiful, and as true.
Dor. Is it true, think you?
Aut. From the noblest of the nobles at it; and witnesses, more than my pack will hold.
Clo. Lay it by: Another.
Aut. This is a merry ballad; but a very pretty one.
Mops. Lay it by: I think it true.
Aut. Why this is a passing merry one; and goes to the tune of "Two maids wooing a man": there's scarce a maid westward, but she sings it; 'tis in request, I can tell you.
Per. We can both sing it; if thou'lt bear a part, though shalt hear: 'tis in three parts.
Dor. We had the tune on a month ago.
Aut. I can bear my part; you must know, 'tis my opposition: have it at you with.

[SONG]
A. Get you hence, for I must go;
Where, if it fits not you to know.
B. Whither? M. O, whither? D. Whither?
M. It becomes thy path full well,
Thou to me thy secrets tell.
D. Me, too, let me go thither.
M. Or thou go'st to the grange, or mill?
D. If to either, I'll go thither.
N. What, neither? A. Neither.
D. Thou hast sworn my love to be.
M. Thou hast sworn it more to me:
Then, whither go? say, whither?

Clo. We'll have this song out anon by ourselves;
My father and the gentleman are in sad talk,
and we'll not trouble them: come, bring away thy pack

WINTER'S TALE.

Act IV.

Scene II.

Enter Clown, Automelius, Dorcas, and Mopsa.

Clown. This shows a sound affection.

Pol. Say you the like to him?

Per. I cannot speak so well, nothing so well; no, nor mean better:

Pol. Com. But, my daughter

By the pattern of mine own thoughts I cut out

You say you the like to him?

Pol. I cannot speak so well, nothing so well; no, nor mean better:

Shall take hands a bargain:

And we'll be under the same hands, you shall hear word to:

I give my daughter to him, and will make

Her portion equal his.

Flo. O, that must be

The virtue of your daughter: one being dead,

I shall have more than you can dream of yet;

Enough then for your wonder: But, come on,

Contract us 'fore these witnesses.

Shall take hands a bargain:

Mopsa. Thy daughter, Act. 1., sc. 3. Section 3.

Pol. Have you a father?

Flo. I have: But what of him?

Pol. Knows he of this?

Flo. He neither does, nor shall.

Pol. Methinks, a father,

Is, at the maturity of his son, a guest

That best becomes the table. I pray you, once more;

Is not your father grown incapable

Of reasonable affairs? is he not stupid?

With these ridiculous rheums? Can he speak? hear?

Know man from man! dispute his own estate?

Lies he not bedridden? and again does nothing,

But what he did being childish?

Per. No, good sir;

He has his health, and ampler strength, indeed,

Than most have of his age.

Pol. By my white beard,

You offer him, if this be so, a wrong

Something unfeith: Reason, my son,

Should choose himself a wife; but as good reason,

The father (all whose joy is nothing else)

Or fair posterity) should hold some counsel

In such a business.

Mopsa. I yield all this;

But, as some other reasons, my good sir,

Which 'tis not fit you know, I not acquaint

My father of this business.

Flo. No, he shall not.

Pol. Let him know.

Flo. I shall not.

Pol. Let him know.

Flo. Pray thee, let him.

Pol. No, he must not.

Mopsa. Mark our contract.

Pol. Mark your daughter, young sir,

Discern him himself.

Whom son I dare not call; thou art too base

To be acknowledged: Thou a sedent's heir,

That thus affect'st a sleepy-hook!—Thou old traitor,

I charge thee, that, by hanging thee, I may

Shorten thy life one week.—And thou, fresh piece

Of excellent witchcraft; who, of force must know

The royal fool thou copst with:—

O, my heart!

Flo. I'ave thy beauty scratched with briers, and made

More hard than thy sting. For thee, fond boy,

If I may ever know, thou dost but sigh,

That thou no more shall see this hook, (as never

I mean thou shalt,) we'll bear thee from succession;

Not the least of our blood, no, not our kin.

Far than Desecular of:—Mark thou my words;

Follow us to the court.—Thou churl, for this time,

Though full of our displeasures, yet we free thee

From the dreadful blow of it.—And you, enchant-

ment.

Worthy enough a herdsman; yea, him too,

That makes himself, but for our honor therein,

Unworthy thee: if ever, henceforth, the

None of these final touches to his entrance open,

Or hoop his body more with thy embraces,

I will devise a death as cruel for thee,

As thou art tender to.

Flo. Even here undone!

I was not much afraid: for once or twice,

I was about to speak; and tell him plainly,

The self-same sun, that shines upon his court,

Hides not his visage from our cottage, but

*Talk over his affairs.

* Further.
Scene III. WINTER'S TALE. 245

Looks on alike.—Wilt you please, sir, begone?—[To Florizel.

I told you, what would come of this: Bewitch you, of your own state take care: this is a man of mine,—
Being now awake, I'll quench it no inch further,
But milk my ewes, and weep.
Cam. Why, how now, father? Speak, why thou diest.

Speak not, nor think, nor
Nor dare to know that which I know,—O, sir,
You have undone a man of fourscore three. [To Florio.

You killed his father; say he's in quest;—yes;—
To die upon the bed my father died,
To lie close by his honest bones: but now
Some change hath must put on my shroud, and lay me
Where no priest shuffles in dust.—[O cursed wretch!]

[To Perdita.] That knewst this was the prince, and wouldst adventure
To miracle faith with him.—Undone! undone!
If I might die within this hour, I have liv'd
To die when I desire. [Exit.

Flo. Why look you so upon me?

I am but sorry, not afraid;—delay'd,
But nothing alter'd: What I was, I am;
More straining on, for puckering back;—not following
My purpose unwillingly.

Cam. Gracious my lord,
You know your father's temper: at this time
He will allow no speech,—which, I do guess,
You do not purpose therefore;—and as hardly
Will he endure your sight as yet, I fear;
Then, till the fury of his highness settle,
Come not before him,

I not purpose it.

I think, Camillo.

Cam. Even he, my lord.

Fio. How often have I told you, I would be thus!
How often and my dignity would last
But till 'twere known?

Flo. It cannot fail, but by
The violation of my faith; and then
Let nature crush the sides of the earth together.
And mar the seeds within!—Lift up thy looks:—
From my succession wage me, father! I Attend to my affection
Be advised.

Flo. I am; and by my fancy; if my reason
Will thereto be obedient, I have reason;
If not, my senses, better pleas'd with madness,
Do bid it welcome.

Cam. This is desperate, sir;
Flo. So call it: but it does fulfil my vow;
I have made myself the sacrifice, not
For Bolina, nor the pomp that may Be theretofore gladd'd; for all the sun sees, or
The close earth wounds, or the profound seas hide
In their own bottoms still I'll fasten to
To this my fair belov'd; Therefore, I pray you,
As you have ever been my father's friend,
When he shall miss me, (as, in faith, I meant not
To see him any more,) cast your good counsels
Upon his passion: Let myself and fortune,
Tug for the time to come. This you may know,
And so deliver,—I am put to sea
With whom here I cannot hold on shore:
And, most opportune to our need, I have
A vessel rides fast by, but not prepared
For this design. What course I mean, I shall,
Nothing benefit in my knowledge, nor
Concerns me the reporting.

Cam. O, my lord,
I would your spirit were easier for advice,
Or stronger for your need.

Flo. [Hark, Perdita.—[Takes her aside.]
I'll hear you by and by. [To Camillo.

Cam. He's irremovable,
Resolved for flight: Now were I happy, if
His going I could frame to serve my turn;
Save him from danger, do him love and honor;
For I have the sight again of dear Sicilia,
And that unhappy king, my master, whom
I so much thirst to see.

Flo. Now, good Camillo,
I so fraught with various business, that
I leave out ceremony. [Going.

Cam. Sir, I think,
You have heard of my poor services, I the love
That I have borne your father?

3 Love.

Flo. Very nobly
Have you deserved: it is my father's music,
To speak your deeds: not little of his care
To have them recompens'd as thought on
Cam. Well, my lord,
If you may please to think I love the king;
And through him, what is nearest to him, which
Is your grace's self, embrace but my direction,
(If your more ponderous and settled project
May suffer alteration,) on mine honor
I'll point you where you shall have such receiving
As shall become your bigness; where you may Enjoy your mistress; (from the whom, I see,
There's no discretion to be made, but by,
Some change must put on my shroud, and lay me
Where no priest shuffles in dust.—[O cursed wretch!]
Your discontenting father strive to qualify,
And bring him up to liking.

Flo. How, Camillo,
May this, almost a miracle, be done?
That I may call something more than man,
And, after that, trust to thee.

Cam. Have you thought on
A place, where'lo you'll go?

Flo. Not any yet:
But as the unthought-on accident is guilty
To what we wildly do; so we profess
Ourselves to be the slaves of chance, and flies
Of every wind that blows.

Cam. Then list to me:
This follows,—if you will not chance on my purpose,
But undergo this flight:—Make for Sicilia;
And there present yourself, and your fair princess,
For so, I see, she must be:—Irene Leontes;
She shall be habited, and it becomes
Flo. The partner of your bed. Methinks, I see
Leontes, opening his free arms, and weeping
His welcome forth:—asks thee, the son, forgiveness,
As 'twere the father's person: kisses the hand
Of your fresh princess: or and or divides him
Twixt his unkindness and his kindness: the one
He chaises to hell, and bids the other grow,
Faster than thought, or time.

Flo. Worthy Camillo,
What color for my visitation shall
Hold up before him?

Cam. Sent by the king your father
To greet him, and to give him comforts. Sir,
The manner of your bearing towards him, with
What you, as from your father, shall deliver,
Things known between us three, I'll write you down:
The which shall point you forth at every sitting,
What you must say; that he shall not perceive,
But that you have your father's bosom there,
And speak his very heart.

Flo. I am bound to you;
There is some sap in this.

Cam. A course more promising
Than a wild dedication of yourselves
To unprofitable, undream'd shores; most cer-
To misereous enough: no hope to help you;
But, as you shak off one, to take another:
Nothing so certain as your anchors: who
Do their best office, if they can but stay you
Where you'll be least to be. Besides, you know
Prosperity's the very bond of love;
Whose fresh complexion and whose heart to-
Affection alters.

Per. One of these is true;
I think, affliction may subdue the check,
But not take in the mind.

Cam. Yes, say you so!

There shall not, at your father's house, these seven,
Be born another such.

Flo. My good Camillo,
She is as forward of her breeding, as
I the rear of birth.

Cam. I cannot say, 'tis pity
She lacks instructions; for she seems a mistress
To most that teach.

Per. Your pardon, sir, for this;
I'll blush you thanks.

Flo. [With softest Perdita.—
But, O, the thorns we stand upon!—Camillo,— Preserver of my father, now of me:

1 For discontented.
2 The unexpected discovery made by Polixenes.
3 Conquer.
Enter Autolycus.

Aut. Ha! ha! what a fool's honesty is! and trust, honest brother, to a very simple gentleman! I have sold all my trumpery; not a counterfeit stone, not a riband, glass, pawnander, brooch, book, ballad, knife, tape, glove, shoe-tip, bracelet, horn-rack, to keep my pack from fasting; they long, who should buy first; as if my trunkets had been hallowed, and brought a benediction to the buyer: by which means I saw whose purse was best in picture, and what I saw, to my good use, I remember'd. My clown (who wants but something to be a reasonable man) grew so in love with the wenches song; that he would not stir his petticoats, till he had both time and words: which so drew the rest of the herd to me, that all their other senses stuck in ears: you might have pinched a plaquette, it was sensible; two nothing, to gild a cobble-piece of a purse; I would have fixed keys off, that hung in chains; no hearing, no feeling, but my sir's song, and admiring the nothing of it. So that, in this, this loud and cruel and criminal, and heart-sick purloined purses; and had not the old man come in, with a wholebag beneath his daughter and the king's son, and scared my chouts from the chaff, I had not left in hand, in the whole army. [Camillo, Florizel, and Perdita, come forward.

Cam. Nay, but my letters by this means being there so soon as you arrive, shall clear that doubt. Flo. And those that you procure from king Leontes.

Cam. Shall satisfy your father.

Per. Happy be you! All that you speak, shows fair.

Cam. Who have we here? [Enter Autolycus.

We'll make an instrument of this; omit Nothing, may give us aid.

Aut. If they have overheard me now, —why, hanging.

Cam. How now, good fellow? Why shakes thou so? Fear not, man; here's no harm intended to thee.

Aut. I am a poor fellow, sir.

Cam. Why, be so still; here's nobody will steal that from thee: Yet, for the outside of thy poverty, we will not make thee exchange a cobble-piece of a purse; I would have fixed keys off, that hung in chains; no hearing, no feeling, but my sir's song, and admiring the nothing of it. So that, in this, this loud and cruel and criminal, and heart-sick purloined purses; and had not the old man come in, with a wholebag beneath his daughter and the king's son, and scared my chouts from the chaff, I had not left in hand, in the whole army. [Camillo, Florizel, and Perdita, come forward.

Cam. Nay, nythee, despatch: the gentleman is half drunk already.

Aut. Are you in earnest, sir? I smell the thick of it.

Flo. Despatch, I pray thee.

Aut. Indeed I have had earnest; but I cannot with conscience take it.

Cam. Unhuckle, unhuckle.

[Cam. and Autolycus exchange garments.

Fortunate mistress,—let my prophecy Come home to you—your husband may return himself to his own sweetheart's heart, And pour it o'er thy brows; make thy face fair; Dismanue thee: and as you can, disken The truth of your own seeming; that you may (For I do fear eyes over you) to shipboard Get undiscreet.

Per. I see, the play so lies, That I must bear a part.

*Physician.
*A little ball made of perfumes, and worn to prevent infection in times of plague.
*A bird resembling a jackalow.
*Something over and above.

Cam. No remedy.— Have you done there?

Flo. Should I now meet my father, He would not call me son.

Cam. Nay, you shall have No lack—Come, lady, come—Farewell, my friend. And, sir, adeu.

Flo. O Perdita, what have we twain forgot? Pray you a word.

Cam. What I do next, shall be, to tell the king.

[Aside.

Of this escape, and whither they are bound; Wherein, my hope is, I shall so present, To boast, I shall see her: whose company I shall review Sicilia; for whose sight I have a woman's longing.

Flo. Fortune speed us!—This we set on, Camillo, to the sea-side.

Cam. The swifter speed, the better.

[Exit Florizel, Perdita, and Camillo.

Aut. I understand the business, I hear it: To have an open ear, a quick eye, and a nimble hand, is necessary for a cut-purse: a good nose is requisite also, to smell out work for the other senses. I see, this is the time; and I'll anon make haste. What an exchange had this been, without boot? what a boot is here, with this exchange! Sure, the gods do this year connive at us, and we may do any thing. Theerence himself is about a piece of iniquity; stealing away from his father, with his dog at his heels: If I thought it not a piece of honesty to acquaint the king withal, I would do't; but the gods will have it, to conceal it; and therein am I constant to my profession.

Enter Clown and Shepherd.

Shep. Nay, but hear me.

Cyn. Nay, but hear me.

Shep. Go to, then.

Cyn. I am become none of your flesh and blood, your flesh and blood has not offended the king; and, so, your flesh and blood is not to be punished by him. Show those things you found about her; those things, mark thee, that she has writ here: This being done, let the law go whistle; I warrant you.

Shep. I will tell the king all, every word, yea, and his son's pranks too; who, I may say, is no honest man neither to his father, nor to me, to go about to make me the king's brother-in-law.

reflected on not on thy basheness, court-contempt!—

Think'st thou, for that I insinuate, or toze' from thee thy business, I am therefore no courtier! I am courtier capa-pè; and one that will either push on, or clear the business there; whereupon I command thee to open thy affair.

Steph. My business, sir, is to the king.

Act. VI. What advocate hast thou to him?

Cleo. None, sir; I have no pensive, cock, nor

Act. How bless'd are we, that are not simple men! Yet nature might have made me as these are, Therefore I'll not demand. Clo. This cannot but be a great courtier. Steph. His garments are rich, but he bears them not handsomely.

Cleo. He seems to be the more noble in being fancied: a great man, I'll warrant; I know, by the packing on's teeth.

Act. The farde! there! what's i' the farde! Wherefore that box?

Steph. Sir, there lies such secrets in this farde, and box, which none must know but the king; and which he shall know within this hour, if I may come to the speech of him.

Act. And, thou hast lest thy labor.

Steph. Why, sir?

Act. The king is not at the palace; he is gone abroad a new ship to purge melancholy, and an hundred thoughts in his head are such, than must know, the king is full of grief.

Steph. So 'tis said, sir; about his son, that should have married a shepherd's daughter.

Act. If that shepherd be not in hand-fast, let him fly; the curses he shall have, the tortures he shall feel, will break the back of man, the heart of manhood.

Cleo. Think you so, sir?

Act. Not he alone shall suffer what wit can make heavy, and vengeance bitter; but those that are gone, and known though removed fifty times, shall all come under the basilman: which though it be great pity, yet it is necessary. An old sheep-whistling rogue, a ram-bander, to offer to have his daughter come into grace! Some say, he shall be stoned; but that death is too soft for him, say I: Draw our throne into a sheep-cote! all deaths are too few, the sharpest too easy.

Act. Is the man e'er a son, sir, do you hear, ain't like you, sir?

Act. He has a son, who shall be flayed alive; then, nointed over with honey, set on the head of a wild ass, then sent back to him, be three-quarter'd, and a dram dead; then recovered again with aquavitae, or some other hot infusion; then raw as he is, and in the hottest day postponement proclaimes shall he be set against a brick wall, the sun looking with a southward eye upon him; where he is to be hold him, with flies blown to death. But what talk we of these buttrey rascals, whose miseries are to be smile at, their offences being so capital! Tell me, (for you seem to be honest plain men,) what you have to the king; being something gently considered, I'll bring you where he is abroad. Enter thy persons to his presence, whisper him in your behaiais; and, if it be in man, besides the king, to effect your suits, here is the man shall do it.

Come to be of such great and considerable use with him, give him gold; and though authority be a stubborn hear, yet he is oft led by the nose with gold: show me the mode of your purse to the outside of his hand, and more ado. Remember, stoned and dazed alive.

Steph. An't please you, sir, to undertake the business for us, here is that gold I have: I'll make it a great use of it; and so, while he is abroad, I will bring it to you.

Act. After I have done what I promised?

Steph. Ay, sir.

Act. Well, give me the money:—Are you a party in this business?

Cleo. In some sort, sir; but though my case be a pitiful one, yet I shall not be flayed out of it.

Act. O, that's the case of the shepherd's son:— Hang him, he'll be made an example.

Cleo. Comfort, comfort; we must to the king, and should our secrets be so Known to him, 'tis none of your daughter nor my sister; we are gone else. Sir, I will give you as much as this old man does, when the business is performed; and remain, as he says, your pawn, till it be brought you.

Act. I will trust you. Walk before toward the sea-side; go on the right hand; I will but seek upon the height, and follow you.

Cleo. We're blessed in this man, as I may say; even blessed.

Steph. Let's before, as he bids us: he was provided to do us good.

SCENE V.—Sicily. A Room in the Palace of Leontes.

Enter LEONTES, CLEOMENES, DION, PAULINA, and others.

Cleo. Sir, you have done enough, and have performed a saint-like sorrow: no fault could you make, Which you have not redeem'd; indeed, paid down More penitence than done trespass: At the last, Do as the heavens have done; forget your evil; With them, forgive yourself. Leon. Whilst I remember her and her virtues, I cannot forget My biomashes in them; and so still think of The wrong I did myself: which was so much, That hearseless it hath made my kingdom; and I cannot yet the sweetest companion, that ever man bred his hopes out of.

Paul. True, true, my lord: If, one by one, you weeded all the world, Or, from the all that are, took something good, To make a perfect woman; she you kill'd, Would be unparalleled.

* A cajole or force.
* Related.

Leon. I think so: Kill'd! She I kill'd? I did so; but thou strik'st me So sorely to say I did; it is as bitter Upon thy tongue, as in my thought: Now, good now, Say so but seldom.

Cleo. Not at all, good lady You might have spoken a thousand things; that would Have done the time more benefit, and grace Your kindness better.

Paul. You are one of those, Would have him wed again.

Dion. If you would not so, You pity not the state, nor the remembrance Of his most sovereign grace's coupling little. What dangers, by his highness' fall of issue, May drop upon his kingdom, and devour Incertain lookers-on. What were more holy, Than to come, the former queen is well? What holier, than,—for royalty's repair, For present comfort, and for future good,— To bless the bed of majesty again With a sweet child? and left me?
* The hottest day foretold in the almanac.
* Being hansomely bribed.
Paul. There is none worthy, unless it be the gods Who will have fulfilled their secret purposes: For has not the divine Apollo said, "Till he[...]

Paul. The crown will find an heir: Great Alexander Left his to the worthiest; so his successor Was like to be the best.

Lion. Good Paulina,—

Who hast the memory of Hermione, I know in honor, — that ever I Had squared me to thy counsel; — then, even now, I might have look'd upon my queen's full eyes; Have taken treasure from her lips,—

No more such wives: therefore, no wife: one worse, And better used, would make her sainted spirit And every sense oppose her; and, on this stage, (Where we offenders now appear,) soul-vex'd, Begin, And why to me?

Paul. Had she such power, She had just cause.

Lion. She had: and would incense me To murder her I married.

Paul. What? I should so: Why is the ghost that walk'd, I'd bid you mark Her eye; and tell me, for what dull part in't You chose her: then I'd shriek that even your eyes Should rise to bear me; and the words that follow Should be, Remember mine.

Lion. Stars, very stars, And all eyes else dead! — Fear thou no wife, Paulina.

Paul. Will you swear Never to marry, but my free leave? Lion. Never, Paulina; so be bless'd my spirit! Paul. Then, good my lords, bear witness to his oath.

Cleo. You tempt him over-much.

Paul. Unless another,

As like Hermione as is her picture, Allround his eye.

Cleo. Good Madam,—

Paul. I have done.

Yet, if my lord will marry,—if you will, sir, No remedy but you will; give me the office To choose you a queen: she shall not be so young As was your former: but she shall be such, As, while your first queen's ghost, it should take joy, To see her in your arms.

Lion. My true Paulina, We shall not marry, till thou bid'st us.

Paul. That shall be, when your first queen's again in breath; Never till then.

Enter a Gentleman.

Gent. One that gives out himself prince Florizel, Son of Polixenes, with his princess, (she The sacred) have yet beheld, desires access To your high presence.

Lion. What with him? he comes not Like to his father's greatness: his approach, Shuns but the circumstance, and sudden, tells us, 'Tis not a visitation framed, but forced By need, and accident. What train?

Gent. A strict, and close but mean.

Lion. His princess, say you, with him?

Gent. Ay: the most peerless piece of earth, I think, That ever the sun shone bright on.

Paul. O Hermione, As every present time doth boast itself Above a better, gone: so must thy grave Give way to what's soon new. Sir, you yourself split.

meet.

Have said, and writ so, (but your writing now is much less than the thing done.) She had not been Nor was not to be equal'd — thus your verse Flow'd with her beauty once; 'tis shrewdly bodd'd, To say, you have seen a better.

Gent. Paulina, madam: The one I have almost forget; (your pardon.) The other when she has obtained you eye, Will have your tongue too. This is such a crea-

Would she begin a sect, might quench the zeal Of all professors else; make proselytes Of who she but bid follow.

Paul. How! not women!

Gent. Women will love her, that she is a woman More worth than any man; men, that she is The rarest of all women.

Lion. Go, Cleomenes; Yourself, assisted with your honor'd friends, Bring them to our embracement. — Still, its strange, To see this gentleman, and his speeches Will bring me to consider that, which may Unfurnish me of reason. — They are come.

Re-enter CLEOMENES, with FLORIZEL, PERDITA, and Attendants.

Your mother was most true to wedlock, prince; For she did paint your royal father out, Conceiving you: Were I but twenty-one, Your father's image is so lost in him, His very air, that I should call you brother, As I did him; and speak of something, wildly By no means formed. Most dear to me! And your fair princess, goddess! — alas! I lost a couple, that 'twas heaven and earth Might thus have stood, beguiling wonder, as You, a precious couple, did do! and then I lost (All mine own folly) the society. Amity too, of your brave father; whom, Though bearing misery, I desire my life Once more to look upon.

Flor. By his command Have I here touch'd Sicilia: and from him Give him all greeting, that a kind friend, Can send his brother: and, but hurriedly. (Which waits upon worn times) hath something sead'd His wish'd ability, he had himself The lands and waters 'twixt your throne and his Measure'd, to look upon you; whom he therefore (He made me say so) more than all the sceptres, And those that bear them, in bonds.

Lion. O, my brother, (Good gentleman,) the wrongs I have done thee, stir At least within me; and these thy offices, So rarely kind, are as interpreters Of my behind-hand slackness! — Welcome brother, As is the spring to the earth. And hath he too Expos'd this paragon to the fearful usage (At least, ungentle) of the dreadful Neptune, To greet a man, not worth her pains; much less The adventure of her person? — Flor. She came from Libya.

Lion. Where the warlike Smaulus, That noble lord's bard, is fear'd, and look'd on? Flor. Most royal sir, from thence: from him, whose heritage His tears proclaim'd his, parting with her: thence, (A prosperous south-wind friendly,) we have cross'd, To execute the charge my father gave me, For visiting your highness: My best train I have from your Sicilian shores dismount'd; Who for Boemia bend, to signify Not of my success; to Libya, sir, but my arrival, and my wife's, in safety Here, where we are.

Lion. The blessed gods Purge all infection from our air, whilst you Do climate here! You have a holy father, A graceful gentleman; against whose person, So sacred as it is, I have done sin:
Enter a Lord.

LORD. Most noble sir, That which I shall report, will bear no credit, We were not the proof so near. Please you, great sir, Bohemia greets you from himself, by me; Desires you, and delivers his son, who has (his dignity and duty both cast off) Fleed from his father, from his hopes, and with A shepherd's daughter.

LORD. Where's Bohemia? speak.

LORD. Here in the city: I now came from him; I speak amazedly; and it becomes My marvel, and my message. To your court Whiles he was hastening, (in the close, it seems, Of this fair couple,) meets he on the way The father of this seeming lady, and Her brother, having both their country quitted With this young pimple.

Flo. Camillo has betray'd me; Whose honor, and whose honesty, till now, Endured all weathers.

LORD. Lay not, to his charge; He's with the king your father.

LORD. Camillo, sir; I speak with him; who now Has such poor men in question? Never saw I Wretches so quake: they kreed, they kiss the earth; Forwears themselves as often as they speak; Bohemia stops he's ears, and threatens them With divers deaths in death.

Per. O, my poor father!— The heaven sets spies upon us, will not have Our contract celebrated.

Leon. You are married? Flo. We are not, sir, nor are we like to be; The stars, I see, will kiss the valleys first: The odds for high and low's alike.

Leon. Is this the daughter of a king? Flo. She is, When once she is my wife; Leon. That once, I see, by your good father's speed, Will come on very slowly. I am sorry, Most sorry, you have broken from his hugging, Who was so wed in duty: and your choice Is not so rich in worth as beauty, That you might well enjoy her.

Flo. Dear look up, Then fortune, visible an enemy, Should chase us with his father, power no jot Hath she, to change our loves.—Beseech you, sir Remember since you owd no more to time That you do now; with thought of such affections, Step forth mine advocate; at your request, My father will grant precious things, as trifles, Leon. Would he do so, I'd beg your precious mistress Which he counts but a trifle.

Paul. Sir, my liege, Your eye hath too much youth int in : not a month 'Fore your queen died, she was more worth such gazes, Than what you look on now.

Leon. Even in these looks I made.—But your petition, "To Florizel, Is yet unanswered: I will to your father; Your honor not deterred by your desires, I am a friend to them, and you upon which errand I now go toward him; therefore, follow me. And mark what way I make: Come, good my lord. [Exit."

SCENE II.—Before the Palace.

Enter Autolycus and a Gentleman.

Aut. Beseech you, sir, were you present at this rotation?

1 Gent. I was by at the opening of the fardeled, heard the old shepherd deliver the manner, how he found it: whereupon, after a little amazement, we were all commanded out of the chamber; only this methought I heard the shepherd say, he found the child.

Aut. I would most gladly know the issue of it.

1 Gent. The king's messenger delivered the child—but the chances I perceived in the king, and Camillo, were very notes of admiration; they seemed almost, with staring on another, to tear the causes of their joy; here was speaking of nobleness, language in their very gesture; they looked, as they had heard of a world ransomed, or one destroyed: A notable passion of wonder appeared in them: but the worst beholder, that knew no more but seem, could not say, if the importance were joy, or sorrow: but in the extremity of the one, it must needs be.

Enter another Gentleman.

Here comes a gentleman, that happily, knows more: The news. Roger!

2 Gent. Nothing but bonfires: The oracle is fulfilled; the king's daughter is found: such a deal of wonder is broken out within this hour, that ballad-makers cannot be able to express it.

Enter a third Gentleman.

Here comes the lady Paulina's steward; he can deliver you more.—How goes it now, sir! this news, which is called true, is so like an old tale, that the verity of it stands in strong suspicion: Has the king found his heir!

3 Gent. Most true; if ever truth were pregnant by circumstance; that which you hear, you if you see, are so sure in unity in the action. The mantle of queen Hermione—her jewel about the neck of it—the letters of Antigonus, found with it, and that sign which the king is to have the character—the majesty of the creature, in resemblance of the mother: the affection of nobleness, which nature shows above her breeding,—and many other evidences, proclaim her with all certainty, to be the king's daughter. Did you see the meeting of the two kings?

2 Gent. No.

3 Gent. Then have you lost a sight, which was to be seen, cannot be spoken of. There might you have beheld one joy crown another; so, and in such manner, that it seemed, sorrow wept to take leave of them; for their joy waxed in tears. There was casting up of eyes, holding up of hands; with countenance of such distraction, that they were to be known by garment, not by favor. Our king, being returned, stripped of himself, to joy of his found daughter; as that joy were now become a loss, cries, O, thy mother, thy mother! then asks Bohemia forgiveness; then embraces his son-in-law; then again calls his daughter to his heart; now he thanks the old shepherd, which stands by, like a weather-beaten conduit of many kings' reigns. I never heard of such another encounter, which lame reports to follow it, and undoes description to do it.

2 Gent. What, pray you, became of Antigonus, that carried hence the child?

3 Gent. Like an old tale still; which will have matter to rehearse, though credit be askep, and not an ear open: He was born to pieces with a bear, this avouches the shepherd's son; who has not only his innocence (which seem much) to justify him, but a handkerchief, and rings, of his, that Paulina knows.

1 Gent. What became of his bark, and his followers?

3 Gent. Wreck'd, the same instant of their master's death; and in the view of the shepherd; so that all the instruments, which aid to expose the child, were the last, when it was found. But, O, the noble combat, that, 'twixt joy and sorrow, was fought in Paulina! She had one eye declined for the loss of her beloved; another desired that the oracle was fulfilled: She lifted the princes from the earth: and so locks her in embracing, as if she would pin her to her heart, that she might no more be in danger of losing.

1 Gent. The dignity of this act was worth the audience of kings and princes; for by such was it acted.

4 The thing imported.

5 Disposition or quality.

6 Countenance, features.

7 Embraçage.
3 Gent. One of the prettiest touches of all, and that which angeld for mine eyes, (caught the water, though not the fish) was, when at the relation of the queen's death, the manner how she came to it, (bravely confessed, and lamented by the king,) how attentiveness wound'd his daughter till, from one sign of dolor to another, she did with an oath! I wept, I mourned, till all the blood and heart bled. Who was most malleable, changed color; some swooned, all sorrowed: if all the world could have seen it, the woe had been universal.

1 Gent. Are they returned to the court?
2 Gent. No: the princess hearing of her mother's statue, which is in the keeping of Paulina,—a piece more noble than ever they imagined, nor yet performed by that rare Italian master, Julio Romano; who, had he himself eternity, and could put breath into his work, would become nature of her custom, so performing is her life: be so near to Hermione hath done Hermione, that, they say, one would speak to her, and stand in hope of answer: thither with all griefs and affections, are they gone; and there they intend to stay.

1 Gent. I thought, she had some great matter there in hand; for, she hath privately, twice or three a day, ever since the death of Hermione, visited that removed house. Shall I go thither, and with our company piece the rejoicing?

2 Gent. Who would be thane, that has the benefit of a look, every wink of an eye, some new grace will be born; our absence makes us unliter'y to our knowledge. Let's along.

[Exit Gentlemen.]

Act V.

Scene I.—A Room in Paulina's House.

Enter Leontes, Polixenes, Florizel, Perdita, Camillo, Paulina, Lords and Attendants.

Leon. O grave and good Paulina, the great comfort That I have had of thee!

Paul. What, sovereign sir, I did not well, I meant well: All my services, You have paid home: but that you have vouchsafed With your high hand, and brother, and these your contracted Heirs of your kingdoms, my poor house to visit, It is a surplus of your grace which never More may last to answer.

Leon. Paulina, We honor you with trouble: But we came To see the statue of our queen: your gallery Have we bored through; and some new work and much content In many singularities; but we saw not That which my daughter came to look upon, The statue of her mother.

Paul. As she liv'd peerless, So her dead likeness, I do well believe, Exceeds whatever yet you look'd upon, Or hand of man hath done; therefore I keep it Herein. But there it is: To see the life as lively mock'd, as ever Still sleep mock'd death: behold; and say, 'tis well. [Paulina undraws a Curtain, and discovers a Statue.] I like your silence, it the more shows off Your wonder: but yet speak,—first, you my liege, Comes it not something near? Ne'er, her natural posture!— Chide me, dear stone; that I may say, indeed, Thou art Hermione: or, rather, thou art she, In thy new winding: for she was an under, As infancy and grace,—But yet, Paulina, Hermione was not so much wrinkled; nothing So aged, as this seems. Paul. O, not by much.

Paul. So much the more my carver's excellence Which lets go by some sixteen years, and makes her As she liv'd now.

Leon. As now she might have done, So much to my good comfort, as it is Now piercing to my soul. O, thouest stood, Even with such life of majesty, (warn life, As now it coldly stands,) when first I wou'd her! I am ashamed: Does not the stone rebuke me, For being more stone than it!—0, royal piece, There's majesty in thy majesty; which has My eyes, my ears, and to return all To thee admiring daughter took the spirits, Standing like stone with thee!— I'll give me leave; And do not say 'tis superstition, that I kneel, and then implore her blessing.—Lady, Dear queen, that ended when I but began, Give me that hand of yours, to kiss. Paul. O, patience; The statue is but newly fix'd, the colors Not dry. Clown. My lord, your sorrow was too sore laid on: Which sixteen winters cannot blow away, So many summers, dry: scarce any joy Did ever so long live; no sorrow, But kill'd itself much sooner. Paul. Dear my brother, Let him, that was the cause of this, have power To take off so much grief from you, as he Will piece up in himself. — Stout.

* Yeoman.
Scene III.  WINTER'S TALE.

Paul.  Indeed, my lord,
If I had thought the sight of my poor image
Would thus have wrought you, (for the stone is mine,)
I'd not have shaw'd it.

Leon.  Do not draw the curtain.

Paul.  No longer shall you gaze on't; lest your fancy
May think anon, it moves.

Leon.  Let be, let be.
Would I were dead, but that, methinks already
What was he, that did make it—see, my lord,
Would you not deem, it breath'd? and that those veins
Did verily bear blood?

Paul.  Masterly done:
The very life seems warm upon her lip.
Leon.  The feature of her eye has motion in't
As we are mock'd with art.

Paul.  I'll draw the curtain;
My lord's almost so far transported, that He'll think anon, it lives.

Leon.  O, sweet Paulina,
Make me to think so twenty years together;
No settled scenes of the world can match
The pleasure of that naughtiness. Let alone,
Paul.  I am sorry, sir, I have thus far sturr'd you:
but
I could afflict you further.

Leon.  Do, Paulina;
For this affliction has a taste as sweet
As any cordial comfort.—Still, methinks,
There is an air comes from her: What fine chisel
Could ever yet cut breath? Let no man mock me,
For I will kiss her.

Paul.  Good my lord, forbear:
The ruddiness upon her lip is wet;
You'll mar it, if you kiss it; stain your own
With oily painting: Shall I draw the curtain?
Leon.  No, not these twenty years.

Paul.  So long could I Stand by, a looker-on.

Leon.  Either forbear,
Quit presently the chapel; or resolving
For more amazement: If you can behold it,
I'll make the statue move; indeed, descend,
And take you by the hand: but then you'll think,
(Which I protest against,) I am assisted
By wicked powers.

Leon.  What you can make her do,
I am content to look on: what to speak
I am content to hear: for 'tis as easy
To make her speak, as move.

Paul.  It is required
You do awake your faith: Then, all stand still;
Or those, that think it unlawful business
I can have: let them depart.
Leon.  Proceed;

No foot shall stir.

Paul.  Music; awake her; strike,—[Music.
*Tis time; descend; be stone no more; approach,
Strike all that look upon with marvel. Come:
I'II fill your grave up; stir: nay, come away;
Bequeath to death your numbness, for from him
Bear life redeem'st you,—You perceive she stirs:
[HERMIONE comes down from the Pedestal.

Start not: her actions shall be holy, as,
You hear, my spell is lawful: do not shun her,
Until you see her die again; for then
You kill her double: Nay, present your hand:
When she was young, you wo'd her; now, in age,
Is she become the suitor.

Leon.  O, she's warm! [Embracing her.
If this be magic, let it be an art
Lawful as eating.

Paul.  She embraces him.

Camillo. She hangs about his neck;
If she pertain to life, let her speak too.

Pol. Ay, and make't manifest where she has liv'd,
Or, how stolen from the dead.

Leon.  That she is living,
Were it but told you, should be hooted at
Like an old tale; but it appears, she lives
Though yet she speak not. Mark a little while.—
Please you to interpose, fair madam; kneel,
And pray your mother's blessing.—Turn, good lady;
Our Perdita is found.

[Presenting PERDITA, who kneels to HERMIONE.

Pol.  You gods, look down.
And from your sacred vials pour your graces
Upon my daughter's head—Tell me, mine own,
Where last thou been preserv'd! where liv'd! how found Thy father's court? for thou shalt hear that —Knowing by Paulina, that the oracle
Gave hope thou wast in being,—have preserv'd
Myself to see the issue.

Pol.  There's time enough for that;
Lest they desire, upon this push, to trouble
Your joys with like relation.—so togethcr,
You precious winners all: your excitement
Partake to every one. I, an old tittle,
Will wmg me to some wittier d' bough: and there
My mate, that's never to be found again,
Lament till I am lost.

Leon.  O peace, Paulina;
Thou shouldst a husband take by my consent,
As I by thine, a wife: this is a match,
And made between's by vows. Thou hast found
mine;
But how, is it to be questioned? for I saw her,
As I thought, dead; and have, in vain, said many
A prayer upon her grave: I'll not seek for
(For him, I partly know his mind) to find thee
An honorable husband.—Come, Camillo,
And take her by the hand; whose worth, and
Is richly noted; and here justified
By us, a pair of kings.—Let's from this place.—
What!—Look upon my brother:—both your Pardons,
That e'er I put between your holy looks
My ill suspicion.—This your say-in-law,
And son unto the king, (in whom heavens directing)
Is tooth-plight to your daughter.—Good Paulina,
Lead us from hence; where we may leisurely
Each one demand, and answer to his part
Perform'd in this wide gap of time, since first
We were disavow'd: hastily lead away.

LUC¥E, her Servant.

A COURTEZAN.

GAROTEL, Officers, and other Attendants.

SCENE, Ephesus.

ACT I.

Enter Duke, XEOX, Gaoler, Officers, and other Attendants.

 duk. Have you, Solius, to procure my fall,
And by the dooms of death, end woes and all.

The merchants, our well-dealing countrymen,—

Who, wanting gilders, or to redeem their lives,

Would sell their righteous statutes with their bloods,—

Excludes all pity from their threatening looks,

For, since the mortal and intestine jars

Twixt thy seditious countrymen and us,

It hath in solemn symbols been decreed,

Both by the Syracusans and ourselves,

To admit no traffic to our adverse towns:

Nay, more,

If any born at Ephesus, be seen
At any Syracusan marks and bars; Again, if any Syracusan born,

Come to the bay of Ephesus, he dies,
His goods confiscate to the duke's dispose; Unless a thousand marks he belev'd,

To quit the penalty, and to ransom him.

Thy substance valued at the highest rate,

Cannot amount unto a hundred marks;

Therefore, by law thou art condemned to die.

The sailors brought to market, and left the ship, then sinking-ripe to us:

My wife, more careful for the elder born,

Must feed him unto a small spare mast,

Such as seas-faring men provide for storms;

To him one of the other twins was bound,

Whilst I had been like baleful of the other.

The children thus dispos'd, my wife and I,

Fixing our eyes on whom our care was fix'd,

Fasten'd ourselves at either end the mast;

And, by the benefit of his goodly light,

The seas was't calm, and we discovered

Two ships from far making amain to us,

Of Corinth that, of Ephesus this;

But ere they came—0, let me say no more!

Gather the sequel by that went before.

DukE. Nay, forward, old man, do not break off so,

For we may pity, though not portion there.

Here, 0, had the gods done so, I had not now

Worthily term'd them merciless to us!

For, ere the ships could meet by twice five leagues,

We were encounter'd by a mighty rock;

Which being violently borne upon,
SCENE II. COMEDY OF ERRORS.

Our ship's help was split in the midst,
So that, in this unjust divorce of us,
Fortune had left to both of us alike
What to delect in, what to sorrow for.
Had we not, poor soul, as hardened
With lesser weight, but not with lesser woe,
Was carried with more speed before the wind;
And in our sight three were taken up
By fishermen of Corinth, as we thought.
At length, another ship had set on us;
And, knowing whom it was their ship to save,
Gave helpful welcome to their shipwreck'd guests;
And would have relieved the fishes of their prey,
Had not their bark been very slow of sail.
And therefore homeeward did they bend their course,
Thus have ye heard me sever'd from my bliss;
That by misfortunes was my life prolong'd,
To tell sad stories of my own mishaps.

Duke. And, for the sake of them thou sorrowsst for,
Do me the favor to dilate at full
What had befell't of them, and thee, till now.

Ant. S. My youngest boy, and yet my eldest care,
At eighteen years became inquisitive
After his brother; and importun'd me,
That his attendant (for his case was like,
Reft of his brother, but return'd his name)
Must bear him company in the course of him:
Whom whilst I lab'rd of a love to see
I hazarded the loss of whom I lov'd.
Five summers have I spent in farthest Greece,
Bought a hopeful boy through the bounds of Asia,
And, coasting homeward, came to Ephesus;
Hopeless to find, yet death to have unsov'd,
Or that, or any place that bars mens heart.
But here must end the story of my life;
And happy were I in my timely death,
Could all my travels warrant me they live.

Duke. Hopeless, Eregeon, whom the fates have marked'd
To bear the extremity of dire mishap!
Now, trust me, were it not against our laws,
Against my crown, my oath, my dignity,
When princes, would they should not remain;
My soul should sue as advocate for thee,
But, though thou art adjudged to the death,
And passed sentence may not be recall'd,
But, to our house's great disgracement,
Yet will I favor thee in what I can:
Therefore, merchant, I will limit thee this day
To spare thy help by beneficent help.
Try all the friends thou hast in Ephesus;
Beg, thou or, to make up the sum,
And live; if not, then thou art doom'd to die:
Guard, take him to thy custody.

Erg. I will, my lord.

Ant. S. Hopeless, and helpless, both Eregeon wend's
But to procrastinate his ends.

SCENE II. A public place.

Enter Antipholus of Syracuse, and a Merchant.

Mrs. Therefore, give out, you are of Epidamnum,
Lest that your goods be soon be confiscate.
This very day, a Syracuse merchant
Is apprehended for arrival here;
And, not being able to buy out his life,
According to the statute of the town,
Dies ere the weary sun set in the west:
There is your money that I had to keep,
When I am dull with care and melancholy.
Lightens my humber with his merry jests.
What will you walk with me about the town,
And then go to my inn, and dine with me?

Mer. I am invited, sir, to certain merchants,
Of whom I hope to make much benefit;
I crave you, sir, you may go, at five o'clock.
Please you, I will meet you with the urn upon the
And afterwards consort you till bed-time;
My present business calls me from you now.

Ant. S. Return as soon as possible; I am bound to myself,
And wander up and down, to view the city.

Mer. Sir, I commend you to your own content.

[Exit Merchant.

Ant. S. He that commends me to mine own content,
Commends me to the thing I cannot get.
I to the world am like a cop of water,
That in the ocean seeks another drop;
Who, finding there to find his fellow north,
Unseen, inequative, confound'd himself;
I, to a mother, and a brother,
In quest of them, unhappy, lose myself.

Enter Dromio of Ephesus.

Here comes the almanac of my true date—
What now! How chance, thou art return'd so soon!

Dro. E. Return do so soon! I rather approach'd too late.
The capon burna, the pig falls from the split;
The clock has stricken twelve upon the bell,
My mistress made it one upon my cheek:
She is so hot, because the meat is cold;
The meat is cold, because you come too home;
You come not home, because you have no stomach;
You have no stomach, having broke your fast;
But we, that know what 'tis to fast and pray,
Are penitent for you to sell all to.

Ant. S. Stop in your wind, sir; tell me this, I pray;
Where have you left the money that I gave you?

Dro. E. Take it—expence, that I had o Wednesday last,
To pay the soldier for my mistress' crupper—
The soldier had it, sir, I kept it not.

Ant. S. I am not in a sovvereign humor now:
Tell me, and daily not, where is the money?
We were strangers here, how darst thou trust
So great a charge from thine own custody!

Dro. E. I pray you, jest, sir, as you sit at dinner,
I from my mistress come to you in post;
If I return, I shall be post indeed;
For she will score your fault upon my pate.
Mutilate, as your raw, like mine, should be your clock,
And strike you home without a messenger.

Ant. S. Come, Dromo, come, these jests are out of season;
Reserve them till a merrier hour than this:
Where is the gold I gave in charge to thee?

Dro. E. To me, sir! why you gave no gold to me.
Ant. S. Come, sir, know, have done; your foolishness,
And tell me, how thou hast dispos'd thy charge.

Dro. E. My charge was but to fetch you from the inn.
Home to your house, the Phoenix, sir, to dinner;
My mistress, and her sister, stay for you.

Ant. S. Now, as I am a christian, answer me.
In what place you have bestowed my money;
Or I shall break that merry Soovereign of thine,
That stands on tricks when I am undispos'd:
Where is the thousand marks thou hadst of me?

Dro. E. I have some marks of yours upon your pate,
Some of my mistress' marks upon my shoulders,
But not a thousand marks between you both—
If I should pay your worship those again,
Perchance, you will not hear them patiently.

Ant. S. Thy mistress' marks! what mistress, slave, thou art?

Dro. E. Your worship's wife, my mistress at the Phoenix:
She that doth fast, till you come home to dine,
And prays, that you will lie home to dinner.

Ant. S. What, wilt thou flout me thus into my face,
Being forbid! There, take you that, sir knave.

Dro. E. What mean you, sir! for heaven's sake,
Hold your hands;
Nay, an you will not, sir, I'll take my heels.

[Exit Dro. E.
ACT II.

SCENE I.—A public place.

Enter Adriana and Luciana.

Adr. Neither my husband, nor the slave return'd, That I should take him that I send to seek his master! Sure, Luciana, it is two o'clock.

Luc. Perhaps, some merchant hath invited him, And from the mart he's somewhere gone to dinner. Good sister, let us dine, and never fret: A man is master of his liberty; Time is their master; and, when they see time, They'll go, or come: if so, he'll be patient, sister.

Adr. Why should their liberty or ears be more? Luc. Because their business still lies out of door. Adr. Look, when I serve him so, he takes it ill. Luc. O, know, he is the bride of your ear. Adr. There's none but he, that must be bridled so. Luc. Why headstrong liberty is bash'd with weep. There's nothing situate under heaven's eye, But hath a mark, in ear, in sea, in sky: The beasts, the fishes, and the winged fowls, Are their masters' subjects, and at their controls: Men, more divine the masters of all these, Lords of the wide world, and wild watry seas, Indued with intellectual sense and souls, Of more pre-emience than fish and fowls, Are masters to their fowls, and their lords: Their dull ear will attend on their accord's.

Adr. This servitude makes you to keep unwept. Luc. Not this, but troubles of the marriage bed. Adr. But were you wedded, you would bear some other way.

Luc. Ere I learn love, I'll practise to obey. Adr. How if your husband start some other place? Luc. Till he come home again, I would forbear.

Adr. Patience, maiden, no marvel though she pause;

They can be meek, that have no other cause. A woman's soul, brought with adversity,

We had be quiet, when we hear it cry;

But were we burden'd with like weight of pain,

As much, or more, we should ourselves complain:

So then, that had no unkind mate to grieve thee.

With urzing helpless patience willst relieve me:

But if thou live to see right bereft.

This fool begg'd patience in thee will be left.

Luc. Well, I will marry one day, but to try—

Here comes your man, now is your husband nigh.

Enter Dromio of Ephesus.

Adr. Say, is your tardy master now at hand? Drom. E. Nay, he is at two hands with me, and that my two ears can witness.

Adr. Say, didst thou speak with him? know'st thou his mind?

Drom. E. Ay, ay, he told his mind upon mine ear: Because he is so young, I scarce could understand it.

Luc. Spake he so doubtfully, thou couldst not feel his meaning?

Drom. E. Nay, he struck so plainly, I could too well feel his humours, and without so doubtfully, that I could scarce understand them.

Adr. But say, sir, is he coming home?

It seems, he hath great care to please his wife.

Drom. E. By, mistress, sure my master is horn-mad.

Adr. Horn-mad, than villain!

Drom. E. I mean not cuckold-mad; but, sure, he's

A dissembling, prating mountebanks,

And many such like liberties of sin;

If prove so, I will be gone the sooner.

I'll to the Centaur, to go seek this slave;

I greatly fear my money is not safe.

[Exit.]

Drom. E. Quoth who?

Luc. Quoth who?

Drom. E. Quoth my master:

Luc. Know'st thou, no wife, no wife, no mistress;

So that my errand, due unto my tongue,

I thank him, I bear home upon my shoulders;

For, in conclusion, he did beat me there.

Drom. E. Go back again, thou slave, and fetch him home.

Luc. E. Am I so round with you, as you with me, That like a football you do spurn me thus? You spurn me hence, and he will spurn me better: If I last in this service, you must case me in leather.

[Exit Luc.]

Luc. Fye, how impatient low'reth in your face.

Adr. His company must do my minions grace,

Whilst I at home starving for a merry look.

Hath homely age the beautifying tool

That like a arrow, from my worthy check

Where he hath never it: is this discourses dull! barren my wit?

If volatile and sharp discourse be mark'd,

Unkindness bounties it, more than marble hard.

So they may vestments his actions better.

That's not my fault, he's master of my state:

What ruins are in me, that can be found

By him not ruin'd? then is he the ground

Of my decreations? My decay'd art:

A sunny look of his would soon repair;

But, too unruly he, breaks the pale,

And feeds from home; poor I am but his state.

Luc. Self-learning jealousy!—fye, fye, fye, fye, fye.

Adr. Unfeeling tools can with such wrongs dispense,

I know him, he's in both hornets everwhere,

Or else, what lets it but he would be here? Sister, you know, he promised me a chain;—

Would that alone alone he would detain,

Or else, he would keep fair quarters with his bed!

I see, the jewell, best enamelled,

Will lose his beauty; and though gold 'bides still,

That others touch, yet often touching will

Wear gold, and so no man, that hath a name, But falsehood and corruption doth it slame.

Since that my beauty cannot please his eye,

I'll sweep what's left away, and weeping die.

Luc. How many fond fools serve mad jealousy!

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—The same.

Enter Antipholus of Syracuse.

Ant. S. The gold, I gave to Dromio, is laid up safe at the Centaur; and the heedful slave is wander'd forth, in care to seek me out. By computation, and mine host's report, I could not speak with Dromio, since at first I sent him from the mart: See, here he comes.

Enter Dromio of Syracuse.

How now, sir! is your merry humor alter'd?

As you spoke before, so rest with me again.

You know no Centaur? you receive no gold?

Your mistress sent to have me home to dinner.

My house was at the Phoenix! Wast thou mad, That thus so madly thou didst answer me?

Of features.

Fie, for dissimul'ry.

Hinders.
Act I.

SCENE II. COMEDY OF ERRORS.

Dro. S. What answer, sir? when spake I such a word,
Ant. S. Even now, even here, not half an hour since.
Dro. S. I did not see you since you sent me hence.

Home to the Centaur, with the gold you gave me.
Ant. S. Villain, thou didst deny the gold's receive;
And told'st me of a mistress, and a dinner;
For I was so sure, thou toldst me, I was displaced.
Dro. S. I am glad to see you in this merry vein:
What means this jest? I pray you, master, tell me.
Ant. S. Yes, dost thou joc, and float me in the teeth?
Think'st thou, I jest? Hold, take that, and that.

Dro. S. Hold, sir, for God's sake: now your jest is earnest:
Upon what bargain do you give it me?
Ant. S. Because that I familiarly sometimes
Do use you for my fool, and that of you,
Your suavity will jest upon my love,
And make a common of my serious hours.
When the sun shines, let foolish games sport,
But creep in cunning, when he hides his beams.
If you will jest with me, know my aspect,
And fashion your demeanour to my looks,
Or I will treat this method in your scorne.

Dro. S. No, no, sir! so you would leave battering.
I had rather have it a head: an you use these blows long, I must get a scorne for my head, and do what I shall, I shall seek my wit in my shoulders.
But, I pray, sir, why am I beaten?
Ant. S. Lost thou not know?
Dro. S. Nothing, sir; but that I am beaten.
Ant. S. Shall I tell better than thy jest's better part.
Ah, do not tear away thyself from me.
For know, my love, as easy mayst thou fall
A drop of water in the breaking gulf,
And take unmingled thence that drop again,
Without addition, or diminishing.
As take from me thyself, and not me too.
How dearly would it touch thee to the quick,
Shouldst thou but hare I were licentious!
And that this body, consecrate to thee,
By rothan lust should be contaminate?
Wouldst thou not spit at me, and spurn at me,
And hurl the name of husband in my face,
And tear the scant'd skin off my harlot brow,
And from my false hand cut the wedding ring,
And break it with a deep-divorcing vow?
I know thou canst; and therefore, thou dost it.
I am possessed with an adulterate blot;
My blood is mingled with the crime of lust:
For, if we two be one, and thou play false,
I do digress the poison of thy flesh,
Being strumpet'd by thy contamion.
Keep then fair league and truce with thy true bed,
I live dis-stain'd, thou undis honour'd.
Ant. S. Hadst thou not been so honest?

Ant. S. Nay, not, I pray you.
Dro. S. Sure ones then.
Ant. S. Nay, not sure, in a thing faising.
Dro. S. Certain ones then.
Ant. S. Name them.
Dro. S. The one, to save the money that he Spends in trine; the other, that at dinner they Should not drop in his porridge.
Ant. S. But your reason was not substantial,
Why there is no time to recover.
Dro. S. Marry, and did sir; namely, no time to recover hair lost by nature.
Ant. S. But your reason was not substantial,
Why there is no time to recover.

Enter Adriana and Lucina.

Ant. Ay, ay, Antipholus, look strange and grow!
Some other mistress hath thy sweet aspects;
I am not Adriana, nor thy wife.
The time was once, when thou unguarded wouldst vow
That never words were music to thine ear,
That never objects pleasing in thine eye,
That never touch didst give to thy hand,
That never meat sweet-savour'd in thy taste,
Unless I spake, look'd, touch'd, or carry'd to thine.
How coming in mine husband, oh, how comes it
That thou art then estranged from such a sight?
Thyself I call it, being strange to me,
That, undividable, incorporate.
Ah, do not tear away thyself from me.
As take from me thyself, and not me too.
How dearly would it touch thee to the quick,
Shouldst thou but hare I were licentious!
And that this body, consecrate to thee,
By rothan lust should be contaminate?
Wouldst thou not spit at me, and spurn at me,
And hurl the name of husband in my face,
And tear the scant'd skin off my harlot brow,
And from my false hand cut the wedding ring,
And break it with a deep-divorcing vow?
I know thou canst; and therefore, thou dost it.
I am possessed with an adulterate blot;
My blood is mingled with the crime of lust:
For, if we two be one, and thou play false,
I do digress the poison of thy flesh,
Being strumpet'd by thy contamion.
Keep then fair league and truce with thy true bed,
I live dis-stain'd, thou undis honour'd.
Ant. S. Hadst thou not been so honest?

Adr. By what rule, sir?
Dro. S. Marry, sir, by a rule as plain as the plain bald pate of Esther Time himself.
Ant. S. Let's hear it.
Dro. S. There's no time for a man to recover his hair, that grows bald by nature.
Ant. S. How? do not do it by fine and recovery?
Dro. S. Yes, to pay a fine for a peruke, and recover the lost hair of another man.
Ant. S. Why is time such a naggard of hair, being always so plentiful a creation?
Dro. S. Because it is a blessing that he bestows on beaubs: and what he hath scanted men in hair, he hath given them in wit.
Ant. S. Why, but there's many a man hath more hair than wit.
Dro. S. Not a man of those, but he hath the wit to lose his hair.
Ant. S. Why, thou didst conclude hairly men plain dealers without wit.

Dro. S. The planter dealer, the sooner lost; yet he lost it in a kind of jollity.
Ant. S. For what reason?

* Study my countenance, & a second was a fortification.
Abetting him to thwart me in my mood! Be it my wrong, you are from me exempt, But wrong, and that with a more contempt. Come, I will fasten on this sleeve of thine: Thou art a elm, my husband. I a vine; Whose weakness, married to thy stronger state, Makes me with thy strength to communicate: If might possess thee from me, it is dross, Unprofitable, or idle moss; Who, all for want of pruning, with intrusion Infect thy sap, and live on thy confusion. Ant. S. To me she speaks; she moves me for her theme: What was I married to her in my dream? Or sleep I now, and think I hear all this? What error drives our eyes and ears amiss? Until I know this sure uncertainty, I'll entertain the elder's tale. Luc. Dromio, go bid the servants spread for dinner. Dros. S. O, for my head! I cross me for a sinner, This is the fairy land—one, state of spites!— We talk with gobhins, owls, and eliz's spirits; If we obey them not, this will ensue, They'll suck our breath, or pinch us black and blue. Luc. Whose craft st thou to thyself, and answers? not! Dromio, thou drone, thou snail, thou slug, thou sow! Dros. S. I am transformed, master, and not I!

Ant. S. I think, thou art, in mind, and so am I. Dro. S. Nay, master, both in mind, and in my heart. Ant. S. Thou hast thine own form. Dro. S. No, I am an ape. Luc. If thou art changed to aught, 'tis to an ass. Dro. S. 'Tis true; she rides me, and I long for grass. 'Tis so, I am an ass; else it could never be, But I should know her as well as she knows me. Adr. Come, come, no longer will I be a fool, To put the finger in the eye and weep, Whilst man, and master, laugh my woes to scorn. Come, sir, to dinner; Dromio, keep the gate; Husband, I'll dine above with you to-day, And shrieve you of a thousand idle pranks: Shave, sir, I ask you for your master, Say, he dines forth, and let no creature enter. Cune, sister:—Dromio, play the porter well. Ant. S. Am I in earth, in heaven, or in hell! Sleeping office and my name! Known unto these, and to myself disguised! I'll say as they say, and persevere so, And in this mist at all adventures go. Dro. S. Master, shall I be porter at the gate? Adr. Ay: and let none enter, lest I break your pate. Luc. Come, come, Antiphonal, we dine too late. [Exit.]

ACT III.

SCENE I.—The same.

Enter Antiphonol of Ephesos, Dromio of Ephesos, Angelko, and Balthazar.

Ant. E. Good signior Angelo, you must excuse us all. My wife is shrewish, when I keep not hours: Say, that I linger'd with you at your shop, To see the making of her carket; And that to-morrow you will bring it home. But here she is, Dromio, that would face me down, He met me on the mart; and that I beat him, And charged him with a thousand marks in gold, And that I did deny my wife and house:— Thou drunkard, thou, what dost thou mean by this? Dro. E. Say what you will, sir, but I know what I know. That you beat me at the mart, I have your hand to show: If the skin were parchment, and the blows you gave were ink, Your own handwriting would tell you what I think. Ant. E. I think, thou art an ass. Dro. E. Marry, so it doth appear By the wrongs I suffer, and the blows I bear. I should kick, being kick'd; and, being at that rate, You would keep from my heels; and beware of an ass. Ant. E. You are sad, signior Balthazar: Pray God, our dear, May answer your good will, and your good welcome here. Bal. I hold you dainties cheap, sir, and your welcome dear. Ant. E. 0, signior Balthazar, either at flesh or fish, A table full of welcomes makes scarce one dainty dish. Bal. Good meat, sir, is common; that every churl affords. Ant. E. And welcome more common; for that's its kind and But words. Bal. Small cheer and great welcome, makes a merry feast. Ant. E. Ay, to a niggardly host, and more sparing guest; But though my cates be mean, take them in good part; Better cheer may you have, but not with better heart. But, soft; my door is lock'd: Go bid them let us in. *Unfruitful, barren. A necklace string with pearls. *Dishes of meat.

Dro. E. Maud, Bridget, Marian, Cicely, Gillian, Jen! Dro. S. [Within.] Mone, a mall-horse, capon, coxcomb, idiot, patch. Either get these from the door, or sit down at the hatch, Dost thou conjure for wenches, that thou callest for such store. When one is one too many! Go, get thee from the door. Dro. E. What patch is made our porter! My master slays in the street. Dro. S. Let him walk from whence he came, lest he catch cold on's feet. Ant. E. Who talks within there? ho, open the door. Ant. S. Right, sir, I'll tell you when, an you'll tell me wherefore! Ant. E. Wherefore, for my dinner; I have not dined to-day. Dro. S. Nor to-day here you must not; come again when you may. Ant. E. What art thou, that keep'st me out from the house I love? Ant. S. The porter for this time, sir, and my name is Dromio. Ant. E. O vilain, thou hast stol'n both mine own and my name is. The one we got me cruel, the other nickle blame. If thou hast been Dromio to-day in my place, Thou wouldst have changed thy face for a name, or stand for an ass. Luc. [Within.] What a coils is there? Dromio, who are those at the gate? Dro. E. Let thy master in, Luc. Luc. Faith, no; he comes too late; And so tell your master. Dro. E. O Lord, I must laugh: Have at you with a proverb:—Shall I set in my set. Luc. Have at you with another: that's,—When can you tell! Dro. S. If thy name be call'd Luc, Luc, thou hast answer'd him well. Ant. E. Do you hear, you ninion? you'll let us in? I hope! Luc. I thought to have ask'd you. Dro. S. And you said, no. Dro. E. So, come, help; well struck; there was blow for blow. Ant. E. Thou baggage, let me in. 1 Hear thy confusion. 2 Blackhead. 3 Foo. 4 I own, am owner of. 5 Buttle, tumult.
Luce. Can you tell for whose sake?

Dro. E. Master, knock the door hard.

Luce. What needs all that, and a pair of stocks

And many boys.

Ant. E. You'll cry for this, minion, if I heat

The door down.

Luce. [With a] Who is that at the door, that keeps

All this noise?

Dro. S. By my troth, your town is troubled with Much noise.

Ant. E. Are you there, wife? you might have Come before.

Ayr. Your wife, sir knife; go, get you from Here to the door; I have come to no such Ball. In debating which was best, we shall part

With neither.

Dro. E. They stand at the door, master; bid

Them welcome hither.

Ant. E. There is something in the wind, that we Cannot get in.

Dro. E. You would say so, master, if your garment were too loose.

Your cake here is warm within; you stand here in the cold:

It would make a man mad as a buck, to be so bought upon this.

Ant. E. Go, fetch me something, I'll break ope

the gate.

Dro. S. Break any breaking here, and I'll break the other's gate.

Dro. E. A man may break a word with you, sir:

And words are but wind.

Ay, and break it in your face, so he break it not away.

Dro. S. It seems, thou wastest breaking: Out upon thee, hind!

Dro. E. Here's too much, out upon thee! I pray

you,

Dro. S. Ay, when fowls have no feathers, and fish have no fin.

Ant. E. Well, I'll break in: Go, borrow me a crown.

Dro. E. A crown without a feather; master, mean you so?

For a hat without a fin, there's a fowl without a feather.

If a crow help us in, sirrah, we'll pluck a crow together.

Ant. E. Go, get thee gone, fetch me an iron crow.

Bat. Have patience, sir; O, let it not be so;

Herein you war against your reputation,

And draw within the compass of suspect

The unwatched hand of your wife.

Once, this,—Your long experience of her wisdom,

Her sober virtue, years, and modesty,

Plead on her part some cause to you unknown;

And doubt not, sir, but she will well excuse

Why at this time the doors are made against you.

Be roused by me; depart in patience,

And let us to the Tiger all to dinner;

And, about evening, come yourself alone,

To know the reason of this strange restraint.

If by strong hand you offer to break in,

Now in the stirring passage of the day,

A vulgar comment will be made on it;

And that supposed by the common rout

Against your yet ungauged estimation,

That may with foul intrusion enter in,

And dwell upon your grave: when you are dead:

For slander lives upon succession;

For ever hons'ld, where it once gets possession.

Ant. E. You have prevailed; I will depart in quiet,

And, in despite of note, mean to be merry.

I know a wench of excellent discourse,—

Pretty and witty; wild, and yet too gentle:—

There will we dine: this woman that I mean,

My own, my own, that I even, and my heart's

Hath oftentimes upbraided me withal;

To her will we to dinner.—Get you home,

And fetch the chain; by this I know, 'tis made:

Break it, I pray; it is a hardship.

For there's the house: that chain will I bestow

(Beat it for nothing but to spite my wife)

*Take part.  i. e. Made fast.  *By this time.

Upon mine hostess there: good sir, make haste:

Since mine own doors refuse to entertain me,
'I'll knock elsewhere, to see if they'll disdain me.

Ant. E. Do so; this jest shall cost me some expense.

SCENE II.—The same.

Enter Luciana, and Antipholus of Syracuse.

Luc. And may it be that you have quite forgot

A husband's office! Shall, Antipholus, hate.
Even in the spring of love, thy love—spring rot!

Shall love, in building, grow so ruined?

If thou didst weal my sister for her wealth,

Then, for her wealth's sake, use her with more kindness:

Or if you like elsewhere, do it by stealth;

'Tis double wrong, to double with evil words:

Shall I not my sister read it in your eye;

Be not thy tongue thy own shame sorator;

Look sweet, speak fair, become disloyalty;

Apparel like the virtue's harbinger;

Bear a fair presence, though your heart be tainted;

Teach sin the carriage of a holy saint;

Be secret-lace: What need she be acquainted?

What should she know of his own motions?

'Tis double wrong, to truant with your bed,

And let her read it with thy looks at board:

Shame hath a bastard fame, well managed;

He deeds were his, no Adam's, no else's sold.

Alas, poor women! make us but believe,

Being compact of credit, that you love us;

Though others have the arm, show us the sleeve,

We in your nudity turn, and you may move us;

Then, gentle brother, get you in again:

Comfort my sister, cheer her, call her wife;

'Tis holy sport to be a little vain;

When the sweet breast of a flattery conquerors strives.

Ant. S. Sweet mistress, (what your name is else,

I know not,

Nor by what wonder you do hit on mine;

Less, in the light of knowledge, and your grace, you show not,

Than our earth's wonder; more than earth divine.

Teach me, dear creature, how to think and speak;

Lay open to my earthy gross correct,

Smother'd in errors, fledge, shallow, weak,

The folded meaning of your words deceit.

Against my soul's pure truth why labor you,

To make it wander in an unknown path?

Are you a god! would you create me new?

Transform me, then, and to your power I'll yield,

But if that shall be known, I'll know nothing.

Your weeping sister is no wise of mine,

Nor to her bed no homage do I owe

Far more, far more, to you do I decline.

You, train me, wear me out, and yet may

Abide

To drown me in thy sister's flood of tears;

Sing, sire, for thyself, and I will dote;

Spread o'er the silver waves thy golden hair,

And as a bed I'll take thee, and there lie;

And, in that glorious supposition, think

He gains by death, that hath such means to die:—

Let love, being light, be drowned if she sink!

Luc. What, are you mad, that you do reason so?

Ant. S. Not mad, but mated; how, I do not know.

Luc. It is a fault that springeth from your eye.

Ant. S. For gazes on your beams, fair sun, your Fairer, your great.

Luc. Gaze where you should; and that will clear your sight.

Ant. S. As good to wink, sweet love, as look on me.

Luc. Why call you me love? call me my sister so.

Ant. S. Thy sister's sister.

Luc. That's my sister.

Ant. S. No;

It is thyself, mine own self's better part;

Mine eye a clear eye, my dear heart's dear heart;

My food, my fortune, and my sweet hope's aim,

My note even, heaving, and my heaven's claim.

Luc. All this my sister is, or else should be.

Ant. S. Call thyself sister, sweet, for I am thee;

There will I love, and with thee have my life;

To fast my husband yet, nor I no wife;

Give me thy hand.

6 Love springs are young plants or shoots of love.
7 Vain, is light of tongue.
8 Confounded.
Enter, from the house of Antipholus of Ephesus, Dromio of Syracuse.

Ant. S. Why, now how, Dromio? where run'st thou so fast?

Dro. S. Do you know me, sir? am I Dromio? am I your man? am I myself?

Ant. S. Then art Dromio, thou art my art thyself.

Dro. S. I am an ass, I am a woman's man, and besides myself.

Ant. S. What claim lay she to thee?

Dro. S. Mary, sir, such claim as you would lay to your horse; and she would have me as a beast: not that, I being a beast, she would have me; but that she, being a very beastly creature, lays claim to me.

Ant. S. What is she?

Dro. S. A very reverend body; ay, such a one as a man may not speak of, without he say, sir reverence: I have but been lack in the match, and yet she a wondrous fat marriage.

Ant. S. How dost thou mean, a fat marriage?

Dro. S. Mary, sir, she's the kitchen wench, and all grease; and I know not what use to put her to but to make her a lump of her, and run from her by her own light. A warrant in the tailor ruses, and the tailor turns in them, will burn a Poland winter: if she lives till doomsday, she'll burn a week longer than the whole world.

Ant. S. What complication is she of?

Dro. S. Swart? like my shoe, but her face nothing like so clean kept; For why? she sweats, a man may go over shoes in the grime of it.

Ant. S. That's a fault that water will mend.

Dro. S. No, sir, 'tis in grain; Noah's flood could not do it.

Ant. S. What's her name?

Dro. S. Neil, sir:—but her name and three quarters, that is, an ell and three quarters, will not measure her from hip to hip.

Ant. S. Then she bears some breadth?

Dro. S. No longer from head to foot, than from hip to hip: she is spherical, like a globe; I could find out countries in her.

Ant. S. In what part of her body stands Ireland?

Dro. S. Mary, sir, in her buttocks; I found it out by the boots.

Ant. S. Where Scotland?

Dro. S. I found it by the barrenness; hard, in the palm of the hand.

Ant. S. Where France?

Dro. S. In her forehead; arm'd and reverted, making war against her hair.

Ant. S. Where England?

Dro. S. I look'd for the chalky cliffs, but I could find no whitness in them: but I guess it stood in her chin, by the salt scum that run between France and it.

Ant. S. Where Spain?

Dro. S. Faith, I saw it not; but I felt it, hot in her breath.

Ant. S. Where America, the Indies!

Dro. S. O, sir, upon her nose, all o'er embolish'd with rubies, carbuncles, sapphires, declinging their rich aspect to the hot breath of Spain; who sent whole armadas of carracks to be laden at her nose.

Ant. S. Where stood Belga, the Netherlands?

Dro. S. O, sir, I did not look so low. To conclude, sir, Frank, Dronin, Dromio, are carthart to me; call'd me Dromio; swore, I was assured to her; told me what privy marks I had about me, as the mark of my shoulder, the mole in my neck, the wart on my left arm, that I, vexed, ran from her as a witch: and, I think, if my breast had not been made of faith, and my heart of steel, she had transfor'm'd me to a curtail-dog, and made me turn the whale's mouth.

Ant. S. Go, lie thee presently, post to the road; And if the wind blow any way from the shore, I will not harbor in this town tonight.

Dro. S. As from a bear a man would run for life. So fly by her that would be my wife. [Exit.

Ant. S. There's none but witches do inhabit here; And therefore 'tis high time that we henceforth. She, that doth call me husband, even my soul Dost for a wife abhor: but her fair sister, Possess'd with such a gentle sovereign grace, If such a witch as witchery, and discourse, Hath almost made me traitor to myself: But lest myself be guilty to self-wrong, I'll stop mine ears against the mermaid's song.

Enter Angelo.

Ang. Master Antipholus.

Ant. S. Ay, that's my name.

Ang. I know it well, sir; lo, here is the chain; I thought to have taken you at the Porcupine: The chain unfinished'd made me stay thus long.

Ant. S. What is your will that I shall do with this chain?

Ang. What please yourself, sir; I have made it for you.

Ant. S. Made it for me, sir! I bespeak it not.

Ang. Not once, nor twice, but twenty times you have had it.

Go home with it, and please your wife within; And soon at supper-time, I'll visit you.

And then receive my money for the chain.

Ant. S. Pray you, sir, receive the money, now; For fear you ne'er see chain, nor money more.

Ang. You are a merry man, sir; fare you well.

[Exit.

Ant. S. What I should think of this, I cannot tell; But this I think, there's no man is so vain That we will make present satisfaction, I see, a man here needs not live by shifts, When in the streets he meets such golden gifts. I'll to the mart, and there for Dromio say; If any ship put out, then straight away.

[Exit.

ACT IV.

SCENE 1. The same.

Enter a Merchant, Angelo, and an Officer.

Mer. You know, sir, since I venture the sum is due, And since I have not much importuned you; Nor now I had not, but that I am bound To Persia, and want guides for my voyage: Therefore make present satisfaction, Or I'll attach you by this officer.

Ang. Even just the sum, that I do owe to you, Is growing to me by Antipholus; And in the instant that I met with you, He had of me a chain; at five o'clock, I shall receive the money for the same:

Please you walk with me down to his house, I will discharge my bond, and thank you too.

*Swartly.

*Accusing.

Enter Antipholus of Ephesus, and Dromio of Ephesus.

Off. That labor may you save; see where he comes.

Ant E. While I go to the goldsmith's house, go thou And buy the rope's end; that will I bestow Among my wife and her confidantes. For locking me out of my doors by— But soft, I see the goldsmith: get thee gone; Buy this rope, and bring it home to me.

Dro. E. I buy a thousand pounds a year? I buy a rope?

[Exit Dro. E.

Ant. E. Amian is well holp up; that trusts to you; I promis'd your presence, and the chain;

But neither chain, nor goldsmith, came to me; Belike, thou didst love our love would last too long, If it were chain'd together; and therefore came not.

Ang. Saving your merry humor, here's the note, How much your chain weighs to the utmost carat; Two hundred and ninety of the gold, and chargeful fashion; Which doth amount to three odd ducats more Than I stand debted to this gentleman; I pray you, see him presently discharged.

For he's bound to sea, and stays but for it.

Ant. E. I am not furnish'd with the present money; Besides, I have some business in the town:
Good signor, take the stranger to my house, And with you take the chain, and bid my wife Disburse the sum on the receipt thereof; Perlook! I will be there as soon as you.

Ang. Then wilt thou bring the chain to her yourself?

Ant. E. No; bear it with you, lest I come not time enough.

Ang. Well, sir, I will: Have you the chain about you?

Ant. E. An if I have not, sir, I hope you have; Or else you may return without your money.

Ang. Nay, come, I pray you, sir, give me the chain;
Both wind and tide stays for this gentleman, And what you said, sir, I have him here too long.

Ant. E. Good lord, you use this dalliance, to excuse Your breach of promise to the Portucine: I should have chid you for not bringing it, But, like a shrew, you first began to brawl.

Mer. The hour steals on; I pray you, sir, despatch.

Ant. E. You hear, how he importunes me; the chain—

Ant. E. Why, give it to my wife, and fetch your money.

Ang. Come, come, you know, I gave it you even now;
Either send the chain, or send me some token.

Ant. E. Fye! how you run this humor out of breath:
Come, where's the chain! I pray you let me see it.

Mer. My business cannot brook this dalliance; Good sir, say, what you'll answer me or no;
If not, I'll give him to the officer.

Ant. E. I answer you! What should I answer you?

Ang. The money that you owe me for the chain—

Ant. E. I owe you none, till I receive the chain.

Ang. You know, I gave it you half an hour since.

Ant. E. If you gave me none; you wrong me much to say so.

Ang. You wrong me more, sir, in denying it:
Consider, how it stands upon my credit.

Mer. Well, officer, arrest him at my suit.

Off. I do; and charge you in the duke's name, to obey me.

Ang. This touches me in reputation:— Either consent to pay this sum for me, Or I attach you by this officer.

Ant. E. Consent to pay thee that I never had! Arrest me, foolish fellow, if thou dar'st.

Ang. He is thy foe; arrest him; officer. I would not spare my brother in this case, If he should scorn me so apparently.

Off. I do arrest you, sir; you hear the suit.

Ant. E. I do obey thee, till I give thee bail— But, sirrah, you shall buy this sport as dear As all the metal in your shop will answer.

Ang. Sir, sir, I shall have law in Ephesus, To your notorious shame, I doubt it not.

Enter Daumio of Syracuse.

Dro. S. Master, there is a bark of Epipdamnum, That stays but till her owner comes aboard. And then, sir, bears away; our fraughtage, sir, Have convey'd aboard; and I have bought The wool, the balsamus, and aquavitae. The ship is in her trim; the merry wind Blows fair from land: they stay for nought at all, But for their owner, master, and yourself.

Ant. E. Have none! a madman! Why, then perceivest sheep. What ship of Epipdamnum stays for me?

Dro. S. A ship you sent me to, to hire wallage:
Ant. E. Thou drunken slave, I sent thee for a rope; And told thee to what purpose and what end.

Dro. S. You sent me, sir, for a rope's end as soon: You sent me to the bay, sir, for a barrel.

Ant. E. I will debate this matter at more leisure, And teach your ears to listen with more heed. To Adriana, villain, that is whom I cited, Give her this key, and tell her, in the desk That's cover'd o'er with Turkish tapestry, There is a purse of ducats; let her send it; Tell her, I am arrested in the street; And that shall bate me: thee, slave, be gone.

Officer, on prison till it come.

[Exeunt Merc., Ang., Officer, and ANT. E.]

Dro. S. She is too big, I hope, for me to compass; Thither I must, although against my will, For servants must their master's minds fulfill.

[Exit.

SCENE II.—The same.

Enter Adriana and Luciana.

Luc. Ah, Luciana, did he tempt thee so?

Merc. Might'st thou perceive austerely in his eye That he did smile in earnest, jest or no jest? Look'd he red, or pale; sad or merry? What observations mad'st thou in this case, Of his heart's meteor's lifting in his face?

Luc. First, I knew not, I knew him not in right. Achr. He meant, he did me none; the more my spite.

Luc. Then I knew he, that he was a stranger here. And true he swore, though yet forsworn he were.

Luc. Then pleaded I for you.

Luc. And what said he?

Luc. That love I begg'd for, you begg'd of me. Luc. With what persuasion did he tempt thy love? Luc. With words that in an honest suit might move.

First he did praise my beauty; then, my speech.

Luc. Didst speak him fair?

Luc. Have patience, I beseech. Luc. I cannot, nor will I not hold me still; My tongue, though not my heart, shall have his will. He is deformed, crooked, old, and sere; Ill-fac'd, worse-badged, shapeless everywhere: Venious, ungentle, foolish, blunt, unkind; Stigmatical in making, worse in mind.

Luc. Who would be jealous then of such a one? No evil lost is wait'd when it is gone.

Luc. And I doubt I think him better than I say.

And yet would herein others' eyes were worse: Far from her nest the lapwing cries awry; My heart prays for him, though my tongue doth curse.

Enter Daumio of Syracuse.

Dro. S. Here, go; the desk, the purse; sweet now, make haste. Luc. How hast thou lost thy breath?

Dro. S. By running fast.

Luc. Where is thy master, Droimio? is he well? Dro. S. No, he's in Tartar limbo, worse than hell! A devil in his garments, he pleads without One, whose hard heart is button'd up with steel; A fiend, a fairy, pitiless and rough; A wolf, who worse were, a fellow in all but a back-fist, a shoulder-clapper, one that contemneth The passages of alleys, creeks, and narrow lanes; A bound that runs counter, and yet draws dry-foot with.

One that, before the judgment, carries poor souls to hell;

Luc. Why, man, what is the matter?

Dro. S. I do not know the matter: he is rested on the case.

1 Carriage.
2 An allusion to the redness of the northern lights likened to the appearance of arms.  3 Dry, withered.
4 Marked by nature with deformity.
5 Who ereth most where her nest is not.
6 The officers in those days were clad in buff, which is also a past expression for a man's skin.
7 Hell was the cant term for prison.
COMEDY OF ERRORS. Act IV.

Adr. What is he arrested? tell me, at whose suit,
  Dro. S. I know not at whose suit he is arrested, well;
  But he's in a suit of buff, which 'rested him, that can I tell?
  Will you send him, mistress, redemption, the money in the desk?
Adr. Go fetch it, sister.—This I wonder at.
  [Eliot Luciana.
That he, unknown to me, should be in debt:
Tell me, was he arrested on a band?
Dro. S. Not on a band, but on a stronger thing; chain, a chain: do you not hear it ring?
Adr. What, the chain?
Dro. S. No, no, the bell: 'tis time that I were gone.
  It was two ere I left him, and now the clock strikes one.
Adr. The hours come back! that did I never hear.
Dro. S. O yes, if any hour meet a sergeant,
  Am I back for very fear.
Adr. As if time were in debt! how fondly dost thou reason?
Dro. S. Time is a very bankrupt, and owes more than he is worth to season.
  Nay, he's a thief too: Have you not heard men say,
  That time comes stealing on by night and day!
  If he be in debt, and th'et, and a sergeant in the way,
  Hath he not reason to turn back an hour in a day?

Enter Luciana.

Adr. Go, Dromio; there's the money, hear it straight;
  And bring thy master home immediately.—
  Come, sister: I am press'd down with concert;
  Concert my comfort, and my injury. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The same.

Enter Antipholus of Syracuse.

Ant. S. There's not a man I meet, but doth salute me as if I were their well-acquainted friend;
  And every one doth call me by my name,
  Some tender money to me, some invite me;
  Some other give me thanks for kindnesses;
  Some offer me commodities to buy:
  Even now a tailor call'd me in his shop,
  And show'd me silks that he had bought for me,
  And, therewithal, took measure of my body.
  Sure, these are but imaginary wiles,
  And Lapland sorcerers inhabit here.

Enter Dromio of Syracuse.

Dro. S. Master, here's the gold you sent me for:
  What, have you got the picture of old Adam agreed to?
Ant. S. What gold is this? what Adam dost thou mean?
Dro. S. Not that Adam, that kept the paradise, but that Adam, that keeps the prison: he that goes in the calf's skin that was kill'd for the prodigal;
  he that came behind you, sir, like an evil angel,
  and bid you forsake your liberty.
Ant. S. I understand thee not.
Dro. S. No? why, 's is plain case: he that went like a base-vill, in a case of leather; the man, sir, that, when gentlemen are tired, gives them a fish,
  and rests them; he, sir, that takes pity on decayed men, and gives them suits of durance; he that sets up his rest to do more exploits with his mace, than move like.
Ant. S. What! thou mean'st an officer?
Dro. S. Ay, sir, the sergeant of the band; he, that brings any man to answer it, that breaks his head, and 'tis a case that thanks a man applies going to bed, and says, God give you good rest!
Ant. S. Well, sir, there rest in your footloose.
  Is there any ship puts forth to-night? may we be gone?
Dro. S. Why, sir, I brought you word an hour since, that the bark Expedition put forth to-night, and then were you hindered by the sergeant, to tarry for you. Delay: Here are the angels, that you sent for, to deliver you.
Ant. S. The folk is distract, and so am I;
  And here we wander in illusions; some blessed power deliver us from hence!

Enter a Counsellor.

Coun. Well met, well met, master Antipholus.
  I see, sir, you have found the goldsmith now:
  Is that the chain, you promised me to-day?
Ant. S. Saturn, avoid! I charge thee, tempt me
  not!
Dro. S. Master, is this mistress Saturn?
Ant. S. It is the devil.
Dro. S. Nay, she is worse, she is the devil's dam;
  and here she comes in the habit of a light wench;
  and thereof comes, that the wenches say, God dansom me, that's as much as to say, God make me a light wench. It is written, they appear to men and women. But the heaven of which I speak is the light is an effect of fire, and fire will burn; ergo, light wenches will burn; Come not near her.
Coun. Your man and you are marvellous merry,
  Will you go with me? We'll mend our dinner here.
Dro. S. Master, if you do expect spoon-meat, bespeak a long spoon.
Ant. S. Why, Dromio?
Dro. S. Master, I have must a long spoon, that most eat with the devil.
Ant. S. Avoid them, friend! what tell'st thou me not? Thou art, as you are all, a sorceress:
  I conjure thee to leave me, and he gone.
Coun. Give not the counter the ring of mine you eat at dinner,
  Or, for my diamond, the chain you promis'd it:
  And I'll be gone, sir, and not trouble you.
Dro. S. Some devils ask but the parted of one's mace,
  A rush, a hair, a drop of blood, a pin,
  A nut, a cherry-stone: but she, more covetous,
  Would have a chain.
  Master, he wise; and if you give it her,
  I he devil will shake her chain, and inracht us with it.
Coun. I pray you, sir, my ring, or else the chain;
  I hope, you do not mean to cheat me so.
Ant. S. Avant, thou witch! Come, Dromio, let us go.
Dro. S. Fly pride, says the peacock; Mistress, that you know. [Exeunt Ant. S. and Dro. S.
Coun. Now, out of doubt, Antipholus is mad,
  Else would he never so demean himself:
  A maz he hath of nine worth forty ducats;
  And for the same he promised me a chain! for both one, and other, he denes me now.
  The reason that I gather he is mad,
  (besides this present instance of his rage)
  Is a mad tale, he tells to-day at dinner.
  Of his own doors being shut against his entrance.
  Relike, his wife, acquainted with his fits,
  On purpose shut the doors against his way.
  My wife, he said, had better stay home to his house,
  And tell his wife, that, being a lunatic,
  He rush'd into my house, and took perform
  My ring away: This course I fittest choose;
  For forty ducats is too much to lose. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—The same.

Enter Antipholus of Ephesus, and an officer.

Ant. E. Fear me not, man, I will not break away;
  I'll give thee, ere I leave thee, so much money
  To warrant thee, as I am rested for.
  My wife is in a wayward mood to-day:
  And will not lightly trust the messenger,
  That I should be attach'd in Ephesus:
  I tell you, twill sound harshly in her ears.—
  Enter Dromio of Ephesus, with a rope's end.
Here comes my man: I think, he brings the money
  Now, sir? have you that I sent you for?
Dro. E. Here's that, I warrant you, will pay them all.
Ant. E. But where's the money?
Dro. E. Why, sir, I gave the money for the rope.
Ant. E. Five hundred ducats, villain, for a rope?
  I'll serve you, sir, five hundred at the rate.
Ant. E. To what end did I bid thee hee thine home?
Dro. E. To a rope's end, sir; and to that end and I return'd.
Ant. E. And to that end, sir, I will welcome you [Beat him.

[Correct them all.]
Enter Adriana, Luciana, and the Courtezean, with Pinch, and others.

Adr. E. Come, go along; my wife is coming yonder.

Dro. E. Mistress, repose—farm your respect our end; or rather the prophecy, like the parrot, Beware the ropes' end.

Adr. E. Wilt thou still talk? [Beats him. Cour. How say you now? is not your husband mad?

Adr. E. His incivility comes no less—

Good doctor Pinch, you are a conjurer; Establish him in his true sense again, And I will please you what you will demand.

Luc. Ah, how busy and how sharp he looks! Cour. Mark, how he trembles in his ecstasy!

Pinch. Give me your hand, and let me feel your pulse.

Adr. E. There is my hand, and let it feel your ear.

Pinch. I charge thee, Satan, bound's within this man, To yield possession to my holy prayers,
And to thy state of darkness let thee straight; I conjure thee by all the saints in heaven.

Adr. E. Peace, dotting wizard, peace; I am not mad.

Luc. Adr. O, that thou werst not, poor distressed soul! Adr. E. You munion, you, are these your customers? Did this companion with a saffron face Reveal and least at my house to-day, Whilst upon me the guilty doors were shut, And I denied to enter in my house!

Adr. O, husband, God doth know, you dined at home, Where you had remained until this time, Free from these slanderers, and this open shame!

Adr. E. I dined at home! Thou, villain, what sayst thou?

Dro. E. Sir, sooth to say, you did not dine at home.

Adr. E. Were not my doors lock'd up, and I shut out?

Dro. Peedy, your doors were lock'd, and you shut out.

Adr. E. And did not she herself revile me there?

Dro. E. Sans fable she herself reviled you there.

Adr. E. Did not her kitchen-maid rain, launt, and scorn me?

Dro. E. Certes, she did; the kitchen-wench placed.

Adr. E. And did not I in rage depart from thence?

Dro. E. In verity you did;—my bones bear witness, That since have felt the vigor of his rage.

Adr. Is't good to sooth him in these contrivances?

Pinch. It is no shame; the fellowship finds his vein, And, yielding to him, humors his company.

Dro. E. Thou hast suborn'd the goldsmith to arrest me.

Adr. Mis, I sent you money to redeem you, By Dromio here, who came in haste for it.

A corruption of the French oath—parjurer. Without a stake. *Certainly.

Dro. E. Money by me! heart and good-will you might, But, surely, master not a ray of money.

Adr. E. What's not to do to her for a purse of ducats?

Adr. He came to me, and I deliver'd it.

Luc. And I am witness with her, that she did.

Dro. E. Old and the rope-maker, bear me witness, That I was sent for nothing but a rope!

Pinch. Mistress, both man and master is possessed.

I know it by their pale and deadly looks: They must be bound and laid in some dark room.

Adr. E. Here, where didst thou lock me forth to-day? And why dost thou deny the bag of gold?

Adr. I did not, gentle husband, lock thee forth.

Dro. E. With gentle master, I receiv'd no gold; But I confess, sir, that we were lock'd out.

Adr. Dissembling villain, thou speak'st false in both.

Adr. E. Dissembling harlot, thou art false in all; And art confederate with a dammed pack, To make a false and abject scorn of me; But with these nails I'll pluck out these false eyes, That would behold in me this shamefull sport.

[Pinch and his Assistants bind Adr. E. and Dro. E.

Adr. O, bind him, bind him, let him not come near me.

Pinch. More company!—the fiend is strong within him.

Luc. Ah me, poor man, how pale and wan he looks!

Adr. E. What, will you murder me? Thou gaoler, thou, I am thy prisoner; wilt thou suffer them To make a rescue!

Off. Masters, let him go;

He is my prisoner, and you shall not have him.

Pinch. Go, bind this man, for he is frantic too!

Adr. What wilt thou do with thou preventest me?

Hast thou delight to see a wretched man Do outrage and displeasure to himself?

Off. He is my prisoner; if I let him go,

The debt he owes, will be required of me.

Adr. I will discharge thee, ere I go from thee:

Bear me forthwith unto his creditor, And knowing how the debt grows, I will pay it.

Good master doctor, see him safe convey'd Home to my house,—o most unhappy day!

Adr. E. o most unhappy strumpet!

Dro. E. Master, I am here entered in bond for you.

Adr. E. Out on thee, villain! wherefore dost thou meddle me?

Dro. E. Will you be bound for nothing? be mad, Good master; cry, the devil.

Luc. Good help, poor souls, how idly do they talk!

Adr. Go, bear him hence;—Sister, go you with me.

[Exeunt Pinch and Assistants, with Adr. E. and Dro. E.

Say now, whose such as he arrested at!

Off. One Angelo, a goldsmith; Do you know him?

Adr. I know the man: What is the sum he owes? Off. Two hundred ducats.

Says, how grows it due?

Off. Due for a chain your husband had of him.

Adr. He did bespeak a chain for me, but had it not.

Cour. When as your husband, all in a rage, to-day Came to my house, and took away my ring, (The ring I saw upon his finger now)

Strode after, did I meet him with a chain.

Adr. It may be so, but I did never see it:—Come, gaoler, bring me where the goldsmith is, I long to know the truth hereof at large.

Enter Antipholus of Syracuse, with his rapier drawn, and Dromio of Syracuse,

Luc. God, for thy mercy! they are loose again.

Adr. And come with naked swords; let's call more help, To have them bound again.
Act V.

Scene I.—The same.

Enter Merchant and Angelo.

Ang. I am sorry, sir, that I have hinder'd you; but, I protest, he had the chain of me. Though most dishonestly he doth deny it.

Mer. How is the man esteem'd here in the city?

Ang. Of very revere reputation, sir, of credit infinite, highly beloved.

Mer. It is said to bear, that lives here in the city; his word might bear my weight at any time.

Ang. Speak softly; yonder, as I think, he walks.

Enter Antipholus, and Dromio of Syracuse.

Ang. 'Tis so; and that self chain about his neck, Which if he forsook, most monstrously, to have. Good sir, draw near to me, I'll speak to him. Signor Antipholus, I wonder much That you would put me to this shame and trouble; And not without some scandal to yourself, With circumstance, and oath, so to deny This chain, which now you wear so openly: Besides the charge, the shame, imprisonment, You have done wrong to this my honest friend. Who, since prevailing on our controversy, Had hosted sail, and put to sea to-day: This chain you had of me, can you deny it?

Mer. Yes, that you did, sir; and forswore too.

Ang. S. Who heard me to deny it, or forswear it?

Mer. These ears of mine, thou knowest, did hear these: I've on thee, watch! 'Tis pity, that thou liv'st!

To walk where any honest men resort.

Ang. S. Thou art a villain, to impeach me thus: I'll prove the man honor, and mine honesty.

Against thee presently, if thou dost't stand.

Mer. I dare, and do defy thee for a villain. [They draw.]

Enter Adriana, Luciana, Courtesan, and others.

Adb. Hoh! hurt him not, for God's sake; he is some get within him, take his sword away:

Find Dromio too, and bear them to my house.

Bro. S. Run, master, run; for God's sake, take a house.

This is some priory; —In, or we are spoil'd.

[Exeunt Ant. S. and Dru. S. to the Priory.]

Enter the Abbes.

Abb. Be quiet, people; Wherefore throw you hitter?

Abb. To fetch my poor distracted husband hence: Let us come in, that we may bind him fast, And bear him home for his recovery.

Adb. I knew, he was not in his perfect wits.

Mer. I am sorry now, that I did draw on him.

Abb. How long hath this possession held the man?

Adb. Since one week, he hath been heavy, sour, sad, And much, much different from the man he was: But till this afternoon, his passion Never brake into extremity of race.

Abb. But he not lost much wealth by wreck at sea?

Buried some dear friend? Hath not else his eye Stray'd his affection in unlawful love?

Adb. Prevailing much in youthful men.

Abb. Who give their eyes the liberty of gazng.

Which of these sorrows is he subject to?

Adb. To none, except the last;

Namely, some love, that drew him oft from home.

Abb. You should for that have reprehended him.

Abb. Why, so I did.

Abb. Ay, but not rough enough.

*Ä. Close, grapple with him. *Baggage.
Scene I.

COMEDY OF ERRORS.

Against the laws and statutes of this town,
Behaved publicly for his offence.

Aeg. See, where they come; we will behold his death.

Luc. I will lead to the duke, before he pass the abbey.

Enter Duke attended; Execrable bare-headed; with the Headsman and other Officers.

Duke. Yet once again proclaim it publicly,
If any friend will pay the sum for him,
He shall not die, so much we tender him.

Aeg. Peace, most reverend duke, against the abbess!

Duke. She is a virtuous and a reverend lady;
It cannot be, that she hath done thee wrong.

Aeg. May it please your grace, Antipholus, my lord,
Whom I made lord of me and all I had,
At your important letters,—this ill day
A most outrageous fit of madness seiz'd him;
That desperately he hurried through the street,
(With him his bondman, all as mad as he,)
Dole dispicuous to the citizens
By rushing in their houses, beating hence
Rings, jewels, any thing his rage did like.
Once did I get him bound, and sent him home,
Whilst to take orders for the wrongs I went,
That the bailiffs and their purse pursued.
Anon, I wot not by what strong escape.
He broke from those that had the guard of him;
And, with his mad attendant and himself,
Each to their wit, with every sword,
Met us again, and, madly bent on us,
Chased us away; till raising of more aid.
We came again to catch them: then they fled
Into this abbey; where we pursued them;
And here the abbess shuts the gates on us,
And will not suffer us to fetch him out,
Nor send him forth, that we may bear him hence;
Therefore, most gracious duke, with the command,
Let him be brought forth, and borne hence for help.

Duke. Long since, thy husband serv'd me in my wars;
And I to thee engaged a prince's word,
When thou didst make him master of thy bed,
To do him all the grace and good I could,—
Get thee of thee, knock at the abbey-gate;
And bid the lady abbess come to me;
I will determine this before I str.

Enter a Servant.

Serr. 0 mistress, mistress, shift and save yourself!
My master and his man are both brook loose,
That he makes and all his men have committed,
Whose head they have sing'd off with brands of fire;
And ever as it blazed, they threw him Great pails of puddled mire to quench the hair;
My master pracebooks patience to him, while
His man with scissors nick's him like a fool;
And, sure, unless you send some present help,
Before the damsel, in the which they will kill the chained.
Aeg. Peace, fool, thy master and his man are here;
And that is false thou dost report to us.
Serr. Mistress, upon my life, I tell you true;
I have not breathed almost since I did see it.
He cries for you, and vows, if he can take you,
To score your face, and to disfigure you.

Duke. Hark, hark, I hear him, mistress; fly, begone.

Duke. Come, stand by me, fear nothing: Guard with halberds, Aeg. My lord, it is my husband! Witness you,

That he is borne out invisible:
Even now we housed him in the abbey here;
And now he's there, past thought of human reason.

Enter Antipholus and Dromio of Ephesus.

Ant. E. Justice, most gracious duke, oh, grant
We present justice?

Even for the service that long since I did thee,
When I besrid thee, in the wars, and took Dreadful breaches; And I did make thee mad;
That then I lost for thee, now grant me justice.

Ege. Unless he fear death doth make me dute,
I see my son Antipholus, and Dromio.

Ant. E. Justice, sweet prince, against that woman there.
Whom thou hast gav'st to me to be my wife;
That hath abused and dishonor'd me

Aeg. Important, &c. To take measures. &c. Know
&c. Successively, one after another.

Even in the strength and height of injury!
Beyond imagination is the wrong,
That she this day hath shamelessly thrown on me.

Duke. Why dost thou how, and thou shalt find me just.

Ant. E. This day, great duke, she shut the doors
Upon me,

While she with Erabol's feast'd in my house.

Duke. This grievous fault: Say, woman, didst thou so?

Aeg. No, my good lord,—myself, and my sister,

That, as this is false, he burdens me withal!

Luc. Nor'c may I look on day, nor sleep on night,
But she tells you to your highness simple truth!

Ant. E. Of! A most surprised woman. They are in the midst of justice.

In this the madam justly chargeth them.

Ant. E. My liege, I am advised what I say;
Neither disturbed with the effect of wine,
Nor heady-rash, provok'd with raging ire,
Allcit, weyr wrongs might make one wiser mad.

This woman lock'd me out this day from dinner:
That goldsmith there, were he not pack'd with her,
Could witness it; for he was with me then;
Who parted with me to go fetch a chain,
Promising to bring it to the Pertecupine,
And I did done and I die done together.

Our dinner done, and he not coming thither,
I went to seek him: in the street I met him;
And in his company, that gentleman;
There did he with gaiety receive me down,
That I this day of him rec'd the chain,
Which God, he knows, I saw not: for the which,
He did arrest me with an officer,
Did observe and was made seven days home;
For certain ducats: he with none return'd.
Then fairly I bespoke the officer.
To go in person with me to the house,
By the way I met.
My wife, her sister, and a rabble more of vile conspirates; along with them
They brought one Pinch; a hungry, lean-faced within.
A mere anatomy, a mountebank,
A thread-bare juggler, and a fortune-teller;
A needy, hollow-ey'd, sharp-looking wretch,
A living dead man; this pernicious slave,
Sorosoke, took on him as a conjurer;
And gazing in my eyes, feeling my pulse,
And with no face, as 'twere, out-facing me,
Cries out, I was possess'd! Then all tother.
They fall upon me, bound me, bore me thence;
And in a dark and dankish vault at home
There live my brother, both bound together;
Till gnawing with my teeth my bonds in sunder,
I gain'd my freedom, and immediately
Ran hither to your grace; whom I beseech
To give me a sufficient action.
For these deep shame's and great indignities.

Ant. E. My lord, in truth, thus far, I witness with him;
That he did not at home, but was lock'd out.

Duke. But had he such a chain of them, or, no!

Ant. He had, my lord: and when he ran in here,
These people saw the chain about his neck.

Mrs. Drom. I will be sworn, these eyes of mine
Heard you confess you had the chain of him,
After you first forsook it on the mart.
And, hereupon, I drew my sword on you;
And then you did enter into this abbey here.
From whence, I think, you are come by miracle.

Ant. E. I never came within these abbey walls,
Nor ever did thou draw thy sword on me:
Never saw the chain, nor help me here?
And this is false you burden me withal.

Duke. Why, what an intimate impeach is this!

To drive me mad, with lack of Circe's
If here you housed him, here he would have been;
If he were mad, he would not plead so coldly:

You say he dined at home; the goldsmith here
Doth this thing against her; what say you?

Dro. E. Sir, he dined with her there; at the Per-cupine.

Ant. E. He did; and from my finger snatch'd that mace.

Dro. E. Sir, he dined with her there; at the Per-cupine.

Ant. E. Tis true, my liege, this ring I had of her,
Duke. Saw'st thou him enter at the abbey here?

Ant. E. As sure, my liege, as I do see your grace.

* Harlot was a term of reproach applied to cheats among men, as well as to wanters among women.
Duke. Why, this is strange:—Go call the abbess hither;
I think you are all mated, or stark raddad.
[Exit an Attendant.]

Ege. Most mighty duke, vouchsafe me a word;
Haply I see a friend will save my life,
And pay the sum that may rememb're
Ege. Is not your name, sir, called Antipholus?
And is not that your bondman Dromio?
Duke. Within this hour I was his bondman, sir,
But he, I thank him, grew'd in two my cords;
Now am I Dromio, and his man, unbound.
Ege. I am sure, you both of you remember me.
Duke. We do remember, sir; by you;
For lately we were bound, as you are now.
You are not Pinch's patent, are you, sir?
Ege. Why look you strange on me? you know me well.

Ant. E. I never saw you in my life, till now.
Ege. Oh! grief hath changed me since you saw me last;
And careful hours, with Time's deform'd hand
Have written strange defatures in my face:
But tell me yet, dost thou not know my voice?

Ant. E. Neither.

Dro. E. Dromio, not thou?

Ant. E. No, trust me, sir, nor I.

Dro. The, ay, sir; but I am sure I do not; and whatsoever a man denies, you are now bound to believe him.
Ege. Not know my voice! Oh, time's extremity!
Had you not any mark to split from my forelongue, in seven short years, that here my only son
Knows not my feeble key of untaught cares?

Ant. E. No.

Ege. Thou knowst we parted: but, perhaps, my son,
Thou sham'st to acknowledge me in my misery.

Ant. E. The duke, and all that know me in the city,
Can witness with me that it is not so;
I never saw Syracuse in my life.

Duke. I tell thee, gentle sir, twenty years
Have I been patron to Antipholus,
During which time he never saw Syracuse:
I see thy age and dangers make thee dole.

Enter the Abbess, with Antipholus Syracusan, and Dromio Syracuseon.

Abb. Most mighty duke, behold a man much trust in:—All gather to see him.

Duke. I see two husbands, or mine eyes deceive me.

Duke. One of these men is Genius to the other;
And so of these:—Which is the natural man,
And which the spirit? Who dealeth then?

Dro. S. Sir, sir, and Dromio: command him away.

Duke. He, sir, and Dromio; pray let me stay.

Ant. S. Egeon, art thou not I? or else his ghost?

Dro. O, my old master, who hath bound him here?

Abb. Whose bounder him, I will loose his bonds,
And give a husband by his liberty:—
Speak, old Egeon, if thou best the man
That hast a wife once called Emilia.

Duke. If I dream not, thou art Emilia; If I dream, it tells where is that man
That flouted with thee on the fatal raft!

Abb. By men of Epidamnum, he and I,
And thou, Dromio, all were taken up,
But by and by, rude fishermen of Corinth
By force took Dromio and my son from them,
And we left them with those of Epidamnum:
What then became of them I cannot tell;
I, to this fortune that you see me in.

*Alteration of features.

Duke. Why, here begins his morning story right!
These two Antipholus's, these two so like,
And these two Dromios, one in semblance,—
Besides her urging of her woe at once,
These are the parents to these children,
Which accidentally are met together.
Antipholus, thou canst from Corinth first;
Ant. S. Nay, sir, not I: I came from Syracuse.
Duke. Stay, stand apart; I know not which is which.

Ant. E. I came from Corinth, my most gracious
Dro. E. And I with him.

Ant. E. Brought to this town with that most famous warrior
Duke Meliponus, you most renowned uncle.

Abb. Which of you two did dine with me to-day?

Ant. S. I, gentle mistress,

Dro. E. And me not your husband?

Ant. E. No, I say nay to that,

Ant. S. And so do I, yet did she call me so;
And this fair gentlewoman, her sister here,
Did call me brother:—What I told you then,
I hope, I shall have leisure to make good;
If this be not a dream, I see, and hear.

Ant. E. That is the character, sir, which you had of me.

Dro. E. I think it be, sir; I deny it not.

Ant. E. And you, sir, for this chain, arrested me.

Ant. S. I think I did, sir; I deny it not.

Abb. But, as you sent money, sir, to be your bail,
By Dromio; but I think he brought it not.

Dro. E. No, none by me.

Ant. S. This purse of ducats I received from you,
And Dromio man del bring'd them me:—I see,
We still did meet each other's man,
And I was 'tis for him, and he for me,
And therefore these Errors are as true.

Abb. This, sir, the ducats pavan I for my father here.
Duke. It shall not need, thy father hath his life.

Cour. Sir, I must have that diamond from you.

Ant. E. There take it; and much thanks for thy generous.

Abb. Renowned duke, vouchsafe to take the pains
To go with us into the abbey here,
And hear at large how I discovered all our fortunes:
And all that are assembled in this place,
That by this sympathiz'd one day's error
Have suffered wrong; so, keep us company,
And we shall make full satisfaction.

Twenty-five years have I but gone in travail
Of you, my sons; nor, till this present hour,
My heavy burdens are delivered.

The duke, my husband, and my children both,
And you the calendars of their nativity,
Go to a gossip's feast, and go with me.
After so long grief, such mirth.

Duke. I bid all my heart, I'll gossip at this feast.

[Exit Duke, Abbess, Egeon, Courtesan, and Attendants.]

Dro. S. Miser, shall I fetch your stuff from ship-board?

Ant. E. Dromio, what stuff of mine hast thou embark'd?

Dro. S. Your goods that lay at host, sir, in the Centaur.

Ant. S. He speaks to me; I am your master, Dromio.

Come, come, with us: we'll look to that anon:
Embrace thy brother there, rejoice with him.

[Exit Antipholus S. and E. Ann. and Luc.]

Dro. S. There is a fat friend at your master's house.
That kitchen's, for you to show at dinner;
She now shall be my sister, not mine own.

Dro. E. Methinks you are my glass, and not my brother;
I see by you, I am a sweet-faced youth.
Will you walk in to see their gossiping?

Dro. S. Not I, sir; you are my elder.

Dro. E. That's a question: how shall we try it?

Dro. S. We will draw cuts for the senior: till then,
Let us to dinner.

Dro. E. Nay, then thus:—We came into the world, like brother and brother.
And now let's go hand in hand, not one before another.

[Exit.]

The morning story is what Egeon tells the Duke in the first scene of this play.
MACBETH.

PERSONS REPRESENTED.

DUNCAN, King of Scotland.
MALCOLM, } his Son.
DONALBRAIN, } } Generals of the King's Army.
MACBETH, Baquo.
MACDUFF, } Noblemen of Scotland.
JENNOX.
ROUS.
MONTETH.
ANGUS.
CAITHNESS.
FLEANCE, Son to Banquo.
Seward, Earl of Northumberland, General of the English Forces.

SCENE, in the End of the Fourth Act, lies in England; through the rest of the Play, in Scotland; and, chiefly, at Macbeth's Castle.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—An open Place.

Thunder and lightning. Enter three Witches.

1 Witch. When shall we three meet again, In thunder, lightning, or in rain? 2 Witch. When the hurlyburly's done, When the battle's lost and won. 3 Witch. That will be ere the set of sun. 1 Witch. Where the place? 2 Witch. Upon the heath: 3 Witch. There to meet with Macbeth. 1 Witch. I come, Graymalkin! All. Paddock calls—Anon.—

Fair is foul, and foul is fair; Hover through the fog and filthy air. [Witches vanish.

SCENE II.—A Camp near Forres.

Alarum within. Enter King Duncan, Malcolm, Donalbain, Lennox, attended by Attendants, meeting a bleeding Soldier. Duncan. What bloody man is that? He can report, As seemeth by his plight, of the revolt The newest state.

Soldier. This is the sergeant, Who, like a good and hardy soldier, fought Against my captivity:—Hail, brave friend! Say to the king the knowledge of the broil, As thou didst leave it.

Duncan. Doubtfully it stood; As two spent swimmers, that do cling together, And chafe their art. The merciless Macdonwald (Worthy to be a rebel) : for, to that, The multiplying villanies of nature Do swarm upon him; from the western isles Of Kerns and Gallowsglasses was supplied? And Fortune on his damned quarrel smiling, Show'd like a rebel's whore: But all's too weak: For brave Macbeth, (well he deserves that name,) Disdaining fortune, with his brandish'd steel, Which smok'd with bloody execution, Like valor's minion. Car'd out his passage, till he faced the slave: And never shook hands, nor bade farewell to him, Till he unseam'd him from the nape to the chaps, And fix'd his head upon our battlements.

Duncan. O valiant cousin! worthy gentleman! Sold. As when the sun 'gins his reflection, Shipwrecking storms and direful thunders break; So from that spring, whence comfort seems to come, Discordance swells. Mark, king of Scotland, mark: No sooner justice laid, with valor arm'd, Compell'd these shipping kerns to trust their heels; But the Norweyan lord, surveying vantage, With furious arm, and new supplies of men, Began a fresh assault.

Duncan. Dismay'd not this Our captains, Macbeth and Banquo? Sold. Yes; As sparrows, eagles; or the hare, the lion. If I say sooth, I must report they were As cannons overcharged with double cracks; So they Doubly redoubled strokes upon the foe: Except they meant to bathe in reeking wounds, Or memorize another Golgotha, I cannot tell:— But I am faint, my gashes cry for help.

Duncan. So well thy words become thee, as thy wounds; They smack of honor both:—Go, get him surgeons. [Exit Soldier, attended.

Enter Rosse.

Who comes here?

Malcolm. The worthy thane of Ross. Lennox. What a haste looks through his eyes! So should he look, That seems to speak things strange.

Rosse. God save the king; Duncan. Whence came'st thou, worthy thane? Rosse. From Fife, great King, Where the Norweyan banners flout the sky, And fan our people cold.

Norway himself, with terrible numbers, Assisted by that most disloyal traitor The thane of Cawdor, gan a dismal conflict: Till that Bellona's bridegroom, lapp'd in proof, Confronted him with self-comparisons, Point against point rebellious, arm against arm, Curbing his lavish spirit: And, to conclude, The victory fell on us;—

Act I.

MACBETH.

Scene III.—A Heav'ly

Thunder. Enter the three Witches.

1 Witch. Where hast thou been, sister?
3 Witch. Sister, where thou?
1 Witch. A widow's wife had chestnuts in her lap, and mouch'd, and mouch'd, and mouch'd;—Give me quoth I; Arount thee, witch! the rump-fed ronyon cries. Her husband's to Aleppo gone, master o' the Tiger; But in a sieve I'll thither sail, And, like a rat without a tail, I'll do, I'll do, and I'll do.
2 Witch. I'll give thee a wind.
1 Witch. Thou art kind.
3 Witch. And I another.
1 Witch. I myself have all the other; And the very ports blow, All the quarters that they know I' the shipman's card. I will drum him dry as hay:
Sleep shall, neither night nor day Hang upon his pent-house lid; He shall live a man forbid: Worry seven-nights, nine times nine, Shall he dwell on the thick and pine: Though his bark cannot be lost, Yet it shall be tempest-toss'd.
Look what I have.
2 Witch. Show me, show me.
1 Witch. Here I have a pilot's thumb, Wreck'd, as homeward he did come. [Drum within.

3 Witch. A drum, a drum;
Macbeth doth come.
All. The weird sisters, hand in hand, Posters of the sea and land, Thus do go about, about; Thrice to thine, and thrice to mine, And thrice again, to make up nine: Peace! the charm's wound up.

Enter MACBETH and BANQUO.

Macb. So foul and fair a day I have not seen.
Ban. How far is't call'd to Forres?—What are these, So wither'd, and so wild in their attire; That do not like the inhabitants of the earth, And yet are on't! Live you? or are you aught That man may question? You seem to understand me,
By each at once her choppy fingers laying Upon her skinny lips—You should be women.
And yet your beards forbid me to interpret What you are so.

Macb. Speak, if you can:—What are you?
1 Witch. All hail, Macbeth! hail to thee, thane of Glamis!
2 Witch. All hail, Macbeth! hail to thee, thane of Cawdor!
3 Witch. All hail, Macbeth! that shall be king hereafter.

Ban. Good sir, why do you start and seem to fear Things that do sound so fair?—The name of truth, Are ye fantastical, or that indeed Which outwardly ye show? My noble partner You greet with present grace, and great prediction Of noble having, and of royal hope, That he seems rapt withal; to me you speak not: If you can look into the seeds of time, And say which grains will grow, and which will not; Speak then to me, who neither beg nor fear, Your favors, nor your hate.

So, all hail, Macbeth, and Banquo!
1 Witch. Banquo, and Macbeth, all hail! Macb. Stay: you imperfect speakers, tell me more: By Sin's death, I know, I am thane of Glamis; But how of Cawdor? the thane of Cawdor lives, A prosperous gentleman; and, to be king, Stands not within the prospect of belief; No more than to be Cawdor: Say, from whence You owe this strange intelligence? or why Upon this blasted heath you stop our way With such prophetic greetings?—Speak, I charge you. [Witches vanish. Ban. The earth hath bubbles, as the water has, And these are of them:—Whither are they vanished? Macb. Into the air; and what seems corporal, melted As breath into the wind.—Would they have said! Ban. Were such things here, as we do speak at
Or have we eaten of the insane root, That takes the reason prisoner? Macb. Your children shall be kings. Ban. You shall be king. Macb. And thane of Cawdor too; went it not so? Ban. To the selfsame tune and words. Who's here? Enter ROSE and ANGUS.

Ros. The king hath happily receiv'd, Macbeth, The news of thy successes; and when he reads Thy personal venture in the rebels' fight, His wonder is his pains do commend, Which should be thine, or his: Stereined with that, In viewing o'er the rest of the selfsame day, He finds thee in the stout Norwegian ranks, Nothing can be said of what thy self did make Strange images of death. As thick as tale. Came post with post; and every one did bear Thy praises in his kingdom's great defence, And pour'd them down before him.

Ang. We are sent, To give thee, from our royal master, thanks; To herald thee into his sight, not pay thee. Rose. And, for an earnest of a greater honor, He bade me, from him, call thee thane of Cawdor: In which addition, hall, most worthy thane! For it is thine.

Ban. What, can the devil speak true?

Macb. The thane of Cawdor lives: Why do you dress me In borrow'd robes?

Ang. Who was the thane, lives yet; But under heavy judgment bears that life Which he deserves to lose. Whether he was Combined with Norwey; or did live the rebel With hidden help and vantage; or that with both He labur'd in his country's wreck, I know not; But treasons capital, confess'd and prov'd, Have overthrown him. And now, as he was Macb. Glamis, and thane of Cawdor: The greatest is behind.—Thanks for your pains,— Do you think, say, my children shall be kings, When those that gave the thane of Cawdor to me, Promis'd no less to them?

Ban. That, trusted home, Might yet enkindle you unto the extremest. Besides the thane of Cawdor. But 'tis strange: And oftentimes to win us to our harm, The instruments of darkness tell us truths: Th' instruments of honest truths, to betray us In deepest consequence,—

Conjuring, a word I pray you.机械化. Macb. The two truths are told, As happy prologues to the swelling act Of the imperial theme.—I thank you gentlemen. This supernatural soliciting Cannot be answer'd good. If ill, Why hath it given me earnest of success, Commencing in truth? I am thane of Cawdor: If good, why do I yield to that suggestion

*As far as they could be counted. Witches vanish.

[Exeunt.]
Whose horrid image doth unfix my hair,
And make my seated heart knock at my ribs.
Against the use of nature! Present fears
Are less than horrible imaginings:
My thought, whose murder yet is but fantastical,
Shakes so my single state of man, that function
Is smother'd in surmise: and nothing is,
But what is not.
Ban. Look, how our partner's rapt.
Macb. If chance will have me king, why, chance
May crown me now;
Without my stir.
Ban. New honors come upon him
Like our strange garments, cleave not to their mould.
But with the aid of use.
Macb. Come what come may;
Time and the hour runs through the roughest day.
Ban. Worthy Macbeth, we stay upon your leisure.
Macb. Give me your favor:—my dull brain was
With things forgotten. Kind gentlemen, your pains
Are register'd where every day I turn
The leaf to read them.—Let us toward the king;
Think upon what hath chance'd: and, at more time,
The interim having weight'd it, let us speak
Our free hearts each to other.
Ban. Very gladly.
Macb. Tell them, enough.—Come, friends. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—Forres. A Room in the Palace.

Flourish. Enter Duncan, Malcolm, Donalbain, Lenox, and Attendants.

Dun. Is execution done on Cowdor? Are not
Those in commission yet return'd?
Mal. They are not yet come back. But I have spoke
With one that saw him die: who did report,
That very frankly he confess'd his treasons;
Implored your highness' pardon and set forth
A deep repentance; nothing having left
Became him, like the leaving it; he died
As one that had been studied in his death,
To throw away the dearest thing he ow'd,
As a mere careless trifle.

Dun. There's no art,
To find the mind's construction in the face:
He was a gentleman on whom I built
An absolute trust.—O worthiest cousin!

Enter Macbeth, Banquo, Rosse, and Angus.

The sin of my ingratitude even now
Was heavy on my soul; Thou art so far before,
That swiftest wing of compensable is slow
To overtake thee. 'Would thou hadst less deserv'd,
That thou mightst this day hold thine honours scant;
As thou hast done to-day. But for thy kindness,
As the live heart, the loyalty I owe,
In doing it, pays itself. Your highness' part
Is to receive our duties: and our duties
Are to your throne and state, children, and servants;
Which I do, but what they should, by doing every thing,
Safe toward your love and honor.

Dun. Welcome hater! I have begun to plant thee, and will do
To make thee full of growing.—Noble Banquo,
That hast no less deserv'd, nor must be known
No less to have done so, let me inflame thee,
And let thee to my heart.
Ban. There if I grow,
The harvest is your own.

Macb. My plentiful joys,
Waxing in fullness, seek to hide themselves
In drops of sorrow.—Sons, kinsmen, thanes,
And you whose places are the nearest, know,
We will establish our estate upon
Our eldest, Malcolm; whom we name hereafter,
The prince of Cumberland: which honor must
Not, unaccompanied, invest him only,
But signs of nobleness, like stars, shall shine
On all meritorious.—From hence to Inverness,
And bind us further to you.

Macb. The rest is labor, which is not used for you:
I'll be myself the haringer, and make joyful

V.i. Which cleave not.  Time and opportunity.
*Pardon.  Owned, possessed.
This ignorant present, and I feel now
The future in the instant.
Macb. My dearest love,
Duncan comes here to-night?
Lady M. And when goes hence?
Macb. To-morrow, as he purports.
Lady M. O, never
Shall sun that marrow see?
Your face, my theme, is a book, where men
May read strange matters:—To beguin the time,
Look like the time; bear welcome in your eye,
Your hand, your tongue: look like the innocent flower,
But be the serpent under it. He that's coming
Must be provided for: and you shall put
This night's great business into my despatch;
Which shall to all our nights and days to come
Give solely sovereign sway and masterdom.
Macb. We will speak further.
Lady M. Only look up clear;
To alter favor ever is to fear;
Leave all the rest to me. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VI.—Before the Castle.

Hautboys. Servants of Macbeth attending.

Enter DUNCAN, MALCOLM, DONALBAIN, BANCO, LENOX, MACDUFF, ROSSIE, ANGUS, and ATTENDANTS.

Dun. This castle hath a pleasant seat; the air
Nimbly and sweetly recommends itself
Unto our gentle senses.

Ban. This guest of summer,
The temple-haunting martlet, does approve,
By his love's mansion, that the heaven's breath
Smiles in this place; rich flakes of silver here:
Nor coigne of vantage; but this bird hath made
His pendent bed, and procreant cradle: Where they Most breed and haunt, I have observ'd the air
Is delicate.

Enter Lady Macbeth.

Dun. See, see! our hostess' bountiful love,
The love that follows us, sometime is our trouble,
Which still we thank as love. Herein I teach you,
But yet we will call God yield us for your pains
And thank us for your trouble.

Lady M. All our service
In every point twice done, and then done double,
Were poor and single business to contend
Against those honors deep and broad, wherewith
Your majesty loads our house: For those of old,
And the late dignities heaped up to them,
We rest your hermits.

Dun. Where's the thane of Cawdor?
We would'rt him at the heels, and had a purpose
To be his purveyor: but he rides well;
And he his great love, sharpens his spur; hath help him
To his home before us: Fair and noble hostess,
We are your guest-to-night.

Lady M. Our servants ever
Have theirs, themselves, and what is theirs, in compt, 1
To make their audit at your highest pleasure,
Still to return your own.

Dun. Give me your hand.
Conduct me to mine host; we love him highly,
And shall continue our grace towards him.
By your leave, hostess. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VII.—A Room in the Castle.

Hautboys and torches. Enter, and pass over the stage, a Servant, 2 and divers Servants with dishes and hercules. The enter MACBETH.

Macb. If it be done, when 'tis done, then were well
It were done quickly: if the assassination
Could trammeil up the consequence, and catch,
With his suresse, success; that but this blow
Might be the be-all and the end-all here,
But here, upon this bank and shod of time,—
Will jump the life to come.—But, in these cases,
We still do doubt it:—by our judgment therefore but teach
Bloody instructions, which, being taught, return
To plague the inventor: This even-handed justice
Commends the ingredients of our poison'd claque

1 Look, countenance. 2 Convenience corner.
3 Reward. 4 Subject to account. 5 An officer so called from his placing the dishes on the table.

To our own lips. He's here in double trust:
First, as I am his kinsman and his subject,
Strong both against the deed; then, as his host,
Who should against his murderer shut the door,
Not bear the knife myself. Besides this Duncan Hath borne his faculties so meek, hath been
So clear in his great office, that his virtues
Will proud ambition, like aLINGERED TONGUE, against
The deep damnation of whose taking off.
And pity, like a naked new-born babe,
Striding the blast, or heaven's cherubim, hor'd
I upon the sickness cares of the air,
Should blow the horrid deed in every eye,
That tears shall drown the wind.—I have no spur
To prick the sides of his intent, but only
Vaulting ambition, which o'erleaps itself,
And falls on the other.—How now, what news?

Enter Lady Macbeth.

Lady M. He has almost supp'd: Why have you not made the chamber?
Macb. Hath he ask'd for me?
Lady M. Know you not, he has?
Macb. We will proceed no further in this business:
He hath honor'd me of late; and I have bought
Great and general praise of all sorts of people,
Which would be worn now in their newest gloss,
Not cast aside so soon.

Lady M. Was the hope drunk,
Wherin you dress'd yourself? hath it slept since?
And wakes it now, to look so green and pale
As if it did so free! From this time,
Such I account thy love. Art thou severe
To be the same in thine own act and valor,
As thou art in doctrine? Wouldst thou have that
Which you esteem'st the ornament of life,
And live a coward in thine own esteem;
Letting I dare not wait upon I would Like the poor cat! the adage!

Macb. Pr'ythee, peace,
I dare do all that may become a man;
Who dares do more, is none.

Lady M. What beast was it then?
That made you break this enterprise to me?
When you durst do it, then you were a man;
And, to be more than when you were, you would
Be so much more a man, the time is now,
That you would speaking such a time as this,
Did then adhere; 3 and yet you would make both:
They have made themselves, and that their fitness
now
Does make you. I have given such know, and can
How tender 'tis, to love the babe that stinks me:
I would, while it was smiling in my face,
Have pluck'd my nipple from its bounteous gums,
And drunk the life of the brains out, had I so sworn, as you
Have done to this.

Macb. If we should fail,
Lady M. We fail! But screw your courage to the sticking place,
And we'll not fail. When Duncan is asleep,
(Wherefore the rather shall his day's hard journey Soundly invite him,) his two chamberlains
Will I with wine and wassail so convince, 4
That memory, the wonder of the brain,
Shall be a lume, and the receipt of reason
A blemish only: When in sweatish sleep
Their drenched natures lie, as in a death,
What cannot you and I perform upon
The unguard'd Duncan? what not put upon
His sleep, against whom shall bear the guilt
Of our great queen?

Macb. Bring forth men-children only!
For thy unhafted mettle should compose
Nothing but women; for it is not good so
When we have mark'd with blood those sleep'y two
Of his own chamber, and used their very daggers,
That they have done't.

Lady M. Who dares receive it other,
As we shall make our griefs and clarion roar
Upon his death?

Macb. I am methought, and bend up
Each corporal agent to this terrible feat:
Away, and mock the time with fairest show:
False face must hide what the false heart doth know.

[Exeunt.]

6 Winds; sightless is invisible.
7 In the same sense as cohers. 8 Overpower.
9 Eternity. 10 Spurned.
11 Murder. 12 Supposed.
ACT II.

SCENE I.—Court within Macbeth’s Castle.

Enter Banquo and Fleance, and a Servant with a torch before them.

Ban. How goes the night, boys!

Fle. The moon is down; I have not heard the clock.

Ban. And she goes down at twelve.

Fle. I take’t; ’tis later, sir.

Ban. Hold, take my sword.—There’s husbandry in heaven,

Their candles are all out.—Take thee that too.

A heavy summons lies like lead upon me,

And I would not sleep:—My mind’s my powers!

Restrain in me the cursed thoughts, that nature

Give way to in repose!—Give me my sword:—

Enter Macbeth, and a Servant with a torch.

Who’s there?

Macb. A friend.

Ban. What, sir, not yet at rest! The king’s a-bed:

He hath been in usual pleasure, and

Sent forth great largess4 to your officers;6

This diadem he greeteth your wise withal,

By the name of most kind hostess; and shut up4

In measureless content.5

Mac. Being unprepared,

Our will became the servant to defect;

Which else should free have wrought.

Ban. All’s well.

I dreamt last night of the three weird sisters:

To them have they show’d some truth.

Mac. I think not of them:

Yet when we can entreat an hour to serve,

Would spend it in some words upon that business,

If you would grant the time.

Ban. At your kind’st leisure.

Mac. If you shall cleave to my consent,—when

It shall make honor for you.

Ban. So I lose none,

In seeking to augment it, but still keep

My bosom franchis’d, and allegiance clear,

I shall be cou’d’d.

Macb. Good repose, the while.

Ban. Thanks, sir; The like to you.

[Exit Banquo and Fleance.

Macb. Go, bid thy mistress, when my drink is ready,

She strike upon the bell. Get thee to bed.

[Exit Servant.

Is this a dagger which I see before me,

The hand that indoor my hand? Come, let me clutch thee.—

I have thee not, and yet I see thee still.

Art thou not, fatal vision, sensible

To feeling as to sight? or art thou but

A danger of the mind; a false creation,

Proceeding from the heat-oppressed brain?

I see thee yet, in form as palpable

As this which now I draw.

Thou marshals’st me the way that I was going;

And such an instrument I was to use.

Mine eyes have seen the fool’s6 the other senses,

Or else worth all the rest: I see thee still;

And on thy blade, and dudgeon,7 gouts8 of blood,

Which was not so before.—There’s no such thing:

It is the bloody business, which informs,

Thus to mine eyes.—Now ’gainst the one half world
Nature seems dead, and wicked dreams abound.

The curtain’d sleep; now witchcraft ------------------

Pales Hector’s off’rings; and wither’d murder,

Alarum’d by his sentinel, the time;

Whose howl’s his watch, thus with his stealthy pace,

With Tarquin’s ravishing strides, towards his design

Moves like a ghost.—Thou sure and firm-set earth,

Hear not my steps, which way they walk for fear

Thy very stones prate of my where-abouts;

And take the present horror from the time

Which now suits with it.—Whilest I threat, he lives;

Words to the heat of deeds too cold breath gives.

I go, and it is done; the bell invites me.

Hear it not, Duncan; for it is a knell

That summons thee to heaven, or to hell.  [Exit.

SCENE II.—The same.

Enter Lady Macbeth.

Lady M. That which hath made them drunk,

Hath made me bold:

What hath quench’d them, hath given me fire—

Hark!—Hear!—

It was the night that shook’d the fatal bellman,

Which gives the sternest good-night. He is about it:

The doors are open; and the surlicet grooms

Do mock their charge with stores: I have drugg’d

Their possets.

That death and nature do contend about them,

Whether they live or die.

Mac. [Within] Who’s there?—what, ho!

Lady M. Alack! I am afraid they have awaked,

And ’tis not done:—the attempt and not the deed,

Confounds us:—Hark!—I laid their daggers ready,

He could not miss them.—had he not resembled

My father as he slept, I had done’t.—My husband?

[Exit Macbeth.

Macb. I have done the deed:—Didst thou not hear a noise?

Lady M. I heard an owl scream, and the crickets cry,

Did not you speak?

Macb. When?

Lady M. Now.

Lady M. Ay.

Macb. Hark!—

Who bespake the second chamber?

Lady M. Donalbain.

Macb. This is a sorry sight.

[Looking on his hands.

Lady M. A foolish thought; to say a sorry sight.

Macb. There’s one did laugh in his sleep, and one cried, murder!”

That they did wake each other; I stood and heard them:

But they did say their prayers, and address’d them

Again to sleep.

Lady M. There are two lodg’d together.

Macb. One cried, God bless us! and Amen, the other;

As they had seen me, with these hangman’s hands

Listening their fear. I could not say, amen.

When they did say, God bless us,

Lady M. Consider it not so deeply, Macbeth. But wherefore could not I pronounce, amen?

I had most need of blessing, and amen

Stuck in my throat.

Lady M. These deeds must not be thought

After these ways; so, it will make us mad.

Macb. Methought, I heard a voice cry, Sleep no more! Macbeth doth murder sleep, the innocent sleep;

Sleep, that knits up the ravelled sleeve9 of care,

The death of each day’s life, sore labor’s bath.

Balm of hurt minds, great nature’s second course,

Chief nourisher in life’s feast.

Lady M. What do you mean?

Macb. Still it cried, Sleep no more! to all the house;

Glums hagard!10 my sleep! and therefore Caucub

Shall sleep no more. Macbeths shall sleep no more.

Lady M. Who was it that thus cried? Why, worthy thine,

You do mislead your noble strength, to think

So brainickly of things:—Go, get some water,

And wash this filthy witness from your hand.—

Why did you bring these daggers from the place?

They must not there: Go, carry them; and smear

The sleepy groans with blood.

Macb. I’ll go no more;
Good-morrow, awake. Whence not applied to, I’ll ill the eye of childhood, That fears a painted devil. If he do bleed, I’ll still the faces of the grooms withal, For it must seem their guilt. [Exit. Knocking within. Whence is that knocking? How is’t with me, when every noise appals me? What haunts me here! Ha! they pluck out mine eyes! Will all great Neptune’s ocean wash this blood Clean from my hand! No; this my hand will rather The multitudinous thron’d infernal, and Make the green—one red.

Re-enter Lady Macbeth.
Lady M. My hands are of your color; but I shame To wear a heart so white. [Knocking] I hear a knocking At the south entry:—retire we to our chamber: A little water clears us of this deed: How easy is it, then! Your constancy Hath left you unattended.—[Knocking] Hark! more knocking! Get on your night-gown, best occasion call us, And show us to be watchers:—Be not lost Soearly in your thoughts. [Knocking] To know my deed,—twice best not know myself. [Knocking] Wake Duncan with thy knocking! I would thou couldst! [Exit.}

Scene III.—The same.

Enter a Porter. [Knocking within. Porter. Here’s a knocking, indeed! If a man would knock at our lady’s gate, he should have old Mar- turning the key. [Knocking] Knock, knock, knock: Who’s there? (the name of Belezemb) Here’s a farmer, that hangs himself on the expectation of plenty; Cometh time; have apples enough about you; here you’ll sweat for. [Knocking] Knock, knock, knock: Who’s there? (the other devil’s name) ‘Faith, here’s an equivocator, that could swear in both the scales against either scale; who committed treason enough for God’s sake, yet could not equivocate to Heaven: O, come in, equivocator. [Knocking] Knock, knock, knock: Who’s there! ‘Faith, here’s an English tailor come hither, for stealing out of a French horse: Come in, tailor; here you may reap your goose. [Knocking] Knock, knock, knock: Who’s there? (the third devil’s name) This place is too cold for hell. I’ll devil-porter it no further: I had thought to have let in some of all professions, that go the primrose way to the everlasting bonfire. [Knocking] Anon, anon; I pray you remember the porter. [Opens the gate.]

Enter Macduff and Lenox.

Mac. Was it so late, friend, ere you went to bed, That you do lie so late?
Port. Faith, sir, we were envoysing till the second clock; and drink, sir, is a great provoker of three times.

Mac. What three things does drink especially provoke?
Port. Marry, sir, noise-painting, sleep, and urine. Leechery, sir, it provokes, and unprovokes; it provokes the desire, but it takes away the performance. There are such false friends, that will take thou, when thou mayst have him, then he cavils at him; sets him on, and it taketh him off; persadeth him, and dishearteneth him; maketh him stand, and not stand true; in conclusion, equivocates him in a sleep, and, giving him the lie, leaves him.

Mac. I believe, drink gave thee the lie last night.
Port. That it did, sir; I the very truth at once: But I required him for his lie; for he was too strong for him, though he took up my legs sometime, yet I made a snit to cast him.

Mac. Is thy master stirring?
Our standing here is now enough:—here he comes.

Enter Macbeth.

Len. Good-morrow, noble sir! Mac. Good-morrow, both! To inconstancy, is to stain of a flesh color. Frequent. Handkerchiefs.

Mac. Is the king stirring, worthy thane?
Mac. Not yet.
Mac. He did command me to call timely on him; I have almost slept the day. Mac. I’ll bring you to him.
Mac. I know this is a joyful trouble to you; But yet am I, Mac. The labor we delight in physics' pain. This is the door. Mac. I’ll make so bold to call, For ‘tis my limited service! [Exit Macduff, Len. From hence to day—
Mac. He does:—he did appoint it so.
Len. The night has been unkind: Where we lay, Our chimneys were blown down; and, as they say, Lamentations heard in the air; strange screams of death. And prophesying, with accents terrible, Of dire confusion, and confused events, New hatch’d to the woeful time. The obscure bird Chanter’d the livelong night:—some say, the earth As from your graves did rise up, and walk like sprites, To countenance this horror. [Bell rings.]

Enter Lady Macbeth.

Lady M. What’s the business, That such a hided trumpet calls to parley The sleepers of the house! speak, as o’er me.
Mac. O, gentle lady,
’Tis not for you to hear what I can speak: The repetition, in a woman’s ear, Would murder as it fell.—O Banquo! Banquo! Enter Banquo.
Our royal master’s master’d! Lady M. Woe, alas! What, in our house? Ban. Too cruel, any where. Dear Duff, I pr’ythee contradict thyself, And say, it is not so.

Re-enter Macc and Lenox.

Macb. Had I but dead an hour before this chance, I had liv’d a blessed time; for, from this instant, There’s nothing serious in mortality: The picture is but toy’s; renown, and grace is dead: The wine of life is drawn, and the more heer Is left this vault to brag of.

Enter Malcolm and Donalbain.

Don. What is amiss! Mac. You are, and do not know it; The spring, the head, the fountain of your blood Is stopp’d; the very source of it is stopp’d. Mac. Your royal father’s master’d! Don. By whom? Len. Those of his chamber, as it seem’d, had done: Their hands and faces were all bad’d with blood. So were their daggers, which, unwip’d, we found Upon their pillows: They stared, and were distracted; no man’s life Was to be trusted with them.
* i. c. Affords a cordial to it. * Appointed service.
MACBETH.

Mach. O, yet I do repent me of my fury, That I did kill them.

Mael. Wherefore did you so?

Mach. Who can be wise, amaz'd, temperate, and furious.

Loyal and neutral, in a moment? No man: The expedition of my violent love
Out-run the pauser reason.—Here lay Duncan, Plaid with a silver skin laced with his golden blood:
And his gaiter's studs look'd like a breach in nature, For ruin's wasteful entrance; there, the murderers, Sleep'd in the colors of their trade: their daggers Unmem'rously bredd'd with gore, who could refrain,
That had a heart to love, and in that heart Courage to make his love known?

Mal. Why do we hold our tongues,
That must not claim this argument for ours!

Don. What should be spoken here,
Where our fate, hid within an auge-hole,
May rush and seize us? Let's away; our tears Are not yet breed'd.

Mal. Not our strong sorrow on
The foot of motion.

Ban. Look to the lady:—
(Lady MACBETH is carried out.)

And when we have our naked hands all hid,
That suifer in exposure, let us meet,
And question this most bloody piece of work,
To know it further. Fears and splenches shake us:
In the great hand of God I stand; and, thence,
Against the undivell'd pretence I fight Of treasonous malice.

Mach. And so do I.

Mael. And so all.

Mach. Let's briefly put on manly readiness,
And meet it half the table.

All. Well contented.

[Exeunt all but MAL. and DOX.

Mal. What will you do? Let's not consort with them: To show an unfeelt sorrow, is an office Which the false man does easy: I'll to England. Don. To Ireland, 1; our separated fortune Shall keep us both the safer: where we are, There's daggers in men's smiles: the near in blood, The nearer bloody.

Mal. This murderous shaft that's shot,
Bath not yet lighted; and our safest way Is, to avoid the aim. Therefore, to horse; And let us not be dainty of leave taking. But shift away: there's warrant in that theft. Which steals itself, when there's no mercy left.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Without the Castle.

Enter ROSS and an OLD MAN.

O'D. M. Threescore and ten I can remember well: Within the volume of which time, I have seen Hours dreadful, and things strange; but this sore night Hath tried former knowings.

Rosse. All good father,

Thou seest the heavens, as troubled with man's act, Threaten his bloody stage: by the clock, 'tis day, And yet dark mirth strangles the travelling lamp: Is it night's predominance, or day's shame? That darkness does the face of earth intomb, When living light should kiss it?

Old M. 'Tis unnatural,

Even like the deed that's done. On Tuesday last A falcon, towering in her pride of place, Was by a monstrous owl hawk'd at, and kill'd.

Rosse. And Duncan's horse, (a thing most strange and certain.)

Beauteous and swift, the minions of their race, Turn'd wild in nature, broke their stalls, flung out, Contending against obedience, as they would make War with mankind.

Old M. 'Tis said, they eat each other.

Rosse. They did so: to the amazement of mine eyes.

That look'd upon 't. Here comes the good Macduff:—

Enter MACDUFF.

SCENE V.—Forres, A Room in the Palace.

Enter BANQUO.

Ban. Thou hast it now, King, Cav'dor, Glamis, all.

As the weird woman promis'd; and, I fear Thou practis'st not most for thyself: yet it was said, It should not stand in thy posterity; But that myself should be the root, and father Of many kings. If there come truth from them, (As upon thee, Macbeth, their splices shine,) Why, by the verities on thee made good, May they not be my oracles as well, And set me up in hope? But, hush; no more.

Secret sounded. Enter MACBETH, as KING; Lady MACBETH, as Queen; LENNOX, ROSS, LORDS, LADIES, and ATTENDANTS.

Macb. Here's our chief guest.

Lady Macb. If he had been forgotten, It had been as a gap in our great feast, And all things unbecoming:

*Covered with blood to their hils

ACT III.

Mach. To-night we hold a solemn supper, sir, And I'll request your presence.

Ban. Let your highness Command upon me; to the which, my duties Are with a most indissoluble tie For ever knelt.

Mach. Ride you this afternoon?

Ban. Ay, my good lord.

Mach. We should have else desired your good advice (Which still had been both grave and prosperous) In this day's council; but we'll take to-morrow. Is't far you ride?

Ban. As far my lord, as will fill up the time 'Twixt this and supper: go not my horse the better, I must become a borrower of the night, For a dark hour or twain.

Mach. Fail not our feast.

Ban. My lord, I will not.

Mach. We hear, our bloody cousins are bestow'd In England, and in Ireland; not confessing Their cruel paricide, filling their hearers

*Intend to themselves.
With strange invention: But of that to-morrow;
When thitherward, we shall have cause of state,
Craving us jointly. He yeu to horse: Adieu,
Till you return at night. Does Pleasure with you?

Macb. Ay, my good lord: our time does call upon us.

Macb. I wish your horses swift and sure of foot;
And I will commend you to their bards.

[Exeunt BANCA.

Macb. Let every man be master of his time
Till seven at night; to make society
The sweeter Welcome, we will keep ourselves
Till supper-time alone; while then, God be with you.

[Exit Lady MABCETH, Lords, Ladies, &c.

Sirrah, a word: Attend those men our pleasure. Also be beware, my lord, without the paine and gate.

Macb. Bring them before us.—(Exit Attcn.

But to be safely thus—Our fears in Banquo
Such doe; and in his royalty of nature
Reigns that, which would be fear'd: 'Tis much he dreads
And to that dastard temer of his mind,
He hath a wisdom that doth guide his valor
To act in safety. There is none, but he Whose being I do fear: and under him,
My genius is rebuk'd: as, it is said,
Mark Antony's was by Caesar. He chid the sisters,
When first they put the name of King upon me,
And bade them speak to him; then, prophet-like,
This in a line of verse:

Upon my head they placed a fruitless crown,
And put a barren sceptre in my gripe,
Thence to be wrench'd with an unman'd hand,
Not his own hand: and thus news succeeding
Erind's law of the common enemy of man.

To make them kings, the seed of Banquo kings!
Rather than so, come, fate, in the list,
And champion me to the utterance!—Who's there?

—Re-enter Attendant, with Two Murderers.

Now to the door, and stay there till we call.

[Exit Attendent.

Was it not yesterday we spoke together?

1 MArr. It was, so please your highness.

Macb. Well then, now have you consider'd my speeches? Know, Thy genius is rebuk'd: as, it is said,
Mark Antony's was by Caesar. He chid the sisters,
When first they put the name of King upon me,
And bade them speak to him; then, prophet-like,
This in a line of verse:

Upon my head they placed a fruitless crown,
And put a barren sceptre in my gripe,
Thence to be wrench'd with an unman'd hand,
Not his own hand: and thus news succeeding
Erind's law of the common enemy of man.

To make them kings, the seed of Banquo kings!
Rather than so, come, fate, in the list,
And champion me to the utterance!—Who's there?

—Re-enter Attendant, with Two Murderers.

Now to the door, and stay there till we call.

Macb. Well then, now have you consider'd my speeches? Know, Thy genius is rebuk'd: as, it is said,
Mark Antony's was by Caesar. He chid the sisters,

To make them kings, the seed of Banquo kings!
Rather than so, come, fate, in the list,
And champion me to the utterance!—Who's there?

Enter Lady MABCETH, and a Servant.

Lady M. Is Banquo gone from court?

Serc. Ay, madam, but returns again to-night.

Lady M. Say to the king, I will attend his grace.

For a few words.

Serc. Madam I will.

[Exit.

Lady M. Nought's had, all's spent.
Where our desire is got without content:
'Tis saier to he that which we destroy,
Than, by destruction, dwell in doubtful joy.

Enter MABCETH.

How now, my lord? why do you keep alone,
Of sorrest friends? fancy your company unpleasant?
Using those thoughts, which should indeed have died
With them they think on? Things without remedy,
Should be without regard: what's done, is done.
Macb. We have scotched the snake, not kill'd it:
She'll close, and be herself; whilst our poor malice
Remains in danger of her former tooth.

But let's
The frame of things disjoin, both the world-sufferer,
Ere we cut our meals in fear, and sleep
In the affliction of these terrible dreams,
That shake us nightly: Better be with the dead,
Whom we, to gain our place, have sent to peace,
Than on the torture of the mind to lie
In restless ecstasy. Duncan is in his grave;
After lie's fatal feuer, he sleeps well;
Treason has done his worst: nor word, nor poison,
Malice domestic, foreign leys, nothing,
Can touch him further!

Lady M. Come on.

Gentle my lord, seek't over your rugged looks;
Be bright and jovial 'mongst your guests to-night.

Macb. So shall I love; and so, I pray, be you;
Let your remembrance apply to Banquo;
Present him eminence, both with eye and tongue.
Umst the while, that we

6 Careless. 7 Because of. 8 * Most melancholy.
9 Agony. 10 Do him the highest honors.
MACBETH.

Scene IV.

Lady M. Pronounce it for me, sir, to all our friends;
For my heart speaks, they are welcome.

Enter First Murderer, to the door.

Macb. See, they encounter thee with their hearts' thanks:
Both sides are even; Here I'll sit 'till midnight;
Be large in mouth; anon, we'll drink a measure
The half of this. Dine—There's never blood upon thy face.

Mur. 'Tis Banquo's then.

Macb. 'Tis better thee without, than he within.
Is he despatched?

Mur. My lord, his throat is cut; that I did for him.

Macb. Thou art the best o' the cut-throats: Yet
he's good,
That did the like for Fleance: if thou didst it,
Thou art the nonpareil.

Mur. Most royal sir,

Fleance is escaped.

Macb. Then comes my fit again: I had else been perfected
Whose as the marble, founded as the rock;
As broad, and general, as the casing sir;
But now, I am cabin'd, cribb'd, confined, bound in
To sordid doubts and tears. But Banquo's safe!

Mur. Ay, my good lord, safe in a ditch he hides,
With twenty trench'd gashes on his head;

The least a death to nature.

Macb. Thanks for that:

There the grown serpent lies; the worm, that's fled,
Hath nature that in time will venom breed,
No teeth for the present.—Get thee gone; to-morrow
We'll hear ourselves again. [Exit Murderer.]

Lady M. My royal lord,
You do not give the cheer; the feast is sold,
That is not often vouch'd, whilst 'tis a making,
'Tis given with welcome: To food, were best at

From thence the sauce to meat is ceremony;
Meeting were bare without it.

Macb. Sweet remembrancer!

Now good digestion wait on appetite,
And health on hot! [Exit.]

Len. May it please your highness sit!
The Ghost of Banquo rises, and sits in Macketh's place.

Macb. Here had we now our country's honor roof'd,
Were the graced person of our Banquo present;
Who may I rather challenge for mankindness,
Than pity for mischance!

Rosse. His absence, sir,
Lays blame upon his promise. Please it your highness
To grace us with your royal company.

Macb. The table's full.

Len. Here's a place reserv'd, sir.

Macb. Where?

Len. Here, my lord. What is't that moves your highness!

Macb. Which of you have done this?

Len. What, my good lord?

Macb. Thou canst not say, I did it: never shah
Thy gory locks at me.

Rosse. Oatemen, rise; his highness is not well.

Lady M. A worthy friend:—my lord is often thus,
And hath been from his youth: 'pray you, keep seat;
The fit is customary; upon a thought
He will again be well: If much you note him,
You shall offend him, and extend his passion;
Feed, and regard him not.—Are you a man?

Macb. Ay, and a bold one, that dare look on that
Which might appal the devil.

Lady M. O proper stuff!

This is the very painting of your fears;
This is the air-drawn dagger, which, you said,
Led you to Duncan. O, these flaws, &c and starts, (Imposers to true fear,) would well become
A woman's story, at a winter's fire.

Rosse. And by her grandmother. Shame itself!

Lady M. Why do you make such faces! When all's done,
You look but on a stool.

Macb. Prythee, see there! behold! look! lo!

Lady M. Why, what care I! If thou canst not, speak too,—

Sudden gusts.
If charnel-houses, and our graves, must send
Those that we bury, look, our monuments
Shall be the maws of kites. [Ghost disappears.] Lady M. What! quite unmann'd in folly? Macb. If I stand here, I saw him. Lady M. Fly, for shame! Macb. Blood hath been shed ere now, 'tis the olden time,
For human state purged the gentle heart: Ay, and some that, murders have been perform'd
Too terrible for the ear: the times have been,
That, when the brains were out, the man would die,
And there an end: but now, they rise again,
With twenty mortal murders on their crowns,
And push us from our stools: This is more strange
Than such a murder is.
Lady M. Your worthy lord,
Your noble friends do lack you.
Macb. I do forget:—
Do not muse at me, my most worthy friends;
I have a strange inscrutability, which is nothing
To those that know me. Come, love and health to all;
Then I'll sit down.—Give me some wine, fill
My cup:—
I drink to the general joy of the whole table,
Ghosts rise.

And to our dear friend Banquo, whom we miss:
Would he were here! to all, and him, we thirst,
And all to all. Lords. Our duties, and the pledge.
Macb. Avantage, and quit my sight! Let the earth hide thee! Thine bones are harmless, thy blood is cold;
Thou hast no speculation in those eyes
Which thou dost glare with.
Lady M. Think of this, good peers,
But as a thing of custom: 'tis not other;
Only it spells the pleasure of the time.
Macb. What man dare, I dare:
Approach thou like the rugged Russian bear,
The arm'd rhinoceros, or the Hyrcan tiger,
Take any shape but that, and my firm nerves
Shall never tremble: O, be alive again,
And dare me to the desert with thy sword;
If trembling I inhibit thee, protest me
The baby of a girl. Hence, horrible shadow! [Ghost disappears.]

Unreal mockery, hence!—Why so—being gone,
I am a man again.—Pray you, sit still.
Lady M. You have displaced the mirth, broke the good meeting,
With most admired disorder.
Macb. Can such things be,
And overcome us like a summer cloud,
Without our special wonder? You make me strange Even to the disposition that I owe; 2 When now I think you can behold such sights,
And keep the natural rule of your cheeks,
When mine are blanched with fear.
Rosse. What sights, my lord?
Lady M. I pray you, speak not; he grows worse and worse.
Question enranges him: at once, good night:—
Stand not upon the order of your going,
But go at once.
Lady M. Good night, and better health
Attend his majesty!
Macb. A kind good night to all! [Exit Lady M. and attendants.
Macb. It will have blood; they say, blood will have blood;
Stones have been known to move, and trees to speak;
Augurs, and understood relations have
By magot-pies, 3 and coughs, and rooks, brought forth
The sooty man of blood.—What is the night!
Lady M. Almost at odds with morning, which is which.
Macb. How say'st thou, that Macduff doeth his
At our great bidding?
Lady M. Did you send to him, sir?
Macb. I hear it by the way; but I will send:
There's not a one of them, but in his house

Wield. 1 i.e. All good wishes to all.
Purse. 2 Pass over.
Possess. 3 Magpies.

I keep a servant feed'd; I will to-morrow
(Deitises will) unto the weird sisters:
More and more they speak for now I am bent to know
By the worst means, the worst: for mine own good
All causes shall give way; I am in blood
To be afeard: that, kept in, should I wade no more,
Returning were as tedious as go o'er; Strange things I have in head, that will to hand;
Which must be acted, ere they may be scann'd. 4
Lady M. You lack the season of all times. Macb. Come, we'll to sleep: My strange and self-burse
Is the initiate fear, that wants hard use:—
We are yet but young in deed.

SCENE V.—The Heath.

Thunder. Enter HEcATy, meeting the Three Witches.

1 Witches. Why, how now, Hecate? you look angry.

Hec. Have I not reason, beldams, as you are,
Saucy, and over-bold! How did you dare
To trade and traffic with Macbeth,
In riddles and affairs of death;
And I, the mistress of your charms,
The close contriver of all harms,
Was never cal'd to bear my part,
Or show the glory of my art?
And, which is worse, all you have done
Hath been but for a wayward son,
Spiteful, and wrathful; who, as others do,
Loves for his own ends, not for you.
But make amends now: Get you gone,
And at the pit of Acheron,
Meet me 't the morning; thither he
Will come to know his destiny.
Your vessels, and your spells, provide
Your charms, and every thing beside:
I'll meet you there; this night I'll spend
Unto a dismal-fatal end.

Great business must be wrought ere noon;
Upon the corner of the moon
There hangs a vaporous drop profound; 4
I'll catch it ere it come to ground:
And that distill'd by magic shreds,
Shall raise such artificial sprites,
As, by the strength of their illusion,
Shall draw him on to his confusion:
He shall spurn fate, scorn death, and bear
His hopes—howe'xo, howno, grace, and fear.
And, you all know, the spirit
Is mortal's chiefest enemy.

Song. [Within.] Come away, come away, Ay.

Hark, I am a gentle spirit, not for the court,
Sits in a dusty cloud, and stays for me.

1 Witches. Come, let's make haste; she'll soon be back again.

[Exit.]

SCENE VI.—Forres. A Room in the Palace.

Enter LEXOx and another Lord.

Len. My former speeches have but hit your thoughts,
Which can interpret further: only, I say,
Things have been strangely borne: The gracious
Duncan
Was pitted of Macbeth—merry, he was dead:—
And the right-valiant Banquo walk'd too late;
Whom, you may say, if it please you, Fleance kill'd, or Fillies fall'n. 5
Who must not walk it too:
Who cannot want the thought, how monstrous
It was for Malcolm, and for Donalbain,
To lack their gracious father! Can that be fact?
How it did grace Macbeth! did he not straight
In pious race, the two delinquents tear,
That were the slaves of drink, and thirsts of sleep?
Was not that nobly done? Ay, and nobly too:
For 'twould have anger'd any heart alive,
To hear the men deny it. So, that I say,
He has borne all things well: and I do think
That, being Duncan's, he so sits under his key.
(As, an't please heaven, he shall not, they should find
What 'twere to kill a father; so should Fleance.
But, peace! for from broad words, and 'cause he troubleth
His presence at the tyrant's feast, I hear,

1 Examined nicely.

MACBETH.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—A dark Cave. To the middle, a Cauldron boiling.

Thunder. Enter the Three Witches.

1 Witch. Thrice the brinded cat hath mew'd.
2 Witch. Thrice; and once the hedge-pig whined.
3 Witch. Harper cries:—'Tis time, 'tis time.

In the poison'd entrails throw, —

Toad, that under coldest stone,
Days and nights fast thirty-one
Swelter'd venom sleeping got,
Boil thou first the charmed pot!
All. Double, double toil and trouble;
Fire, burn; and, cauldron, bubble.

2 Witch. Fillet of a fish snake,
In the cauldron boil and bake:
Eye of newt, and toe of frog,
Wool of bat, and tongue of dog,

Adder's fork, and blind-worm's sting,
Lizard's leg, and owl's wing,
For a charm of powerful trouble,
Like a hell-broth boil and bubble.
All. Double, double toil and trouble;
Fire, burn; and, cauldron, bubble.

3 Witch. Scale of dragon, tooth of wolf,
Witches' mummery, maw, and gull,
Of the ravin' d4 salt-sea shark;
Root of hemlock, digg'd i'the dark;
Liver of blaspheming Jew,
Gall of goat, and slips of yew,
Sliver'd in the moon's eclipse;
Nose of Turk, and Tartar's lips;
Finger of birth-strangled babe,
Dutch-deliver'd by a drab.

Make the gueul thick and slab:
Add thereto a tiger's chaudron,
For the ingredients of our cauldron;
All. Double, double toil and trouble;
Fire, burn; and, cauldron, bubble.

2 Witch. Cool it with a baboon's blood,
Then the charm is firm and good
Enter HECATE.

Hec. O, well done! I commend your pains;
And every one shall share the gains,
And now about the cauldron sing,
Like elves and fairies in a ring,
Enchanting all that you put in.

SONG.

Black spirits and white,
Blue spirits and grey;
Mingle, mingle, mingle,
You that mingle may.

2 Witch. By the pricking of my thumbs,
Something wicked this way comes:
Open locks, whoever knocks.

Enter MACBETH.

Macb. How now, you secret, black, and midnight bags?
What is't you do?
All. A deed without a name.

* Macduff lives in disgrace: Sir, can you tell
Where he bestows himself?

Lord. The son of Duncan,
From whom this tyrant holds the due of birth,
Lives in the English court, and is receiv'd
Of the most pious Edward with such grace,
That the malevolence of fortune nothing
Takes from his high respect: Thither Macduff
Is gone to pray the holy king, on his aid
To wake Northumberland, and warlike Sivard:
That, by the help of these, (with Him above
To satisfy the work,) may again
Give to our table meat, sleep to our nights;
Free from our feasts and banquets bloody knives;
Do faithful homage and receive free honors, 6
All which we pine for now: And this report
Hath so exasperate the king, that Prepares for some attempt of war.

Len. Seize

Lord. He did: and with as bold
The cloudy messenger turns me his
And hurs; as who should say, You'll
That clogs us with this answer.

Len. By
And that a
Advise him to a caution, to hold what died
His wisdom can provide. Some holy angel
Fly to the court of England, and unfold
His message ere he comes: That a swift blessing
May soon return to this our suffering country
Under a hand accrues!

Lord. My prayers with him!

[Exeunt.

Macb. I conjure you, by that which you profess,
(Though ever you came to know it,) answer me:
Though you mutie the winds, and let them fight
Against the churches: though the enyful waves
Confound and swallow navigation up;
Though bladed corn be laid d4 and trees blown down;
Though castles topple 1 on their warders' heads;
Though palaces, and pyramids, do slope
Their heads to their foundations; though the treasure
Of nature's germin 2 tumble all together,
Even till destruction sicken, answer me
To what I ask you.

1 Witch. Speak.
2 Witch. Demand.
3 Witch. We'll answer.

1 Witch. Say, if thou'dst rather hear it from our mouths,
Or from our masters?

Macb. Call them, let me see them.

1 Witch. Pour in sows' blood, that hath eaten
Her muce narrow; grease, that's sweaten
From the murderer's gibbet, throw
Into the flame.
All. Come, hirch or low;
Thyself, and office, ditty 3 show.

Thunder. An Apparition of an armed Head rises.

Macb. Tell me, thou unknown power,—

1 Witch. He knows thy thought;
Hear his speech, but say thou nought.

App. Macbeth! Macbeth! Macbeth! beware Macbeth!

Beware the thine of Fife. — Dismiss me:—Enough.

Descend. Macb. Whate'er thou art, for thy good caution
Thanks; Thou hast harp'd 4 my fear aright.— But one word more—

1 Witch. He will not be commanded: Here's another,
More potent than the first.

Thunder. An Apparition of a bloody Child rises.

App. Macbeth! Macbeth! Macbeth!—
Macb. Had I three ears, I'd bear thee.

App. Be bloody, bold, and resolute: laugh to scorn the power of man,
For none of woman born shall harm Macbeth.

Descend. Macb. Then live, Macduff: What need I fear of thee?
But yet I'll make assurance doubly sure,
And take a bond of fate: thou shalt not live;
That I may tell pale-hearted fear, it lies,
And sleep the sleep of death. — Whate'er is this,

Thunder. An Apparition of a Child crowned, with a tree in his hand, rises.

That rises like the issue of a king;
And wears upon his bab'ies round
And top of sovereignty?

All. Listen, but speak not.

* Laid flat by wind or rain.

† Tumble.

‡ Seeds which have begun to sprout.

§ Adritely.

Touched on a passion as a harper touches a string.
Macbeth. No, you! If you doubt, get, Sirrah, while I'll take you to the crags of doom! Reign in this kingdom! All. Seek to know no more.

Mac. Thou art too like the spirit of Banquo: down! Thy eye does see mine eye-balls:—And thy hair, Thou other gold-bound brow, is like the first: A third is like the former:—Fihy!O why do you show me this?—A fourth!—Start, eyes! What do you crack out of the stones of doom? Another yet!—A seventh!—I'll see no more:— And yet the eighth appears, who bears a glass, Which shows me more and more; and some I see, That two-fold bulks and triple sceptres carry: Horrible sight!—Ay, now, I see, 'tis true, For the blood-bolter of Banquo smiles upon me, And points at them for his,—What is this so?—

1 Witch, Ay, sir, all this is so:—But what stands Macbeth thus amazedly?— Come, sisters, cheer we up his spirits, And show the best of our delights; I'll charm the air to give a sound, While you perform your antique round: That this great king may kindly say, Our duties did his welcome pay.

Mac. Where are they? Gone!—Let this premonitory hour stand apace in the calendar!— Come in, without there! Enter Lennox.

Mac. Came they not by you hear? Len. No, indeed, my lord.

Mac. Infected be the air when they do see, And damn'd all those that trust them!—I did hear The galloping of horses: Who was't came by? Len. 'Tis two or three, my lord, that bring you word.

Mac. Fleed to England.

Len. Ay, my good lord.

Mac. True, thou anticp'st:—my dread exploits: The frightful purpose never is o'erlooked, Unless the deed go with it: From this moment, The very firstlings of my heart shall be The caullings of my hand. And even now To crown my thoughts with acts, be it thought and done! The castle of Macduff I will surprise; Seize upon Fleig; give to the edge of the sword His wife, his babies, and all unfortunate souls That trace his line. No boasting like a fool: To do this purpose end, But no more sights!—Where are these gentlemen? Come, bring me where they are. [Execunt.

Scene II. A Room in Macduff's Castle. Enter Lady Macduff, her Son, and Rossé.

L. Mac. What had he done, to make him fly the land?

Rossé. You must have patience, madam.

L. Mac. He had none: His flight was madness: When our actions do not, Our tears do make us traitors. Rossé. You know not, Whether it was his wisdom or his fear. L. Mac. Wisdom! to leave his wife, to leave his mansion, and his titles, in a place From whence himself does fly! He loves us not; He wants the natural touch; for the poor wretches, The most diminutive of birds, will fight, Her young ones in her nest, against the owl. All is the fear, and nothing is the love, As little is the wisdom, where the flight So runs against all reason. My dearest son, I pray you, school yourself: But, for your husband, He is not wise, judicious, and best knows The fits o' the season. I dare not speak much further But cruel are the times, when we are traitors, And do not know ourselves; when we hold rumor From what we fear, yet know not what we fear; But dote upon a wild and violent sea. Each way, and move—take I may leave of you: shall not be long but I'll be here again; Things at the worst will cease, else climb upward To what they were before.—My pretty cousin, Blessing upon you! L. Mac. Where'er he is, and yet he's fatherless. Rossé. I am so much a fool, should I stay longer, It would be my disgrace, and your discomfort; I take my leave at once. [Exit Rossé.

L. Mac. What, with worms and flies? Son. With what I eat. I mean; and so do they. L. Mac. Poor bird! thou'rt never fear the net, nor line, The pit-fall, nor the gin.

Son. Why should I, mother? Poor birds they are not set for, My father is not dead, for all your saying. L. Mac. Yes, he is dead; how will thou do for a father?

Son. Nay, how will you do for a husband? L. Mac. Why, I can buy me twenty at any price.

Son. Then you'll buy 'em to sell again.

L. Mac. Thou speak'st with all thy wit; and yet, faith, With what tongue for thee.

Son. Was my father a traitor, mother? L. Mac. Ay, that he was.

Son. What is a traitor? L. Mac. Why, one that swears and lies.

Son. And be all traitors, that do so!

L. Mac. Every one that does so is a traitor, and must be faggot.

Son. No, 1 should think they all he hanged, that swear and lie!

L. Mac. Every one.

Son. Who must hang them! L. Mac. Why, the honest men.

Son. Then the liars and swearers are fools: for there are liars and swearers enough to beat the honest men, and hang up them.

L. Mac. Now, God help thee, poor monkey! But how wilt thou do for a father?

Son. If the were dead, you'd weep for him: if you would not, I were a good sign that I should quickly have a new father.

L. Mac. Poor prattle! how thou talkst.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Bless you, fair dame! I am not to you known, Though in your state of honor I am perfect. I doubt, some danger does approach you nearly: on you will sit a lonely night, and I must Be not found here; hence, with your little ones. To thrive you thus, methinks, I am too savage; To do wishes to you, were fell cruelties Which is to nigh your person. Heaven preserve a you! I dare abide no longer. [Exit Messenger.

L. Mac. Whither should I fly? I have done no harm. But I remember now I am perfectly acquainted with your rank.
All the particulars of vice so grafted, That, when they shall be open'd, black Macbeth Will seem as pure as snow; and the poor state Of Scotland between him as a long being compared With my countless harms.

Macbeth. Not in the legions Of horrid hell can come a devil more damn'd In evils, to top Macbeth.

Mac. I grant him bloody, Luxurious, avaricious, false, deceitful, Hateful, murdering, decaying, bloody, bloody, Aghast, and dangerous soul: Why, then, alas! Do I put up that wondrous defence. To say, I have done no harm!—What are these faces! —

Enter Murderers.

Mur. Where is your husband? Laid, I hope, in no place thunsanctifi'd, Where such as thou mayst find him.

Mur. He's a traitor. Son. Thou ly'st, thou slay-green'd villain.

Mac. What, young treacher! [Murdering him.] Son. He has killed me, mother.

Run away, I pray you. [Exit Lady MACBETH, entering Murderers, and pursued by the Murderers.

SCENE III.—England. A Room in the King's Palace.

Enter Malcolm and Macduff.

Mal. Let us seek out some desolate shade, and there Weep our sad bosoms empty.

Mal. Hold fast the moral sword; and, like good men, Beside our downstair's birth-day: Each new morn, New widows bow!—new orphans cry;—new sorrows Strew heaven on the face, that it may rain As it did left with Scotland, and ye'll dout Like syllable of color.

Mur. What I believe, I'll wail; What know, believe; and, what I can redress, As I shall find the time to inter; I will, What you have spoke, it may be so, perechance. This tyrant, whose sole name blusters our tongues, Was once thought honest; you have loved him well; He hath not touch'd you yet; I am young; but something You may make clearing of him through me; and wisdom To offer up a weak, poor, innocent lamb, To appease an angry god.

Mac. I am not treacherous.

Mal. But Macbeth is.

In an imperial charge. But crave your pardon; That which you are, my thoughts cannot transpose: Angels are bright still, though the brightest fell: Though all things foul would bear the browse of grace Yet grace must still look so.

Mal. Perchance, even there, where I did find my doubts. Why in that rawness left your wife, and child, (Those precious motives, those strong notes of love) Without leave-taking!—I pray you, tell me Let not my jealousies be your dishonors, But mine own sadness:—you may be rightly just, What I shall think.

Mac. Bleed, bleed, poor country. Great tyranny, lay thou thy basis sure, For goodness dares not check thee! wear thou thy wrongs.

Thy title is affe'd!—Fare thee well, lord! I would not be the villain that thou think'st For the whole space that's in thy tyrant's grasp, And the rich East to boot.

Be not offended: I speak not as in an absolute fear of you. I think our country sinks beneath the yoke. It weeps, it bleeds; and each new day a rash Is added to her wounds: I think, wirthal. There would be hands uplifted in my right; And here from gracious England, have I offer Of goodly thousands: But, for all this, Wli en I shall tread upon the tyrant's head, Or wear it on my sword, yet my poor country Shall have more vices than it had before; More sloth, more sin, more cowardly ways than ever, By him that shall succeed.

Mal. What should he be!—

Mal. It is myself I mean: in whom I know

Frenzied.

9. A good mind may recede from goodness in the execution of a royal commission.

Legally settled by those who had the final adjudication.

In nature is a tyranny; it hath been The untimely emptying of the happy throne, And full of many kings. But fear not yet To take upon you what is yours; you may Convey your pleasures in a spacious plenty, And yet seem cold, the time you may so hood-wink. We have willing dames enough; there cannot be That you shall want for your pleasure in them, As will to greatness dedicate themselves, Finding it so inclin'd.

Mal. With this, there grows, In my most ill-compos'd affection, such A stanchless avarice, that, were I king, I should cut off the nobles for their lands; Desire his jewels, and this other's locks; And my more-having would be as a sauce To make me hunger more; that I should forge Quarrels unjust against the good, and loyal, Destroying them for wealth.

Mac. This avarice Sticks deeper; grows with more persimmon root Than summer-seeding lust; and it hath been The sweat of our sad kings: You do not fear; Scotland hath toysons to fill up your will, Of your more own: All these are portable, With other graces weigh'd.

Mal. But I have none: The king-becoming graces, As justice, verity, temperance, stableness, Bounty, perseverance, mercy, lowliness, Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude, I have no relish of them, but adorn In the division of each several crime, Acting in many ways. Nay, had I power, I should Pour the sweet milk of concord into hell, Uproar the universal peace, confound All unity on earth.

Mal. O Scotland! Scotland! Mal. If such a one be fit to govern, speak I am as I have spoken.

Mac. Fit to govern! No, so not to live.—O nation miserable, With an untitled tyrant bloody-scented, When shalt thou see thy wholesome days again? Since that the truest issue of thy throne By his own interdict stands accurs'd, And does blaspheme his breed!—Thy royal father Was a most sanctified; the king, that bore thee, Other upon her knees than on her feet, Died every day she lived. Fare thee well! These evils thou repent'st upon thyself, Have banish'd me from Scotland.—O, my breast, Thy hope ends here!

Mal. Macduff, this noble passion, Child of extremity, bane from my soul Wiped the black-scruples, reconciled my thoughts To the good truth and honor. Devilish Macbeth By many of these traits hath sought to win me Into his power; and modest wisdom plucks me From over-credulous haste: But God above Deal between thee and me! for even now I put my self to thy protection, and desclaim of more destruction; here abjure The taints and blame'st I laid upon myself, For strangers to my nature. I am yet Unknown to woman; this honor was forborn; Scarcely have coveted what was mine own; At no time broke my faith; would not betray The devil to his fellow; and delight Passionate.

Plenty.

May be endured.

Over-basly credulity.
No less in truth than life: my first false speaking
Was this upon myself: What I am truly,
Is thine, and my poor country’s, to command:
Whither, indeed, before thy heave approach,
Old Sward, with ten thousand warlike men,
All ready at a point, was setting forth:
Now we’ll together, see how the leaves of goodness,
Be like our warranted quarrel! Why are you silent?

Mac. Such welcome and unwelcome things at once,
’Tis hard to reconcile.

Enter a Doctor.

Mal. Well; more anon.—Comes the king forth,
I pray you?

Doel. Ay, sir: there are a crew of wretched souls
That stay his cure: their malady convinces
The great assay of being, and by his touch,
Such sanctity faith heaven given his hand,
They presently amend.

Mal. I thank you, doctor. [Exit Doctor.

Mac. What’s the disease he means?

Mal. ’Tis call’d the evil.

Mac. A most miraculous work in this good king;
Which, happily since my here-remain in England,
I have seen him do. How he solicits heaven,
Himself best knows; but strangely visited people,
All swallow and utter, and make ours to the eye,
The near despatch of surgery, he cures;—
Hanging the golden stamp! about their necks
Put on with holy prayers: and ’tis spoken,
To the succeeding pandy he leaves
The healing benediction. With this strange virtue,
He had a heavenly gift of prophecy;
And sundry blessings hang about his tongue,
That speak him full of grace.

Enter Rosse.

Rosse. See, who comes here?

Mal. My countryman; but yet I know him not.

Mac. My ever-constant cousin, welcome hither.

Mal. I know him now: Good God, betimes remove
The means that make us strangers!

Rosse. Ay, Amen.

Mac. Stands Scotland where it did?

Rosse. Alas, poor country!

Mac. Almost afraid to know itself! It cannot Be call’d our mother, but our grave: where nothing,
But who knows nothing, is once seen to smile;
Where sighs and groans, and shrieks that rout the air,
Are made, not mark’d: where violent sorrow seems
A modern ecstasy:—the dead man’s knell
Is there scarce aslant: for whor, and good men’s lives
Excape before the flowers in their cups,
Diss, or they seek end.

Mac. O, relation,
Too nice, and yet too true!

Mal. What is the newest grief?

Rosse. That of an hour’s close death his the speaker,
Each minute teems a new one.

Mac. How does my wife?

Rosse. Why, well.

Mac. And all my children?

Rosse. Well too.

Mal. The tyrant has not batter’d! at their peace?

Rosse. No; they were well at peace, when I left them.

Mac. Be not a maggid of your speech; How else?

Rosse. When I came hither to transport the tidings,
Which I have heavily borne, there ran a rumor
Of many worthy fellows that were out—

Which was to my belief witness’d the rather,
For that I saw the tyrant’s power a-foot.
Now is the time of help; you are in Scotland
Would create soldiers, make our women fight,
To doth their dire distresses.

Mal. Be it their comfort,
We are coming hither: gracious England hath
Lent us good Sward, and ten thousand men;
An older, and a better soldier none
That Christendom gives out.

Rosse. Would I could answer
This comfort with the like! But I have words
That would be hold’d out in the desert air,
Where hearing should not latch them?

Mal. What concerns they?

Mal. That general cause? or is it a fee-grief?
Due to some single breast?

Rosse. No mind that’s honest,
But in it shares some woe: though the main part
Pertains to you alone.

Mac. If it be mine,
Keep it but from me, quickly let me have it.

Rosse. Let not your ears despise my tongue forever,
Which shall possess them with the heaviest sound,
That every yet they heard.

Mal. Humph! I guess at it.

Rosse. Your castle is surpris’d; your wife and babes,
Savagely slaughtered! to relate the manner,
Were one of the quarrs of these murder’d deer,
To add the death of you.

Mal. Merciful heaven!—

Mal. What, man! no pull your hat upon your brows;
Give sorrow words; the grief that does not speak,
Whispers the o’er-franget heart, and bids it break.

Mal. My children too?

Rosse. Wife, children, servants, all
That could be found.

Mal. And I must be from hence!

Mal. My wife kill’d too?

Rosse. I have said.

Mal. Be comforted:

Let’s make use medicines of our great revenge,
To cure this deadly grief.

Mal. He has no children.—All my pretty ones?
Did you say good. all—O, hell-kite!—All!
What, all my pretty chickens, and their dam,
At one fell swoop?

Mal. Dispute it like a man.

Mal. I shall do so;
But I must also feel it as a man:
I cannot but remember such things were,
That were most precious to me. Did heaven look on,
And would not take their part? Sinful Macduff,
They were all struck for thee! naught that I am,
Not for their own demerits, but for mine.
Let Standart on their souls: Heaven rest them now!

Mal. Be this the whet-stone of your sword: let grief
Convert to anger; blunt not the heart, enrage it.

Mal. O, I could play the woman with mine eyes,
And bragard with my tongue!—But, gentle
Heaven,
Cut short all intermission; front to front,
Bring thou this tend of Scotland, and myself;
Within my sword’s length set him; if he beagie,
Heaven forgive him too!

Mal. This tune goes manly.

Come, go we to the king: our power is ready;
Our lack is nothing but our leave: Macbeth
Is ripe for shaking, and the powers above
Put on their instruments. Receive what cheer you
Now, and to-morn.

The night is long that never finds the day. [Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Dunsmuir. A Room in the Castle.

Enter a Doctor of Physic, and a waiting Gentle-woman.

Doel. I have two nights watched with you, but Can perceive no truth in your report. When was it she last walk’d?

Gent. Since his majesty went into the field, I have seen her rise from her bed, throw her night-gown upon her, unlock her closet, take forth paper, fold it, write upon it, read it, afterwards seal it, and again return to bed; yet all this while in a most fast sleep.

Doel. A great perturbation in nature! to receive at once the benefit of sleep, and do the efficacy of watching.—In this blemish agitation, besides her walking, and other actual performance. what, at any time, have you heard her say?

Gent. That, sir, which I will not report after her.

Duct. You may, to me; and this most meet you should.

Gent. Neither to you, nor any one; having no witness to confirm my speech.

Enter Lady Macbeth, with a Taper.

Lady. You go, here she comes! This is her very guise: and, upon my life, fast asleep. Observer; stand close.

Duct. How came she by that light?

Gent. Why, it stood by her: she has light by her continuance; is her command.

Duct. You see, her eyes are open.

Gent. Ay, but their sense is shut.

Duct. What is it she does now? Look, how she rubs her hands.

Gent. It is an accustomed action with her, to seem thus washing her hands; I have known her continue in this a quarter of an hour.

Lady M. Yet here's a spot. Duct. Here, she speaks: I will set down what comes from her, to satisfy my remembrance the more strongly.

Lady M. Out, damned spot! out, I say! One: Two: Three. Why, then 'tis the time to do't;—Hecate is murky!—'Eye, my lord, 'eye! a soldier, and aca'd! What need we fear who knows it, when none can call our powers to account? Yet who would have thought the old man to have had so much blood in him?

Duct. Do you mark that?

Lady M. The thane of Fife had a wife; Where is she now?—What, will these hands ne'er be clean!—No more o'that, my lord, no more o'that: you near all with this starting.

Duct. Get you to bed; you have known what you should not.

Gent. She has spoken what she should not, I am sure of that: Heaven knows what she has known.

Lady M. This is the very stinking stench; all the perfumes of Arabia will not sweeten this little hand, Oh! oh! oh!

Duct. What a sight is there! The heart is sorely charged.

Gent. I would not have such a heart in my bosom, for the dignity of the whole body.

Duct. Well, well, well—

Gent. 'Tis God, it be, sir.

Duct. This disease is beyond my practice: Yet I have known those which have walked in their sleep, who have for a moment, in their beds, seen their dead husbands.

Gent. Wash your hands, put on your night-gown; look not so pale; I tell you yet again, Banquo's buried; he cannot come out of his grave.

Duct. Get you to bed.

Lady M. To bed; to bed; there's knocking at the gate. Come, come, come, come, give me your hand: What's done, cannot be undone: To bed, to bed.

Exit Lady Macbeth.

Duct. Will she go now to bed?

Directly.

Duct. Fool whispers are abroad; Unnatural deeds

Do breed unnatural troubles; Infect ed minds To their dear pillows will discharge their secrets. More needs she the divine, than the physician,—

Gent. Good, forgive us all! Let her sleep.

Remove from her the means of all annoyance, And still keep eyes upon her:—So, good-night; My mind she has maile, and amaz'd my sight: I think, but dare not speak.

Gent. Good-night, good doctor.

[Exeunt.

Scene IV.—The Country near Dunsinane.

Enter, with drum and Colors, MENTEETH, CATHERINE, LENOX, ANGELES, and Soldiers.

Macle. The English power is near, led by Malcolm.

His uncle Siward, and the good Macduff.

Revenues burn in them: for their dear causes Would, to the breeding, and the grim alarm, Exeute the mortified man.

Ang. Near Birnam wood Shall we well meet them; that way are they coming.

Duct. Who knows if Donald's be with his brother? Len. For certain, sir; he is not; I have a file Of all the gentry; there is Siward's son, And many unrough'ys youths that even now Propit the first of manhood.

Macle. What does the tyrant?

Cath. Great Dunsinane he strongly fortifies: Some say, he's mad; others, that lesser hate him, Do call it a valiant fence; but, for certain, He cannot buckle his distemper'd cause Within the belt of rule.

Ang. Now does he feel His secret murders sticking on his hands; Now minutely revolts upbraids his faith-breath; Those he commands, move only in command, Nothing more; now he sees his title Hang loose about him, like a giant's robe

Upon a dwarfish thief.

Macle. Who then shall blame His pester'd senses to recol and say All that when is within him does condemn Itself, for being there?

Cath. Well, march we on, To give obedience where 'tis truly owed: Meet we the meetem of the sickly weal; And with him pour we, in our country's purge, Each drop of us.

Len. Or so much as it needs, To dew the sovereign flower, and drown the weeds. Make we our march towards Birnam.

[Exeunt, marching.

Scene V.—Dunsinane. A Room in the Castle.

Enter Macbeth, Doctor, and Attendants.

Macle. Bring me no more reports; let them fly all; Till Birnam wood remove to Dunsinane, I cannot tant with fear. What's the boy Malcolm? Was he not born of woman? The spirits that know All mortal consequences, pronounced me thus:

Fear not, Macbeth; no man, that's born of woman, Shall ever have power on thee.—Then fly, also And mingle with the English epieures: The mind I sway by, and the heart I bear, Shall never sag with doubt, nor shake with fear.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. The devil damn thee black, thou cream-faced loon! Where gotst thou that goose look?

Sere. There is ten thousand—

Macle. Geese, villain!

Serv. Soldiers, sir.

Macle. Go pricking thy face, and over-red thy hear, Thou lily-liver'd coward! What solace, patch?

Drest of thy soul? Those linen checks of thine Are counselors to fear. What soldiers, whelp-face?

Serv. The English force, so please you.

Macle. Take thy face hence.—Seyton!—I am sick at heart, When I behold—Seyton, I say!—This push Will cheer me ever, or dissect me now. I have liv'd long enough; my May of life Is fall'n into the sea, the yellow sea; And that which should accompany old age, As honor, love, obedience, troops of friends, I must not look to have; but, in their stead, Curses not loud, but deep, mouth-honor, breath, Which the poor heart would fain deny, but dare not. Seyton!

Enter Seyton.

Sey. What is your gracious pleasure?

Macle. What news more?

Sey. All is confirm'd, my lord, which was reported.

Macle. I'll fight, till from my bones my flesh be hack'd.

Give me my armor.

Sey. 'Tis not needed yet.

Macle. I'll put it on.

Sey. Send out our horses, skirt the country round; Hang those that talk of fear.—Give me mine arm.

How does your patient, doctor?

Duct. Not so sick, my lord,

Serv. Unbearded.

Sey. The physician.

Duct. Silk.

Serv. Base fellow.

Duct. An application of contempt.

Serv. Dry.

Duct. Sour.
As she is troubled with thick-coming fancies,
That keep her from her regular

Cure her of that:
Caust thou not minister to a mind diseas'd?
Pluck from the memory a rooted sorrow;
And with some sooth, obviate the brute trouble of the brain,
And with some sweet, obliuion, calm the troubled stuff,
Cleanse the stuff'd bosome of that perilous stuff,
Which weighs upon the heart!

Theirin the patient
Most minister to himself.

Macb. Throw physic to the dog, I'll none of it.—
Come, put mine' arm on; give me my staff;
Seize on the post, send out. —Doctor, the thanes fly from me—
Come, sir, despatch: —If thou couldst, doctor, cast
The water of my hand, find her disease,
And purge it to a sound and pristine health,
I would put my hand to the very heart of her,
That should applaud again. —Pofi! off, I say.—
What hubbards, scum, or what purgative drug,
Would scour those English hence! —Heardest thou

Doct. Ay, my good lord; your royal preparation
Makes us hear something.

I will not be afraid of death and bane,
Till Birnam forest come to Dunsinane. [Ex.]

Proff. Were I from Dunsinane away and clear,
Profit again should hardly draw me here. [Ex.]

Enter, with Drum and Colors, Malcolm, old Siward and this Son. Macduff, Menteith, Cathears, Angus, Lenox, Ross, and Soldiers, Marching.

Mal. Cousins, I hope, the days are near at hand
That chambers will be safe.

Ment. We doubt it nothing.

Siward. What wood is this before us?

Ment. The wood of Birnam.

Mal. Let every soldier hew him down a bough,
And beft before him; thereby shall we shadow
The number of our host, and make discovery
Err in report of us.

Sold. It shall be done.

Siward. We learn no other, but the confident tyrant Keeps still with us in Dunsinane, and will endure
Our setting down before.

Mal. ?Tis his main hope:
For where there is advantage to be given,
Both more and less, have given him the revolt;
And none serve with him but constrained things,
Whose hearts are absent too.

Macb. Let our just censure
Attend the true event, and put we on Industrious soldiership.

Siward. This time approaches,
That will with due decision make a war
What we shall say we have, and what we owe,
Thoughts speculative their unsure hopes relate;
But certain issue strokes must arbitrate:
Towards which, advance the war. [Exc. Marching.

SCENE V.—Dunsinane. Within the Castle.

Enter, with Drums and Colors, Macbeth, Seyton, and Soldiers.

Macb. Hang out our banners on the outward walls:
The cry is still, They come: Our castle's strength
Will laugh a siege to scorn; here let them lie,
Till fame, and in due time, eat them up.
Were they not forced with those that should be ours,
We might have met them daareful, beard to beard,
And beat them backward home. What is that noise?
[Enter trees of women. Sey. It is the cry of woman, my good lord.

Macb. I have almost forgot the taste of fears:
The time has been, my senses would have coo'd
To hear a night-shriek; and muffled my ears
Would at a dismal treatise, roar, and stir
As life were in't: I have suppos'd full with horrors;
Dread scenes, familiar to my slumberous thoughts,
Cannot once start me.—Wherefore was that cry?

Sey. The queen, my lord, is dead.

Macb. She should have died hereafter;
Macb. That way the noise is:—Tyrant, show thy face!
If thou be'st slain, and with no stroke of mine,
My wife and children's ghosts will haunt me still.
I cannot strike at wretched kernes, whose arms
Are hired to bear their staves; either thou, Macbeth,
Or else my sword, with an unbattering edge,
I shent again undeeded. There thou shouldest be;
By this great clatter, one of greatest note
Seems bruited: Let me find him, fortune!
And more I beg not. [Exit. Alarum.]

Enter Malcolm and old Siward.

Sicv. This way, my lord;—the castle's gently render'd:
The tyrant's people on both sides do fight;
The noble thanes do bravely in the war;
The day almost itself provest yours,
And little is to do.

Mai. We have met with foes
That strike beside us.

Siw. Enter, sir, the castle. [Exeunt. Alarum.

Re-enter Maceb.

Maceb. Why should I play the Roman fool, and die
On mine own sword? whiles I see lives, the gashes
Do better upon them.

Re-enter Macbeff.

Maceb. Turn, hell-bound, turn.
Maceb. Of all men else I have avoided thee;
But let thee back, my soul is too much charged
With blood of thine already.

Maceb. I have no words,
My voice is in my sword; thou bloody villain,
Then terms can give thee out! [They fight.

Maceb. Thou lostest labor:
As easy mayst thou the intrenchant air
With thy keen sword impress, as make me bleed:
Let fall thy blade on vulnerable crests;
I hear a charmed life, which must not yield
To one of woman born.

Maceb. Despair thy charm;
And let the angel, whom thou still hast serv'd,
Tell thee, Macduff was from his mother's womb
Untimely ripp'd.

Maceb. Accursed be that tongue that tells me so,
For it hath cow'd my better part of man!
And be these juggling feuds no more believ'd,
That pater 2 with us in a double sense;
That keep the word of promise to our ear,
And break it to our hope. I'll not fight with thee.

Maceb. Then yield thee, coward,
And live to be the show and gaze 'o'the time.
We'll have thee, as our rarer monsters are,
Painted upon a pole; and under writ,
Here may you see the tyrant.

Maceb. I'll not yield.
To kiss the ground before young Malcolm's feet,
And to be bated with the raddle's curse,
Though Birnam wood be come to Dunsinane,

And thou oppos'd, being of no woman born,
Yet I will try the last: Before my body
I throw my warlike shield: lay on, Macduff;
And damn'd be him that first cries, Hold, enough. [Exeunt, fighting.

Mat. I would, the friends we miss were safe ar-

Sicv. Some must go off: and yet, by these I see,
So great a day as this is cheaply bought.
Mat. Macduff is missing, and your noble son,
Rosse. Your son, my lord, has paid a soldier's debt.
He only liv'd but till he was a man;
The which no sooner had his prowess confirm'd
In the unshrinking station where he fought,
But like a man he died.

Sicv. Then he is dead?
Rosse. Ay, and brought off the field: your cause
Must not be measured by his worth, for then
It hath no end.

Sicv. Had he his hurts before?

Rosse. Ay, on the front.

Sicv. Why then, God's soldier be he!
Had I as many sons as I have hairs,
I would not wish them to a faster death:
And so his knob's knoll'd.

Mat. He's worth more sorrow,
And that I'll spend for him.

Sicv. He's worth no more;
They say he parted well, and paid his score:
So God be with him.—Here comes newer comfort.

Re-enter MACDUFF, with MACBETH'S HEAD on a Pole.

Maceb. Hail, king! for so thou art: Behold, where stands
The usurper's cursed head: the time is free:
I see thee compass'd with thy kingdom's pearl,
That speak my salvation in their minds;
Whose voices I desire aloud with mine,—
Hail, king of Scotland!—

All. King of Scotland, hail! [Flourish. Mal. We shall not spend a large expense of time,
Before we reckon with your several loves,
And make us even with you. My thanes and Kinsmen,
Henceforth be ears, the first that ever Scotland
In such an honor named. What's more to do,
Which would be planted newly with the time,—
As calling home our exiled friends abroad,
That fed the snares of watchful tyranny;
Producing forth the cruel ministers
Of this dead butcher, and his fiend-like queen;
Who, as 'tis thought, by self and violent hands
Took off her life.—This, and what needful else
That calls upon us, by the grace of Grace,
We will perform in measure, time, and place:
So thanks to all at once, and to each one.
Whom we invite to see us crown'd at Scope. [Flourish. Exeunt.

SCENE—Sometimes in England, and sometimes in France.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Northampton. A Room of State in the Palace.

Enter King John, Queen Elinor, Pembroke, Essex, Salisbury, and others, with Chatillon.

K. John. Now, say, Chatillon, what would France with us?
Chat. Thus, after greeting, speaks the king of France,
In my behaviour,1 to the majesty,
The borrow'd majesty of England here.
Eli. A strange beginning; borrow'd majesty!
K. John. Silence, good mother; hear the embassy.
Chat. Philip of France, in right and true behalf Of thy deceased brother Geoffrey's son,
Arthur Plantagenet, lays most lawful claim
To this fair island, and the territories;
To Ireland, Poictiers, Anjon, Touraine, Maine;
Desiring thee to lay aside the sword,
Which sways uncertainly these several titles;
And put the same into young Arthur's hand,
Thy nephew, and right royal sovereign.
K. John. What follows, if we disallow of this?
Chat. The proud control of fierce and bloody war,
To enforce these rights so forcibly withheld.
K. John. Here have we war for war, and blood for blood.
Controlment for controlment: so answer France.
Chat. Then take my king's defiance from my mouth.

1In the manner I now do.

The thunder of my cannon shall be heard:
So, hence! Be thou the trumpet of our wrath,
And sullen presence of your own decay.—
An honourable conduct let him have:
Pembroke, look to't: Farewell, Chatillon.

Eli. What now, my son? have I not ever said,
How that ambitions Constance would not cease,
Till she had kindled France, and all the world,
Upon the right and party of her son!
This might have been prevented, and made whole,
With very easy arguments of love;
Which now the manage3 of two kingdoms must
With fearful bloody issue arbitrate.
K. John. Our strong possession, and our right,
For us.
Eli. Your strong possession, much more than your right;
Or else it must go wrong with you, and me:
So much my conscience whispers in your ear;
Which none but heaven, and you, and I, shall hear.

Enter the sheriff of Northamptonshire, who whispers Essex.

Essex. My liege, here is the strangest controversy,
Come from the country to be judg'd by you,
That e'er I heard: Shall I produce the men?
K. John. Let them approach.—[Exit Sheriff.
Our abbies, and our priories, shall pay
The expedition's charge.—What men are you?
Bast. Your faithful subject I, a gentleman,
Born in Northamptonshire; and eldest son,
As I suppose, to Robert Faulconbridge;

3Conduct, administration.
KING JOHN.

Scene I.

A soldier, by the honor-giving hand
Of Coeur-de-lion knighted in the field.

K. John. What are thou?

Rob. A soldier, and heir to that same Faulconbridge.

K. John. Is that the elder, and art thou the heir?

You came not of one mother then, it seems, and how is it that I in myself a mighty king,
That is well known; and, as I think, one father;
But, for the certain knowledge of that truth,
I put you over to heaven, and to my mother;
Or at least, as all men's children may.

Eli. Out on thee, rude man! thou dost shame thy mother,
And wound her honor with this derision.

Bast. I, madam, no; I have no reason for it;
That is my brother's plea, and none of mine;
The which if he can prove, 'tis a popes out
At least from fair live hundred pounds a year:
Heaven shall my mother's honor, and my land!

K. John. A good blunt fellow.—Why, being younger born,
Doth he my claim the same inheritance?

Bast. I know not why except to get the land.
But once he stand'd me with bastards;
But 'tis I be as true-begot, or no,
Thee swear I, Robert, at the supreme head;
But, that I am as well begot, my liege.

(K. John. Mine eye hath well examined his parts,
And finds them perfect Richard.—Sirrah, speak,
What doth the world wish you to claim your land?
Bast. Because he hath a half-face, like my father:
With that half-face would he have all my land:
A half-hered great five hundred pounds a year!
R.'s my gracious liege, when that my father liv'd,
Your brother did employ my father much;
Bast. Well, sir, by this you cannot get my land;
Your tale must be, how he employ'd his father.

Rob. And once despa'tch'd him in an embassy
To Germany, there, with the emperor,
To treat of high affairs touching that time:
The presence of his absence was against the king,
And in the mean time sojour'n'd at my father's;
Where how he did prevail, I shame to speak;
But, as a truth, thou hast sea's and shores
Between my father and my mother lay.

(As I have heard my father speak himself;)
When this same lusty gentleman was got,
Upon his death-bed he by will bequest'd
His lands to me; and took it, on his death,
That my mother's son, was none of his;
And, if he were, he came into the world
Full fourteen weeks before the course of time.
Then, good my liege, let me have what is mine,
My father's hand, as was my father's will.

K. John. Sirrah, your brother is legitimate;
Your mother's wife, and yours, is legitimate.
And, if she did play false, the fault was hers;
Which fault lies on the hazards of all husbands
That marry wives. Tell me, how if my brother,
Who, as you say, took pains to get this son,
Had of your father claim'd this son for his?
In sooth, good friend, your father might have kept
This self, bred from his cow, from all the world;
In the same height, as he were my brother's;
My brother might not claim him; nor your father,
Being none of his, refuse him: this concludes,—
My brother's son is my father's heir.
Your father's heir must have your father's land.

Rob. Shall then my father's will be of no force,
To dispossess that child which is not his?

Bast. Of no more effect in your father's lies,
Than was his will to get me, as I think.

Eli. Whether hadst thou rather,—be a Faulconbridge,

And like thy brother, to enjoy thy land;
Or the reputed son of Coeur-de-lion,
Lord of thy presence, and no land beside?

Bast. Sir, if mine heir be laid up in thy shape,
And I had his, sir Robert his, like him;
And if my legs were two such riding-rods,
My arms such ed-skins stuff'd; my face so thin,
That I should not dance in thy sight.

Lest men should say, Look, where three-farthings goes!
And, to his shape, were heir to all this land,
And of the world doth I judge shall I make this place,
I would give it every foot to have this face;
I would not be sir Nob in any case.

Eli. I like thee well: Wilt thou forsake thy form?
Bequest thy land to him, and follow me!
I am a soldier, and now bound to France.

Bast. Brother, take you my land, I'll take my charge.
Your face hath got five hundred pounds a year;
Yet sell your face for five pence, and 'tis dear.—
Madam, I'll follow you unto the death.

Eli. Nay, I would have you go before me thither.
Bast. Our country manners give our betters way.
K. John. What is thy name?

Bast. Philip, good old sir Robert's wife's eldest son.
K. John. From henceforth bear his name whose

Kneel thou down Philip, but arise more great:
Arise sir Richard, and Plantagenet.

Bast. Brother, by my mother's side, give me your hand;
My father gave me honor, yours gave land:
Now blessed be the hour, by night or day,
When I was got, sir Robert was away.

Eli. The very spirit of Plantagenet!—
I am thy grandame, Richard; call me so.
Bast. Madam, by chance, but not by truth: What thought
Something about, a little from the right.

I'm at the Pope's mouth, or else of the hush;
Who dares not stir by day, must walk by night;
And have is have, however men do catch:
Near or far off, well won is still well won;
And I am I, however I was besot.

K. John. Go, Fanconbridge, now hast thon thy desire.

A landless knight makes thee a landed squire—
Come, madam, and come, Richard; we must speed
For France and France; for it is more than need.

Bast. Brother, adieu; good fortune come to thee!
For thou wast got the other way of honor—
(Exit all but the Bastard.)

A foot of honor better than I was;
But many a foot of land the worse,
'Tis well, now I may make any lady—

Good den, Sir Richard.—God-merry fellow;
And if his name be George, I'll call him Peter:
For new-made honor doth forget men's names;
'Tis too respective, and too scandalous,
For your conversation. Now your traveller,—
He and his tooth-pick at my worship's mess;
And when my kindly stomach is subdued,
Why then I suck my tooth and eat my hash;
My pcket man of countries.—

My dear sir,
(Thus leaning on my elbow, I begin.)

I shall beseech you.—That is question now;
And then enquire whether she was an ABC-book.
O sir, says answer, at your best command;
At your employment; at your service, sir;
No, sir, says question, I sweet sir of yours;
And so, creates answer, what what question would,
Saving in dialogue of compliment;
And talking of the Alps, and Apennines,
The Pyrenean, and the river Po;
It draws to hard supposition and conclusion so,
But this is worshipful society,
And fits the mounting spirit, like myself:
For he is but a matter for the time,
That doth not smack of observation

(I) (And so am I, whether I smack, or no)

And not alone in habit and device,
Exterior fiddle, outward accoutrement;
But from the inward motion to deliver
Sweet, sweet, sweet, poison for the age's tooth;
Which, though I will not precise to deceive,
Yet, to avoid deceit, I mean to learn;
For it shall shrew the footsteps of my rising—
But what successes in such haste, in rising roles?
What woman-post is this? hath she no husband,
That will take pains to blow a horn before her?

Enter Lady Faulconbridge and James Gurney.
O me! it is my mother:—How now, good lady?
What brings you here to court so hastily?

Lady G. Where is that slave, thy brother?
where is he?

That rob'd in chase mine honor up and down

Bast. My brother Robert! old sir Robert's son!
Call'd the giant, that same mighty man?
Is it sir Robert's son, that you seek so?

Lady F. Sir Robert's son? Ay, thou unreverent boy.
Sir Robert's son: Why, wert thou at sir Robert?
He is sir Robert's son; and so art thou.
Bast. James Gurney, wilt thou give us leave a while?

Gur. Good leave, good Philip.

Bast. Philip!—sorrow! James,
There's toys abroad; anon I'll tell thee more.

[Exit Gurney.

Madam, I was not old sir Robert's son;
Sir Robert might have ext his part in me
Upon Good-Friday, and ne'er broke his fast;
Sir Robert could do nothing less, thou knowest,
Could he get me! Sir Robert could not do it;
We know his handy-work:—Therefore, good mother,
To whom am I beholden for these limbs?
Sir Robert never help to make this leg.

Lady F. Hast thou conspired with thy brother too,
That for thine own gain shouldst defend mine honor?
What means this scorn, thou most untoward knave?

Bast. Knight, knight, good mother,—Basilisco-like?
What! I am not a dunce; I have it on my shoulder.
But, mother, I am not sir Robert's son;
I have disclaimed sir Robert, and my land;
Legitimation, name, and all is gone.
Then, good sir mother, let me know my father.
Some proper man, I hope; Who was it, mother?

Lady F. Bast thou denied thyself a Faulconbridge?

Bast. As faithfully as I deny the devil.

Lady F. King Richard Cœur-de-lion was thy father;
By long and solemn suit I was seduced
To make room for him in my husband's bed—
Heaven lay not my transgression to my charge!
Thou art the issue of my dear offspring,
Which I thought so strong, so er'd, past my defence.

Bast. Now, by this light, were I to get again,
Madam, I would not wish a better father.
Some sins do bear their privilege on earth,
And so doth yours; your fault was not your folly:
Needs must you lay your heart at his dispose,— Subjected to the common pace of love,—
Against whose fury and unmatched force
The doughty lion could not wave the feather;
Nor keep his princely heart from Richard's hand.
He, that perform no lions of their hearts,
May end it in a woman's. Ay, my mother,
With all my heart I thank thee for my father!
Who lives and dares but say, thou dost not well
When I was got, I'll send his soul to hell.
Come, lady, I will show thee to my kin;
And they shall say, when Richard me begot,
If thou hadst said him may, it had been sin;
Who says it was, he lies; I say, 'twas not.

[Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE 1.—France. Before the Walls of Angiers.

Enter, on one side, the Archduke of Austria, and Forces; on the other, PHILIP, King of France, and Forces; LEWIS, Constable, Arbuth, and Attendants.

Oue. Before Angiers well met, brave Austria—Arthur, the great fore-runner of thy blood,
Robin Good-Friday, that robb'd the lion's heart,
And fought the holy wars in Palestine.
By this brave duke came early to his grave;
And, for amend to his posterity;
At our importance, a brother is he come,
To spread his colors, boy, in thy behalf;
And to redeem the usurpation
Of the unnatural uncle, English John;
Embrace him, love him, give him welcome brother.
Arthur! God shall forgive you Ceur-de-lion's death,
The rather, that you give your offspring life,
Shedding their right under your wings of war:
I swear, you welcome with a powerless hand,
But with a heart full of unstained love;
Welcome before the gates of Angiers, duke,
Lew. ready boy! Who would not do thee right?
Aust. Upon thy check lay I this zealous kiss,
As seal to this indument of my love;
That to my home I will no more return,
Till conquerors and the right hand hast in France,
Together with that pale, that white-faced shore,
Whose foot spurns back the ocean's roaring tides,
And reins from other lands her islanders,
Even till that England, hedge in with the main,
The water-wafted bulkware, still secure
And continent from foreign purposes,
Even till that utmost corner of the west.
Suffrag for her king; till then, fair boy,
Will I not think of home, but follow arms.

Const. O, take his mother's thanks, a widow's thanks,
Till your strong hand shall help to give him strength,
To make a more requital to your love.
Aust. The peace of heaven is theirs, that lift
Their swords
In such a just and charitable war.

*Idle report. 7 Importance.

K. Phi. Well then, to work; our cannon shall Be bent
Against the brows of this resisting town.
Call for our chiefest men of discipline.
To cull the plots of best advantages;—
We'll lay before this town our royal bones,
And decide the market-place in France's blood,
But we will make it subject to this boy.

Const. Stay for an answer to your embassy.
Lost end and thou stangeth in your sword with blood.
My lord Chatillon may from England bring
That right in peace, which here we urge in war;
And then we shall repent each drop of blood,
That hot rash haste so indiscreetly shed.

[Exit Chatillon.

K. Phi. A wonder, lady!—lo, upon thy wish,
Our messenger Chatillon is arrived—
What England says, say briefly, gentle lord,
We coldly pause for thee; Chatillon, speak.

Chat. Then turn your forces from this paltry siege,
And stir them up against a mightier task,
England, impatient of your just demands.
Hath put himself in arms; the adverse winds,
Whose leisure I have said, have given him time to land his legions all as soon as I:
His marches are expedient to this town,
His forces strong, his soldiers confident.
With him along is none the mother-queen,
An Ate, stirring him to blood and strife;
With her her niece, the lady Blanch of Spain;
With them a bastard of the king descendent;
And all the unsettled rumors of the land,—
Rash, inconsiderate, fiery voluntaries,
With ladies' faces and fierce dragons' spines,—
Have sold their fortunes at their native homes,
Bearing their birthrights proudly on their backs,
To make a hazard of new fortunes here.
In brief, a beaver choice of damnable spirits,
That now the English boats have sail o'er
Did never float upon the swelling tide,
A Character in an old drama called Salines and Pereda.
1 Best stations to overawe the town.
2 Immediate. 3 The Goddess of Revenge.
Scene I.  KING JOHN.

To do offence and seath in Christendom.
The interruption of their churchian drums.

Koch.  How much unlook'd for is this expedition!

Aust.  By how much unexpected, by so much

We must awake endeavor for defense;
For our lands are mounted and ready to Let them be welcome then, we are prepared.

Enter King John, Eleanor, Blanch, the Bastard, Pembroke, and Forces.

K. John.  Peace be to France; if France in peace permit
Our just and lineal entrance to our own,
If not, at least France, if blood and peace ascend to heaven.
Whiles we, his God's wrathful agent, do correct
Their proud contempt that beat his peace to heaven.
K. Phil.  Peace be to England: if that war return
From England to France, let peace give it peace!
England we love; and, for that England's sake,
With burden of our armor here we swear:
This toil of ours should be a work of time;
But thou from loving England art so far,
That thou hast under-wrought his lawful king,
Cut off the sequence of posterity.
Outraged infant state, and done a rapine
Upon the maiden virtue of the crown.
Look here upon thy brother Geoffrey's face;—
These eyes, these brows, were moulded out of his:
This little abstract both contains:
Which died in Geoffrey; and the hand of time
Shall draw this brief into as huge a volume.
That Geoffrey was thy elder brother born,
And this his son; England was Geoffrey's right,
And this is Geoffrey's: In the name of God,
How comes it then, that thou art call'd a king,
When living blood doth in these temples beat,
Which loves the crown that thou overmastes?—
K. John.  From whom hast thou this great commission, France?
To draw my answer from thy articles?
K. Phil.  From no imperial judge, that stirs good thoughts
In any breast of strong authority,
To look into the blots and stains of right,
That justice hath made me guardian to this boy:
Under whose warrant, I impeach thy wrong;
And, by whose help, I mean to chastise it.
K. John.  Alack, thou dost usurp authority.
K. Phil.  It is an error; it is to beat usurping down.
Eth.  Who is it, thou dost call usurper, France?
K. John.  Calm as the moon, there is no cloud.
K. Phil.  Let me make answer,—thy usurping son.
Eth.  Who is that boy, thy bastard king?
That thou mayst be a queen, and chock the world!
K. John.  What was my bed ever to thy son as true,
As thine was to thy husband, and this boy
Like a heritage to his father Geoffrey?
Than thou and John in manners; being as like,
As rain to water, or devil to his devil.
My boy a bastard! By my soul, I think,
His father here was so true begot;
It cannot be, an if thou wert his mother.
Eth.  There's a good mother, boy, that boys thy father.
K. John.  There's a good grandam, boy, that would blot thee.
Aust.  Peace! Thou hast the devil art thou!
Eth.  One that will play the devil, sir, with you,
An 'a may catch thy hide and you alone.
You are the bane of whom the proverb goes,
Who, in the value plucks donkeys for the beard.
I'll smoke your skin-coat, an I catch you right.
Sirrah, look to't; 'faith, I will, 'faith.
Blanch.  O, well did he become that lion's robe,
That did disfigure our good Arthur's frame.
Eth.  It lies as sightly on the back of him,
As great Alexies' shos upon an ass:—
But, ass, I'll take that burden from your back;
Or else, it shall be left, and the shoulder crack.
K. Phil.  What cracker is this same, that deafs our ears
With this abundance of superfluous breath?
Lew.  Women and fools, break off your confer-

Mischief.  4  A short-writing.  5  Own.

K. John.  This is the very sum of all,—
England, and Ireland, Anjou, Touraine, Maine,
In right of Arthur do I claim of thee:
Wilt thou resign them and lay down thy arms?
K. John.  My liege as soon:—I do defy thee, France.
Arthur of Bretagne, yield thee to my hand;
And, out of my dear love, I'll give thee more
Than ever thou dost claim, and that hand of France can win:
Submit thee, boy.
Eth.  Come to thy grandam, child.

K. John.  Do, child, go to it, grandam, child;
Give grace to kings, and then it grandam will Give it a plume, a cherry, and a fig:
There's a good grandam.

Arrh.  Good my mother, peace! I would,
That I were low laid in some holy cell;
I am not worth this coil that's made for me.
Eth.  His mother shames him so, poor boy, he weeps.
K. John.  Now shame upon you, wh'tshe does or no!
His grandiam's wrongs, and not his mother's shames,
Draw those heaven-moving pearls from his poor eyes.
Which heaven shall take in nature of a fire;
Ay, with these crystal beads heaven shall be bribed
To do him justice, and revenge on you.
Eth.  Thou monstrous slanderer of heaven and earth.
K. John.  Thou monstrous injurer of heaven and earth.
Call not me slanderer; thou, and thine, usurp
The dominions, royalties, and rights.
Of this oppr ess ed boy: This is thy eldest son's son;
Infortunate in nothing but in thee;
These thy sons are vested with infamy;
The canon of the law is laid on him,
Being but the second generation
Removed from thy sin-conceiving womb.
K. John.  Beldam, have done.
K. John.  I have but this to say,—
That he's not only plagued for her sin,
But God hath made her sin and her the plague
On this remis'd issue, placed for France;
And with her plague, her sin; his injury
Her injury,—the beadle to her sin;
All punished in the person of this child,
And all for her: A plague upon her!
Eth.  Thou undisavow'd scold, I can produce
A will that bars the title of thy son.
K. John.  Ay, who doubts that! a will! a wicked will;
A woman's will, a canker'd grandam's will.
K. Phil.  Peace! lady; pause, or be more temperate;
It ill becomes this presence, to cry aim
To these ill-tuned repetitions.

K. John.  Some trumpets sound, and thunders to the walls.
These men of Angiers; let us hear them speak,
Whose title they admit, Arthur's or John's.

Trumpets sound.  Enter Citizens upon the Walls.

Cit.  Who is it that hath warm'd us to the walls?
K. Phil.  'Tis France, for England.
K. John.  England, for itself;
These men of Angiers, and my loving subjects.
Our trumpets call'd you to this gentle parle.
K. John.  For our advantage;—Therefore hear us first.—

These flags of France, that are advanced here
Before the eyes and prospect of your town,
Have hither marcli'd to your endamentation:
The cannons have their bowels full of wrath;
And ready mounted are they to spit forth
Their iron indignation against your walls;
All preparation for a bloody siege,
And merciless proceeding by these French;
Confront your city's eyes, your winking gates;
And, but for the approach of those stonishing stones,
That as a waist do girdle you about.
By the compulsion of their ordinance
By this time from their fixed beds of time
I have brought a countercheck before your gates,
To save unmatch'd your city's threat'ned checks,—

Bustie.  To encourage.

7  Conference.
KING JOHN.

Act II.

Enter an English Herald, with Trumpets.

E. Her. Rejoice, you men of Angiers, ring your bells. For your king, your kingly and England's, doth approach, Commander of this hot martial day!

Their armours, that march'd hence so silver-bright, Hitherto have cut all gifts with Frenchmen's blood.

There stuck no plume in any English crest, That is removed by a staff of France;

Our colors do return in those same colors

That display them when we first march'd forth;

And, like a jolly troop of huntsmen, come

Our lusty English, all with purblind hands,

Died in the din and slaughter of these walls,

Open and wide, and give the victors way.

Cit. Heralds, from our towers we might behold,

From first to last, the onset and retreat

Both of the victors; and whose enemy

By our own eyes can be discern'd:

Blood hath bought blood, and blows have answer'd

Philip of France, if thou be pleas'd withal,
Command thy son and daughter to join hands.
K. Phi. So likes it as well—Young princes, close your hands.

Aust. And your lips too; for, I am well assured,
That I did so, when I was first assured.¹
K. Phi. Now, citizen of Aviers, open your gates,
Let in that amity which you have made;
For at Saint Mary's chapel, presently,
The rites of marriage shall be solemn'd.—
Is this lady Constance in this fair town?
I know, she is not; for this match, made up,
Her presence would have interrupted much:—
Where is she and her son? tell me, who knows.

Low. She is sad and passionate at your highness's tent.
K. Phi. And, by my faith, this league, that we have made,
Will give her sadness very little cure.—
Brother of England, how may we content
This widow lady? In her right we came:
Which we, God knows, has turn'd another way,
To our own vantage.

K. John. We will heal up all;
For we'll create young Arthur duke of Bretagne,
And earl of Richmond and this rich fair town.
We make him lord of—Call the lady Constance;
Some speedy messenger bid her repair
To our solemnity:—I trust we shall,
If they fill up the measure of my wish.
Yet in some measure satisfy her so,
That we shall stop her explanation.
Go we, as well as haste will suffer us,
To this unlook'd for unprepared sup.
[Exeunt all but the Bastard.—The Citizens retire from the Walls.

Bast. Mad world! mad kings! mad composition!

John, to stop Arthur's title in the whole,
Hath willingly departed with a part:
And France, whose son and her conscience buckled on Whom zeal and charity brought to the field,
As God's own soldier, round'd in the ear
With that same purse-changer, that devil;²
That broker, that still breaks the pace of faith;
That daily break-vow: he that wins of all,
Of kings, of beggars, old men, young men, maids;—
Who have the most external thing to lose.
But the word maid,—cheats the poor maid of
That smooth-faced gentleman, tickling commodity,
Commodity, the bias of the world.
The world, who of itself is wise? well,
Made to run even, upon even ground;
Till this advantage, this vile drawing bias,
This sway of motion, this commodity,
Makes heads from all indifferency.
From all direction, purpose, course, intent:
And this same bias, this commodity,
This bawd, this broker, this all-changing word,
Clapp'd on the outward eye of France,
Hath drawn him from his own determin'd aid,
From a resolv'd and honorable war,
To a most base and vile-conniv'd peace,—
And who shall I on that melancholy theme?
But for because he hath not wold me yet:
Not that I have the power to clench³ my hand.
When they do anger me, I would extemp my palm:
But for my hand, as unattempt'd yet,
Like a poor beggar, rafleth on the rich.
Well, whiles I am a beggar, I will rail,
And say, there is no sun, but to lie down;
And being rich, my virtue then shall be,
To say,—there is no vice but beggary;
Since kings break faith upon commodity.
Gain, be my lord! for I will worship thee! [Exit.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—The French King's Tent.

Enter Constance, Arthur, and Salisbury.

Constance. Gone to be married! gone to swear a peace!
False blood to false blood join'd! Gone to be friends!
Shall Lewis have Blanch! and Blanch those provinces?
It is not so; thou hast mis-spoke, misheard;
Be well advis'd, tell o'er thy tale again:
It cannot be; thou dost say was so;
I trust, I may not trust thee; for thy word
Is but the vain breath of a common man;
Believe me, I do not believe thee, man;
I have seen thee with the eyes of thought.
Thou shalt be punish'd for thus flattering me,
For I am sick, and capable² of tears;
Oppress'd with wrongs, and therefore full of fears;
A widow, husbandless, subject to fears;
A woman, naturally born to fears;
And though thou now confess, thou didst but jest
With my yow's spirits, I cannot take a truce,
But they will quake and tremble all the day;
What dost thou mean by shaking of thy head?
Why dost thou look so sadly on my son,
What words has that hand upon that fair thine?
Why holds thine eye that lamentable rheum,
Like a proud river peering? o'er his bounds!
Be these sad signs confirmers of thy words?
Then speak again; not all thy former tale,
But this one word; whether thy tale be true.

Sal. As true, as, I believe, you think them false
That give you cause to prove my saying true.

Constance. With this paper, if to me be this paper,
Teach thou this sorrow how to make me die;
And let belief and he encounter so,
As doth the fury of two desperate men.
Which, in the very meeting, fall, and die,—
Lewis marry Blanch! O, boy, then where art thou?
France treat with England! what becomes of me?—
Fellow, be gone; I cannot brook thy sight,
That wastest man's life with so monstrous Want.
Sat. What other harm have I, good lady, done,
But spoke the harm that is by others done!²

¹Affemned. ²Mournful. ³Appearing.

Const. Which harm within itself so benisious is,
As it makes harmful all that speak of it.

Arthur. I do beseech you, madam, be content.

Const. What then, that would be content? chart's all, grim,
Ugly, and sand'rous to thy mother's womb,
Full of unpleasing spots, and sightless stumps,
Lame, foolish, crooked, swath'd, prodigious;
Fetich'd with foul marks, and evil confounding marks,
I would not care, I then would be content;
For then I should not love thee; no, nor thou
Becamest thy great birth, nor deserve renown,
But thou art fair; and at thy birth, dear boy!
Nature and fortune joint'd to make thee great;
Of nature's gifts thou mayst with lites boast,
And with a king's well-bred son; but look out;
O! She is corrupted, changed, and won from thee;
She adulterates hourly with thine uncle John;
And with her golden hand hath plac'd on France
To tread down fair respect of sovereignty,
And made his majesty the bawd to theirs.
France is a bawd to fortune, and king John;
That strumpet fortune, that usurping John,—
Tell me, thou fellow, is not France foresworn?
Eve'nom him with words; or get thee gone,
And leave those woes alone, which I alone
Am bound to understand.
Sat. Pardon me, madam, I may not go without you to the kings.

Const. Thou mayst, thou shalt, I will not go with thee.
I will instruct my sorrow to be proud:
For grief is proud, and makes his owner stout.
To me, and to the state of my great grief,
Let kings assemble; for my grief is great,
That no supporter but the huge firm earth
Can hold it up; here I and sorrow sit;
Here is my throne, but kings come bow to it. *

[She throws herself on the ground.

Enter King Johns. King Philip, Lewis, Blanch, Eliza, Bastard, Arthurl, and Attendants.

K. Phi. 'Tis true, fair daughter; and this blessed day

Const. Conspired. ²Interest. ³Poised, balanced. ⁴Clasp. ¹Coin. ²Unightly. ³Monstrous. ⁴Dignity.
Scene I.

KING JOHN.

Ever in France shall be kept festival:
To solemnize this day, the glorious sun
Stays in his course, and plays the alchemist;
So, with his shining, doth give the face,
The meagre coldly earth to glittering gold;
The yearly course, that brings this day about,
Shall never see it but a holyday.

Const. A wicked day, and not a holyday!—

[Re-enter Constable and PANDOLPH.]

What hath this day describ'd; what hath it done;
That it in golden letters should be set.
Among the high days, in the calendar?
Nay, rather, turn this day out of the week;
This day of shame, oppression, perjury:
Or, if it stand strong, armed with child
Pray, that their burdens may not fall this day,
Lest that their hope: prodigiously be cross'd:
But on this day, let sence fear no wreck,
No man can bear not this day made;
This day, all things begun come to ill end;
Yea, faith itself to hollow falsehood chance!

K. Phi. by heaven, lady, you shall have no cause
To curse the fair proceedings of this day:
Have I not promis'd to you my majesty!

Const. You have beguil'd me with a counterfeit,
Resembling majesty; which, being touch'd and tried,
Provoceth valueless: You have forgiv'n me,
You came in arms to spill my enemies' blood,
But now in arms you strengthen it with yours:
The grappling vigor and rough brown of war,
Is all occasion'd by you at my expense,
And our oppression hath made up this league:
Arm, arm, you heavens, against these perjur'd kings!
A widow eies: be husband to me, heavens!
Let not the gods of this ungodly day
Wear out the day in peace; but ere sunset,
Set armed discord 'twixt these perjur'd kings!
How meane, O, hear me!

Aust. Lady Constance, peace.

Const. War! war! no peace! peace is to me a war.
O Lymogë? O Austria! thou dost shame
That bloody spoil! Thou slave, thou wretch, thou
Thou little villain, great in villany!
Thou ever strong upon the stronger side!
Thou dost not animate that last nor fight
But when her honourous ladyship is by
To teach thee safety; thou art perjur'd too,
And sooth'st up greatness. What a fool art thou,
A ramping fool, to brag, and stamp, and swear,
Upon my party! Thou cold-blooded slave.
Hast thou not spoke like thunder on my side?
Been sworn my soldier! bidding me depend
Upon that trusty, and that trusty arm length;
And dost thou now fall over to my foes?
Thou wear a lion's hide; doft it for shame,
And hang a calf's skin on those recreant limbs,
Aust. O, thou, that a man should speak those words to me!

Aust. And hang a calf's skin on those recreant limbs

Aust. Then dar'st not say so villain, for thy life.

Aust. And hang a calf's skin on those recreant limbs

K. John. We like not this: thou dost forget thyself.

Enter PANDOLPH.

K. Phi. Here comes the holy legate of the pope.

Pand. Hail, you ungodly depositories of heaven!—
To thee, king John, my holy erand is,
1 Pandulph, of mirif Milan cardinal,
And from pope Innocent the legate here,
Is, in his name, religiously demand,
Why thou against the church, our holy mother,
So wittily dost spurn; and, force perforce,
Keep Stephen Langton, chosen archbishop
Of Canterbury, from that holy see;
This in our 'foresaid holy father's name,
 Pope Innocent, I do demand of thee.

K. John. What earthly name to interrogations
Cannot the free breadth of a sacred see?
Thou canst not, cardinal, devise a name
So slight, unworthy, and ridiculous,
To charge me to an answer, as the pope.
Tell him, by his tale; and from the north of England,
Add thus much more,—That no Italian priest
Shall till or toll in our dominions;
But as we under heaven are supreme head,

K. Phi. Of that I am perplex'd, and know not what to say.
Pand. What canst thou say, but will perplex thee
If thou stand excommunicate, and curst'd?

K. Phi. Good reverend father, make my person yours.

Const. O, if thou grant my need,
Which only lives but by the death of faith.
That need most needs infer this principle.
That faith alone may live again by death of need;
O, then, tread down my need, and faith mounts up;
Keep my need up, and faith is trodden down.
K. John. The king is mov'd, and answers not to this.

Const. O, be removed from him, and answer well.
Aust. Do so, king Philip; hang no more in doubt.
Bust. Hang nothing but a calf's skin, most sweet love.
K. Phi. I am perplex'd, and know not what to say.
Pand. What canst thou say, but will perplex thee

Scene II.

K. John. Though you, and all the kings of Christendom,
Are led so grossly by this meddling priest,
Breading the curse that money may buy out;
And, by the sacred linchgold, as I must,
Purchase corrupted pardon of a man.
Who, in that sale, sells pardon from himself:
Though you, and all the rest, so grossly led,
This juggling witchcraft with revenue cherish;
Yet I, alone, alone do me oppose
Against the pope, and count my friends his foes.

Pand. Hear me, by the lawful power that I have, Thou shalt stand curs'd and excommunicate:
And blessed shall be he, that doth revolt
From his allegiance to a heretic;
And meritorious shall that hand be call'd,
Canonized, and worship'd as a saint,
That take away by any secret course
Thy hateful lie.

Const. O, lawful let it be,
That I have room with Rome to curse a while!
Good father cardinal, cry thou, amen,
To my keen curse; for, without my wrong;
There is no tongue hath power to make me right.

Panel. There's law and warrant, lady, for my curse.

Const. And for mine too; when law can do no right,
Let it be lawful that law bar no wrong.
Law can not have of my child his kingdom here;
For he, that holds his kingdom, holds the law:
Therefore, since law itself is perfect wrong,
How can the law forbid my tongue to curse!

Panel. Philip of France, on peril of a curse,
Let go the hand of that arch-heretic;
And raise the power of France upon his head,
Unless he do submit himself to Rome.

Elia. I command, thou traitor France, do not let go thy hand.

Const. Look to that, devil! lest that France receive

By and by disjouning hands, hell lose a soul.

Aust. King Philip, listen to the cardinal.

Aust. And hang a calf's skin on his recreant limbs.
Aust. Well, ruffian, I must pocket up these wrongs.

Because—

Aust. Your breathes best may carry them.

K. John. Philip, what says the cardinal to the cardinal?
Const. What should he say, but as the cardinal?

Liev. Bethink you, father; for the difference is, purchase of a heavy curse from Rome, Or the loss of England for a friend; Forgo the easier.

Blanch. That's the curse of Rome.

Const. O Lewis, stand fast; the devil tempts thee lightly.

In likeness of a new untrimmed bride.

Blanch. The lady Constance speaks not from her faith,
But from her need.

Const. O, if thou grant my need,
Which only lives but by the death of faith.
That need most needs infer this principle.
That faith alone may live again by death of need;
O, then, tread down my need, and faith mounts up;
Keep my need up, and faith is trodden down.

K. John. The king is mov'd, and answers not to this.

Const. O be removed from him, and answer well.
Aust. Do so, king Philip; hang no more in doubt.
Bust. Hang nothing but a calf's skin, most sweet love.
K. Phi. I am perplex'd, and know not what to say.
Pand. What canst thou say, but will perplex thee

If thou stand excommunicate, and curst'd?

K. Phi. Good reverend father, make my person yours.

Tell me, how you would bestow yourself.
This royal hand and mine are newly knit;
And the conjunction of our inward souls
Married in league, coupled and link'd together
With all religious strength of sacred vows;
The latest breath that gave the sound of words,
Was deep-swear’d faith, peace, unity, true love,
Between our kingdom, and our royal selves; *
And even before this truce, but new before,—
No longer then we well could wash our hands,
To clasp this royal bargain up of peace.——
Heart’s true, they were; but lenency was overspainted
With slaughter’s pencil; where revenge did paint
The fearful diurnity of incensed kings;
And she bade them hands so lately purged of blood,
So newly join’d in love, so strong in both,
Unyoke this seizure, and this kind regret! *
Play fast and loose with faith! so jest with heaven,
Mischief, uncle, shall be taken from yourselves;
As now again to snatch our palm from palm;
Unwear faith sworn; and on the marriage bed
Of smiling peace to march a bloody host,
And make a riot on the gentle brow
Of true sincerity! O holy sir,
My revered father, let it not be so:
Out of your grace, devise, ordain, impose
Some gentle order; and then we shall be bless’d
To do our pleasure, and continue friends.

Paul]. All form is formless, order orderless,
Save what is opposite to England’s love!
Therefore, to arms! be champion of our church!
Or let the church, our mother, breathe her curse,
A mother’s curse, on her revolting son.
France, thou must macl a serpent by the tongue,
And North and South, to the farthest land;
A fasting tiger safer by the tooth,
Than keep in peace that hand which thou dost possess.
K. Phili. I may disjoin my hand, but not my faith.

Paul]. So makest thou faith an enem[y to faith;
And, like a civil war, setst oath to oath.
This is against thee; thou dost part with
Let thy vow first made to Heaven, first be to heaven perform’d;
That, is to be the champion of our church!
What since thou swear’st, is sworn against thyself;
And may not be performed by thine oath;
For that, which thou hast sworn to do amiss,
Is not amiss when it is truly done;
And being done, where doing tends to ill,
The better end is then done not doing it:
The better act of purpose mustook
Is, to mistake again; though indirect,
Yet indirect thereby grows direct,
And falsehood falsehood, curse as fire crops fire,
Within the scorched veins of one new burn’d
It is religion, that doth make vows kept;
But thou hast sworn against religion;
By what thou swear’st, against the thing thou swearst;
And mak’st an oath the surety for thy truth
Against an oath: The truth thou art unsure
That which thou swear only to be break’d;
Else, what a mockery should it be to swear!
But thou dost swear only to be forsworn;
And most forsworn, to keep what thou dost swear.
Therefore, thy latter vows, against thy first,
Is in thyself rebellion to thyself;
And better conquest never canst thou make,
Than arm thy constant and thy nobler parts
Against those giddy loose suggestions:
Upon which better part our prayers come in,
If thou vouchsafe them: but, if not, then know,
They are store of our curses light on thy head;
So heavy, as thou shalt not shake them off,
But, in despair, die under their black weight.
Anad. Rebellion, that rebellion!
Basti. Will not be!
Will not a calf’s skin stop that mouth of thine?

Lor Father, to arms!

Blanch. Against the blood that thou hast marred!
What, shall our feast be kept with slaughter’d men!
Shall harrying trumpets, and loud churchills drums,—
Choir of holy bell, to the Church’s cry!
O, husband, hear me!—ah, alack, how now
Husband is in my mouth!—even for that name,
Which till this time my tongue did never pronounce.
Upon my knee I lay, go not to arms
Against mine uncle.

Cons. O, upon my knee,
Made hard with kneading, I do pray to thee,
Thou virtuous damme, after not the doom
Fore-thought by heaven.

Scene IV.

King John.

Etli. Farewell, my gentle cousin.

Etli. Come hither, little kinsman; mark, a word.

We owe one oath each within this wall of flesh.

There is a soul, counts thee her creditor,

And with advantage means to pay thy love:

And, my good friend, thy voluntary oath

Lies not by heaven; for I, dearly cherished,

Give me thy hand. I had a thing to say,—

But I will fit it with some better time.

By heaven, Hubert, I am almost ashamed

That I should give such good respect I have of thee.

Hub. I am much bounden to your majesty.

K. John. Good friend, thou hast no cause to say so yet:

But thou shalt have; and creep time ne'er so slow,

Yet it shall come, for me to do thee good.

I had a thing to say,—but let it go:

The sun is in the heaven, and the proud day,

Attended with the pleasures of the world,

Is all too wanton, and too full of gadwas;-

To give me audience;—if the midnight bell

Did, with his iron tongue and brazen mouth,

Sound one unto the drowsy race of night;

If this same were a church-yard where we stand,

And thou possessed with a thousand wrongs;

Or if that sunry spirit, melancholy

Had bath'd thy blood, and made it heavy, thick;

(Which, else, runs tickling up and down the veins,

Making that idiot, laughter, keep men's eyes,

And strain their cheeks, and tickle and torment,

A passion hateful to my purposes;)—

Or if that thou couldst see me without eyes,

Hear me without thine ears, and make reply

Without a tongue, using conception alone,

Without eyes, ears, and harmful sound of wo.

Then, in the brood of brood watchful day,

I would into thy bosom pour my thoughts:

Hub. What wilt not? Yet I love licer alone,

And, by my truth, I think thou lovest me well.

Hub. So well, that what you bid me undertake,

Though that my death were adjur'd to my act,

By you who'd I'd not.

K. John. Do not I know, thou wouldst?

Good Hubert, Hubert, throw thine eye

On you young boy: I'll tell thee what, my friend;

He is a very serpent in my way;

And, where'ersoever this foot of mine doth tread,

He lies before me: Dost thou understand me?

Thou art his keeper. Hub. And I will keep him so,

That he shall not offend thy majesty.

Hub. My lord!

Hub. He shall not live. Enough.

I could be merry now. Hubert. I love thee;

Well, I'll not say what I intend for thee;

Remember,—Madam, fare you well;

I'll send those powers o'er to thy majesty.

K. John. For England, cousin; Hubert shall be your man, attend on you

With all true duty.—On toward Calais, ho! (Exeunt.)

Scene IV.—The same. The French King's Tent.

Enter King Philip, Lewis, Pandelph, and Attendants.

K. Phi. So, by a roaring tempest on the flood,

A whole armado 1 of convicts 2 sail

Is scatter'd and disjoint'd from fellowship.

Pand. Courage and comfort to our friends, yet well.

K. Phi. What can go well, when we have run so ill?

Are we not beaten? Is not Angiers lost?

Arthur our prisoner! divers dear friends slain!

And bloody England into England gone,

Overbearing interruption, spite of France!

Lew. What he hath won, that hath he fortified;

So box a speed with such advice disposed,

1 Showy ornaments. 2 Conception. 3 Joined. 4 Fleet of war. 5 Overcome.

Such temperate order in so fierce a cause,

Deth want example: Who hath read, or heard,

Of any kindred action like to this?

K. Phi. Well could I bear that England had this praise,

So we could find some pattern of our shame.

Enter Constance.

K. Phi. Look, who comes here! a grave unto a soul;

Holding the eternal spirit, against her will,

In the vile prison of afflict'd breath.—

Pand. Thou, lady, go with my kind master.

Con. Lo, now! now see the issue of your peace!

K. Phi. Patience, good lady! comfort, gentle Constance!

Con. No, I defy all counsel, all redress,

But that which ends all counsel, true redress,

Death, death:—O amiable lovely Death!

Thou of unknown strength! sounds of repose!

Arise forth from the couch of lasting night,

Thou hate and terror to prosperity,

And I will kiss thy detestable bones;

And put my eye falls in thy vacant brows;

And ring these fingers with thy household worms;

And stop this gap of breath with fulsome dust,

And be a cannon monster like thyself;

Come, and come on me, and I will think the snuff, and Buss thee as thy wife? Misery's love,

O, come to me.

K. Phi. O fair affluence, peace.

Con. No, No, I will not, having hearken'd to thy—

O that my tongue were in the thunder's mouth!

Then with a passion would I shake the world;

And rouse from sleep that fell anatomy,

Which cannot hear a hand's feasting voice,

Which scorns a modern' invocation.

Pand. Lady, you utter madness, and no sorrow

Con. Thou art not holy to beleve me so;

I am not mad: this hour I tear my name;

My name is Constance; I was Geoffrey's wife;

Young Arthur is my son, and he is lost;

I am not mad: I would to heaven, I were!

For then the like I should forget my name,

O, if I could, what grief should I forget—

Pierce some philosophy to make me mad,

And thou shall be canoniz'd, cardinal;

Or, being not mad, but sensible of grief,

My reasonable part produces reason

How I may be deliver'd of these woes,

And teaches me to kill or hang myself;

If I were mad, I should forget my son;

Or madly think, a babe of clouts were he:

I am not mad: too well, too well I feel

The different plague of each calamity,

And like true, inseparable, faithful loves,

Sticking together in calamity.

Con. To England, if you will.

K. Phi. Bind up your hairs. Con. Yes, that I will; and wherefore will I do it?

I tire them from their bonds: and cried alound,

O that these hands could so redeem my son,

As they have given these hairs their liberty!

But now I envy at their liberty,

And will commit them to their bonds,

Because my poor child is a prisoner.

And, father cardinal, I have heard you say,

That we shall see and know our friends in heaven;

If that be true, I shall see my heart again:

For since the birth of Cain, the first male child,

To him that did but yesterday surprise,

There was not such a gruesom creature born.

But now he canker with sorrow eat his days.

And chase the native beautie from his cheek,

And he will look as hollow as a ghost;

As dim and meagre as an ague's fit;

And so he'll die; and, dying so, I wish,

When I shall meet him in the court of heaven

I shall not know him: therefore never, never

Must I behold my pretty Arthur more.

Pand. View hold too leemous a recree to grief.

Con. He talks to me that never had a son.

K. Phi. You are as fond of grief, as of your child.

Refuse. 2 Common 3 Breathe. 4 Graceful.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Northampton. A Room in the Castle.

Enter HUBERT and two Attendants.

Hub. Heat me these irons hot; and look thou stand Within the arms: I when I strike my foot Upon the bostom of the ground, rush forth: And bind the boy, which you shall find with me, Fast to the chair: be heedful: hence, and watch.

1. Attend. I hope your warrant will bear out the deed.

Hub. Undeceive scruples! Fear not you: look to 't— [Exit Attendants.] Young lad, come forth; I have to say with you.

Enter ARTHUR.

Arth. Good-morrow, Hubert.

Hub. Good-morrow, little prince.

Arth. As little prince (having so great a title To be more prince as may be.—You are sad.

Hub. Indeed, I have been merrier.

Arth. Mercy on me! Methinks, no body should be sad but I: Yet I remember, when I was in France, You and your action would be so sharp, Only for wantonness. By my christendom, So we were out of prison and kept sheep, I should be merry as the day is long: And so I would be here, but that I doubt My uncle practises more harm to me: He is afraid of me, and I of him:

1Tapestry.

Is it my fault that I was Geoffrey's son? No, indeed: it is not: And I would to heaven, I were your son, so you would love me, Hubert.

Hub. If I talk to him, with his innocent prate He will awake my mercy which he's dead: Therefore, I will shew you and despatch. [Aside. Arth. Are you sick, Hubert? you look pale to day: In sooth, I would you were a little sick. That I might sit all night, and watch with you: I warrant I love you more than you do me.

Hub. His words do take possession of my bosom. Read here, young Arthur. [Showing a paper.] How much I wish them read? [2.1e.

Turning disputative torture out of door! I must be brief; lest resolution drop Out at mine eyes, in tender woman's tears:—

Can you not read it? is it not fair writ? Arth. Too fairly, Hubert, for so foul effect: Must you with hot irons burn out both mine eyes?

Hub. Young boy, I must.

Arth. And will you? And I will.

Arth. Have you the heart? When your head did but ache, I knit my handkerchief about your brows, (The best I had: a princess wrote it me,) And I did never ask it you again: And with my hand at midnight held your head, And, like the watchful minutes to the hour, Still and anon cheer'd up the heavy time; Saying, What lack you! and, Where lies your grief?
SCENE II.  KING JOHN.

Or, what good love may I perform for you?
Many a poor man's son would have lain still
And never have a speaking word to you;
But you, who, like a prince, have made me a prince.
Nay, you may think my love was crafty love,
And calling it cunning; Do, an if you will:
If you do, let me see you go on
Why, then you must — Will you put out mine eyes?
These eyes, that never did, nor never shall,
So much as frown on you?

Hub. O, I have sworn to do it;
And with hot irons must I burn them out.

Arth. Ah, none, but in this iron age, would do it;
The iron of its self, though heat red-hot,
Approaching these, these eyes, may drink my tears,
And quench his fiery indignation.
Even in the matter of mine innocence;
Nay, after that, consume away in rust,
But not so much as to harm human eyes.
Are you more stub-born hard than hammer'd iron?
An if an angel should have come to me,
And told me, Hubert should put out mine eyes,
I would not have believed, no tongue, but Hubert's.

Hub. Come forth.

Re-enter Attendants, with Cord, Irons, &c.

As I did you.

Arth. O, save me, Hubert, save me! my eyes
Are out, even with the fierce looks of these bloody men;
Hub. Even I, my boy, will cut out your eyes.

Arth. Alas! what need you be so boisterous rough?
I will not struggle, I will stand stone-still.
For heaven's sake, Hubert, let me not be bound!

Hub. I will not, Hubert! for these men away,
And I will sit as quiet as a lamb;
I will not stir, nor wince, nor speak a word,
Nor look upon the iron angrily.
Then, as he made to cut his eyes, and I will forgive you,
Whatever torment you do put me to.

Hub. Go, stand within; let me alone with him.

1 Attends. I am best pleas'd to be from such a course;

Arth. Alas! I then have chid away my friend;
He hath a stern heart, but a gentle heart:—
Let him come back, that his compassion may Give life to yours.

Hub. Come, boy, prepare yourself.

Arth. Is there no remedy?

Hub. None, but to lose your eyes.

Arth. O heaven! — that there were but a mite in yours,
A grain, a dust, a gnat, a wand'ring hair,
Then, as he made to cut his eyes, and I will forgive you,
Your vile intent must needs seem horrible.

Hub. This is your promise! go to, hold your tongue.

Arth. Hubert, the utterance of a brace of tongues
Must needs want pleading for a pair of eyes;
Let me not hold my tongue; let me not, Hubert!
Or, Hubert, if you will, cut out my tongue,
So I may keep mine eyes; O, spare mine eyes;
Though to no use, but still to look on you,
Lo, by my tooth, the instrument is cold,
And would not harm me.

Hub. I can heat it, boy.

Arth. No, in good sooth: the fire is dead with grief,
Being create for comfort, to be used
In unkind purposes; it will not serve you itself;
There is no maize in this burning coal;
The breath of heaven hath blown his spirit out,
And strew'd repentant ashes on his head.

Hub. But if you will, you but make it blithe,
And blow with shame of your proceedings, Hubert;
Nay, it, perchance, will sparkle in your eyes;
And so, you may sec what a world it is Snatch at his master that doth tarre him on.
All things, that you should use to do me wrong,
Deny their office: only you do lack
That mercy, which, for so many a cursed man,
Could not have had amongst the desertites.

Hub. Well, see to live; I will not touch thine eyes
For all the treasure that thine uncle owes;
Yet am I warm, and I did purpose, boy,
With this same iron to burn them out.

*In earnest I have not deserved.
#Set him on.

Arth. O, now you look like Hubert! all this while
You were disguised.

Hub. Peace: no more. Adieu;
Your uncle must not know but you are dead;
I'll till these dogged specs with false reports.
And, pretty child, sleep doubtless, and secure,
That Hubert, at the health of all the world,
Will not offend thee.

Arth. O heaven! — I thank you, Hubert.

Hub. Silence; no more: Go closely in with me;
Much danger do I undergo for thee.

Exeunt.

SCENE II. — A Room of State in the Palace.

Enter King John, crowned; Pembroke, Saliberry, and other Lords. The King takes his State.

K. John. Here once again we sit, once again
Crown'd, and look to the course of the world.
I hope, with cheerful eyes.

Pem. This once again, but that your highness pleas'd,
Was once superstitious: you were crown'd before,
And that high royalty was never plac'd off;
The faith of men ne'er stain'd with revolt;
Fresh expectation troubled not the land,
With any long'd-for change, or better state.

Pem. Therefore, to be possess'd with such a pomp,
To guard a title that was rich before,
To gild refined gold, to paint the lily,
To throw a perfume on the violet,
And add another charm to beauty's scale,
Unto the rainbow, and with taper-light
To seek the beauteous eye of heaven to garnish,
Is wasteful, and ridicules excess.

Pem. That your royal pleasure must be done,
This act is as an antique tale new told;
And, in the last repeating, troublesome,
Being up and down at a time unseasonable.

Sat. In this the antique and well-noted face
Of plain old form is fain disfigured:
And, like a shifted wind into a sail,
It makes the course of thoughts to pitch about
Stirriles and froward considerations:
Makes sound opinion sick, and truth suspected,
For putting on so new a fashion'd robe.

Pem. Yet you may much improve to do better well
They do confound their skill in covetousness;*
And, oftentimes, excusing of a fault,
Doth make the fault the worse by the excuse;
As patches set upon a little breach
Discredite more in hiding of the fault,
Than did the fault before it was so patch'd.

Sat. To this effect before you were now crown'd,
We bade our counsel out; but it pleas'd your highness
To overbear it; and we are all well pleas'd;
Since all and every part of what we would,
Both made a stand and at what your highness will.

K. John. Some reasons of this double coronation
I have poss'd you with, and think them strong;
And more, more strong, (when lesset is my care,) I shall induce you with: Mean time, but ask
What you would have reform'd that is not well;
And well shall you perceive, how willingly
I will both hear and grant you your requests.

Pem. Then I ask one that is the tongue of these
To sound? the purposes of all their hearts,
Both for myself and them, (but chief of all,
Your safety,) for the benefit of myself and them
Bend their best studies, hearken request;
The enfranchisement of Arthur; whose restraint
Both move the murmuring lips of discontent
To break, and think it from the course of things.
If, what in rest you have in right to hold,
Why then your fears, (which, as they say, attend
The steps of wrong,) should move you to me up to
Your feet, and speak this high day to us,
With barbarous ignorance, and deny his youth
The rich advantage of good exercise!
That the time's enemies may not have this
To grace their reasons, but be on their days
That have bid us ask his liberty;
Which for our goods we do no further ask.
Whence whatsoever weal, on you depending,
Counts if it weal, be he his liberty.

K. John. Let it be so; I do commit his youth
6 Secretly.  6 Lace.  6 Decorate.  6 Publish.
Enter Hubert.

To your direction.—Hubert, what news with you?

He show'd his warrant to a friend of mine;
The image of a wicked henious fault
Lives in my eye; that close aspect of his
Does show the mood of a much corrupted breast;
And I do fearfully believe, 'ts done,
What we so fear'd he had a charge to do.

Sat. The color of the king is lively and go,

Deliver this purpose and his conscience.

Like heralds twist two dreadful battles set:
His passion is so ripe, it needs must break.

Pem. And, when it breaks, I'll give the thence

The seal of consent of a sweet child's death.

K. John. We cannot hold mortality's strong hand;

Good forsooth, although my will to give is living,
The sum which you demand is gone and dead:
He tells us, Arthur is deceas'd to-night.

Sat. Indeed, we fear'd, his sickness was past cure.

Pem. Indeed we hear'd how near his death he was,
Before the child himself felt he was sick:
This must be answer'd, either here, or hence.

K. John. Why do you bend such solemn brows before me?

Think you, I bear the shears of destiny?
Have I commandment on the pulse of life?

Sat. It is apparent soul play; and, by name,
That happiness or wretchedness should so grossly fit it:
So thrive it in your game! and so farewell.

Pem. Stay yet, lord Salisbury; I'll go with thee,
And find the inheritance of this poor child,
This little kingdom of a forced grave.

That blood, which o'er'd the breadth of all this Isle,
Three feet of it doth hold: Bad world the while!
This must not be thus borne: this will break out
To all our sorrows, and cre long, I doubt.

[Exit Hubert.

K. John. They burn in indignation; I repent;
There is no sure foundation set on blood;
No certain life achiev'd by others' death.

Enter a Messenger.

A fearful eye thou hast; Where is that blood,
That I have seen inhabit in these cheeks?
So foul a sky clears not without a storm;
Pour down the weather:—How goes all in France?

Mess. From France to England.—Never such a power
For any foreign preparation,

It was levied in the body of a land.

The copy of your speed is heard by them;
For, when you should be told they do prepare,
The tidings come, that they are all arrived.

K. John. O, where hath our intelligence been blind?
Where hath it slept? Where is my mother's care,
That such an army could be drawn in France,
And she not hear of it?

My liege, her ear
Is stopp'd with dust; the first of April, die'd
Your noble mother: And, as I hear, my lord,
The lady Constance in a tempest die'd
Thrice, three days before but this from rumor's tongue
I idly heard; if true, or false, I know not.

K. John. Withhold thy speed, dreadful occasion;
O, make a pause with me, till I have pleas'd
My discontented peers!—What! mother dead?
How wildly then walks my estate in France!—
Under whose conduct came those powers of France,
That thou for truth at last out, are landed here!

Mess. Under the Dauphin.

Enter the Bastard and Peter of Pontefract.

K. John. Thou hast made me giddy
With these ill tidings.—Now, what says the world
To your proceedings? do not seek to stuff
My ears, with more ill news, let me know the worse.

Bast. But, if you be afraid to hear the worst,
Then let the worst, unbar'd, fall on your head.

K. John. Bear with me, cousin; for I was amaz'd
When I heard of it; but now I will begin
Alot the blood: and can give evidence
To any tongue speak it of what it will.

Bast. How, I have sped among the clergymen,
The sums I have collected shall express,
But, as I travelled hither through the land,

I find the people strangely ;
Possess'd with rumors, full of idle dreams;
Not knowing what they fear, but full of fear:
And here's a prophet, that I brought with me.

From forth, that streets of Pontefract, whom I found
With many hundreds treading on his heels;
To whom he sung, in rood harsh-sounding rhymes,
That, ere the next Ascension-day, your
Your highness should deliver up your crown.

K. John. Then idle dreamer, wherefore didst thou so?
Peter. Knowing that the truth will fall out so.

K. John. Hubert, away with him; imprison him;
And on that day at noon, whenon, he says,
I shall yield up my crown, let him be hang'd!

Peter. To set the countless on.

For I must use thee.—O my gentle cousin.

Exit Hubert, with Peter.

Heart's thou the news abroad, who are arriv'd?

Bast. The French, my lord; man's mouths are full of it:
Besides, I met lord Bigot, and lord Salisbury,
(With eyes as red as new-enkindled fire).

And others more, going to seek the grave
Of Arthur, who, they say, is kill'd to-night
On your suggestion.

K. John. Gentle kinsman, go,
And thrust thyself into our companies:
I have a way to win their loves again;
Bring them before me.

Bast. I will seek them out.

K. John. Nay, but make haste; the better foot before,
O, let me have no subject enemies.

K. John. Go after him: for he, perhaps, shall need
Some messenger betwixt me and the peers;
And be thou he.

Mess. With all my heart, my liege.

K. John. My mother dead!

Re-enter Hubert.

Hab. My lord, they say, five moons were seen
To-night; Four fixed; and the fifth did whirl about
The other four, in wondrous motion.

Hab. Old men, and beldams, in the streets
Do prophesy upon it dangerously;
Young Arthur's death is common in their mouths:
And when they talk of him, they shake their heads,
And whisper one and other in the ear;
And he, that speaks, doth grip the wearer's breast
Whilst he, that hears, makes fearful action,
With wrinkled brows, with looks, with roiling eyes.
I saw a smith stand with his hammer, thus
The whilst his iron did on the anvil cool,
With open mouth, and swallowing a tailor's news;
Who, with his fingers, and measure in his hand,
Standing on sippers, (which his nimble haste
Did falsely thrust upon contrary feet)
Told of a many thousand warlike French,
That were enballad and rank't in Kent:
Another lean unwash'd artificer
Cuts off his tale, and talks of Arthur's death.

K. John. Why seek'st thou to possess me with these fears?

Why urge'st thou so oft young Arthur's death?
Thy hand hath murder'd him; I had mighty cause
To wish for it, and thou hadst none to kill him.

Hab. Had none, my lord; why, did you not provoke me?

K. John. It is the curse of kings, to be attended
By slaves, that take their honors for a warrant
To break within the bloody house of life:
And, on the wanking of authority,
To understand a law; how to know the meaning
Of dangerous majesty, when, perchance, it frowns
More upon honor than adviz's respect.

Hab. Here is your hand and seal for what I did.

Safe custody. Deliberate consideration
KING JOHN.

Enter the Bastard.

Bast. Once more to-day well met, dissembler's lord!

The king, by me, requests your presence straight.

Sal. The king hath disposed of himself of us;

We will not line him. His last address by,

With our own honors, nor attend the foot

That leaves the print of blood where'er it walks;

Return, and tell him so; we know the worst.

Bast. You think, good words, I think, were best.

Sal. Our griefs, and not our manners, reason now.

Bast. But there is little reason in your state;

Therefore do I now, you know, as we reason now.

Pem. Sir, sir, impiety hath his privilege.

Bast. This true, to hurt his master, no man else.

Sal. This is the prison: What is he lies here?

Pem. Of death, made proud with pure and princely beauty!

The earth had not a hole to hide this deed.

Both lay it open, to rise on revenge.

Bast. Or when he donnd this beauty to a grave,

Found it too precious—precious for a grave.

Sal. Sir Richard, what think you? Have you beheld,

Or have you read, or heard? or could you think?

Or do you almost think, although you may see?

That you, my lord, could not be aught without this object,

Form such another! This is the very top,

The height, the crest, or crest unto the crest.

Of murder's arms: this is the bloody bundle,

That ever wall-eyed, or staring face,

Presented to the tears of soft remorse.

Pem. All murderers past do stand excus'd in this:

And this, so, no envy, and so unmatchable,

Shall give a holiness, a purity,

To the yet-unbegotten sin of time;

And prove a deed, and dishonour shed a jest,

Examined by this honourable spectacle.

Bast. It is a damned and a bloody work;

The graceless action of a heavy hand,

That it be the work of any hand.

Sal. If that it be the work of any hand?—

We had a kind of light, what would ensue:

It is the shameful work of Hubert's hand.

The practice, and the purpose, of the king—

From whose obedience I forsook my soul,

Kneeling before this ruin of sweet life,

And breathed to his breathless excellence

The murmurs of my soul;

Never to taste the pleasures of the world,

Never to be infected with delight,

Nor conversant with ease and idleness,

Thall I forgive this, but I must forgive it,

By giving it the worship of reverence.

Enter Hubert.

Hub. Lords, I am hot with haste in seeking you:

Arthur doth live; the king hath sent for you.

Sal. He is hold, and blushes not at death:—

Avault, thou hateful villain, get thee gone!

Hub. I am no a villain.

Sal. Must I rob the law?

[Draws his sword.

Bast. Your sword is bright, sir; put it up again.

Sal. Not till I sheathe it in a murderer's skin.

Hub. Stand back, lord Salisbury, stand back, I say.

By heaven, I think my sword's as sharp as yours:

I would not have you, lord, forget yourself,

Nor tempt the danger of my trust; defend;

Leads I in marking of thy rage, forget

Your worth, your greatness, and nobility.

Big. Out, dunghill! dar'st thou brave a noble man?

Hub. Not for my life: but yet I dare defend

My innocent life against an emperor.

Sal. Thou art a murderer.

[Draws his sword.

Hub. Do not prove me so?

Yet, I am none: Whose tongue soever speaks false,

Not truly speaks; who speaks not truly, lies.

Pem. Cut him to pieces.

Scene III.--Before the Castle.

Enter Arthur, on the Walls.

Arth. The wall is high; and yet will I leap down:

Good ground, be pitable, and hurt me not—

There's few, or none, do know me; if they did,

This ship-heav'ssemblance hath disgust'd me quite,

I am afraid: and yet I'll venture it.

If I be known, and do not break my limbs,

I'll find a thousand shifts to get away;

As good to die, and go, as die, and stay.

[Leaps down.

O me! my uncle's spirit is in these steps—

Heaven take my soul, and England keep my bones!

Enter Pembroke, Salisbury, and Bigot.

Sal. Lords, I will meet him at Saint Edmund's Bury;

It is our safety, and we must embrace

The gentle offer of the pursers thence.

Pem. Who brought that letter from the cardinal?

Sal. The count Melun, a noble lord of France;

Whose private with me, or of the Dauphin's love,

Is much more general than these lines import.

Big. To-morrow morning let us meet him then.

Sal. Or, rather then set forward: for it will be

Two long days' journey, lords, or e'er we meet.

[Exeunt.

*Noted, observed.  Private account.
KING JOHN.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—A Room in the Palace.

Enter King John, Pandulph with the Crown, and Attendants.

K. John. Thus have I yielded up into your hand The circle of my glory.

Pand. Take again [Giving John the Crown].

From this my hand, as holding of the pope, Your sovereign greatness and authority.

K. John. Now keep your holy word; go meet the French; And from his holiness use all your power To stop their marchers, 'tis we are inflamed. Our discontented court is in revolt; Our people quarrel with obedience; Swearing allegiance, and the love of soul, To stranger blood, to foreign loyalty. This impiety and disturbance's humour Rests by you only to be qualified. Then pause not; for the present time's so sick, That present medicine must be ministered, Or overthrow incurable issues.

Pand. It was my breath that blew this tempest up, Upon your stubborn usage of the pope; But since you are a gentle convertor, My heart shall hold against this storm of war, And make fair weather in your blistering land. On this Ascension-day, remember well, Upon the service to the pope. Go I to make the French lay down their arms. [Exit K. John. Is this Ascension-day? Did not the prophet Say, that before Ascension-day at noon, My crown I should give off? Even so I have: I did suppose it should be on constraint; But heaven bethank'd, it is but voluntary.

Enter the Bastard.

Bast. All Kent hath yielded; nothing there holds.
And find no check! Let us, my yege, to arms: Perchance, the cardinal cannot make your peace; Or if he do, let it at least be said, That we now had at the heart of our defence.

K. John. Have thou the ordering of this present time.

Bast. Away then, with good courage; yet, I know, Our party may well meet a prouder foe. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Plain near St. Edmund's Bury.

Enter, in arms, Lewis, Salisbury, Melun, Pembroke, Bisgot, and Soldiers.

Lev. My lord Melun, let this be copied out, And keep it safe for our remembrance: Remember how the enemy have met us; That, having our fair order written down, Both they, and we, perusing o'er these notes, May know wherefore we took the sacrament, And keep our faith against the enemy.

Sel. Upon our sides it never shall be broken. And, noble Dauphin, albeit we swear A voluntary zeal, and unmerged faith, To your proceedings; yet, believe me, prince, I am not glad that such a sore of time Should seek a platter with commend'nd revolt, And make this the inevitable counsellor of one wound, By making many: O, it grieved me, That I must draw this metal from my side To be a widow-maker; O, and there, Wherefore the rescue, and defence, Cries out upon the name of Saint Mort? But such is the injuction of the time, That, for the health and peace of our right, We cannot retire unless by force. Of stern injustice and confused wrong— And is't not pity, O my grievous friends! That we, the sons and children of this isle, Whose eyes are so sad an hour as this; Whereas we step after a stranger March Upon her gentle bosom, and fill up Her enemies' ranks, I must withdraw and weep Upon the spot of this Warwick's hand To grace the gentry of a land remote, And follow unacquainted colors here? What here!—O nation, that thou couldst remove! This Warwick's arm, who clipped the head About would thee from the knowledge of thyself, And grapple thee unto a paean shore; Where these two Christian armies might combine The blood of martial in a vein of league, And not to spend it so unneighbourly! Lev. A noble temper dost thou show in this; And great omissions wrestling in thy bosom, Do, I perceive, by an earthquake of noble fears, O, what a noble combat hast thou fought, Between compulsion and a brave resolve? Let me wipe off this honorable dew That nightly doth progress on these cheeks: My heart hath meted at a lady's tears, Being an ordinary inundation; But this effusion of such many drops, This shower, blown up by tempest of the stars, Starlites mine eyes, and makes me more amaz'd Than had I seen the vacancy top of heaven Figure'd quite o'er with burning meteors. Lit up thy brows, renowned Salisbury, and And with a great heart, leave away this storm: Command these waters to those baby eyes, That never saw the giant world enraged; Nor met with fortune other than as that, Full warm of blood, of mirth, of gossiping. Come, come; or thou shalt thrust thy hand as deep Into the purse of rich prosperity, As Lewis himself;—so, noble, shall you all, That knot your sinews to the strength of mine. [Exeunt Randolph, attended.

And even there, metinckins, an angel spake: Look, where the holy leaze comes space, To give us warrant of the hand of heaven; And on our actions set the name of right, With holy praference.

Pand. Hall, noble prince of France! The next is this,—king John hath reconciled Himself to Rome; his spirit is come in, That so stood out against the holy church, The great metropolis and see of Rome:

Embraceth. Love of country. Therefore thy threatening colors now wind up, And tame the savage spirit of wild war; That, like a howl foster'd up at hand, May he or be a toy in a child's defence. And be no farther harmful than in show.

Lev. Your grace shall pardon me, I will not back. I am too high-born to be propounded. To be a secondary at control, Or useful serving-man, an instrument, To any sovereign state throughout the world. Your breath, first kindled the dead cold fires of wars, Between this chas'dst kingdom and myself, And brought in matter that should feed this fire; And now 'tis far too huge to be blown out With that weak wind which last did waft it. You taught me how to know the face of right, Acquainted me with interest to this land, Ye, thrust this enterprise into my heart; And come now to give me issue of his peace with Rome! What is that peace to me! I, by the honor of my marriage-bed, After young Arthur, claim this land for mine; And, now it is half-conquered, must I back, Because that John hath made his peace with Rome! Am I Rome's slave! What penny hath Rome borne, What man provided, what trump you sent, To underprop this action? I, it's not I That undergo this charge! who else but I, And such as to my claims are liable, Sweet in this business, and unscathe in this war! Have I not heard these islanders shout out, Fire to my! as I have sunk'd their towns! Have I not here the best cards for the game, To win the easy match play'd down with Rome? And shall I now give o'er the yielde set! No, on my soul, it never shall be said. Pand. You look but on the outside of this work. Lev. Outside of pride, I will not return Till my attempt so much be glorified As to my ample hope was promised Before I drew this gilliant head of war, And could this flower spirit out in the world, To outlook conquest, and to win renown Even in the jaws of danger and death.—

Trumpet sounds. What lusty trumpet thus doth summon us! Enter the Bastard, attended.

Bast. According to the fair play of the world, Let me have audience; I am sent to speak:— My holy lord of Milan, from the king I come, to learn how you have dealt for him; And, as you answer, do I know the hope And warrant limited unto my tongue. Pand. The dauphin is too willful-opposite, And will not temporize with my entreaties; He daily says, he'll lay down his arms. Bast. By all the blood that ever fury breathed, The youth says well:—Now hear our English king; For thus his royalty doth speak in me. He is prepared; and ready too, he said: This aship and unmannerly approach, This harness'd masque, and unadvised revel, This unhallow's sports, and boystie troops, The king doth smile at; and is well prepar'd To whip the dwarf war, these pigny arms, From out the circle of his territories, That hand which had the strength, even at your foot To cudgel you, and make you take the hatch: To dive like bucket, in concealed wells; To crouch amiss, and to be holographic, To lie, like paws, lock'd up in chests and trunks; To hug with swine; to seek sweet safety out In vaults and prisons; and to thrill and shake, Even at the crying of your nation's crow; Thinking his voice an armed Englishman; Shall that victorious hand be fettered here, That in your chambers you gave chastisement! Nor, know the gallows, nor the monarch is; And like an eagle o' his airy towers, To cause annoyance that comes near his nest,— And you degenerate, you inegrate rebels, You bloody vices, you crouching up, O'er of your dear mother England, blush for shame: For your own ladies, and pale-visaged maids, Like Amazons, come tripping after drums;

Their thimbles into armed gauntlets change,
Their scimitars, and their gentle hearts
To fierce and bloody inclination.

Lew. There end thy braver, and turn thy face in peace.

We grant thee, if it cannot out substitute thee well;
We hold our time too precious to be spent

With such a braggard.

Bast. No, I will speak.

Lew. We will attend to neither:

Strike up the drums; and let the tongue of war

Plead for our interest, and our being here.

Bast. Indeed, your drums being beaten, will cry out;

And so shall you, being bested: Do but start
And give th'brace, and I'll brush any of thy drum,
And even at hand a drum is ready braced,
That shall revere the sound as loud as thine;
Sound but another, and another shall,
As kind of thin, tatter'd, and week'd, or war;
And mock the deep-mouth'd thunder: for at hand
(Not trusting to this halting legate here, Whom he hath used rather for sport than need)
Is warlike John; and in his foremost head
A bare-ribb'd death, whose office is this day
To feast upon whole thousand of the French.

Lew. Strike up our drums to find this danger out,
Bast. And thou shalt find it, Dauphin, do not doubt.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—A Field of Battle.

Alarums. Enter King John, and Hubert.

K. John. How goes the day with us? O, tell me, Hubert.

Hub. Bast. Here, I fear: How fares your majesty?

K. John. This fever, that hath troubled me so long,
Lies heavy on me: O, my heart is sick!

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord, your valiant kinsman, Faulconbridge,

Desires your majesty to leave the field,

And send him word by me, which way you go.

K. John. Tell him toward Swinestead, to the gibe.

Mess. Be of good comfort; for the great supply
That was expected by the Dauphine here,
Are wear'd three nights ago on Goodwin sands.
This news was brought to Richard but even now:
The French fight coldly, and retire themselves.

K. John. Ah me! this tyrant fever burns me up,
And will not let me welcome this good news—
Set up the standard toward Swinestead: to my right
Weakness possesseth me, and I am faint. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Another Part of the same.

Enter Salisbury, Pembroke, Bigot, and others.

Sal. I did not think the king so stord with friends.

Pem. Up once again; put spirit in the French;

If they miscarry, we miscarry too.

Sal. That misbegotten devil, Faulconbridge,

In spite of spite, rides up the whole day's way.

Pem. They say, king John, sore sick, hath left the field.

Enter Melun wounded, and led by Soldiers.

Mel. Lead me to the revolts of England here.

Sal. When we were happy, we had other names.

Pem. It is the count Melun.

Sal. Wounded to death.

Mel. Fly, noble English, you are bought and sold;

Untread the rude eye of rebellion,

And weep our home again desecrated faith.

Seek out king John, and fall before his feet;

For, if the French be lords of this loud day,

He means to compensate the pains you take,
By crying off your head: Thus with a sworn,
And I with him, and many more with me,

Upon the altar at St. Edmund's Burry;

Even on that altar, where we swore to you

Dear arrowy and everlasting love.

Sal. May this lie possible? may this be true?

Mel. Have I not hideous death within my view,

Ravish'd but a quantity of life;

Which bleeds away, even as a form of wax

Resolved from his figure against the fire!*

*Needles.  0 Roast.  0 Sky.

A proverb intimating treachery.

In allusion to the images made by witches.

In what the world should make you now deceive,
Since my tongue can to lose the sense of all your lives,

Why should I then be false; since it is true
That I must die here, and live hence by truth?

I say again, if Lewis do win the day,

He is for thee; e'er those eyes of yours

Behold another day break in the cast:

But even this night,—whose black contagious breath

Already smokes upon the burning crest

Of their ill, felicit, and starry-awred sail,

Even this ill night your breathing shall expire;

Paying the fine of rated treachery.

Even with the reacher was fine of all your lives,

If Lewis by your assistance win the day.

Commend me to one Hubert, with your king;

The love of him,—and this respect besides,

For the French there was an Englishman—

Awakes my conscience to confess all this,

In lieu whereof, I pray you bear me hence

From forth the noise and rumor of the field;

Where I may think this is the remnant of my thoughts

In peace, and part this body and my soul

With contemplation and devout desires.

Sal. We do believe thee:—And be this my soul

But I do love the favor and the form

Of this most fair occasion, by the which

We will untread the steps of damned night;

And, like a bated and retired flood,

Leaving our muckers with an irregular course,

Soope low within those bounds we have o'erlook'd,

And calmly run in obedience.

Even to the French, to our great king John,—

My arm shall give them the help to bear thee hence;

For I do see the cruel pangs of death

Right in thine eye:—Away, my friends! Newflight:—

And happy newness, that intends old right.

[Exeunt, leading off MELIN.

SCENE V.—The French Camp.

Enter Lewis and his Train.

Lewis. The sun of heaven, mechoth, was both to set;

But stay'd and made the western welkin blush,

When the English meusur'd backward their own
Scene VII.

KING JOHN.

Hub. Unkind remembrance! thou, and eyeless night,
Have done me shame—brave soldier, pardon me,
That any accent, breaking from thy tongue,
Should escape the true acquaintance of mine ear.

Kit. Come, come; sans compliment, what news abroad?

Hub. Why, here walk in the black bower of night,
And you out.

Kit. Brief, then; and what's the news?

Hub. O, my sweet air, news fitting to the night,
Black, fearful, comfortless, and horrible.

Kit. Show me the very wound of this ill news;
I am no woman, I won't swoon at it.

Hub. The king, I fear, is poison'd by a monk;
I left him almost speechless, and broke out
To bewitch him with this evil potion;
I think the better arm you to the sudden time,
Than if you had at leisure known of this.

Kit. How did he take it? who did taste to him?

Hub. A monk. I tell you a resolved villain,
Whose bowels suddenly burst out: the king
Yet speaks, and, peradventure, may recover.

Kit. Who didst thou leave to tend his majesty?

Hub. Why, know you not! the lords are all come back.
And brought prince Henry in their company;
At whose request the king has pardon'd them,
And they are all about his business here.

Kit. Withhold thine indignation, mighty heaven!
And tempt us not to hear above our power!—
I'll tell thee, Hubert, half my powers have failed,
Passing these days, are taken by the tide.
These Lincoln washes have devoured them;
Myself, well mounted, hardly have escaped.
And care! and conduct me to the king;
I doubt, he will be dead, or c'te come.

[Exit Hubert.

Enter PEMBROKE.

Pem. His highness yet doth speak; and holds belief,
That, being brought into the open air,
It would alloy the burning quality.
Oft that fell poison which assails him.

Pem. Let him be brought into the orchard here.—

Kit. Doth he still rage?

[Exit Hubert.

Pem. He is more patient
Than when you left him; even now he sung.

Pem. O vanity of sickness! fierce extremes,
In our organ-pipe of frailty, and our organ,
Death, having prey'd upon the outward parts,
Leaves them insensible; and his siege is now
Against the mind, which he pricks and wounds
With many lesons of strange fantasticks;
Which, in their throng and press to that last hold,
Confound themselves. 'Tis strange, that death
Should sing—

I am the organist to this pale faint swan,
Who chants a dolorous hymn to his own death;
And, from the organ-pipe of frailty, sings
His soul and body to their lasting clod of comfort; prince, for you are born
To set a form upon that indigest
Which he hath left so shapeless and so rude.

Re-enter BURGART, ATTENDANTS, WHO BRING IN KING JOHN IN A CHAIR.

K. John. Ay, marry, now my soul hath elbow-room;
It would not out at windows, nor at doors.
There is so hot a summer in my bosom,
That all my bowels crumble up like ashes;
I am a scribbled form, drawn with a pen
Upon a parchment; and against this fire
Do I shrink up.

Pem. How fares your majesty?

Kit. Poison'd,—ill fare;—dead, forsook, cast off;
And none of you will bid the winter come
Without To thrust his leoy fingers in my mouth;
Nor let my kingdom's rivers take their course
Through my burn'd bosom; nor entreat the north
To make his bleak winds kiss my parched lips,
And comfort them with cold:—I do not wish much,
I bee cold comfort; and you are so strait!
And so ingrateful, you deny me that.

P. Hen. O, that there were some virtue in my tears,
That might relieve you!

Kit. The salt in them is hot.—
Within me is a hell; and there the poison is,
As in a fennel, confined to tyranny
On unpreventable condemned bliss.

Enter THE BASTARD.

Bast. O, I am scalded with my violent operation,
And saven of speed to see your majesty.

Kit. O cousin, thou art come to set mine eye
The tackle of thy living heart in centre;
And all the shrouds, whereby with my life should sail,
Are turned to one thread, one little hair:
My heart hath one poor string to strait it by,
Which holds but time: by thy news he is utter'd;
And then all this thou seest, is but a clad,
And module of confined royalty.

Bast. The Dauphin is preparing furtherward;
Where, hence, he knows, how we shall answer him:
For, in a night, the best part of my power,
As I upon advantage did remove,
Were in the allayed unpardonable.
Devoured by the unexpected need.

Sal. You breathe these dead news in as dead an ear—
My heart!—the lord!—but now a king,—now thus,
P. Hen. Even so must I run on, and even so stop,
What certainty of the world, what hope, what stay,
When this was not a king, and now is clad!

Bast. And I am come, sir, I do but stay behind,
To do the office for thee of revenge;
And then my soul shall wait on thee to heaven,
As it on earth hath been thy servant still.
Now, now, now, it is indeed that mother-widow's tears
Where be your powers! show now your mended faiths;
And instantly return with me again.
To push destruction, and peregrine shame,
Out of the weak door of our fainting land:
Straight let us seek, or straight we shall be sought;
The Dauphin rages at our very heels.

Sal. It seems you know not then so much as we:
We the cardinal Pardolph is within at rest,
Who half an hour since came from the Dauphin;
And brings from him such oils of our peace
As honor and we with our subject may take,
With purpose presently to leave this war.

Bast. He will the rather do it, when he sees Ourselves well swerved to our dearest needs.
Sal. Nay, it is in a manner done already:
For many carriages he had despatch'd
To the sea-side, and put his cause and quarrel
To the disposing of the regal cognation;
With whom yourself, myself, and other lords,
If you think meet, this afternoon will post
To consummate this business happily.

Bast. Let it be so:—And you, my noble prince,
With other princes that may best be spared,
Shall wait upon your father's funeral.

P. Hen. At Worcester must my body be inter'd;
For so be it.

Bast. Thither shall it then.
And happily may your sweet self put on
The lineal state and glory of the land!
To whom, and with all submission, O my knee,
I do beseech your faithful services
And true subjection everlasting.
Sal. And the like tender of our love we make,
To rest without a spot for evermore.

P. Hen. I have a kind soul, that would do you thanks,
And knows not how to do it, but with tears.

Bast. O, let us pay the time but needful woe,
Sing it hath been beforehand with our griefs.—
This England never did, nor never shall Lie at the proud foot of a conqueror;
But when it first did put to work itself.
Now these her princes are come home again,
Come the three corners of the world in arms,
And we shall shock them! Youth shall make untrue,
If England to itselfe rest but true.

[Exeunt.

THE LIFE AND DEATH OF
KING RICHARD II.

PERSONS REPRESENTED.

KING RICHARD THE SECOND.
EDMUND OF LANGLY, Duke of York; Uncle to
JOHN OF GANT, Duke of Lancaster; the King.
HARRY, surnamed Bolingbroke, Duke of Hereford,
Son to John of Gaunt; afterwards K. Henry IV.
DUKE OF AUMERE, Son to the Duke of York.
MOWBRAY, Duke of Norfolk.
DUKE OF SURREY.
EARL OF SALISBURY, EARL BERKELEY.
BISHOP OF LINCOLN.
GREN.
EARL OF NORTHUMBERLAND.
HENRY PECK, his Son.

SCENE, dispersedly in England and Wales.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—London. A ROOM IN THE PALACE.

Enter King Richard, attended: John of Gaunt, and other Nobles, with him.

K. Rich. Old John of Gaunt, time-honour'd Lancaster,
Hast thou, according to thy oath and bond, 1
Brought hither Henry Hereford, thy bold son;
Here to make good thy bolsterous late appeal,
Which then our leisure would not let us hear,
Against the Duke of Norfolk, Thomas Mowbray?
Gauld: I have, my liege.

K. Rich. Tell me, moreover, hast thou sounded him, If he appeal the luke on ancient metals;
Or worldly as a good subject should,
On some known ground of treachery in him?
Gauld. As near as I could sit him on that argument—
On some apparent danger seen in him,
Aim'd at your highness: no inveterate malice.
K. Rich. Then call them to our presence; face to face,
Androwning brow to brow, ourselves will hear
The accuser, and the accused, freely speak:
(Exeunt some Attendants. High-stomach'd are they both, and full of ire,
In race deaf as the sea, hasty as fire.
Re-enter Attendants, with Bolingbroke and Norfolk.

Boling. May many years of happy days betall
My gracious sovereign, my most loving liege!
Now, Each day still better other's happiness;
Until the heavens, envying earth's good hap,
Add an immortal title to your crown!
K. Rich. We thank you both: yet one but flatterers dies.
As well appeareth by the cause you come;
Namely, to appeal each other of high treason.

1 Bond.
Mean time, let this defend my loyalty,—
By all my hopes, most falsely doth he he.
Boling. Pale trembling coward, there I throw my gage.
Disclaiming here the kindred of a king;
And lay aside my high blood's royalty—
We will not hear, nor reason may we except to except;
If guiltily dast hand left thee so much strength,
As to take up mine honor's pawn, then stoop;
By that, and all the rights of knighthood else,
We brook no false-knight, nor will we hear,
What I have spoke, or thou canst worse devise.
Ner. I take it up; and, by that sword I swear,
Which gently laid my knighthood on my shoulder,
I will answer thee in any far degree.
Or chivalrous design of knightly trial:
And, when I mount, alive may I not light,
If I be traitor, or unjustly fight!
K. Rich. What doth our cousin lay to Mowbray's charge?
It must be great, that can inherit us
So much as of a thought of ill in him.
Boling. Look, what I speak my life shall prove to true;
That Mowbray hath receiv'd eight thousand nobles;
In name of lendings for his highness' soldiers;
The which he hath detain'd for lawful employment,
Like a true traitor, and injurious base.
Besides I say, and will in battle prove—
Or here, or elsewhere, to the furthest verge
The which he survey'd for English land,
—That all the treasons, for these eighteen years
Complotted and contrived in this land,
Fetch from false Mowbray their first head-spring.
Further I say, and further will I say,
Upon his bad life, to make all this good—
That he did plot the duke of Gloucester's death;
Suggest his soon-believing adversaries;
And consequently, like a traitor coward,
Stirred out his innocent soul through streams of blood:
Which blood, like sacrificing Abel's cries,
Eve's face was touchless cave the earth,
To me, for justice, and rough chastisement;
And, by the glorious worth of my descent,
This arm shall do it, or this life be spent.
Ner. Thou hast spoken with a pitch his Burton scars!—
Thomas of Norfolk, what say'st thou to this?
Ner. O, let my sovereign turn away his face,
And hid his ears a little while be dear,
Till I have told this slander of his blood,
How God, and good men, hate so foul a liar.
K. Rich. Mowbray, impartial are our eyes, and ears;
Were he my brother, nay, my kingdom's heir,
(As he is but my father's brother's son)
Now by my sceptre's awe I make a vow,
Such neighbor nearness to our sacred blood
Should nothing privilege him, nor partialize
The unstoppering fairness of my unparting soul;
He is our subject, Mowbray, so art thou;
Free speech, and fearless, I do thee allow.
Ner. Then, Bolingbroke, as low as to thy heart,
Through the false passage of thy throat, thou liest,
Three parts of that receipt I had for Calais,
Disbur'd I only to his highness' soldiers;
The other part reserve I by consent;
For that my sovereign liege was in my debt,
Upon remainder of a dear account,
Since last I went to France to pitch his queen;
Now swallow down that hate.—For Gloucester's death,—
I slew him not; but to my own disgrace,
Neglected my sworn duty in that case.—
For you, my noble lord of Lancaster,
The honorable father to my foe,
Once did I lay in ambush for your life,
A trespass that doth vex my grievous soul:
But when I last receiv'd the sacrament,
I did confess it; and exactly begg'd
Your grace's pardon, and, I hope, I had it.
This is my fault: As for the rest appeal'd,
It was from the name of a villain;
A recreant and most degenerate traitor:
Which in myself I boldly will defend;
And interchangerably hurl down my gage
Upon this overweening traitor's ford,
To prove myself a loyal gentleman
Even in the best blood chamber'd in his bosom:
In haste wherof, most heartily I pray
Your highness to assign our trial day.
K. Rich. Truth-kindled gentlemen, be rul'd by me:
Let's purge this newer without letting blood:
This we prescribe, though no physician;
Deep malice, without remedy to except to except;
Forget, forgive; conclude, and be agreed;
Our doctors say, this is no time to bleed.—
Good uncle, let this end where it begun;
We'll calmly the diakon York's and our son.
Gaunt. To be a make-peace shall become my rage:
Throw down, my son, the duke of Norfolke's gage.
K. Rich. And, Norfolke, throw down his gage.
Gaunt. What! I will! Whom have I to blame? when!
Obedience bids, I should not bid again.
K. Rich. Norfolke, throw down; we bid; there is no bide.
Ner. My lord, I will throw, dread sovereign, at thy foot:
My life thou shalt command, but not my shame:
The one my duty owe; but my fair name,
(Despite of death, that lives upon my grave,
To dark dishonor's use thou shalt not have.
I am disgrace, impeach'd, and baffled here;
Pierced to the soul with slander's venom'd spur;
The which no balm can cure, but his heart-blood
Which break'd it this passage.
K. Rich. Rage must be withheld;
Give me his gage.—Lion keepkekeke.
Ner. You but not change their spots: take but
Your own, and your shame.
And I resign my gage. My dear lord, my lord,
The purest treasure mortal times affords,
As speechless reputation.
Men are but gilded clay, or painted clay.
A jewel in a ten-times-bar'd-up chest
Is—a bold spirit in a loyal breast;
Mine honor is my life; both grow in one;
Take honor from me, and my life is done.
Then, dear my base, mine honor let me try;
In by my life, and for that I die.
K. Rich. Canum, throw down your gage; do you begin.
Boling. O, God defend my soul from such foul sin!
Shall I seem crest-fallen in my father's sight?
Or with paler cheek than death speechless made
Before this out-dared dastard! Ere my tongue
Shall wound mine honor with such phraseless wrong,
Or sound so base a parce, my teeth shall tear
The slavish motive of remonstrance;
And spit it bleeding in his high disgrace,
Where shame doth harbor, even in Mowbray's face.
[Exeunt Gaunt.]
K. Rich. We were not born to sue, but to command:
Which since we cannot do to make you friends,
Be ready as your lives shall answer it.
At Coventry, upon saint Lauer'd's day;
There shall your swords and lances arbitrate
The swelling difference of your settled hate;
Since we cannot agree, you, we shall see
Justice design the victor's chari'ny.
—Marshal, command our officers at arms
Be ready to direct these home-arms. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—The same. A Room in the Duke of Lancaster's Palace.

Enter Gaunt and Duchess of Gloster.

Gaunt. Alas! the part I had in Gloster's blood
Dare both more solace me, than your exclains,
To stir against the butchers of his life.
But since commission both in those parts,
Which made the fault that we cannot correct,
Put we our quarrel to the will of heaven;
Who, when he sees the hours ripe on earth,
Will rain hot vengeance on offenders' heads.
Duch. Finds brotherhood in those no sharers purport?
Hath love in th' old blood no living fire?
Edward's seven sons, whereof thyself art one,
Were as seven phials full of a sacred skill.
Or seven love branches springing from one root:
Some of those seven are dried by nature's course,
Some of those branches by the destinies cut:
But, Thomas, true blood, my brother, my son,
One phial full of Edward's sacred liquor,
One flourishing branch of his most royal root—
Is crack'd, and all the precious liquor spilt;
No advantage in delay. [Re-enter Bolingbroke.]

KING RICHARD II.

Act I.

Is hark'd down, and his summer leaves all faded,
By envy's hand, and murder's bloody ax.
Ah, Gaunt! his blood was thine; that bed, that
That metal, that self-mend'd, that fashion'd thee,
Made him a man; and though thou livest, and
Yet art thou slain in him: thou dost consent
In some large measure to thy father's death,
In that thou seest thy wretched brother die,
Who will weep in model of thy father's lice.
Call it not patience, Gaunt; it is despair
In suffering thus thy brother to be slaughtered'd,
Show'st the naked pathway to thy life,
There's the end of murder; here's the peace:
That which in mean men we entitle—patience,
Is pale cold cowardise in noble breasts.
What shall I say to safeguard time own life,
The white out of the whiteness of Gaoler's death.
Gaunt. Heaven's the quarrel; for heaven's substitute,
His deputy anointed in his sight.
Hath caus'd his death; the which, if wrongfully,
Let heaven revenge; for I may never lift
An angry arm against his minister.
Duch. Where then, alas! may I complain myself?
Gaunt. To heaven, the widow's champion and defence.
Duch. Why then, I will. Farewell, old Gaunt.
The son of my son! There's no show to do stand to.
Our cousin Hereford and tell Mowbray fight:
O, sit my husband's wrongs on Hereford's spear,
That it may enter butcher Mowbray's breast:
On that good horse, and in the first assault,
Be Mowbray's sins so heavy in his bosom,
That they may break his toaming courser's back,
And throw the rider headlong in the lists.
A cutt'e recut, my cousin Hereford! Farewell, old Gaunt: thy sometime brother's wife,
With her companion grief must end her life.
Gaunt. Sister, farewell; I must to Coventry;
A moon's road stay with thee, as go with me.
Duch. Yet one word more;—Grief boundeth where it falls,
Not with the empty hollowness, but weight:
I take my leave before I have begun;
For sorrow ends not when it seemeth done,
Commend me to my brother, Edmund York.
Lo, this is all;—Nay, yet depart not so;
Though this be ill, do not so quickly go;
I shall remember more. Bid him—O, what—;
With all good speed at Flashy visit me.
Alas, and woe shall good old York there see,
But empty lodgings and unfurnished walls,
Unoccupied offices, untroubled stones!
And what cheer there for welcome, but my groans?
There's my remembrance, let him there prepare,
To seek out sorrow that dwells everywhere:
Desolate, desolate, will I hence, and die;
The last leave of thee takes my weeping eye.

SCENE III.—Gosford Green, near Cowdray.

Lists set out, on a Throne. Herald, &c., attending.
Enter the Lord Marshal and Aumerle.

Mar. My lord Aumerle, is Harry Hereford arm'd?
Aum. Yes, yet at all points; and longs to enter in.
Mar. The duke of Norfolk, sprightly and bold,
Stay's but the summons of the appellant's trumpet.
Aum. Why, then, the champions are prepared
For nothing but his majesty's approach.

Flourish of Trumpets. Enter King Richard, who takes his seat on his throne; Gaunt, and several Noblemens, who take their places. A trumpet is sounded, and answered by another trumpet within.
Then Enter Nortfolk, in armor, preceded by a Herald.

K. Rich. Marshal, demand of yonder champion
The cause of his arrival here in arms.
Ask him his name; and orderly proceed
To swear him in the justice of his cause.

Mar. In God's name, and the king's, say who
And why thou com'st; thus knightly clad in arms:
Thus meet what man thou com'st, and what thy quarrel.

Speak truly, on thy knighthood, and thy oath;
And so defend thee heaven, and thy valor!
Nor. My name is Thomas Mowbray, duke of Norfolk:
Who hither come engaged by my oath,
(Which, heaven defend, a knight should violate!) Both in his birth's,
In his goodly and truth:
To God, my king, and my succeeding issue,
Against the duke of Hereford that appealeth me:
And, by the grace of God, and this same arm,
To prove him and defend thee of my part;
A traitor to my God, my king, and me:
And, as I truly fight, defend me heaven!

[He takes his seat.

Trumpet sounds. Enter Bolingbroke, in armor, preceded by a Herald.

K. Rich. Marshal, ask yonder knight in arms,
Both who he is, and what thereby he cometh hither;
Thus plac'd in habitations of war;
And formally according to our law
Despise, young, and chiefly draw.
Mar. What is thy name? and wherefrom comest thou:
Before king Richard, in his royal lists;
Against whom comest thou? and what's thy quarrel?

Speak like a true knight, so defend thee heaven!

Boling. Harry of Hereford, Lancaster, and Derby,
Am I not truly Henry, Duke of Lancaster?
To prove, by heaven's grace, and my body's valor,
In lists, on Thomas Mowbray, Duke of Norfolk,
That he's a traitor, foul and dangerous,
To God and fortune should Richard's heart to me:
And, as I truly fight, defend me heaven!

Mar. On pain of death, no person be so bold
Or daring-hardy, as to touch the lists;
Except the nearest of blood and such old friends;
Appointed to direct these fair designs.

Boling. Lord Marshal, let me kiss my sovereign
hand,
And bow my knee before his majesty:
For Mowbray, and myself, are like two men
That vow a long and weary pilgrimage;
Then we take a common resolution:
And loving farewell of our several friends.

Mar. The appellant in all duty greets your highness,
And crave's to kiss your hand, and take his leave
K. Rich. We will descend, and fold him in our arms.
Cousin of Hereford, as thy cause is right,
So be thine fortune in this royal fight!
Farewell, my blood; which it to-day shed,
Lament we may, but not revenge thee dead.

Boling. O, let no noble eye profane a tear
For me! My name is Bolingbroke; and to Prove me, would I be gored with Mowbray's spear:
As confident, as is the lion's flight.
Against a bird, do I with Mowbray fight—
My lord Aumerle. [To Lord Marshal.] I take my leave of you—
Of you, my noble cousin, lord Aumerle:—
Not sick, although I have to do with death;
Not dead, although I breathe with the breath.

L. Mar. Go, at English feasts, so I respect
The daintiest last, to make the end most sweet:
O thou, the earthly author of my blood,

To Gaunt.

Whose youthful spirit, in me regenerate,
Both with a two-fold vigor fit me up
To reach at victory above my head,—
Add pitch to mine armor with thy prayers;
And with thy blessing steel my lance's point,
That it may enter Mowbray's wavy coat,
And furnish new the name of John of Gaunt,
Even in the lusty 'lavor of his son.

Gaunt. Heaven in thy good cause make thee prosperous!
Be swift like lightning in the execution;
And let thy blows, doubly redoubled,
Fall like amazing thunder on the casque
Of thy adverse, pernicious enemy;
Rouse up thy youthful blood, be valiant, and live.

Boling. Mine innocence, and saint George to thrive!

[He takes his seat.

Nor. [Rising.] However heaven, or fortune, cast
my lot,
There lives or dies, true to king Richard's shield,
A loyal, just, and upright gentleman;
Never did captive with a fierer heart.
Is made my gaoler to attend on me. I am too old to fawn upon a nurse. Too far in years to be a pupil now; What is the artifice but being careless death, Which restless tongue from breathing native breath? K. Rich. It boots thee not to be compassionate; After our sentence, paining comes too late. Nor. Their wrath is as a fiery threat, To dwell in solemn shades of endless night.

K. Rich. Farewell, my lord: securely I clesp Virtue with valor confined in thine eye—

Order the trial, marshal, and begin.

To the Duke of Norfolk.

Her. Harry of Hereford, Lancaster, and Derby.

To God, his sovereign, and himself,

Attending but the signal to begin.

Mur. Sound trumpets; and set forward combatants.

Stow, thou hast thrown his banner down.

K. Rich. Let them lay by their helmets and their spears,

And both return both to their chairs again—

With this word, and set the trumpets sound,

While we return these dukes what we decree—

[Draw near.

To the combatants.

And list, what with our council we have done.

For that our kingdom's earth should not be solitude—

Should, one that, or, I should that; but I, the Lord of the

And, with our eyes the dire aspect

Of civil wounds plough'd up with neighbours' swords;

And for we think the eagle-winged pride

Of sky-aspiring and ambitious thoughts

With rivalating envy, set you on

To take our peace, which in our country's cradle

Draws the sweet infant breath of gentle sleep;

Wherein, how, and what; with boisterous tumult drums,

With harsh resounding trumpets' dreadful threat;

And the succeeding shock of arms:

Might from our quiet confines fright fair peace,

And make us wade even in our kindred's blood—

Then, till, I have banished you from our territories,

You, cousin Herford, upon proper death,

Till twice live summers have enrich'd our fields,

Shall not reject our fair dominions,

But the latter yokes of banishment.

Boling. Your will be done! This must our comfort be;

That sun that warns you here, shall shine on me;

And these his golden beams, to you here lent

Shall be clad in my apparel. K. Rich. Norfolk, for thee remains a heavier doom,

Which I with some unwillingness pronounce;

The fly-slow hours shall not determine

The hopeless limit of thy lingering life

The hopeless word of—never to return,

Breathe I against thee, upon pain of life.

A heavy sentence, my most sovereign liege,

And all the terms and tributes of my service's mouth;

A dearer merit, not so deep a main

As to be cast forth in the common air,

Here, as I desired at your highest hand.

The language I have learned these many years,

My native English, now must I forget,

And now my tongue's use is to me no more,

That untrained voice, so sweet or shrill;

Or, like a cunning instrument Cased up,

Or, being open, put into his hands

That knows no touch to tune the harmony.

With the whelp I vows you every lurking tongue,

Double portentil'd, with my teeth, and lips;

And dull, unfeeling, barren ignorance

Treachere
MUR. My lord, no leave take I; for I will ride, as far as land will let me, by your side. GAUNT. O, to what purpose dost thou hoard thy words, that thou return'st not greeting to thy friends? BOLING. I have too few to take my leave of you, when the tongue's office should be prodigal To utter the abundant dolor of the heart. GAUNT. Thy grief is but thy absence for a time. BOLING. Joy absent, grief is present for that time. GAUNT. What is six winters? they are quickly gone. BOLING. To men in joy: but grief makes one hour ten. GAUNT. Call it a travel that thou tak'st for pleasure, BOLING. My heart is sigh when I miscall it so, which finds it an enforced pilgrimage. GAUNT. The sullen passage of thy weary steps Esteem a foil, wherein thou art to set The precious jewel of thy home-return. BOLING. Nay, rather, every tedious stride I make Will but remember me what a deal of world I wander from the jewels that I love. Must I not serve a long apprenticeship To foreign passages, and in the end, Having my freedom, boast of nothing else, But that I was a journey man to grief! GAUNT. All places that the eye of heaven visits, Are to a wise man ports and happy havens: Teach thy necessity to reason thus; There is no virtue like necessity. Think not, the king did banish thee; But thou, the king: Woe doth the heavier sit, Where it perceives it is but faintly borne. Go, say, I sent thee forth to purchase honor, And not—the king exiled thee: or suppose, Devouring penitence hangs in our air, And thou art flying to a fresher elime, Look, what thy soul holds dear, imagine it To he that way thou go'st, not whence thou com'st: Suppose the singing birds, musicians; The grass whereon thou tread'st, the presence strew'd; The flowers, fair ladies; and thy steps no more Than a delightful measure or a dance. For marin's sorrow hath less ease; the tear That the man mocks at, and sets it light. BOLING. O, who can hold a fire in his hand, by thinking on the frosty Caucasus! Or clov the hungry edge of a counterfeit, By bare imagination of a feast! Or swallow naked in December snow, By thinking on fantastic summer's heat! O no, the apperception of the spirit, Giv's but the greater feeling to the worse: Fell sorrow's tooth doth never rankle more, Than when it bites, but lanceath not the sore. GAUNT. Come, come, my son, I'll bring thee on thy way: Had I thy youth and cause, I would not stay. BOLING. Then, England's ground, farewell, sweet soul, adieu! My mother, and my nurse, that bears me yet! Where'er I wander, boast of this I can; Though banish'd, yet a true-born Englishman. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The same. A Room in the King's Castle.

Enter KING RICHARD, BAGOT, and GREEN; Aumerle following.

K. Rich. We did observe.—Cousin Amnerle, How far brought you high Hereford on his way? Aum. I brought high Hereford, if you call him so, But to the next high way, and there I left him. K. Rich. And, say, what store of parting tears were shed? Aum. Faith, none by me: except the north-east wind. Which then blew bitterly against our faces, Awaked the sleeping rheum; and so, by chance, Did grace our hollow parting with a tear.

K. Rich. What said our cousin, when you parted with him?

Aum. Farewell:

And, for my heart disdained that my tongue Should so profane the word, that taught me craft To counterfeit oppression of such grief, That words seem'd buried in my sorrows' grave.

Marry, would the word farewell have lengthen'd

And added years to his short banishment, He should have had a volume of farewells; But since it would not, none of me.

K. Rich. He is our cousin; but 'tis doubt, When time shall call him home from banishment, Whether our kinsman come to see his friends. Ourselves, and Bushy, Bagot here, and Green, Observe'd his courtship to the common people:—How he did seem to dive into their hearts, With humble and familiar courtesy; What reverence he did throw away on slaves; Wooning poor craftsmen, with the craft of smiles, And patient underhearing of his fortune, As 'twere to banish their affects with him. Oil goes his bonnet to an oyster-wench; A brace of draymen lid—god speed him well, And had the tribute of his supple knee, With—hanna mine, my loving friends; Whose lives were ours; England in reversion his, And he our subjects' next degree in hope. Green. Well. He is gone; and with him go these thoughts. Now for the rebels, which stand out in Ireland,— Expedient manage must be made, my liege; Ere further leisure yield them further means, For their debauchery, and your highness' loss.

K. Rich. We will ourselves in person to this war. And, for our soldiers—with too great a court, And liberal largesses—are grown somewhat light, We are enforced to form our royal realm; The revenue whereof shall furnish us For our affairs in hand: if that come short, Our substitutes at home shall have blank charters; Wherein, when they shall know what men they are rich, They shall subscribe them for large sums of gold, And send them after to supply our wants; For we will make for Ireland presently.

Enter Body. BUSBY. Bushy, what news!

Bushy. Old John of Gaunt is grievous sick, my lord; Suddenly taken; and hath sent post haste To entreat his majesty to visit him. K. Rich. Where lies he? Bushy. At Ely-house. K. Rich. Now put it, heaven, in his physician's mind. To help him in his grave immediately! The lining of his coffers shall make coats To deck our soldiers for these Irish wars.—Come, gentlemen, let's all go visit him. Fray heaven, we may make haste, and come too late! [Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—London. A Room in Ely-house.

GAUNT on a Couch; the DUKE OF YORK, and others, standing by him.

GAUNT. Will the king come! that I may breathe my last In wholesome counsel to his most-youth. Presence chamber at court. ¶Growling.

York. Vex not yourself, nor strive not with your breath; For all in vain comes counsel to his ear. GAUNT. O, but they say, the tongues of dying men Enforce attention, like deep harmony: Where words are scarce, they are seldom spent in vain: ¶Because.
For they breathe the truth, that breathe their words in vain.

He, that no more must say, is listen'd more
Than they whom youth and ease have taught to do so.

More are men's ends mark'd than their lives before:
The setting sun, and music at the close,
As the last taste of sweets, is sweetest last;
Writ in remembrance, more than things long past:
There's life in my years back which time should steal, my head, my death's sad tale may yet undeaf't his ear.

York. No; it is stopp'd with other flattering titles.

As, praises of his state: then, there are found
Lascivious metres, to whose venom sound
The open air of youth doth always listen;
Reckless fashions in that court it is;
Whose manners still our tardy apish nation
Limpers after, in base imitation,
Where doth the world thrust forth a vanity,
(Or, it be new, there's no respect how vile)
That is not quickly buzz'd into his ears!
Then all too late comes counsel! to be heard
Where doth commit mutiny with wit's regard.
Direct not him, whose way himself will choose;
'Tis breath thou lack'st, and that breath with thou lose.

Gaunt. Methinks, I am a prophet new inspird;
And thus, expiring, dry remnant of the world, I
His rash fierce blade of riot cannot last:
For violent fires soon burn out themselves:
Small showers last long, but sudden storms are short;
He fires betimes, that spurs too fast betimes;
With eager feeding, food doth choke the feeder.
Light vanity, inatect cormorant,
Consuming means, preserved on none itself.
This royal throne of kings, this sceptred isle,
This earth of majesty, this seat of Maje,
This other Eden, demi-paradise;
This fortress built by nature for herself,
Against infection, and the hand of war;
This happy breed of men, this little world,
This precious stone set in the silver sea,
Which serves it in the office of a wall,
Or, as a most defiant to a house,
Against the envy of less happy lands:
This blessed plot, this earth, this realm, this England,
This nurse, this teeming womb of royal kings,
Fare?d by their breed, and famous by their birth,
Renowned for their deeds as far from home,
(For Chippa's service, and true chivalry)
As is the sepulchre in stubborn Jewry,
Of the world's ransom, blessed Mary's son:
This land of such dear souls, this dear dear land,
Decrepid, and forsook through the world,
Is now lease'd out (I die pronouncing it)
Like to a tenement or pelting farm;
England, bound in with the triumphant sea,
Of watery Neptune, is now bound in with shame,
With inky plots, and rotten parchement bonds;
That England, that was wont to conquer others,
Hath made a shameful conquest of itself:
O, would the scandall vanish with my life,
How happy then were my ensuing death!

Enter King Richard, and QUEEN; ACMELLE, BUSBY, GREEN, BAGOT, ROSS, and WOLLINGHOU.

York. The king is come; deal mildly with his youth.

For young hot colts, being vaged, do rage the more.
Queen. How fear's our noble uncle, Lancaster?
K. Rich. What comfort, man! How is it with the gaunt Gaunt?
Gaunt. O, how that name befits my composition!
Old Gaunt, indeed; and gaunt! in being old:
Within me grief hath kept a tedious fast;
And all respect from men that dare to call me.
For sleeping England long time have I watch'd:
Watching breeds leanness, leanness is all gaunt:
The pleasure that some fathers feed upon,
Is my grief's fast, in my childrens looks;
And therein fasting, hast thou made me gaunt:
Gaunt am I for the grave, gaunt as a grave,
Whose hollow womb inherits nought but bones.
K. Rich. Can sick men play so nicely with their names?

Flatter. 6 Palty. 8 Lean, thin.
The plate, coin, revenues, and moveables, Whereof our uncle Gaunt did stand possessed, York. How long shall I be patient? Ah, how long Shall I endure under my father's care, Not Gaunt's death, nor Hereford's banishment, Not Gaunt's rebukes, nor England's private wrongs, Nor the prevention of poor Bolingbroke Abroad, and marriage, nor my patient heart, Have ever made me sour my patient cheek, Or bend one wrinkle on my sovereign face,— I am the best of noble Edward's sons, Of all his children, yet deprived of his, first: In war, was never lion roused more fierce, In peace was never gentle lamb more mild, Than was that young and princely gentleman: His face then last, for ever so he be, Accomplish'd with the number of thy hours; But, when he frowned, it was against the French, And not against his friends: his noble hand Did never bend, nor spent, and spent not that Which his triumphant father's hand had won: His hands were guilty of no kindred's blood, But bloody with the enemies of his kin. O, Richard! York is too far gone with grief, Or else he never would compare between— K. Rich. Why, uncle, what's the matter? Pardon me if you please; if not, I pleased Not to be pardon'd, am content withal, Seek you to seize, and gripe into your hands, The letters patent of the kingdom? Is not Gaunt dead? and doth not Hereford live? Was not Gaunt just? and is not Harry true? Did not the one deserve to have an heir? But his heir a well-servant? Take Hereford's rights away, and take from him His charters and his customary rights; Let not to-morrow then ensue to-day, To mock thyself, for how art thou a king, But by fair sequence and succession? Now, are ye God (God forbid, I say true!) If you do wrongfully seize Hereford's rights, Out of the letters patent that he hath By his attorneys-general to sue His lives, and deny his offer'd homage, You pluck a thousand dangers on your head, You lose a thousand well-disposed hearts, And prick my tender patience to those thoughts Which honor and allegiance cannot think. K. Rich. Think what you will; we seize into our hands His plate, his goods, his money, and his lands. York. I'll not be by the while: My liege, fare well, What will ensue hereof, there's none can tell; But by bad courses may be understood, That their events can never fall out good. (Exit. K. Rich. Go, Bushy, to the earl of Wiltshire straight; Bid him repair to us to Ely-house, To see this business: To-morrow next We will for Ireland, and the time, I trow; And we create, in absence of ourself, Our uncle York lord governor of England, For he is just and always lov'd us well. Come on, our queen: to-morrow must we part; Be merry, for our time of stay is short. (Exeunt, K. Rich., Bushy, Aumerle, Fishbourne, and Boar. North. Well, lords, the duke of Lancaster is dead. Ross. And living too; for now his son is duke. Willis. Barely in title, not in revenue. North. He is not really in both, if justly he had his right. Ross. My heart is great; but it must be threatened with silence, Ere I be burden'd, with a liberal tongue. North. Nay, speak thy mind; and let him never speak more, That speaks thy words again, to do thee harm! Whom Tends that thou'dst speak, to the duke of York? If it be so, out with it boldly, man; Quick is mine ear to hear of good towards him. Ross. No good at all, that I can do for him; Unless you call it good to pity him, bereft and zeled of his patrimony. North. Now, more heaven, 'tis shame, such wrongs are borne, *Claim possession; a law term. *Deprived. In him a royal prince, and many more Of noble blood in this declining land. The king is not himself, but basely led By blusterer's dumb, or they will strike him, Merely in hate, against any of us all, That will the king severely prosecute 'Gainst us, our lives, our children, and our heirs. Ross. That enemies hath he pill'd with grievous taxes, And lost their hearts; the nobles hath he fined For ancient quarrels, and quite lost their hearts. Willis. He is guilty of new executions and derision; As blanks, benevolence, and I wot not what; But what, o'God's name, doth become of this! North. Wars have not wasted it, for war'd he has. But basely yielded upon compromise That which his ancestors achieve'd with blows: More hath he spent in peace, than they in wars. Ross. The earl of Wiltshire hath the realm in farm. Willis. The king's grown bankrupt, like a broken man. North. Reproach, and dissolution, hangeth over him. Ross. He hath not money for these Irish wars, His humours taxation notwithstanding; But by the robbing of the banish'd duke. North. His noble kinsman: most dejected king! But, lords, we hear this fearful tempest sing, Yet seek no shelter to avoid the storm: We see the wind sit sore upon our sails, And yet we strike not, but securely perish. Ross. We see the very wreck that we must suffer; And now the danger near we are. For suffering so the causes of our wreck. North. Not so; even through the hollow eyes of death, I spy life peeping; but I dare not say How near the tidings of our comfort is. Willis. Nay, let us share thy thoughts, as thou dost say. Ross. Be confident to speak, Northumberland: We three are but thyself; and, speaking so, Thy words are but as thoughts; therefore be bold. North. Then thus— I have from Port le Blanc, a lay In Brittany, receiv'd intelligence, That Harry Hereford, Reinhold lord Cobham, [The son of Richard earl of Arundel] That late broke from the duke of Exeter, His brother, archbishop late of Canterbury, Sir Thomas Erpingham, John Ramsey, Sir John Blunt, sir Robert Waterford, and Francis Quinet,— All these well turnish'd by the duke of Bretagne, With eight tall ships, three thousand men of war, Are made ready, and have all due expedience, And shortly mean to touch our northern shore: Perhaps, they had ere this; but that they stay The first departure of the king for Ireland; If then, we shall shake off our slavish yoke, Impout our drooping country's broken wing, Redeem from breaking pawn the blenish'd crown, Wipe out the dust that hides our sceptre's gilt, And make high majesty look like itself. Away, with me, in post to Ravensbury: But if you faint, as fearing to do so, Stay, and be secret, and myself will go. Ross. To horse, to horse! horse doubts to them that fear. Willis. Hold out my horse, and I will first be there. [Exeunt. SCENE II. The same. A Room in the Palace. Enter Queen, Bushy, and Bagot. Bushy. Madam, your majesty is too much sad: You promis'd when you parted with the king, To lay aside life-harming horrid harbours, And every cursed disposition. Queen. To please the king, I did; to please myself, I cannot do it; yet I know no cause Why I should welcome such a guest as grief, Save bidding farewell! to so sweet a guest.
As my sweet Richard: Yet, again, methinks,
Some unbourn sorrow, ripe in fortune's womb,
Is coming towards me; and my inward soul
With nothing trembles: at something it grieves,
Now of a mind parting from my lord the king.
Bushy. Each substance of a grief hath twenty shadows,
Which show like grief itself, but are not so:
For some's eye, cloath'd with cloudy visage,
Divides one thing entire to many objects;
Like perspectives: which, rightly gaz'd upon,
Shew nothing but confusion: ev'ry awry,
Distracts itself, so to each sweet majesty.
Looking awry upon your lord's departure,
Finds shapes of grief, more than himself to wail;
Which, look'd on as it is, is sought but shadows
Of natural grief; which is not. Then, thinking
More than your lord's departure weep not; more's not seen:
Or if it be, 'tis with false sorrow's eye.
Which, for things true, weeps things imaginary.
*Queen. It may be so; but yet my inward soul
Persuades me, it is otherwise: Have'yer't be it,
I cannot but be so; so heavy sad.
As—though, in thinking, on no thought I think,—
Makes me with heavy nothing faint and shrink.
Bushy. 'Tis nothing but conceit, my gracious sister.
Queen. 'Tis nothing less: conceit is still derived
From some fore-father grief: mine is not so;
For nothing hath betwixt me my something grief:
Or something hath the nothing that I grieve:'
'Tis in reversion that I do possess,
But what it is, that is not yet known; what
I cannot name; 'tis nameless woe, I wot.'
Enter Green.
Green. Heaven save your majesty!—and well
I hope, the gentle.—gallant,* sir.
Queen. Why hope'st thou so? 'tis better hope,
be he,
For his name is grave haste, his haste good hope;
Then wherefore dost thou hope, he is not ship'd?
Green. That he, our hope, might have retired his power,
And drawn into despair an enemy's hope,
Who strongly hath set footing in this land:
The banish'd Bolingbroke repeals himself,
And with uplifted arms is sure arriv'd
At Havergur.
Queen. Now God in heaven forbid!
Green. O, madam, 'tis too true: and that is worse.
The lord of Northumberland, his young son Henry Percy,
The lords of Ross, Beaumont, and Willoughby.
With all their powerful friends, are fled to him.
Bushy. Why you not proclaim'd Northumberland,
And all the rest of the revolting faction
Traitors?
Queen. Why we have: whereon the earl of Worcester
Hath broke his staff, resign'd his stewardship,
And all the household servants fled with him
To Bolingbroke.
Green. So, Green, thouart the midwife to my woe,
And Bolingbroke my sorrow's dismal heir:
Now hath my soul brought forth her prodigy;
And I, a gasping new-deliver'd mother,
Have wings to woe, sorrow to sorrow join'd.
Bushy. Despair not, madam.
Queen. Who shall hinder me?
I will despair, and be an enmity
With ceaseless hope; he is a flatterer,
A parasite, a keeper-back of death,
Who gently would dissolve the bands of life,
Which false hope lingers in extremity.
Enter York.
Green. Here comes the mad duke of York.
Queen. With signs of war about his aged neck;
0, full of careful business are his looks!—
Uche,
For heaven's sake, speak comfortable words.
York. Should I do so, I should believe my thoughts:
Comfort's in heaven; and we are on the earth,
Where nothing lives but crosses, care and grief.
Your husband he is gone to save far off,
Whilst others come to make him lose at home:
There am I left to undergird his land,
Who, weak with age, cannot support myself;
Now comes the sick hour that his succent made;
Now shall he try his friends that flatter'd him.

Enter a Servant.
Serv. My lord, your son was gone before I came.
York. He was!—Why, so—go all which way it will—
The nobles they are fled, the commons cold,
And will, I fear, revolt on Hereford's side.—
Sirrah,
Get thee to Flashy, to my sister Gloster;
Bid her send me presently a thousand pound:
Hold, take nothing.
Serv. My lord, I had forgot to tell your lordship:
To-day, as I came by, I called there;
But I shall grieve you to report the rest.
York. What is it, know I
Serv. An hour before I came, the dame died.
York. God for her mercy! what a tide of woes
Comes rushing on this woeful land at once!
I know not what to do—I would to God,
(Not my untruth had not provoked him to it.)
The king hath cut off his head with my brother's.
What, are there posts despatch'd for Ireland?
How shall we do for money for these wars?
Come, sister,—cousin, I would say, pray, pardon me:
Go, fellow. [To the Servant:] get thee home, prosp'rous ears,
And bring away the armor that is there.
[Exit Servant.
Green. Gentleman, will you go muster men? if I know
How, or which way to order these affairs,
Thus thrust disorderly into my hands,
Never believe me. Both are my kinsmen:
The one's my sovereign, whom both my oath
And duty bids defend; the other again
Is my kinsman, whom the king hath wrong'd;
Whom conscience and my kindred bids to right.
Well, someone must do. Come, cousin, I'll Dispose of you—go, muster up your men,
And meet me presently at Berkley-castle.
I should to Flashy too.—
But time will not permit. All is uneven,
And every thing is left at six and seven.
[Exit York and Green.
Bushy. The wind sits fair for news to go to Ireland,
But none returns. For us to levy power,
Proportional to the enemy,
Is all impossible.
Green. But, our nearness to the king in love,
Is near the hate of those love not the king.
Bagot. And that's the wavering commons: for their love
Lies in their purses; and whose empties them,
By so much fills their heart with deadly hate.
Bushy. Wherein the king stands generally condemn'd.
Bagot. If judgment lie in them, then do we do,
Because we ever have been near the king.
Green. Well, I'll for refuge straight to Bristol pass,
So, Green.
The earl of Wiltshire is already there.
Bushy. Thither will I with you: for little office
The hateful commons will perform for us:
Except like ears to tear us all to pieces.—
Will you go along, with sorrow to join?
Bagot. No: I'll to Ireland to his majesty.
Farewell; it heart's presages be not vain,
We three here part, that never shall meet again.
Bushy. That's as York strives to beat back Bol-ingbroke.
Green. Alas, poor duke! the task he undertakes
Is—numbering sands, and drinking oceans dry;—
Where one of his side fights, thousands will fly.
Bushy. Farewell at once; for once, for all, and ever.
Green. Well, we may meet again.
Bagot. I fear me, never.
[Exit.

SCENE III.—The White in Gloucestershire.
Enter Bolingbroke and Northumberland with Forces.
Boling. How far is it, my lord, to Berkley now?—
North. Believe me, noble lord, Disloyalty.
And I must find that title in your tongue,
Before I make reply to ought you say.

Berk. Mistake me not, my lord; 'tis not my

To raise one title of your honor out:
To you, my lord, I come (what lord you will)

The duke of York; to know, what tricks you on
To take advantage of the absent time,
And fright our native peace with self-born arms.

Enter York, attended.

Boling. I shall not needs transport my words by
You. Here comes his grace in person.—My noble uncle!

York. Show me thy humble heart and not thy knee,
Whose duty is deceived and false.

Boling. My gracious uncle!
York. Tut, tut!
Grace me no grace, nor uncle me no uncle:
I am no traitor's uncle: and the word—grace,
In an ungracious mouth, is but profane.

Why have those banished and forbidden legs
Dared once to touch a dust of England's ground?
But then more why,—Why have they dared to mount,
So many miles upon her peaceful bosom;
Frighting her pale-faced villages with war,
And overspreading desplised arms!

Comm't thou then, because the ancient king is hence?
Why, foolish boy, the king is left behind,
And in my loyal bosom lies his power.
I wish now the duke and all of such hot youth.
As when brave Gaunt, thy father, and myself,
Rescued the black prince, that young Mars of men,
From forth the ranks of many thousand French;
And shortly, as I should this arm of mine,
Now prisoner to the paley, chastise thee,
And minister correction to thy fault!

Boling. My gracious uncle, let me know thy fault;
On whom and why thou dost this, and where.

York. Even in condition of the worst degree,—
In gross rebellion, and detested treason:
Thou art a banishment, and here art come,
Before the expiration of thy time,
In brave arms against thy sovereign.

Boling. As I was banished, I was banished! Here,

But as I come, I come for Lancaster.
And, noble uncle, I beseech your grace,
Look on my wrongs with an indifferent eye:
You are my father, for, methinks, in you
I see old Gaunt alive; then, is my fault,
Will you permit that I shall stand condemni
A wandering vagabond; my rights and royalties
Fluck'd off my arms perforce, and given away
To upstart unrighteous York! Wherefore was I born?
If that my cousin king be king of England,
It must be granted, I am duke of Lancaster.
You have a son, Aumerle, my dukedom
Had you first died, and he been thus trod down,
He should have found his uncle Gaunt a father,
To cause his wrongs, and chase them to the bay.
I am denied to sue my liv'ry here, and
And yet my letters-patent give me leave:
My father's goods are all restrain'd and sold;
And these, and all, are all unwise employ'd.
What would you have done? I do, by my subject,
And challenge law: Attorneys are denied me;
And therefore personally I lay my claim
To my inheritance of free descent.

North. The noble duke hath been too much abused.

Ross. It stands your grace upon,² to do him right.

Will. Base men by his endowments are made great.

York. My lords of Enland, let me tell you this,—
I have had feeling of my cousin's wrongs,
And laboured all I could to do him right;
But in this kind to come, in brawny arms,
Be his own carver, and cut out his way,
To find out right with wrong,—it may not be;
And when that you do after him in this kind,
Cherish rebellion, and arre rebells ali.

² Time of the king's absence.
³ Impartial.
⁴ The persons who wrong him.
⁵ Possession of my land, &c. It is your interest.
Act III. Scene II.

KING RICHARD II.

SCENE I.—Bolingbroke’s Camp of Bristol.

Enter BOLINGBROKE, YORK, NORTHUMBLED, PERCY, MALLOWAY, Ross; Officers behind with BUSHY and GREEN, prisoners.

Bolingbroke. Bring forth these men—
Bushy, and Green, I will not vex your souls (Since presently your souls must part your bodies) With too much urging of your queen and life; For 'twere no charity: yet, to wash your blood From off my hands, here in the view of men, I will unbend some causes of your death. You have missed a prince, a royal king, A happy gentleman in blood and lineaments, By you unhappied and disfigur’d, &c.
You had, in manner, with your sinful hours, Made a divorce between your queen and him; Broke the possession of a royal bed, And stain’d the beauty of a fair queen’s cheeks With tears drawn from her eyes by your foul wrongs. Myself a prince, by fortune of the king, Near to the king in blood; and near in love, Till you did make him misinterpret me,— Have stoop’d my neck under your injuries, And sigh’d my English breath in foreign clouds, Eating the bitter bread of banishment; Whilst you have fed upon my sighings, Dispark’d my parks, and lopp’d my forest woods; From my own windows torn my household coat, Raz’d out my impress, leaving me no sign,— Save men’s opinions, and my living blood,— To show the world I am a gentleman, This, and much more, much more than twice all this, Condemns you to the death:—see them deliver’d over To execution and the hand of death.

Bushy. More welcome is the stroke of death to me, Than Bolingbroke to England.,—Lords, farewell.

Green. My comfort is,—that heaven will take our souls, And plague injustice with the pains of hell.

Bolingbroke. My Lord Northumberland, see them dispatch’d. [Exeunt Northumberland and others with Prisoners.]

Uncle, you say, the queen is at your house; For heaven’s sake, fairly let her be entreated; Tell her, I send to her my kind commends; Take special care my greetings be deliver’d. [York, A gentleman of mine I have despatch’d With letters of your love to her at large.]

SCENE IV.—A Camp in Wales.

Enter SALISBURY, and a Captain.

Captain. My lord of Salisbury, we have said tendays, And hardly kept our countrymen together, And yet we hear no tidings from the king: Therefore we will disperse ourselves: farewell.

Salisbury. Stay yet another day, thou trusty Welshman; The long reposeth all his confidence In thee.

Captain. ’Tis thought the king is dead; we will not stay. The boy-troop in our country was either ’twixt, And mowers fright the fixed stars of heaven; The pale-faced moon looks bloody on the earth, And lean-look’d prophets whisper fearful change; Rich men, and yokel, and ruffian, and lordly, The one, in near to lose what they enjoy, The other, to enjoy by rage and war;— These signs forerun the death or fall of kings.— Farewell!—Bolingbroke, in our country once again, As well assured, Richard their king is dead. [Exit.]

Salisbury. Ah, Richard! with the eyes of heavy mind, I see thy glory, like a shooting star, Fall to the base and kingdom once again!— Thy sun sets weeping in the lowly west, Witnessing storms to come, woe, and unrest. Thy friends are fled, to wait upon thy foes; And crossly to thy good all fortune goes. [Exit.]

ACT III.

Bolingbroke. Thanks, gentle uncle,—Come, lords away; To fight with Glendower and his complices; Awhile to work, and, after, holiday. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—The Coast of Wales. A Castle in view.

Flourish. Drum and Trumpets. Enter King Richard, Bishop of Carlisle, Aumerle, and Soldiers.

K. Rich. Barklye castle; call you this at hand? Aum. Yea, my lord; how brooks your grace the air.

After late lass in the breaking seas?

K. Rich. Needs must like it well; I weep for joy, To stand upon my kingdom once again. Dear earth, I do salute thee with my hand, Though rebels wound thee with their horses’ hoofs, As a long parted mother with her child Plays fondly with her tears, and all in meeting, So, weeping, smiling, greet thee, my earth, And do thee favor with my royal hands, Feed not thy sovereign’s foes, my gentle earth, Nor with thy sweet comforts his ravenous sense, But let thy spiders, that suck up thy venom, And heavy gaited toads, lie in their way; Do ing annoyance to their treacherous feet, Which will in human shape be true, and thee Yield singing nettles to mine enemies; And when they from thy bosom pluck a flower, Guard it, I pray thee, with a lurking adder; Whose double tongue may with a mortal touch Throw death upon thy sovereign’s enemies,— Moke not my senseless conjunction, lords; This earth shall have a feeling, and these stones Grove armed soldiers, she her native king, Shall fall under foul rebellious arms.

Cor. Fear not, my lord; that Power, that made you king,

Hath power to keep you king, in spite of all. The means that heaven yields must be embraced, And not neglected; else, if heaven would, And we will not, heaven’s offer we refuse; The prophetic means of decor and address, Aum. He means, my lord, that we are too remiss. Whilst Bolingbroke, through our security, Grows strong and great, in substance, and in friends. K. Rich. Discomfortable cousin! know’st thou not, That when the searching eye of heaven is hid Behind the globe, and lights the lower world, Then thieves and robbers range abroad unseen, In murders, and in outrage, bloody here; But when, from under this terrestrial ball, He fires the proud tops of the eastern pines, And darts his light through every guilty hole,
Then murders, treasons, and detected sins,
The cloak of night being plucked from off their backs.
Stand bare and naked, trembling at themselves! So when this thicke, this traitor, Bolingbroke,—
To stable while hath revelled in the night,
Whilst we were wandering with the apostles,—
Shall see us rising in our throne the east,
His treasons will sit blushing in his face,
Noble to endure the sight of such,
But, self-affrighted, tremble at his sin.
Not all the water in the rough rude sea
Can wash the balm from an appointed king:
The breath of worldly men cannot depose
The deputy elected by the Lord:
For every man that Bolingbroke hath pres'd,
To lift shrewd steel against our golden crown,
God hath his Richard and in him destroy'd
A glorious angel: then, if angels fight
Weak men must fall; for heaven still guards the right.

Enter Salisbury.
Welcome, my lord; how far off lies your power? Set. Nor near, nor farther off, my gracious lord, Than this weak arm: Discomfort grinds my tongue, And bids me speak of nothing but despair. One day too late, I fear, my noble lord; That clouded all the happy days on earth: O, call back yest' day's time, but time return, And thou shalt have twelve thousand fighting men! To-day, to-day, unhappy day too late, One showing thy friends, thy friends, and thy state; For all the Welshmen, hearing, thouwert dead, Are gone to Bolingbroke, desp'red, and fled.

Am. Comfort, my liege: why looks your grace so pale?
K. Rich. But now the blood of twenty thousand
Did throb in my face, and they are fled; And till so much blood thither come again,
Have I not reason to look pale and dead? All souls that will be safe fly from my side; For death set a shot upon my pride.

Am. Comfort, my liege; retain that who you are.
K. Rich. I had forgot myself: am I not king? A wake, thou shaggard majesty! thou sleepest, Is not the king's name forty thousand names? Arm, arm, my name, a puny subject strikes At thy great glory.—Look not to the ground, Ye favorites of a king: Are we not high! High be our thoughts; I know my uncle York Hath power enough to serve our turn. But who comes here!

Enter Scoop.

Scoop. More health and happiness betide my lord Than can my care-tuned tongue deliver him.
K. Rich. Mine ear is open and my heart prepared; The worst is worldly loss, thou canst unfeild, Say, is my kingdom lost? why, 'twas my care; And what loss is, it to be rid of care? Strives Bolingbroke to be as great as we! Greater he shall not be; if he serve God, We'll serve him too, and be his fellow so: Revolt our subjects! that we cannot mend; They break their faith to God, as well as us: Cry, woe, woe, our arms, and we shall suffer. The worst is—death, and death will have his day.

Scoop. Glad am I, that your highness is so arm'd To bear the tidings of calamity. Like an unseasonable stormy day, Which makes the river rivers drown their shores, As if the world were all dissolv'd to tears; So high above his limits swells the rage Of Bolingbroke, covering you the antipodes With hard bright steel, and hearts harder than steel, White beards have arm'd their thin and hardless; Agist thy majesty; boys, with women's voices, Strive to speak big, and clap their female joints In stiff unwieldy arms against thy crown: These dice shall be resumed to bend their bows Of double-fatal yew against thy state: Yea, distasteful women range rusty bills Against thy seat; both young and old rebel, And all goes worse than I have p'wer to tell.

K. Rich. Too well, too well, thou tell'st a tale so ill. Where is the clip of Wiltshire! Where is Bagot? What is become of Bushy! where is Green? That they have let the dangerous enemy Measure our confines with such peaceful steps! If we return, our bells shall ring the hawk, I warrant, they have made peace with Bolingbroke.

Scoop. Peace have they made with him, indeed, my lord.
K. Rich. O villains, vipers, dam'd without re- demolition! Dozes, easily won to fawn on any man! Snakes, in my heart-blood warm'd, that sing my hearse.

Three Judases, each one thrice worse than Judas! Would they make peace! terrible hell make war Upon the wretches thus set free for this offense! Scoop. Sweet love, I see, change is thy property, Turns to the sourst and most deadly hate:— Again uncurse their souls; their peace is made With heads, and not with hands: those whom you curse.

Have felt the worst of death's destroying wound, And he full low, gray in the hollow ground. Am. Is Bushy, Green, and the earl of Wiltshire dead?
Scoop. Yea, all of them at Bristol lost their heads. Am. Who is the duke my father with his power?
K. Rich. No matter where; of comfort no man speak:
Let's talk of graves, of words expir'd,
Make dust our paper, and with rainy eyes Write sorrow on the bosom of the earth.

Let's choose executors, and talk of wills: And yet not so, for what can we bequeath, Save our deposed bodies to the ground? Our lands, our lives, and all Bolingbroke's, And nothing can we call our own, but death; And that small model of the barren earth, Which serves as paste and cover to our bones, For heaven's sake, let us sit upon the ground, And tell sad stories of the death of kings:— How soon hath he become a god, sometime in war? Some haunted by the ghosts they have depos'd; Some poison'd by their wives, some sleeping kill'd; All murder'd:—For within the hollow crown,
That rounds the mortal temples of a king, Keeps death his court; and there the antic sits, Scouting his state, and grinning at his pomp; Allowing him a breath, a little pause To mouthe; he in the sheets, and king with looks: Intoxic him with self and vain conceit,— As if this flesh, which walks about our life, Were brass impenetrable; and horrid thus, Comes a small voice, and speaks with a little pen: Bore's through his castle wall, and—farewell king! Cover your heads, and mock not death and blood With solemn reverence; throw away respect, Tradition, form, and ceremonial duty. For you have but mistaken all this while: I live with bread like you, feel want, taste grief, Need friends—subjected thus:—

How can you say to me—I am a king?

Cur. My lord, wise men ne'er wait their present wors, But presently prevent the ways to wait. To fear the face, since fear opposes all strength, Gives, in your weakness, strength unto your foe, And so your follies fight against yourself.

Fear, and be slain; no worse can come to fight:— And fight when die, is death destroying death: Where fearing dying, pays death servile breath.

Am. My father had a power, enquire of him; And learn to make a body of a limb.

K. Rich. Cloisterst me well:—Proud Bolingbroke, I come To change blows with thee for our day of doom. This age-fit of fear is overblown; An easy task it is to turn our own. Say, Scoop, where lies our uncle with his power? Speak sweetly, man, although thy looks be sour.

Scoop. Men judge by the complexity of the sky. The state and inclinations of the times, So may you by my dull and heavy eye, My tongue hath but a heavier tale to say. I play the torture, by small and small,
SCENE III.—KING RICHARD II.

To strengthen out the worst that must be spoken:—
Your uncle York hath joined with Bolingbroke;
And all your northern castles yielded up,
And all your southern gentlesmen in arms
Upon his party.

K. Rich. Thou hast said enough.—
Despair thee, cousin, which did lead thee forth
To Aumerle.

To that sweet way I was in to despair!
What say you now! what comfort have we now!
By heaven, I'll hate him everlastingly,
To think he be preferred for any man.
Go to, to Flint castle; there I'll ease away;
A king, a woe's slave, shall kindly woe obey.
That I have, discharge; and let me go
To earn the land that has some hope to grow,
For I have none.—Let no man speak again
To alter this, for counsel is but vain.

Aum. 3. Truce, one word.

K. Rich. He does me double wrong
That wounds me with the flatteries of his tongue.
Discharge my followers, let them hence—Away,
From Richard's night, to Bolingbroke's fair day.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—Wales. Before Flint Castle.

Enter, with Drums and Colors, Bolingbroke and Forces, YORK, NORTHUMBERLAND, and others.

Bolingbroke. So that by this intelligence we learn,
The Welshmen are dispers'd; and Salisbury
Is gone to meet the king, who lately landed,
A king not fit a king, or by his help.

North. The news is very fair and good, my lord;
Richard, not far from hence, hath hid his head.
York. It would become the lord Northumberland,
To say—King Richard—Alack the heavy day
When such a sacred king should hide his head!
North. Your grace mistakes me; only to be brief,
Let's take the title up.
York. The time hath been,
You would have been so brief with him, he would Have been so brief with you, to shorten you,
For taking too the sar, your whole head's length.

Bolingbroke. This grace not, uncle; further than you should.
York. Take not, good cousin, further than you should.

Lest you must take:—The heavens are o'er your head.
Bolingbroke. I know it, uncle; and oppose not Myself against their will.—But who comes here?

Enter PERCY.

Percy. Well, Harry; what, will not this castle yield?

Bolingbroke. The castle royal is man'd, by lord
Against the entrance.

Percy. Royally!—Why, it contains no king?

Bolingbroke. Yes, my good lord,
Percy. What shall I do to find a king?—Richard lies
Within the limits of you line and stone;
And with him are the lord Aumerle, lord Salisbury,
Sir Stephen Scroop; besides a citizen
Of holy reverence, who, I cannot learn.

North. Belike it is the Bishop of Carlisle.

Bolingbroke. Noble lord.

To Northumberland.

Go to the rude rifts of that ancient castle;
Through brazen trumpet send the breath of war
Into his ruin'd ears, and thus deliver:
Harry Bolingbroke
On both his knees doth kiss king Richard's hand;
And with due submission, and true faith of heart,
To his most royal person: hither come
Even at his feet to lay my arms and power;
Provided that, my banishment repeal'd,
And lands restored again, he freely granted:
If not, I'll use the advantage of my power,
And lay the summer's dust with showers of blood,
Rein'd from the wounds of slaughter'd Englishmen.
The which how far all on the mind of Bolingbroke
It is, such crimson tempest should bedrench
The fresh green lap of this king Richard's land,
My choice robberly shall show.
Go, signify as much; while here we march
Upon the grassy carpet of this plain.

[Exeunt Bolingbroke and Percys to the Castle with a Trumpet.

K. Rich. That from the castle's tower'd battlements
Our fair appointments may be well assured;
Methinks, Richard and myself should meet
With no less terror than the elements
Of fire and water, when their thundering shock
At meeting tears the cloudy cheeks of heaven.

That shall be the signal; to the castle I'll go,
The rage be his, while on the earth I rain
My waters; on the earth, and not on him.
March on, and mark king Richard how he looks.

A Porter sounded, and answered by another Trumpet within, asking for King Richard, the Bishop of Carlisle, Aumerle, Scroop, and Salisbury.

York. See, see, Richard doth himself appear,
As doth the blushing droop'd contentment
From out the fiery portal of the east;
When he perceives the envious clouds are bent
To dim his glory, and to stain the track
Of his bright passage, with this heavy shower.
Yet looks he like a king; behold, his eye,
As bright as is the eagle's, lightens forth,
Controlling majesty: Alack, alas, for woe!

K. Rich. We are amaz'd; and thus long have we stood
To watch the fearful bending of the knee.

Northumberland. To Northumberland.

Because we thought ourself thy lawful king:
And if we be, how dare thy joints forget
To pay their awful duty to our presence?
Yet, Sir Percy, we must not forget
That hast dismiss'd us from our stewardship:
For well we know, no hand of blood and bone
Can grieve the sacred handle of our sceptre,
Unless be thou the guard, Sir Percy, stand.
And though you think, that all, as you have done,
Have torn their souls, by turning them from us,
And we are barren, and bereft of friends—
Yet know my good master, we do not
Is mustring in his clouds, on our behalf,
Armies of repose: and they shall strike
Your children yet unborn, and unbegot.
That lift by your casual hand as against their head,
And threaten the glory of my precious crew.
Tell Bolingbroke, (for yond, methinks, he is),
That every stride he makes upon my land,
Is dangerous treason: He is come to ope
The purple testament of bleeding war:—
But ere the crown he looks for live in peace,
Ten thousand bloody corpses of your sons
Shall ill become the beacon of England's face;
Change the complexion of her maid-pale peace
To scarlet indignation, and bellow
Her pasture's grass with faithful English blood.

North. The king of heaven forbid, our lord the king
Should so with civil and uncivil arms
Be rush'd upon; Thy thrice-noble cousin,
Harry Bolingbroke, doth humbly kiss thy hand;
And by the honorable touch he swears,
That stands upon thy royal grandaunt's bones;
And by the royalties of both your bloods,
Current so spring from one most gracious head;
And by the buried hand of warlike Gaunt;
And by the worth and honor of himself,
Comprising all that may be of yourself,
His coming hither hath no further scope,
Than for his lineal royalties, and to beg
Endemnishment immediate on his knees; —
Which on thy majesty's gracious pleasure,
His glistening arms he will command to rust,
His harkened steeds to stables, and his heart
To faithful service of your majesty,
To save, and save upon this princely fast;
And, as I am a gentleman, I credit him.

K. Rich. Northumberland, say, — thus the king returns:
His noble renown is right welcome hither;
And all the number of his fair demands
Shall be accomplish'd without contradiction:
With all the gracious utterance thou hast
Speak to the gentle king thy kind commands—
We do enbase ourself, cousin, do we not,
To look so poorly, and to speak so fair! [To Aum.]
Shall we call back Northumberland, and send Defiance to the traitor, and so desist?

Aum. No, my lord; let's fight with gentle words, Till time lend friends, and friends their helpful
words,
K. Rich. O God! O God! that e'er this tongue of
mine,
That bares the sentence of dread banishment.
On you proud man should take it off again
With words of sooth! O, that I were as great
As in my grief, or lesser than my name!
Or that I could forget that I have
Or not remember what I must now be!
Swell'st thou, proud heart! I'll give thee scope to beat,
Since thou hast scope to beat both thee and me.
Anna. Northumberland comes back from Boling-broke.
K. Rich. What must the king do now? Must
I submit!
The king shall do it. Must he be depo'd?
The king shall be contented: must he lose
The name of king! o'God's name, let it go:
I'll give my jewels for a set of heads;
My gorgeous palace, for a hermitage;
My say apparel, for an alms-man's gown;
My tigr'd goblets, for a dish of wood;
My sceptre, for a Palmer's walking staff;
My subjects, for a pair of carved saints;
And my large kingdom, for a little grave,
A little, little grave, an obscure grave.—
Or I'll be buried in the king's high-way,
Some way of common trade where subjects' feet
May hourly trample on their sovereign's head:
For I see only heart they tread, now whilst I live;
And, buried once, why not upon my head?
Aumerle, thou weep'st; my tender-hearted cousin!
We'll make foul weather with despaired tears;
Our anguish, and they, shall ledge the sun's com,
And make a earth in this revolting land.
Or shall we play the wantons with our woes,
And make some pretty match with shedding tears;
As thou wouldst to drop them still upon one place,
Till they have fretted us a pair of graves
Within the earth; and therein laid.—There lies
Two kinmen, digg'd their graves with weeping
eyes:
Would not this ill do well?—Well, well, I see
I talk but idly, and you mock at me.
Mind thee, mighty prince, my lord Northumberland,
What says king Bolingbroke! will his majesty
Give Richard leave to live till Richard die!
You make a jest, and Bolingbroke says—my North. My lord, in the base court he doth attend.
To speak with you; may't please you to come down,
K. Rich. Down, down, I come; like glistening
Phoebus,
Wanting the manage of unruly yades.
[Exeunt.]
K. Rich. What says his majesty?
N. Sorrow, and grief of heart.
Makes him speak fondly, like a frantic man:
Yet he is come.
Enter King Richard, and his Attendants, below.
Boling. Stand all apart,
And show fair duty to his majesty. — [Kneeling.
K. Rich. Fair cousin, you debase your princely knee,
To make the base earth proud with kissing it:
My father had, my heart might feel your love,
Than my unpleas'd eye see your counten.
Up, cousin, up: your heart is up, I know,
Thus high at least. [Touching his own head] al-
obtain your knee be low.
Boling. My gracious lord, I come but for mine own.
K. Rich. Your own is yours, and I am yours, and Boling. So far be mine, my most redoubted lord,
As my true service shall deserve your love.
K. Rich. Well you deserve:—They well deserve to have,
Softness. A bow. Low.

Enter the Queen, and two Ladies.
Queen. What sport shall we devise here in this garden,
To drive away the heavy thought of care?
1 Lady. Madam, we'll play at bowls.
Queen. 'Tis well; I'll make thee think
The world is full of rubs, and that my fortune
Rises against the bias.
1 Lady. Madam, we will dance.
Queen. My legs can keep no measure in delight,
When my poor heart no measure keeps in grief;
Therefore, no dancing; girl; some other sport.
1 Lady. Madam, we'll tell tales.
Queen. Of sorrow, or of joy?
1 Lady. Of either, madam.
Queen. Of neither; girl,
For it of joy, being altogether was whilst I live;
It doth remember me the more of sorrow;
Or if of grief, being altogether had,
It adds more sorrow to my want of joy:
For what I have I need not to repine and wish;
And what I want, it beats not to complain.
1 Lady. Madam, I'll sing.
Queen. 'Tis well that thou hast cause;
But thou shouldst please me better, wouldst thou weep.
1 Lady. I could weep, madam, would it do you
good?
Queen. And I could weep, would weeping do me
good,
And never borrow any tear of thee.
But stay, there come the gardeners.
Let's step into the shadow of these trees.—
Enter a Gardener, and two Servants.
My wretchedness unto a row of pins.
They'll talk of state; for every one doth so
Against a change: Woe is forrun with woe.
[Queen and Ladies retire.
Gard. Go, bind thon up thee dangling apricocks,
Which, like unruly children, make their sire
Stoop with oppression of their prodigal weight:
Give some importance to the bending twigs—god to, and like an executioner,
Cut off the heads of too-fast-growing sprays,
That look too lofty in our commonwealth;
All must be even in the government,
You thus employ'd, I will go root away
The nonsome weeds, that without profit suck
The soil's fertility from wholesome flowers.
1 Ser. Why should we, in the compass of a pale,
Keep law, and form, and due proportion,
Showing, as in a model, our firm estate?
When our sea-walled garden, the whole land,
Is full of weeds; her fairest flowers chok'd up,
Her fruit-trees all unprun'd, her hedges ruin'd,
Her knots ' disorder'd, and her wholesome herbs
Swarming with caterpillars.
Gard. Hold thy peace:—
He that hath suffered this disorder'd spring,
Hath now himself met with the fall of leaf:
The weeds, that his broad-spreadings leaves did shelter,
That seem'd in eating him to hold him up,
Are pluck'd up, root and all, by Bolingbroke;
I mean the earl of Wiltshire, Bushy, Green.
1 Ser. What, are they dead?
Gard. They are; and Bolingbroke
Hath seiz'd the wasteful king,—Oh, what pity is it
That he had not so trimm'd and dress'd his land,
As we this garden! We at time of year,
Do wound the bark, the skin of our fruit-trees;
Lost, being over-pround, with sap and blood;
With too much riches it confound itself:
Had he done so to great and growing men,
They might have liv'd to bear, and he to taste
Their fruits of duty. All superfluous branches
We lop away, that bearing boughs may live:
Had he done so, himself had borne the crown,
Which waste of idle hours hath quite thrown down.
1 SEE. What, think you then, the king shall be depus'd?
Gard. Depus'd he is already; and depus'd,
'Tis doubt he will be: Letters came last night
To a dear friend of the duke of York's
That tell black tidings.
O, I am press'd to death,
Through want of speaking!—Then, old Adam's honesty,
[Cooming from her concealment.]
Set to for the garden, how dares
Thy handi-crafts round this unlensing news?
What Eve, what serpent hath suggested thee
To make a second fall of cursed man?
Why dost thou say, king Richard is depus'd?
Dar'st thou, so thin better thing than earth,
Divine his downfall? Say where, when, and how,
Can'st thou by these ill tidings? Speak, thou
Gard. Pardon me, madam; little joy have I,
To breathe this news; yet, what I say, is true.
King Richard, he is in the mighty hold
Of Bolingbroke; their fortunes both are weigh'd:
In your lord's scale is nothing but himself,
And some few vanities that make him light;
But in the balance of great Bolingbroke,
Besides his name and English peers,
And with that odds he weighs king Richard down.
Post you to London, and you'll find it so;
I speak no more than every man doth know.
Queen. Double mischance, thou art so light of foot,
Dost not thy embassy belong to me,
And am I last that knows it? O, thou think'st
To serve me last, that I may longest keep Thy sorrow in my breast.—Come, ladies go,
To meet at London London's king in woe.—
What, was I born to this! that my sad look
Should grace the triumph of great Bolingbroke?
Gardener, for telling me this news of woe,
I would, the plants thou graft'st must never grow.
Gard. Poor queen! so that thy state might be no
worse,
I would, my skill were subject to thy curse.—
Here, did I lose a tear; here, in this place,
I'll set a bank of rue, sour herb of rage,
Rue, even for ruth, here shortly shall be seen,
In the remembrance of a weeping queen.
[Exeunt]

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—London. Westminster-Hall.

The Lords Spiritual on the right side of the Throne; the Lords Temporal on the left; the Commons behind. Enter Buckingham, Aumerle, Surrey, Northumberland, Percy, Fitzwater, another Lord, Bishop of Carlisle, Abbot of Westminster, and Attendants. Officers behind, with Banners.

Boling. Call forth Bagot:—

Now, Bagot freely speak thy mind,
What thou dost know of noble Gloucester's death;
Who wrought it with the king, and who perfom'd
The bloody title of his timeless end.
Begot. Then set before my face the lord Aumerle.
Boling. Cousin, stand forth, and look upon that man.
Begot. My lord Aumerle, I know thy daring tongue
Seems to impress what once it hath deliver'd.
In that dark time when Gloucester's death was plotted,
I heard you say,—Is not my arm of length,
That reacheth from the restful English court
As far as Calais, to my uncle's head?
Aumerle. Many a time, my lord, there was no other talk, than that time, I heard you say that you had rather Release the offer of a hundred thousand crowns,
That Bolingbroke's return to England;
Adding withal, how best this land would be,
In this your cousin's death.
Aum. Princes and noble lords,
What answer shall I make to this base man!
Shall I so much dishonor my fair stars,
On equal terms to give him chastisement?
Either I must, or have mine honor sole'd
Within this house, my country, that behoves,
There is my gage, the manual seal of death,
That marks thee out for hell: I say, thou liest,
And will maintain, what thou hast said, is false,
In thy heart's-blood, though being all too base
To stain the temper of my knightly sword.
Boling. Bagot, forbear, thou shalt not take it up.
Aum. Excepting one, I would be the best
In all this presence that hath mov'd me so.
Fitz. If thy valor stand on sympathies,
There is my gage, Aumerle, in gage to thine:
By that fair sun that shows me where thou standst,
I heard thee say, and vamiing thou spakest it,
That thou wert cause of noble Gloucester's death.
If thou deny'st it, twenty times thou liest;
And it is true thou liest, frown to thy heart,
Where it was forged, with my rapier's point.
Aum. Thou darst not, coward, live to see that day.

Fitz. Now, by my soul, I would it were this hour.
Aum. Fitzwater, thou art damn'd to hell for this.
Percy. Aumerle, thou liest; his honor is as true,
In this appeal, as thou art all unjust;
And, that thou dost so, there I throw my gage,
To prove it on thee to the extremest point
Of mortal breathing; seize it, if thou dar'st.
Aum. And if I do not, may my hands rot off,
And never more brag on my base worthless
P oce over the glittering helmet of my foe!
Lord. I take the earth to the like, foul-smorn Au-merle,
And spurn all with full as many lies
As may be holla'd thy treacherous ear
From sun to sun; there is my honor's pawn;
Engage it to the trial, if thou dar'st.
Aum. Who sets me else? by heaven, I'll throw at all:
I have a thousand spirits in one breast,
To answer twenty thousand as such as you.
Surrey. My lord Fitzwater, I do remember well
The very time Aumerle and you did talk.
Fitz. My lord, 'tis true; you were in presence there;
And you can witness with me, this is true.
Surrey. As false, as heaven, as heaven itself is gang.
Fitz. Surrey, thou liest.
Surrey. Dishonorable boy!
That lie shall lie as heavy on my sword,
That it shall render vengeance and revenge,
Till thou the lie-giver, and that lie, be
In earth as quiet as thy father's skull.
In proof whereof, there is my honor's pawn;
Engage it to the trial, if thou dar'st.
Fitz. How could I trust thou couldst be a forward horse
If I dare eat, or drink, or breathe, or live,
I dare meet Surrey in a wilderness,
And spit upon him, whilst I say, he lies,
And lies, and lies; there is my bond of faith,
To tie thee to my strong correction.—
As I intend to thrive in this new world,
Aumerle is guilty of my true appeal;
Besides, I heard the banish'd Norfolk say,
That thou, Aumerle, didst send two of thy men
To execute the noble duke at Caenis.
Aum. Some honest Christian trust me with a
gage
That Norfolk lies: here do I throw down this,
If he may be repeal'd to try his honor.
Boling. These difference shall all rest under gage,
Till Norfolk he repeal'd; repeal'd he shall be,
And, though mine enemy, reeyer'd again
To all his land and seignories; when he's return'd,
Against Aumerle we will enforce his trial.

Car. That honorable day shall ne'er be seen,—
Many a time has Bolingbroke, and Norfolk sought
For Jesus Christ; in glorious Christian field
Streaming the ensign of the Christian cross,
Against black Pagans, Turks, and Saracens;
And self with war, and need himself
To Italy; and there at Venice, gave
His body to that pleasant country's earth,
And his pure soul unto his captain Christ,
Undoubtedly; for he was of the true Church.

Boling. Why, bishop, is Norrikk dead?

Car. As sure as I live, my lord.
Boling. Sweet spices conduct his sweet soul to the bosom.

To off old Abraham—Lords, apppellants,
Your difference shall rest under gage,
Till we assign you to your days of trial.

Enter York, attended.

York. Great duke of Lancaster, I come to thee
From plume-pleck'd Richard; who with willing takes thee heir, and his high sceptre yields

To the possession of thy royal hand:
Ascend his throne, descending now from him,—
And fill the chair of Henry, of that many-child
Boling. In God's name, I'll ascend the regal throne.

Car. My lord, God forbid!—

Worst in this royal presence may I speak,
Yet best becomme me to speak the truth.
Would God, that any in this noble presence
Were not so noble to be the uprightness
Of noble Richard; then true nobles would Learn him forbearance from so foul a wrong.
What subject can give sentence on his king?
And who sits here, that is not Richard's subject?
Thieves are not judg'd, but they are by to hear,
Although apparent guilt be seen in them;
And shall the figure of God's majesty,
In such high place, and in such presence,
Anointed, crowned, planted many years,
Be judg'd by subject and minimar breath,
And he himself not present? O, forbid it, God,
That, in a Christian climate, souls rotten
Should show so hencious, black, obscene a deed!
I speak to subjects, and a subject speaks,
Stir'd up by heaven thus boldly for his king,
My lord of Hereford here, whom you call king,
Is a foul traitor to proud Hereford's king:
And if you crown him, let me prophesy,—
The son of Bolingbroke shall make good ground,
And future ages green for this foul act:
Peace shall go sleep with Turks and Infidels,
And, in this sense of peace, tumultuous wars
Shall rack his land, and kind along confound;
Disorder, horror, fear, and mutiny,
Shall here inhabit, and this land be call'd
The field of Gogdeth, and dead men's skulls:
O, if thou rear this house against this house,
It will the woodiest division prove,
That ever fell upon this cursed earth:

Prevent, resit, let it not be so,
Last child child's children, cry, against you—woe!

North. Well have you argued, sir; and, for your pains,
Of equal treason we arrest you here:
My lord of Westminster, be it your charge
To keep him safely till his day of trial—
Mayn't you, lords, to grant the commons' suit.

Boling. Feith in Richard, that in common view
He may surrender; so we shall proceed
Without suspicion.

York. Boling. Lords, you that are here under our arrest,
Procurc your securities for your days of answer—
Little are we beholden to your love, [To Carlisle.
And little look'd for at your helping bands.

Re-enter York, with King Richard, and Officers

K. Rich. Alack, why am I sent to for a king,
Before I have shook off the regal thoughts
Whereunto I reign'd? I hardly yet have learn'd
To insinuate, flatter, bow, and bend my knee—
Give sorrow leave a while to tutor me

To this submission. Yet I well remember
The favors of these men: Were they not mine?
Did they not sometime cry, all hail! to me!—
So Judas to Christ, but his heart was false.

Found truth in all but one: 1, in twelve thousand,

None.
God save the king!—Will no man say, amen?
And I but went with clerk and clerk? well then, amen.

God save the king! although I be not he;
And yet, amen, if heaven do think him me—
To do me service am I sent for him?
York. To do that office of thine own good will,
Which tired majesty did make thee offer,
The resignation of thy state and crown
To Henry Bolingbroke.

K. Rich. Give me the crown;—Here, cousin,
Seize the crown;
Here, on this side, my hand; on that side, thine.
Now is the golden crown like a deep well,
That owes two buckets filling one another;
The emptier ever running in the air,
The other down, unseen, and full of water:
That bucket down, and full of tears, am I.

Drinking my griefs, whilst you mount up high
Boling. I thought you had been willing to resign
K. Rich. My crown, I say, but still my griefs are mine;

You may my glories and my state depose,
But not my grief; still am I king of these.

Boling. Parted your cares you give me with your crown.

My cares was of care, by old care done;
Your care is—gain of care, by new care won:
The cares I give, I have, though given away;
They tend the crown, yet still with me they stay.

Boling. Are you contented to lead me so?
K. Rich. Ay, no,—no, ay;—I must nothing be—
Therefore no, for I resign to thee.
Now mark how I will undo myself—
I give this heavy weight from off my head,
And this unwieldy sceptre from my hand,
The pride of kingship away from off my head;
With mine own tears I wash away my bism,
With mine own hands I give away my crown,
With mine own tongue do I my sacred state,
With mine own breath release all thatious oaths:
All pomp and majesty I do forswear;
My manners, rents, revenues, I foreseize;
My acts, decrees, and statutes, I deny;
God damn all oaths that are broken now!
God keep all vows unbroke, are made to thee!
Maketh, that nothing have, with nothing giveth;
And thou with all pleas'd, that hast all achiev'd!
Long may you live, your Richard, says I am so su,
And soon lie Richard in an earthly pit!—
God save king Henry, unking'd Richard says,
And send him many years of shining days!

What may remain?

North. No more, but that you read

[Offering a Paper.

These accusations and these grievous crimes,
Committed by your person, and your followers,
Against the state and profit of this land;
That, by confessing them, the souls of men
May deem that you are worthily depos'd.
K. Rich. Must I do so? and must I ravel out
My wean'd up fellies? Gentie Northumbland,
If thy offenseres were upon record,
Would not shame thee to stand in so fair a troop,
To read a lecture of them? If thou wouldst,
There shou'dst thou find one heinous article,
Containing the deposing of a king,
And cranking the strong warrant of an oath—
Mark'd with a blot, damn'd in the book of heaven;

Nay, all of you that stand and look upon me,
Whilst I unfringe that which I cannot myself—
Though some of you, with Pribate, wash your hands,
Showing an outward pity; yet you Pribates
Have here delivery'd me to my sore care,
And wash away your sin.

North. My lord, despatch: read over these articles.

K. Rich. Mine eyes are full of tears, I cannot see:

*Counterfeites. 6 Owns. 0il of consecration.
Act V. Scene I.

KING RICHARD II.

And yet salt water blinds them not so much,
But they can see a sort of traitors here.
Nay, if I turn mine eyes upon myself,
I find myself a traitor with the rest;
For I have given heart and soul's consent,
To undock the pompous body of a king;
To make glory base; and sovereignty, a slave;
Proud majesty, a subject, state, a peasant.

North.  No lord of thine, thou haught, insulting man,

Nor mine is thine: I have no name, no title,—
No, not that name was given me at the font,
But 'tis usurp'd—Alack the heavy day,
That I have worn so many winters out,
And know not now what mine to call myself!
O, that I were a mockery king of snow,
Standing before the sun of Bolingbroke,
To melt myself away in water-drops!—
Good king, great king,—(and yet not greatly good,)
An if my word be sterling yet in England
Let it command a mirror brighter still;
That it may show me what a face I have,
Since it is bankrupt of his majesty.
Boling.  Go, some of you, and fetch a lookingglass.

North.  Read over this paper, while the glass doth

come.

K. Rich.  Fiend! thou torment'st me ere I come to hell.

Boling.  Use it no more, my lord Northumberland.

North.  The commons will not then be satisfied.
K. Rich.  They shall be satisfied: I'll read enough,
When I do see the very book indeed,
Where all my sins are writ, and that's myself.—
Recorder Attendant, with a Glass.
Give me that glass, and therein will I read.—
No deeper wrinkles yet! Hath sorrow struck
So many blows upon this face of mine,
And made no deeper wounds?—0, flattering glass,
Like to my followers in prosperity,
Thou dost beguile me!—Was this the face the

That every day under his household roof
Did keep ten thousand men! Was this the face,
That, like the sun, did make beholders wink!
Was this the face, that faced so many follies,
And was at last out-faced by Bolingbroke!
A brittle glory shineth in this face;
As brittle as the glory is the face;
[Draws the glass against the ground.
For there it is, crack'd in a hundred shivers.—

---

Mark, silent king, the moral of this part,—
How soon my sorrow hath destroy'd my face.
Boling.  The shadow of your sorrow hath destroy'd

The shadow of your face.
K. Rich.  Say that again.
The shadow of my sorrow? Ha! let's see—
'Tis very true, my grace has all within;
And these external manners of lament
Are many shadowy darts of mine own soul.
That swells with silence in the tortur'd soul;
There lies the substance: and I thank thee, king,
For thy great laments, that not only giv'st
Me cause to weep, but teachest me the way
How to lament the cause. I'll beg one boon,
And then be gone, and trouble you no more.
Shall I obtain it?
Boling.  Name it, fair cousin.
K. Rich.  Fair cousin! Why, I am greater than a king!

For, when I was a king, my flatterers
Were then but subjects: being now a subject,
I have a king here to my flatterer.
Being so great, I have no need to beg.
Boling.  Yet ask.
K. Rich.  And shall I have!
Boling.  You shall.
K. Rich.  Then give me leave to go.
Boling.  Whither?
K. Rich.  Whither you will, so I were from your sights.
Boling.  Go, some of you, convey him to the Tower.
K. Rich.  O, good! Convey!—Conveyers are you all,

That rise thus timidly by a true king's fall.
[Exeunt K. Richard, some Lords, and a Guard.
Boling.  On Wednesday next, we solemnly set down
Our coronation: lords, prepare yourselves.
[Exeunt all but the Abbott, Bishop of Carlisle, and Aumale.
Abbott.  A woeeful passant have we here beheld.
Cur.  The woe's to come, the children yet unborn
Shall feel this day as sharply as those thorns.
Aum.  You holy clergymen, is there no plot
To rid the realm of this pernicious boll!
Abbott.  Before I freely speak my mind herein,
You shall not only take the sacrament
To bury mine intents, but to effect
Whatever I shall happen to devise:—
I see your brows are full of discontent,
Your hearts of sorrow, and your eyes of tears.
Come home with me to supper; I will lay
A plot, shall show us all a merry day.
[Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—London.  A Street leading to the Tower.

Enter QUEEN, and Ladies.

Queen.  This way the king will come; this is the way
To Julius Cæsar's ill-crested tower,
To whose fathom bosom my condemned lord
Is doom'd a prisoner, by proud Bolingbroke:
But I must rest in this rebellious earth,
Have any resting for her true king's queen.

EntrK RICHARD, and Guards.

But soft, but see, or rather do not see,
My fair rose wither; Yet look up; behold;
That you in pity may dissolve to dew,
And wash him fresh again with your love-tears.
Ah, thou, the model where old Troy did stand;
Thou map of honor; thou king Richard's tomb,
And not king Richard; thou most beauteous inn,
Why should hard-hearted grief be lodg'd in thee,
When triumph is become an ale-house guest!
K. Rich.  Join not with grief, fair woman, do not so
To make my end too sudden: learn, good soul,
To think our former state a happy dream;
From which awakened, the truth of what we are

---

*Pack.
*Tower of London.
OF woeful ages, long ago betid:
And, ere thou big good night, to quit their grief,
Tell thou the lamentable fall of me,
And send the hearers weeping to their beds.
For why, the senseless bands will sympathize
The heavy accent of thy moving tongue,
And, in compassion, weep the flight out;
And some will mourn in ashes, some coal-black,
For the deposing of a rightful king.

Enter Northumberland, attended.

North. My lord, the mind of Bolingbroke is changed;
You must to Pomfret, not unto the Tower.—
And, madam, there is order taken for you.
When swift speed you must away to France.

K. Rich. Northumberland, thou ladder whereby
The mounting Bolingbroke ascends my throne.
The time shall not be many hours of age
More than it is, ere toil, sin gathering head,
Shall break into corruption: thou shalt think,
Though he divide the realm, and give thee half,
It is too little, helping him to all;
And he shall think, that thou, whom know'st the way
To plant unrightful kings, wilt know again,
Being ne'er so little urged, another way
To pluck him headlong from the usurped throne.
The love of wicked friends converts to fear;
That bear, that hate, and hate turns one to one,
To worthy danger, and desired death.

North. My guilt be on my head, and there an end.
Take leave, and part; for you must part forthwith.
K. Rich. Doubly divorced!—Bad men, ye violate
A two-fold marriage: 'twixt my crown and me;
And then, betwixt me and my married wife—
Let me make the oath 'tis thou and me;
And yet not, for with a kiss I was made—
Part is Northumberland; 1 towards the north,
Where shivering cold and sickness pines the chime;
My wishes go to France; from whence, set forth in pomp,
She came adorning hither like sweet May,
Sent back like Hollowmuses, or short'st of day.
Queen. Banish us both, and send the king with me.
North. That were some love, but little policy.
Queen. Then whither he goes, thither let me go.
K. Rich. So two, together weeping, make one woes.
Weep then for me in France, for I thee have;
Better for her, than—near, be ne'er to be near.
Go, count thy way with sighs; I, mine with groans.
Queen. So longest way shall have the longest meal.
K. Rich. Twice for one step I'll groan, the way being short,
And piece the way out with a heavy heart.
Come, come, in vanishing sorrow, let me groan,
Since, weeding it, there is much length in grief.
One kiss shall stop our mouths, and dumbly part;
Thus give I mine, and thus I take thy heart.
Queen. Give me mine own again; 'twere no good part.
To take on me to keep and kill thy heart.

Kiss again.

So, now I have mine own again, begone,
That I may strive to kill it with a groan.

K. Rich. We make woe wanton with this fond delay:
Once more adieu; the rest let sorrow say. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The same. A Room in the Duke of York's Palace.

Enter York, and his Daughters.

York. My lord, you told me, you would tell the rest.
When weeping made you break the story off,
Of your two sons coming into London.
York. Where did lie love?

Duchess. At that sad spot, my lord,
Where rude misgovern'd hands, from windows' joys,
Threw dust and rubbish on king Richard's head.

York. Then, as I said, the duke, great Bolingbroke,
Mounted upon a hot and fiery steed,
Which his aspiring rider seem'd to know,—
With slow, but stately pace, keep on his course,
While all tongues cried—God save thee, Bolingbroke.
You would have thought the very windows shake,
So many greedy looks of young and old
Through casements darted their desiring eyes
Upon his visage; and that all the world
With painted imagery, had said at once,—
Jesus preserve thee! welcome, Bolingbroke!
Whilst he, from one eye to the other turning,
Bareheaded, lower than his proud steed's neck,
Bespeak them thus,—I thank you, countrymen:
And thus still doing, thus he pass'd along.

Duchess. Alas, poor Richard! where rides he the while!

York. As, in a theatre, the eyes of men,
After a well-graced actor leaves the stage,
Are idly bent on him that enters next,
Thinking his prattle to be tedious:
Even so, or with much more contempt, men's eyes
Did scowl on Richard; no man cried, God save him!
No joyful tongue gave him his welcome home:
But dust was thrown upon his sacred head;
Which with such gentle sorrow he shook off,—
His face still burning with tears and smiles,
His badge did hang, his hand with patience
That, had not God, for some strong purpose, steed'd
The hearts of men, they must perforce have melted,
And barbarism itself have pitied him,
But heaven hath a hand in these events;
To whose high will we bound our calm contents.
To Bolingbroke are we sworn subjects now,
Whose state and honor I for eyre allow.

Enter Aumerle.

Duchess. Here comes my son Aumerle.
York. Aumerle was that;
But that is lost for being Richard's friend,
And, madam, you must call him Rutland now:
I am in parliament pledge for his truth,
And hastening slily to the new-made king.

Duchess. Welcome, my son: Who are the violets
That streeth the green lap of the new-comer spring?
Aum. Madam, I know not, nor I greatly care not: God knows, I had as her be none, as one.
York. Well; bear you well in this new spring of fools.
Let us be copped before you come to prime.
What news from Oxford? hold those justs, and triumphs.
Aum. For aught I know, my lord, they do.
York. You will be there, I know.
Aum. If God prevent it not; I purpose so.
York. What seat is that, that hangs without thy house?
Yea, look'st thou pale? let me see the writing.
Aum. My lord, 'tis nothing.
York. No matter then who sees it:
I will be satisfied, let me see the writing.
Aum. I do beseech you, pardon me; It is a matter of small consequence,
Which for some reasons I would not have seen.
York. Which for some reason, sir, I mean to see.
I fear, I fear,—

Duchess. What should you fear?

York. The nothing but some hand that is enter'd into
For gay apparel; against the triumph day.
York. Bound to himself! what doth he with a bond
That he is bound to? Wife, thou art a fool.—

Boy, let me see the writing.
Aum. I do beseech you, pardon me; I may not show it.
York. I will be satisfied; let me see it, I say.

[Snatches it, and tears.

Treason! foul treason! villain! traitor! slay!

Duchess. Why is the matter, my lord, so brief?
York. Who is he within there? [Enter a Saddle derve, serve. Give me my boots, I say; saddle my horse.

God for his mercy! what treachery is here!

Duchess. Why is what thy lord?
York. Give me my boots, I say; saddle my horse.

Tilts and tourneys.
Now by mine honor, by my life, my troth,
I will appease the villain.  [Exit Servant.

Duch.  What's the matter?

York.  Peace, foolish woman.  I will peace:—What is the matter, son?

Aum.  Good mother, be content; it is no more
Than my poor life must answer.

Duch.  Thy life answer!

Re-enter Servant, with Boots.

York.  Bring me my boots, I say.

Duch.  Why, York, what wilt thou do?

Wilt thou not hide the trespass of thine own?
Have we more sons? or are we like to have?
Is not my teaching 1 date drunk up with time?
And will thou place my fair son from mine age,
And rob me of a happy mother's name?
Is he not like thee? is he not thine own?
York.  Thou fond mad woman,
Wilt thou conceal this dark conspiracy?
A dozen of them here have ta'en the sacrament,
And interchangeably set down their hands,
To kill the king at Oxford.

He shall be none;
We'll keep him here: That is what both to him.
York.  Away.

Fond woman! were he twenty times my son,
I would approach him.  Hadst thou groan'd for him,
As I have done, thou'dest be more pitiful.
But now I know thy mind; thou dost suspect,
That they have been disloyal to thy dear bed.
And that he is a bastard, not thy son?
Sweet York, sweet husband, be not of that mind:
He is as like thee as a man may be.

Not like to me, or any of my kin,
And yet I love him.

York.  Make way, unruly woman.

[Exit.

Duch.  After.  Amurcile; mount thee upon his horse;
Spur, post: and get before him to the king.
And beg thy pardon ere he do accuse thee.
I'll not be long behind; though I be old,
I doubt not but to ride as fast as York;
And never will I rise up from the ground,
Till Bolingbroke have pardon'd thee: Away!

Begone.

[Execut.

SCENE III.—Windsor.  A Room in the Castle.

Enter Bolingbroke, as King; Percy, and other Lords.

Boling.  Can no man tell of my unliterity son?
'Tis full three months since I did see him last.—
If any plague hang o'er us, 'tis he.
I would to God, my lords, he might be found;
Inquire at London, amongst the taverns there.
For there, they say, he daily doth frequent,
With untrained loose companions:
Even such, they say, as stand in narrow lanes,
And beat our watch, and rob our passengers;
While he, young, wanton, and effeminate boy,
Takes on the point of honor, to support
So dissolve a crew.

Percy.  My lord, some two days since I saw the prince;
And told him of these triumph held at Oxford.

Boling.  And what said the gallant?

Percy.  His answer was, he would unto the steeds;
And from the common'ost creature pluck a glove,
And wear it as a favor; and with that
He would unhorse the behestful challenger.

Boling.  As dissolve, as desperate! yet through both
I see some sparkles of a better hope,
Which elder days may happily bring forth.
But who comes here?

Enter AMURCILE hastily.

Aum.  Where is the king?

Boling.  What means our cousin, that he stares and looks so wildly?

Breeding.

Aum.  God save your grace. I do beseech your majesty.
To have some conference with your grace alone.

Boling.  Withdraw yourselves, and leave us here [Execut PERCY and Lords.

What is the matter with our cousin now?

Aum.  For ever may my knees grow to the earth,

My tongue cleave to my roof within my mouth,

Unless a pardon, ere I rise, or speak.

Boling.  Intended, or committed, was this fault?
It but the first, how hennous e'er it be,
To win thy favor:—but a pardon thee.

Aum.  Then give me leave that I may turn the key.
That no man enter till my tale be done.

Boling.  Have thy desires.

[AMURCILE locks the door.

York. [Within.] My liege, beware; look to thyself!

Thou hast a traitor in thy presence there.

Boling.  Villain, I'll make thee say.  [Drawing.

Aum.  Stay thy revengeful hand;
Thou hast no cause to fear.

York. [Within.] Open the door, secure, fool-hardy king:
Shall I, for love, speak treason to thy face?

Open the door, or I will break it open.

[Open BOLINGBROKE opens the door.

Enter York.

Boling.  What is the matter, uncle? I speak;

Recover breath; tell us how near is danger.
That we may arm us to encounter it.
York.  Peruse this writing here, and thou shalt know
The treason that my haste forbids me show.
Aum.  Remember, as thou read'st, thy promise past;
I do repeat; read not my name there,
My heart is not confederate with my hand.
York. [Twas, villain, ere thy hand did set it down.
I tore it from the traitor's bosom, king:
Fear, and not love, begets his penitence:
Forget to pity him, lest thy pity prove
A serpent that will sting thee to the heart.

Boling.  Ominous, strong, and bold conspiracy!
O loyal father of a treacherous son!
Thou seest, immuculate, and silver fountain,
From whence this stream through muddy passages,
Hath held his current, and defiled itself!
Thy overflow of good converts to bad;
And thy abundant goodness shall excuse
This deadly plot in the disgressing York.

York.  So shall my virtue be his vice's bawd'
And he shall spend mine honor with his shame,
As thriftless sons their scraping fathers' gold.
Mine honor lives when his dishonest dies,
Or my shamed life in his dishonest lies;
Thou kill'st me in his life; giving him breath,
The traitor lives, the true man's put to death.

Duch.  [Within.] What ho, my liege! for God's sake let me in.

Boling.  What shrill-voiced suppliant makes this eager cry!

Duch.  A woman, and thine aunt, great king; 'tis I.
Speak with me, pity me, open the door;
A beggar begs, that never begg'd before.

Boling.  Our scene is alter'd,—from a serious thing
And now changed to The Beggar and the King.

My dangerous cousin, let your mother in.
I know she's come to pray for your foul sin.
York.  If thou do pardon, thosoever pray,
More sins, for this forgiveness, prosper may.
This foster'd joint cut off, the rest ruins sound,
This, let alone, will all the rest confound.

Enter Duchess.

Duch.  O king, believe not this half-hard-hearted man;
Love, loving not itself, none other can.
York.  Thon frantic woman, what dost thou make here?

Shall thy old dogs once more a traitor rear?

Duch.  Sweet York, be patient: Hear me, gentle liege.

[Kneel.

Transparent.

* An old ballad.
Boling. Rise up, good aunt.

Duch. Not yet, I thee beseech:
For ever will I kneel upon my knees,
And three days with thee I will remain,
Till thou give joy; until thou bid me joy,
By pardoning Rutland, my transgressing boy.

Alas! Unto my mother's prayers, I bend my knees. [Kneels.

York. Against them both, my true joints heeds he.

ill may thou thrive, if thou grant any grace!

Duch. Plead's he in earnest I look upon his face;
His eyes do drop no tears, his prayers are in jest;
His words come from his mouth, ours from our knees.

He prays but faintly, and would be denied;
We pray with heart, and soul, and all beside.
His weary joints would gladly rise, I know;
Our knees shall kneel till to the ground they grow;
His prayers are full of false hypercyre;
Goes of true zeal and deep integrity.
Our prayers do out-pray his; then let them have
The true prayers ought to have. [Exeunt,

Boling. Good aunt, stand up.

Duch. Nay, do not say—stand up;
But, pardon, first, and afterwards, stand up. And if it were thy name, thy tongue to teach,
Pardon—should be the first word of thy speech.
I never long'd to hear a word till now;
Say—pardon, king; let pity sweetly now:
The thing is such a short, but not so short as sweet;
No word like, pardon, for kings' mouths so meet.
York. Speak it in French, king; say, pardonnez

Boling. Dost thou teach pardon to destroy me?
Ah, my poor husband, my hard- hearted lord.
That set's the word itself against the word!—
Speak, pardon, as his current in our land;
The chopping French we do not understand.
Thine eye begins to speak, set thy tongue there: Or, in thy pious heart plant thy thine ear;
That, hear my prayers, and the prayers do pierce;
Pity may move thee, pardon to recompense.

Boling. Good aunt, stand up.

Duch. I do not sue to stand;
Pardon is all the suit I have in hand.
Boling. I pardon him, as God shall pardon me.
Duch. O happy vantage of a kneeling knee! You tell me, for heaven speak it again;
Twice saying pardon, doth not pardon twain;
But makes one pardon strong.

Boling. With all my heart, I pardon him.

Duch. A God on earth thou art.

Boling. But for our trusty brother-in-law,—and the abbot,
With all the rest of that consorted crew—

 Destruction straight shall dog them at the heels.—

Good uncle, help to order several powers
To Oxford, or where'er these traitors are;
Then make them know that thine ear is ever;
But I will have them, if I once knew where.
Uneh, farewell,—and cousin, too, adieu;
Your mother well hath pray'd, and I do pray,

Duch. Come, my old son,—I pray God make thee new. [Exeunt new.

SCENE IV. Enter Exton and a Servant.

Exton. Didst thou not mark the king what words he spake?

Have I no friend will rid me of this living fear?

What is not so?
Serv. Those were his very words.

Exton. Have I no friend? quoth he: he spake it twice;
And order it twice together; did he not?
Serv. He did.
Exton. And speaking it, he wistfully look'd on me;
And withal said, would thou wert the man
That would divorce this terror from my heart;
Meaning, the king at Pomfret. Come, let's go;
I am the king's friend, and will rid his foes. [Exeunt,

SCENE V.—Pomfret. The Castle.

Enter King Richard.

K. Rich. I have been studying how I may compare
This prison, where I live, unto the world:

And, for because the world is populous,
And here is not a creature but myself,
I cannot do it;—Yet I'll hammer it out.
My brain is ever new, like an endless sea;
My soul, the ather: and these two beget
A generation of still-breeding thoughts,
And these same thoughts people this little world;
In him, as in the people of the world;
For no thought is contented. The better sort,
As thoughts of things divine—are intermix'd
With scruples, and do set the world itself
Against the world:
As thus,—Come, little orch; and then again,—
It is as hard to come, as for a camel
To thread the pass of a nereid's eye.

Thoughts tending to ambition, they do plot
Unlikely wonders: how these vain weak nails
May bear a passage through the flinty ribs
Of this hot world, my ragged prison walls;
And, for they cannot, die in their own pride.

Thoughts tending to content, chatter themselves,—
That they are not the first of fortune's slaves,
Nor shall be the last: like silly beggars,
Who, sitting in the stocks, refuse their shame,
That many have, and others must sit there:
And in this thought they find a kind of ease,
Bearing their own misfortune on the back.

Is of such as have before endured the like.
Thus play I, in one person, many people,
And none contented: Sometimes am I king,
Then treader in my wishful majesty beggar; And so I am: Then crushing penury
Persuades me I was better when a king; And both are true:—Then am I king, and, by one back,
Think that I am unkind'd by Bolingbroke,
And straight am nothing:—but what I am,
Nor I, any man, but that man is,
With nothing shall be pleas'd till he be sad
With being nothing.—Muse do I hear! [Music.
Ha! ha! keep time;—How sour sweet music is,
When time is broke, and no proportion kept!
So is it if the music of the happy soul
And here have I the daintiness of ear,
To check time broke in a disorder'd string;
But, for the concord of my state and time,
Had not an ear to hear my true time broke.
I wasted time, and now doth time waste me.
For now hath time made me his numb'ring clock.
My thoughts are not as mine, have their wills,
And, with suchs, they jar
Their watches on to mischievous, the outward watch
Where'er my finger, like a div's point,
Is pointing still, in cleansing them from tears.
Now, sir, those words that tell where these are
Are clamorous groans, that strike upon my heart,
Which is the bell: So sighs, and tears, and groans,
Show minutes, times, and hours—but my time
Haps passion'd in Bolingbroke's joy and joy.
While I stand footing here, his Jack o'th' clock,¹
This music mads me, let it sound no more;
For though it have hop maximin to their wits,
In me, it must be made void.
Yet blessing on his heart that gives it me!
For 's a sign of love: and love to Richard
Is a strange brooch in this all-hating world.

Enter Groom.

Groom. Hail, royal prince! K. Rich. Thanks, noble peer;
The cheapest of us is ten greats too dear.

What art thou! and how comest thou hither,
Where no man never comes, but that doth
That brings me food, to make misfortune live?

Groom. I was a poor groom of thy stable, king,
When thou wert king; who, travelling towards York,
With much ado, at length have gotten leave
To look upon my sometime master's face.
O, how it yeard my heart, when I beheld,
The London streets, that coronation day,
When Bolingbroke rode on roan Barbary!
That horse, that thou so often lastastrid,
That horse, that so carefully had I'sed! K. Rich. Rode he on Barbary? Tell me, gentle friend,
How went he under him?

Groom. So proudly as he did shash'd the ground. K. Rich. So proud that Bolingbroke was on his back! ² ¹Little gate.

²Strike for him, like the figure of a man on a bell.
That jade hath eat bread from my royal hand;
This hand hath made him proud with clapping him.
Would he not stumble? Would he not fall down,
(Since pride must have a fall,) and break the neck
Of that proud man that did usurp his back!
Forgiveness, horse! why do I rail on thee,
Since thou, created to be aw'd by man,
Wast born to bear! I was not made a horse;
And yet I bear a burden like an ass.
Spur-gall'd, and tired, by jaunting Bolingbroke.

Enter Keeper with a Dish.

Keep. Fellow, give place; here is no longer stay.

K. Rich. If thou love me, 'tis time thou wert away.

Groom. What my tongue dares not, that my heart shall say.
[Exit.]

Keep. My lord, will't please you to fall to?

K. Rich. Taste of it first, as thou art wont to do.
Keep. My lord, I dare not; sir Pierce of Exton, who lately came from the king, commands the contrary.

K. Rich. The devil take Henry of Lancaster and thee!
Patience is stade, and I am weary of it.

Keep. Help, help, help!
(Beat the Keeper.)

Enter Exton, and Servants armed.

K. Rich. How now! what means death in this rude assault!
Villain, thy own hand yields thy death's instrument.
[Snatching a weapon, and killing one.]

Go thou, and nil another room in hell.
[He kills another, then Exton strikes him down.

That hand shall burn in never-quenching fire,
That slanders thus my person—Exton, thy fierce hand.
Hath with the king's blood stain'd the king's own land.
Mount, mount, my soul! thy seat is up on high;
Whilst my gross flesh sinks downward here to die.

[Dies.]

Exton. As full of valor, as of royal blood.
Both have I spilt; O, would the deed were good!
For now the devil, that told me—I did well,
Says that this deed is chronicled in hell.
This deed king to the living king I'll bear—
Take hence the rest, and give them burial here.
[Execut.]

SCENE VI.—Windsor. A Room in the Castle.

Flourish. Enter Bolingbroke, and York, with Lords, and Attendants.

Boling. Kind uncle York, the latest news we hear,
Is—that the rebels have consumed with fire
Our town of Cicester in Glostershire;
But whether they be ta'en, or slain, we hear not.

Enter Northumberlant.

Welcome, my lord: What is the news?
North. First, to thy sacred seat wish I all happiness,

The next news is,—I have to London sent
The heads of Salisbury, Spencer, Blunt, and Kent:
The manner of their taking: I appear
At large discoursed in this paper here.
(Presenting a paper.)

Boling. We thank thee, gentle Percy, for thy pains;
And to thy worth will add right worthy gains.

Enter Fitzwater.

Fitz. My lord, I have from Oxford sent to London
The heads of Brecas, and Sir Bonnet Seely;
Two of the dangerous consorted traitors,
That sought at Oxford thy dire overthrow.
Boling. Thy pains, Fitzwater, shall not be forgot;
Right noble is thy merit, well I wit.

Enter Percy, with the Bishop of Carlisle.

Percy. The grand conspirator, abbot of West-

With clog of conscience, and sour melancholy,
Hath yielded up his body to the grave;
But here is Carlisle living to abuse
Thy Kingly doom, and sentence of his pride.
Boling. Carlisle, this is your doom:—
Choose out some secret place, some reverend room,
More than thou hast, and with it 'joy thy life;
So, as thou liv'st in peace, die I see from strick:
For though mine enemy thou hast ever been,
High Sparks of honor in thee have I seen.

Enter Exton, with Attendants bearing a Coffin.

Exton. Great king, within this coffin I present
Thy buried fear; hereon all breathless lies
The mightiest of thy greatest enemies,
Richard of Bourdeaux, by me bethere brought.
Boling. Exton, I thank thee not; for thou hast wrought
A deed of slander, with thy fatal hand,
Upon my head, and all this famous land.
Exton. From your own mouth, my lord, did I this deed.

Boling. They love not poison that do poison need,
Nor do I thee; though I did wish him dead,
I hate the murderer, love him murdered.
The guilt of conscience take thou for thy labor,
But neither my good word, nor princely favor
With Cain go wander through the shade of night,
And never show thy head by day nor light.——
Lords, I protest, my soul is full of woe,
That blood should sprinkle me, to make me grow:
Come, mourn with me for what I do lament,
And put on sullen black incontinence:
I'll make a voyage to the Holy Land,
To wash this blood off my guilty hand:—
March sadly after; grace my mournings here,
In weeping after this unmitely hier.
[Execut.]

Lords, Officers, Sheriff, Vintner, Chamberlain, Drawers, Two Carriers, Travellers and Attendants.

SCENE, England.

ACT I.

Enter KING HENRY, WESTMORELAND, SIR WALTER BLUNT, and others.

K. Hen. So shaken as we are, so wan with care,
Find we no time for frivolted peace to pant,
And breathe short-winded accents of new broils
To be commenced in strands
No more the thirsty Erinyna
Shall daub her lips with her own children's blood;
No more shall trenching war channel her fields,
Nor bruise her flowrets with the armed hoofs
Of hostile paces: those opposed eyes,
Which,—like the meteors of a troubled heaven,
All of one nature, of one substance bred,—
Did lately meet in the intestine shock
And furious close of civil butchery,
Shall now, in mutual, well-beseeming ranks,
March all one way; and be no more opposed
Against acquaintance, kindred, and allies:
The edge of war, like an ill-sheathed knife,
No more shall cut his master. Therefore, friends,
As far as to the sepulchre of Christ,
(Whose soldier now, under whose blessed cross
We are impressed and engaged to fight;
Forthwith a power of English shall we levy;
Whose arms were moulded in their mother's womb,
To chase these pagans, in those holy fields,
Over whose acres walk'd those blessed feet,
Which, fourteen hundred years ago, were nail'd
For our advantage, on the latter cross.
But this our purpose is a twelvemonth old,
And bootless 'tis to tell you—we will go;
Therefore we meet not now—Then let me hear
Of you, my gentle cousin Westmoreland,
What yesternight our council did decree
In forwarding this dear expedience.
West. My hearc, this haste was hot in question,
And many limits of the charge set down

But yesternight: when, all athwart, there came
A post from Wales, loaded with heavy news;
Whose worst was,—that the noble Mortimer
Leading the men of Herefordshire to fight
Against the irregular and wild Glendower,
Was by the rude hands of that Welshman taken,
And a thousand of his people butchered.
Upon whose head, yonder was such misuse,
Such breach, shameful transformation,
By those Welshwomen done, as may not be,
Without much shame, re-told or spoken of.
K. Hen. It seems, then, that the tidings of this broil
Brake off our business for the Holy Land.
West. This match'd with other, did, my gracious lord,
For more uneven and unwelcome news
Came from the north, and thus it did import
On Holy-road day:
the gallant Hotspur there,
Young Harry Percy, and brave Archibald,
That ever valiant and approved Scot,
At Holmedon met,
Where they did spend a sad and bloody hour;
As by discharge of their artillery,
And shape of likelihood, the news was told;
For he that brought them, in the very heat
And pride of their contention, did take horse,
Uncertain of the issue any way.
K. Hen. Here is a dear and true industrious friend,
Sir Walter Blunt, new lighted from his horse,
Stain'd with the variation of each soil
Betwixt that Holmedon and this seat of ours;
And he hath brought us smooth and welcome news.
The earl of Douglas is discomfited;
Ten thousand bold Scots, two-and-twenty knights,
Balk'd in their own blood, did sir Walter see
On Holmedon's plains: Of prisoners, Hotspur took Mordake, the earl of Fife, and eldest son
To bear Douglas; and the earls of Athol,
Of Murray, Angus, and Menteith.

*September 14.

*Piled up in a heap.
SCENE II. KING HENRY IV. 321.

And is this not an honorable stall? A fine cow? Aye, ha, cousin, is it not? Well. In faith.
It is a contest for a prince to bestow of.
K. Hen. Yea, there thou mak'st me sad, and I suspen'd.

In envy that my lord Northumberland Should be the father of so blest a son: A son who is the theme of honor's tongue: Among the clouds, and, as I'll prove it here, Who's a sweet fortune's minion, and her pride: Whily, by looking on the praise of him, Whil't not and dishonor stain the brow Of my young Harry, of your majesty that could be prov'd, That some night-tripping fancy had exchanged In rags—clothes our children where they lay, And call'd mine—Percy, his—Plundereret! The moss that cover'd some good earth was a bloom, And let him from my thoughts:—What think you, rox? Of this young Percy's pride! the prisoners, Which lie in this adventure hath surpriz'd, To his own use he keeps; and sends me word, I shall have none but Mordake, earl of Fife. Hen. This is his uncle's teaching, this is Worcester. Malevolent to you in all aspects; Which makes him proue himself, and bristle up The most bold youth that youngest cousin liv'd, K. Hen. But I have sent for him to answer this; And, for this cause, a while we must neglect Our holy purpose to Jerusalem. Coming to our council we Will hold at Windsor, so inform the lords: But come yourself with speed to us again; For more is to be said, and to be done, Than of your anger can be uttered. Lord, I will, my liege. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—Another Room in the Palace.

Enter Henry Prince of Wales, and Falstaff.

Fal. Now, Hal, what time of day is it, lad? P. Hen. Thou art so fat-witted, with drinking of old sack, and unmitting life after supper, and sleeping upon benches after noon, that thou hast forgotten to demand that truly which thou wouldst truly know. What a devil hast thou to do with the time of the day! unless hours were cups of mead, and minutes capons, and clockes the tongues of bawds, and dial's the signs of leaping-houses, and the blood is the sun himself a fair hotウェ inflame-color'd tangle in unanswer'd ass, so that the Fool be so superfluous to demand the time of the day.

Fal. Indeed, you come near me, now, Hal: for when the day is come, go by the moon and seven stars; and not by Phecys, or a leaping-horse, or wandering knight so fair. And, I pray thee, sweet wag, when thou art king,—as, god save thy grace, (majesty, I say) saul, and so much the better for grace will have none,--

P. Hen. What, none?

Fal. No, by my troth; not so much as will serve to be prologue to an egg and butter.

P. Hen. Well, how then? come, roundly, roundly.

Fal. Marry, then, sweet wag, when thou art king, let not us, that are spires of the night's body, be called thieves of the day's beauty; let us be Diamond-gentlemen of the shade, minions of the moon; And let men say, we be men of good government: being governed, as the sea is, by our noble and chaste mistress the moon, under whose covering there is a life, and not its fruit.

P. Hen. Thou say'st well; and it holds well too: for the fortune of us, that are the moon's men, doth ebb and flow like the sea; being governed, as the sea, by her moon. As, for proof now: A purse of gold most resolutely snatch'd on Monday night, and most insolently spent on Tuesday morning; got with swearing—lay by; and spent with crying—lay by; and yet I find the gold capon's leg of the ladder; and, and by, in a high flow as the rise of the gallows.

Fal. By the Lord, thou say'st true, lad. And is not my hostess, the tavern, my hostess too? P. Hen. As the honey of Hybla, my old lad of the castle. And is not a bull jerkin' the most sweet rafte of durance! 1

Fal. How now, how now, mad was? what, in thy quips, and thy quiddities: what a plague have I do to do with thee? P. Hen. Why, what a pox have I to do with my hostess of the tavern?

Fal. Well, thou hast called her to a reckoning, many a time and o't. P. Hen. Did I ever call for thee to pay thy part? Fal. No; I will give thee thy due, thou hast paid all there. P. Hen. Yea, and elsewhere, so far as my coin would stretch; and, where it would not, I have used my credit.

Fal. Yea, and so used it, that were it not here apparent that thou art heir apparent.—But, I pray thee, sweet wag, shall there be gallows standing in England when thou art king? and resolution thus short? such a true and wise old father antic the law! Do not thou, when thou art king, hang a thief.

P. Hen. Nay, thou shalt.

Fal. Shall I! O rare! By the lord I'll be a brave judge.

P. Hen. Thou judgest false already; I mean, thou shalt have the hanging of the thieves, and so become a just and humane.

Fal. Well, Hal, well, and in some sort it jumps with my humor, as well as waiting in the court, I can tell you. When thou art king,--

P. Hen. For obtaining of suits? P. Hen. For, obtaining of suits; whereas the hangman hath no lean wardrobe. 'Sblood, I am as much in want of a harness as a horse in a harness. P. Hen. Or and old lion; or a lover's lute. P. Hen. Yea, or the drone of a Lincolnshire bag-pipe. 2

P. Hen. What sayst thou to a hare, or the melancholy of Moor-ditch? 3

Fal. Thou hast the most unvarying similies; and art, indeed, the most comparative, rusticall,—sweet young prince,—but, Hal, I pray thee, trouble me no more with vanity. I would to God, thou and I knew where a commodity of good names were to be bought: An old lord of the council ra'd me the other day in the street about you, say, I marked him not: and yet he talked very wisely; but I regarded him not; and yet he talked wisely, and in the street too.

P. Hen. Thou didst well; for wisdom cries out in the streets, and no man regards it.

Fal. O thou hast damnable interjection; 4 and art, indeed, able to corrupt a saint. Thou hast done me a great wrong; and by the faith, thou wast not a lording, and I will make thee a lording, and I will make thee a lording. Before I knew thee, Hal, I knew nothing; and now am I, if a man should speak truly, little better that one of the Papists. No, Hal, I must give thee over this life, and I will give it over; and now the better for it: I do not, I am a villain; I'll be damned for ever a king's son in Christendom.

P. Hen. Where shall we take a purse-to-morrow, Jack?

Fal. Where thou wilt, lad; I'll make one; an I do not, call me villain, and battle 5 me.

P. Hen. I see a good amendment of life in thee; from praying, to purse-taking.

Enter Poins, at a distance.

Fal. Why, Hal, 'tis my vocation, Hal; 'tis no sin for a man to labor in his vocation. Poins!—Now shall we know if Gadshill have set a match. 6 O, if men were to be saved by merit, what hole in hell would there be for wretches so hot? This is the most omnipotent villain, that ever cried, Stand, to a true man.

P. Hen. Good morrow, Ned.

Poins. Good morrow, sweet Hal.—What says monsieur Rensore? What says sir John Sack-and Sugar? Jack, how agrees the devil and thee about thy soul, that thou solest him on Good-friday last, for a cup of claret and a caniket of cold capon's leg for a gold capon's leg of the ladder; and, and by, in a high flow as the rise of the gallows.

Fal. By the Lord, thou say'st true, lad. And is not my hostess, the tavern, my hostess too? P. Hen. As the honey of Hybla, my old lad of the castle. And is not a bull jerkin' the most sweet rafte of durance! 1

1 Trim, as birds clean their feathers. 2 Stand still. 3 The press of sheriff's officers.

5 Rib cat, should be lib cat—a Scotch term at this day, for a gelded cat. 6 Croak of a frog. 7 Citation of holy texts. 8 Treat me with ignorance. 9 Made an appointment.
FIRST PART OF

P. Hen. Else he had been damned for cozening the devil.

Points. But, my lad, your horse, to-morrow morning, by four o'ock, early at Gadshill: There are pilgrimage going on to-day, and traders riding to London with fat purses; I have visors for you all, you have horses for yourselves; Gadshill lies to-night in Rochester: I have been more than once in my way: I think I may do it as secure as sleep: If you will go, I will stuff your purses full of crowns; if you will not, tarry at home, and be hanged.

Fal. More, my lord; if I tarry at home, and go not, I'll hang you for going.

Points. You will, chops?

Fal. Hal, wilt thou make one?

P. Hen. Who, I rob! a thief! not I, by my faith.

Fal. There's neither honesty, manhood, nor good-fellowship in thee, nor thou comest not of the loathly, if thou darrest not stand for ten shillings?

P. Hen. Well, then, once in my days I'll be a madman.

Fal. Why, that's well said.

P. Hen. Well, come what will. I'll tarry at home.

Fal. By the Lord, I'll be a traitor then, when thou art but a traitor.

P. Hen. I care not.

Fal. Sir John, I pr'ythee, leave the prince and me alone; I will lay him down such reasons for the prince that shall pay him.

Fal. Well, mayst thou have the spirit of persuasion, and the ears of profiting, that what thou speakest may move, and what he hears may be believed, that the true prince may (for recreation sake) prove a raise thief; for the poor abuses of the time want countenance. Farewell: You shall find me in Eastcheap.

Fal. Farewell, thou latter spring! Farewell All-hallows summer! [Exit Falstaff.

Points. Now, my good sweet honey lord, ride with me to-morrow, and let us to the other place; Gadshill, Bardolph, Peto, and Gadshill, shall rob those men that we have already waylaid; yourself, and I, will not be there; and whereas we have the booty, if you and I do not rob them, cut this head from my shoulders.

P. Hen. But how shall we part with them in setting forth?

Fal. Why, we will set forth before or after them, and appoint them a place of meeting, where in it is at our pleasure to fail; and then we will adventure upon the exploit themselves; which they shall have no sooner achieved, but we'll set upon them.

P. Hen. Ay, but 'tis like, that they will know us, by our horses, by our habits, and by every other apparent sign of our company. Farewell.

Fal. Tut! our horses they shall not see, I'll tie them in the wood; our visors we will change, after we leave them; and, sirrah, I have cases of buckram for the horses, to unmask our noted outward garments.

P. Hen. But, I doubt, they will be too hard for us.

Fal. Well, for two of them, I know them to be as true-bred cowards as ever turned back; and for the third, if he fight longer than he sees reason, I'll follow him, and this will be, the incomprehensible lies that this same fat rogue will tell us, when we meet at supper: 'thirty, at least, he fought with; what wards, what blows, what extremities he endured: and, in the reproof of this, lies the jest.

P. Hen. Well, I'll go with thee; provide us all things necessary, and meet me to-morrow night in Eastcheap: Farewell.

Fal. Farewell, my lord. [Exit Points.

P. Hen. I know you all, and will a while uphold that, my lord, of your kindness: Yet herein will I imitate the sum: Who dought permit the base contagious clouds To smoother up his beauty from the world, That will not enable a most honest man: Being wanted, he may be more wonder'd at.

By breaking through the foul and ugly mists Of vapors, that did seem to strangle him, In all the year we were playing holidays, To sport would be as tedious as to work; But when it is much better to be sooner gone, And nothing please't but rare accidents: So, when this loose behaviour I throw off, And pay the debt I never promised, By how much better he be profited, and I am, By so much shall I falsify men's hopes; And, like bright metal on a sullen ground, My reformation, glittering o'er my fault, Shall shine the more genial, and fitter more eyes Than that which hath no foil to set it off. I'll so offend, to make offence a skill; Redeeming time, when men think least I will.

[Exit.

SCENE III.—Another Room in the Palace.

Enter K. Hen, Northumberland, Worcester, Hotspur, Sir Walter Blunt, and others.

K. Hen. My blood hath been too cold and temperate. Unapt to stir at these indigities, And you have found me; for, accordingly, You tread upon my patience; but, be sure, I will in henceforth neither be so exact Upon the weakness of the age, nor, being Mighty, and to be scald, than my condition: Which hath been smooth as oil, soft as young down, And therefore lost that title of respect, Which a king should show: And you shall pay the proud. Wot, our house, my sovereign liege, little deserveth The scourge of greatness to be used on it. And that is my fault, for which too which our hands Have holp to make so petty.

North. My lord.

K. Hen. Worcester, get thee gone, for I see danger And disorder in time came; or, sir, Your presence is too bold and peremptory: And majesty might never yet endure The noisy breath, for an onrush breeze. You have good leave to leave us; we shall need your Use and counsel, we shall send for you.

Now you were about to speak. [Exit Worcester.

North. Yea, my good lord.

Those prisoners in your highness' name demanded, Which Harry Percy here at Holmedon took; Were, as he says, not with such strength denied As is deliver'd to your majesty: Either envy, therefore, or misprision, Is guilty of this fault, and not my son., Hot. My liege, I did no more my masters. But, I remember, when the fight was done, When I was dry with rage, and extreme toil, Breathless and faint, leaning upon my sword, I say, these certain lords, truly dress'd, Fresh as a bridegroom; and his chin new shap'd, Sieu'd as a studdle-fish at harvest-home; He was perfumed like a milliner, And twist his finger and his thumb he held A pounce-box, which ever and anon He gave his nose, and took it away again; Who, there with angry, when it next came there, Took it in snuff;—and still he smiled and talk'd; And, as the soldiers bore dead bodies by, He call'd them—untangled knives, unmannerly, Bav'd them, "And with me you may have the best betwixt the wind and his nobility. With many a holiday and lady terms He question'd me among the rest demanded My prisoners, in your majesty's behalf. I then, all smarting, with my wounds being cold, To be so pester'd with a popinjay, Out of my grief and my unpatience, Answered them best I knew not what; He should, or he should not;—for he made me mad, To see him shine so brisk, and smell so sweet, And talk of weigh'ting-out his quiet senses, Of guns, and drums, and wounds, (God save the mark!) And telling me, the sovereign's thing on earth Was past for any award; and that it was great pity, so it was, That villainous salt-petre should be digg'd Out of the bowels of the harmless earth,

1 Disposition. 2 A small box for musk or other perfumes.
KING HENRY IV.

SCENE III.  King Henry IV.

Which many a good tall fellow had destroyed
So cowardly; and, but for those vile guns,
He would himself have been a soldier.

Oh, had he been a man of blood,
As my lord, I answer'd indirectly, as I said;
And, I beseech you, let not this report
Come current for an accusation,
Betwixt my state and your high majesty.

Blunt. The circumstance consider'd good, my lord.

Whatever Harry Percy then had said,
To such a person, and in such a place,
At such a time, with all the rest retold,
May reasonably die, and never rise
To do him wrong, or any way impeach
What he had done, so in my day how.
K. Hen. Why, yet he doth deny his prisoners;
But with proviso, and exception,—
That we, at our own charge, shall ransom straight
His three captives, and for a fee.

Who, on my soul, hath willfully betray'd
The lives of those that he did lead to fight Against the great magician, daunt'd Glendower;
Whose daughter, as we hear, the earl of March
Hath lately married. Shall our collars then
Be emptied, to redeem a traitor home?
Shall we buy treason, and indent with fears,
When they have lost and forfend themselves?
No, on the barren mountains let him starve;
For I shall never hold that man my friend,
Whose tongue shall discourse so one penny cost
To ransom home revolted Mortimer.

Revolted Mortimer! He never did fall out, of my sovereign liege,
But by the chance of war,—To prove that true,
Needs no more but one tongue for all those wounds,
Those mounthéd wounds, which vauntly he took,
When with the greatest potentate on earth,
In single opposition, hand to hand,
He did consummate the best part of an hour
In changing hardiment with great Glendower:
Three times they breath'd, and three times did they drink,
Upon agreement, of swift Severn's flood;
Who, with the brightness of their bloody looks,
Ran fearful among the tempest seas, and,
And hid his cap't head in the hollow bank
Blood-stained with these valiant combatants. Never did bare and rotten policy
Color her working with such deadly wounds;
Nor never could the noble Mortimer
Receive so many, and all willingly:

The bolder bands, with revolt.
K. Hen. Thou dost beliel him, Percy, thou dost believe him;
He never did encounter with Glendower;
I will believe him.

He durst as well have met the devil alone,
As Owen Glendower for an enemy.
Art not ashamed? But, surrah, henceforth
Let not this sight you in your judgment.
Send me your prisoners with the speediest means,
Or you shall hear in such a kind from me
As will displease you. My lord Northumberland,
Whose departure with your son,
Send us your prisoners, or you'll hear of it.

Re-enter WORCESTER.

Wor. Speak of Mortimer?

Zounds, I will speak of him; and let my soul
Want mercy, if I do not join with him!
Yea, on his part, I'll empty all these veins,
And shed my dear blood upon the dust,
But I will lift the down-trod Mortimer.
As high as the air as this unthankful king,
As high in rage and canker'd Bolingbroke.

North. Brother, the king hath made your nephew mad.

Wor. Who struck this heat up, after I was gone?

And in his ear I'll rota.—Mortimer!
Nay,
I'll have a starting shall be taught to speak
Nothing but Mortimer, and give it him,
To keep his anger still in motion.

Wor.
Hear you,
Cousin; a word.

Hot. All studies here I solemnly defy,
Save how to call and punch this Bolingbroke:
And that same sword-and-buckler prince of Wales—
But that I think his father loves him not,
And would be glad he met with some mishance,
I'll have him poison'd with a pot of ale.

Wor. Farewell, kinsman! I will talk to you,
When you are better temper'd to attend.

North. Why, what a wasp-stung and impatient fool
Art thou to break into this woman's mood;
Tying thine ear to no tongue but thine own!

Hot. Why, look you, I am whipp'd and scourged
With rods,
Netted, and stung with pincers, when I hear
Of this vile politician, Bolingbroke.
In Richard's time,—What do you call the place?—
A plague upon't!—it is in Cheshire:—
'Twas where the mad-cap duke his uncle kept;
His uncle York—where I first bow'd my knee
Unto this king of smiles, this Bolingbroke,
When you and he came back from Ravenspurge.

North. At Berkeley castle.

Hot. You say true—
What, why a candy dealt of courtesy
Thisawning greyhound then did proffer me!
Look,—when his infant fortune came to age,
And, gentle Harry Percy,—and, kind cousin—
O, the devil take such cozeners!—God forgive me!

Good uncle, tell your tale, for I have done.

Wor. Nay, if you have not, to't again;
We'll stay your leisure.

Hot. Then once more to your Scottish prisoners,
Deliver them up without their ransom straight,
And make the Douglas' son your only mean
For powers in Scotland; which,—for divers reasons,
Which I shall send you written,—be assur'd,
Will easily be granted.—You my lord,—

[To NORTHUMBERLAND]

Your son in Scotland being thus employ'd,—
Shall secretly into the bosom creep
Of that same noble pretate, well belov'd,
The archbishop.

Hot. Of York, I'st not?

Wor. True; who bears hard
His brother's death at Bristol, the lord Scroop.
I speak not this in estimation,
As what I think might be, but what I know
Is ruminated, plotted, and set down;
And only stays but to behold the face
Of that report which shall bring it on.

Hot. I smell it; upon my life, 't will do well.

North. Before the game's ason, thou still let'st slip.

Wor. Why, it cannot choose but be a noble plot;
And then the power of Scotland, and of York—
To join with Mortimer, ha!

Wor. And so they shall.

Hot. In faith, it is exceedingly well aim'd.

Wor. And 'tis no little reason bids us speed,
To save our heads by raising of a head:—
For, bear ourselves as even as we can.
The king will always think him in our debt;
And think we think ourselves unsatisfied,
Till he had found a time to pay us home.
And see already, how he doth begin
To make us strangers to his looks of love.

Hot. He does, he does; we'll be reveng'd on him.

Wor. Cousin, farewell!—No further go in this,
Then I by letters shall direct your course.
When time is ripe, (which will be suddenly)
I'll steal to Glendower and lord Mortimer;
Where you and Douglases, and our powers at once,
(As I will fashion it,) shall happily meet.
To bear our fortunes in our own strong arms,
Which now we hold at much uncertainty.

North. Farewell, good brother: we shall thrive,
Wit and trust.

Hot. Uncle, adieu:—O, let the hours be short,
Till fields, and blow's, and groans applaud our sport!

[Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Rochester. An Ion Yard.

Enter a Carrier, with a Lantern in his hand.

1 Car. Hello, ho! An't be not four by the day, I'll be hanged; Charles' wain is over the new chimny, and yet our horse not packed. What, oyster?

Ost. [Within.] Anon, anon.

2 Car. Curse, ye Tom, beat Cut's saddle, put a few flocks in the point; the poor jade is wrung in the withers out of all cost.

[Enter another Carrier.

2 Car. Pease and beans are as dank here as a dog, and that is the next way to give poor jades the bots; this house is turned upside down, since Robin cronze dined.

1 Car. Poor fellow! never joyed since the price of oats rose; it was the death of him.

2 Car. I think thither in the greatest fashionable house in all London road for feasts: I am stung like a tench. 3 Car. Like a tench! by the mass, there is 'nec a king in Christendom could be better bit than I have this be the first cock.

2 Car. Why, they will allow us 'nec a jorden, and then we leak in your chimnies; and your chamber-birds flses like as a loch.

1 Car. What, oyster! come away and be hanged, come away.

2 Car. I have a gammon of bacon, and two razes of ginger, to be delivered as far as Charingcrosse.

1 Car. 'Ushes, the turkey's in my pantry are quite starved,—What, oyster!—A plague on thee! hast thou never an eye in thy head? canst not hear!

* Name of his horse. 1 Measure.

2 Small fish supposed to breed flses.

[Exeunt.]

An 't were not as good a deed as drink, to break the pace of thee, I am a very villain.—Come, and be hanged.—I hast no faith in thee!

[Enter Gadshill.

Gads. Good-morrow, carriers. What's o'clock?

1 Car. I think it be two o'clock.

Gads. I pr'ythee, lend me thy lantern, to see my gelding in the stable.

2 Car. Nay, soft; I pray ye; I know a trick worth two of that.

Gads. I pr'ythee lend me this.

9 Car. Ay, when I canst tell?—Lend me thy lantern quoth a—merry, I'll see thee hanged first,

Gads. Sirrah carrier, what time do you mean to come to London?

2 Car. Than enough to go to bed with a candle, I warrant thee.—Come, neighbor Mugs, we'll call up the gentlemen; they will along with the company, for they have great charge. [Exeunt Carriers.

Gads. What, ho! chamberlain! Come, there! [Within.] At hand, quoth pick purse.

Gads. That's even as fair as—at hand, quoth the chamberlain; for thou variance no more from pickings of purses, than saving direction deth from laboring; thou lay'st the plot how.

[Enter Chamberlain.

Cham. Good-morrow, master Gadshill. It holds current that I told you yesternight: There's a tinklin' in the wind of Kent, hath brought these hundred marks with him in gold: I heard him tell it to one of his company, last night at supper; a kind of auditor; one that hath abundance of charge

1 A body of forces.

2 A proverb, from the pick-purse being always ready.

3 Freeholder.
too. God knows what. They are up already, and call for eggs and butter: They will awake presently.

Gals. Sirrah, if they meet not with saint Nicholas, I'll give them this night.

Cham. No, I'll none of it: I'd pyrrhee, keep that for the hangman; for I know thou worship'st Saint Nicholas as truly as a man of falsehood may.

Gals. We talk not of Saint Nicholas: we talk not of the hangman! If I hang, I'll make a fat pair of gallows: for, if I hang, old sir John hangs with me; and thou knowest he's no starving. Tut: there are other Trojans that desire not of the sport! 'Sake are content to do the profession some grace; that would, if matters should be looked into, for their own credit 'sake, make all whole. I am joined with no rowdies, no long-staff, no capones; none of these mad, mustachio, purplish-hued marmots; but with nobility, and tranquility; burgesses, as I am a great man; such as can hold in; such will strike sooner than speak, and speak sooner than drink, and drink sooner than pray: And yet I; for they pray continually to their saint, the commodeworth, or, rather, not pray to her, but pray on her; for they ride up and down on her, and make her their boots.7

Cham. What, the commodeworth their boots? will she hold out water for all this way?

Gals. She will, she will; justice hath liqueored her.8 We steal as in a castle, cock-ease: we have the receipt of fern-seed, we walk invisible.

Cham. Why, by my troth, I think you are more beholden to the night than to fern-seed, for your walking invisible.

Gals. Give me thy hand: thou shalt have a share in our purchase. Sirrah, he frets like a gummed velvet.

P. Hen. Stand close.

Enter Falstaff.

Fal. Where's Poins, Hal? P. Hen. He is walked up to the top of the hill, I'll go seek him. [Pretence to seek Poins.]

Fal. I am accusc'd to rob in that th'et company; the rascal hath removed my horse, and tied him, and left me there. [He takes the squire's further aboord, I shall break my wind. Well, I doubt not but to die a fair death for all this, if I scape hanging for killing that rascal. I have our company hourly any time these two-and-twenty years; and yet I am bewitch'd with the rogue's company: If the rascal have not given me medicines to make me love him, I'll be hanged: it could not be else; I have drunk medicament-Poins!-Hail!-a plague upon you both!-Bardolph!-Peto!-I'll starve ere I rob a foot further. An I were not as a dead deed as drink to turn true man, and leave these rogues, I am the veriest villain that ever chewed with a tooth. Eight yards off meven ground is threescore and ten miles about with me; and the rascals are known to you by many a man.

A plague upon it, when thieves cannot be true to one another! [They whistle. Whew!-A plague upon you all! Give me my horse, you rogues; give me my horse, and be hangen.

P. Hen. Peace, ye fat-guts! lie down; lay thine ear close to the ground, and list if thou canst hear the tread of travellers.

Fal. Have you any lever to lift me up again, being down! 'Sblood, 1 shall not bear mine own flesh so far afoot again, for all the coin in thy father's exchequer. What a plague mean ye to call me thus! me thus!

4 Cant term for highwaymen. 5 Footpads. 6 Public accountants. 7 Booty. 8 Gilf smooth her over. 9 Square, rule. 10 Make a youngster of me.
Act II.

FIRST PART OF

Away, good Ned. Falstaff sweateth to death, and lards the lean earth as he walks along: Were't not for laughing, I should put him up.

Point. How is the rogue run? [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—Warkworth. A Room in the Castle.

Enter Hotspur, reading a Letter.

[Aside.]—For mine own part, my lord, I could be well contented, in respect of the love I hear you bear. He could be contented. Why is he not then? In respect of the love he bears our house, for these shows in this, he loves his own barn better than he loves our house. Let me see some more. The purpose you undertake is dangerous: Why, that's certain: 'tis dangerous to take a cold, to speak of it, but I tell you, my good lord. Out of this nettle, danger, we pluck this flower, safety.

The purpose you undertake is dangerous; the friends you have named, waterless: the time itself unsuited; and your whole plot too light, for the counterfeit of so great an opposition.—Say you so, say you so! I say unto you again you are a shallow, cowardly fellow, and you lie. What a lack-brain is this?—By the Lord, our plot is a good plot as ever was laid; our friends true and constant: a good plot, good friends, and full of expectation: an excellent plot, very good friends. What a frosty-spirited rogue is this! Why, my lord of York command the plot, and the general course of the action. Zounds, an I were now by this rascal, I could brain him with his lady's fan. Is the king, and lay open all our proceedings. O, I could divide myself, and go to bullets, for moving such a dish of skimmed milk with so honorable an action! Hang him to the king: We are prepared: I will set forward to-night.

Enter Lady Percy.

How now, Kate! I must leave you within these two hours.

Lady. O my good lord, why are you thus alone? For what offence have I, this fortnight, been A banished woman from my Harry's bed? Tell me, sweet lord, what is that from thee This stony, pleasure, and thy hidden sleep? Why dost thou bend thine eyes upon the earth, and start so often when thou sittest alone? Why hast thou lost the fresh blood in thy cheeks, and thrown the treasures, and my love? To thick-eyed musing, and curs'd melancholy! In thy faint slumber, I by thee have watch'd, and heard thee murmur tales of iron wars! Speak terms of manage to thy bounding steed; Cry, Courage!—to the field! And thou hast talk'd Of sallies, and retire; of trenches, tents, Of battalions, frontiers, parapets; Of bastions, of cannon, culverin; Of prisoners' ransom, and of soldiers slain, And all the 'currents of a heady tight. The blood, within whose veins he hath been so hot at war, And thus hath so bestirr'd thee in thy sleep. That beads of sweat have stood upon thy brow, Like bubbles in a late disturbed stream: And in my heart; and motions strangely appear'd, Such as we see when men restrain their breath On some great sudden haste. O, what portents are there? Some heavy business hath my lord in hand, And I must know it, else he loves me not.

Hot. What, ho! is Galliams with the packet gone?

Serv. He is, my lord, an hour ago.

Hot. Hot. Butcher brought those horses from the sheriffs.

Serv. One horse, my lord, he brought even now.

Hot. What horse? a roan, a crop-car, is it not?

Serv. It is, my lord.

Hot. That roan shall be my throne.

Well, I will buck him straight; O courage!— Sir John Butler lead him forth into the park. [Exit. Serv.]

* Motto of the Percy family.

Lady. But hear you, my lord.

Hot. What say'st, my lady?

Lady. What is it carries you away?

Hot. My horse, my love.

Hot. Out, you mad-headed ape!

A weasel hath not such a deal of spleen, As you are toss'd with. In faith, I'll know your business, Harry, that I will. I hear, my lord of York is there, the other deth not; he loves his own barn better than he loves our house. Let me see some more. The purpose you undertake is dangerous: Why, that's certain: 'tis dangerous to take a cold, to speak of it, but I tell you, my good lord. Out of this nettle, danger, we pluck this flower, safety.

The purpose you undertake is dangerous; the friends you have named, waterless: the time itself unsuited; and your whole plot too light, for the counterfeit of so great an opposition.—Say you so, say you so! I say unto you again you are a shallow, cowardly fellow, and you lie. What a lack-brain is this?—By the Lord, our plot is a good plot as ever was laid; our friends true and constant: a good plot, good friends, and full of expectation: an excellent plot, very good friends. What a frosty-spirited rogue is this! Why, my lord of York command the plot, and the general course of the action. Zounds, an I were now by this rascal, I could brain him with his lady's fan. Is the king, and lay open all our proceedings. O, I could divide myself, and go to bullets, for moving such a dish of skimmed milk with so honorable an action! Hang him to the king: We are prepared: I will set forward to-night.

Enter Lady Percy.

How now, Kate! I must leave you within these two hours.

Lady. O my good lord, why are you thus alone? For what offence have I, this fortnight, been A banished woman from my Harry's bed? Tell me, sweet lord, what is that from thee This stony, pleasure, and thy hidden sleep? Why dost thou bend thine eyes upon the earth, and start so often when thou sittest alone? Why hast thou lost the fresh blood in thy cheeks, and thrown the treasures, and my love? To thick-eyed musing, and curs'd melancholy! In thy faint slumber, I by thee have watch'd, and heard thee murmur tales of iron wars! Speak terms of manage to thy bounding steed; Cry, Courage!—to the field! And thou hast talk'd Of sallies, and retire; of trenches, tents, Of battalions, frontiers, parapets; Of bastions, of cannon, culverin; Of prisoners' ransom, and of soldiers slain, And all the 'currents of a heady tight. The blood, within whose veins he hath been so hot at war, And thus hath so bestirr'd thee in thy sleep. That beads of sweat have stood upon thy brow, Like bubbles in a late disturbed stream: And in my heart; and motions strangely appear'd, Such as we see when men restrain their breath On some great sudden haste. O, what portents are there? Some heavy business hath my lord in hand, And I must know it, else he loves me not.

Hot. What, ho! is Galliams with the packet gone?

Serv. He is, my lord, an hour ago.

Hot. Hot. Butcher brought those horses from the sheriffs.

Serv. One horse, my lord, he brought even now.

Hot. What horse? a roan, a crop-car, is it not?

Serv. It is, my lord.

Hot. That roan shall be my throne.

Well, I will buck him straight; O courage!— Sir John Butler lead him forth into the park. [Exit. Serv.

Enter Francis.

Fran. Anon, anon, sir.—Look down into the Pomegranate, Ralph.

P. Hen. Come hither, Francis.

Fran. My lord, I am ready, sir;—to serve, Francis?

P. Hen. How long hast thou to serve, Francis?

Fran. Forsooth, five year, and as much as to—

Pois. (Wildin.) Francis!

Fran. Anon, anon, sir.

P. Hen. Five years! by'ry lady, a long lease for the elbowing of the table. But, Francis, darest thou be so valiant, as to play the coward with thy indenities, and to show it a fair pair of heels, and run from it?

Fran. O lord, sir! I'll be sworn upon all the books in England, I could find it in my heart—

Pois. (Wildin.) Francis!

Fran. Anon, anow, sir.

P. Hen. How old art thou, Francis?

Fran. Let me see.—About Michaelmas next I shall be—

Pois. (Wildin.) Francis!

Fran. Anon, anon, sir.

P. Hen. Nay, but hark you, Francis: For the sugar thou gavest me—'twas a pennyworth, wasn't not?

Fran. O lord, sir! I would it had been two.

P. Hen. I will give thee for it a thousand pound; ask me when thou wilt, and thou shalt have it.

Pois. (Wildin.) Francis!

Fran. Anon, anon, sir.

P. Hen. Anon, Francis! No, Francis: but tomorrow, Francis; or Francis, on Thursday; or, indeed, Francis, when thou wilt. But, Francis—

Fran. My lord!

P. Hen. Will thou rob this leather-jerkin, crystal-button, not-pated, agate-ring, pike-stocking, caddis-garter, smooth-tongue, Spanish-coat,—

Fran. No, sir, to your own eyes, sir.

P. Hen. Why then, your brown bastard! is your only drink: for, look you, Francis, your white canvas doublet will sully: in Barbary, sir, it cannot come to so much.

Fran. What sir?

Pois. (Wildin.) Francis!

P. Hen. Away, you rogue; Dost thou not hear them call?

(Here they both call him; the Drawer stands amazed, not knowing which way to go.)

Enter Vinter.

Vint. What! stand'st thou still, and hear'st such a calling! Look to the guests within. [Exit Fran.]

My lord, old Sir John, with half a dozen more, are at this dinner, sir—

P. Hen. Let them alone awhile, and then open the door. [Exit Vinter.]

Re-enter Poins.

Pois. Anon, anon, sir.

P. Hen. Sirrah, Falstaff and the rest of the thieves are at the door; Shall we be merry!

Pois. As merry as crickets, my lord. But hark ye; What cunning match have you made with this jest of the drawer! come, what's the issue?

P. Hen. I am now of all humors, that have show'd themselves elsewhere besides dames, since the old days; goodman Adam, to the pupil age of this present twelve o'clock at midnight. [Re-enter Francis, with wine.] What's o'clock, Francis?

Fran. Anon, anon, sir.

P. Hen. That ever this fellow should have fewer words than a parrot, and yet the son of a woman!—His name is Nick, who, up, down stairs, his eloquence, the parcel of a reckoning. I am not yet of Percy's mind, the Hotspur of the north; he that kills me some six or seven dozen of scots at a breakfast, catches his hands, and says to his wife—

Fye upon this quiet life! I want work.—O my sweet Harry, says she, how many hast thou killed to-day? Give me my horse a drachm, says he; and anon, upon an hour after, a trifle, a trifle. I pr'ythee, call in Falstaff: I'll play Percy, and that damned brawn shall play dame Mortimer Stockings.

Hal,—if I tell thee a lie, spit in my face, call me horse. Thou knowest my old ward,—here I lay, and held my point. Four rogues in buckram let me drive, at.

P. Hen. What, four! thou saidst but two, even now.

Fal. Four, Hal; I told thee four.

Points. Ay, ay, he said four.

Fal. These four came all a-court, and mainly thrust at me. I made me no more ado, but took all their seven points in my target, thee.

P. Hen. Seven! why, there were but four, even now.

Fal. In buckram.

Points. Ay, ay, in buckram suits.

Fal. Seven by these halts, or I am a villain else.

P. Hen. Prythee, let him alone; we shall have more anon.

Fal. Dost thou hear me, Hal?

P. Hen. Ay, and mark thee too, Jack.

Fal. Do so, for it is worth the listening to. These nine in buckram, that I told thee of—

P. Hen. So, two more already.

Fal. Their points being broken,—

Points. Down fell their hose.

Fal. Began to give me ground: But I followed me close, came in foot and hand; and with a thought, seven of the eleven I paid.

P. Hen. 0 monstrous! eleven buckram men get out of me.

Fal. But as the devil would have it, three begging knives, in Kendall green, came at my back, and let drive at me;—for it was so dark, Hal, that I could not see thy hand.

P. Hen. These lives are like the father that begets them; gross as a mountain, open, palpable. Why, thou clay-brained guts; thou knotty-pated foot; this is no knight, good madam, I tell thee!—

Fal. What, art thou mad! art thou mad! is not the truth, the truth?

P. Hen. Why, how couldst thou know these men in Kendall green, when it was so dark thou couldst not see thy hand? come tell us thy reason; What sayst thou to this?

Fal. Convey thy reason, Jack, your reason.

Fal. What, upon compulsion? No; were I at the strappado, or all the racks in the world, I would not tell you on compulsion. Give you a reason on compulsion; if reasons were as plentiful as blackberries, I would give no man a reason upon compulsion.

I.

P. Hen. I'll be no longer guilty of this sin; this same black coward, this same cold copper, this horse-breaker, this high hill of flesh;

Fal. Away, you starveling, you elf-skinned, you dined near's tongue, but's puzzle, you stock-fish,—Oh, for I was to utter what in thy tailor's yard, thou seest, you bow-case, you vile standing tuck!

P. Hen. Well, breathe awhile, and then to it again. I have hasted thyself in base comparisons, hear me speak but this.

Points. Mark, Jack.

P. Hen. How now, you set four on four; you bound them, and were masters of their wealth. Mark now, how a plain tale shall put you down,—Then did we two set on you four: and, with a weight, we put them from your prize, and have it; yea, and can show it here in the house:—and Falstaff, you carried your guts away as nimly, with as quick dexterity, and roared for mercy, and sigh'd, and swore, as ever I heard a bullock. What a slave art thou, to rack thy sword as thou hast done; and then say, it was in fight! What trick, what device, what starting-hole, cast thou now first out, to hide thee from this open and apparent shame?

Points. Come, let's hear, Jack; What trick hast thou now new.

Fal. By the Lord, I knew ye, as well as he that made ye. Why, hear ye, my masters: Was it for me to kill the heir-apparent? Should I turn upon the true prince? Why, thou knowest, I am as valid as Hercules: that beware instinet, the lion will not touch the true prince. Instinct is a great matter: I was a coward on instinct. I shall think the better of myself and thee, during my life.

for a valiant lion, and then for a true prince. But, by the Lord, lads, I am glad you have the money. —Hostess, clap to the doors; watch to-night, pray to-morrow for Calibants, lads, boys, hearts of gold, all the titles of good fellowship come to you! What, shall we be merry! shall we have a play every night, the three?—

P. Hen. Content;—and the argument shall be thy running away.

Fal. Ah! no more of that, Hal, an thou love me.

Enter Hostess.

Host. My lord the prince,—

P. Hen. How now, my lady the hostess? who says thou to me!

Host. Marry, my lord, there is a nobleman of the court at door, would speak with you: he says, he comes from thy father.

P. Hen. Give him as much as will make him a royal man, and send him back to my mother. Falst. What manner of man is he?

Host. An old man.

Fal. What doth gravity out of his bed at midnight!—Shall I give him his answer!

P. Hen. Prythee, do, Jack.

Fal. Faith, and I'll send him packing. [Exeunt.

P. Hen. Now, sir,—by't indy, you fought fair;—so did you, Peto; so did you Bardolph: you are lions too, you can away upon instinct, you will not touch the true prince; no,—fye!

Bard. 'Faith, I ran when I saw others run.

P. Hen. Tell me now in earnest, how came Falstaff's servant hanged?

Peto. Why, he hacked it with his dagger; and said, he would swear truth out of England, but he would make you believe it was done in fight; and perhaps the villain be alive.

Bard. Yea, and to tackle our noses with spear-grass to make them blood; and then to beslubber our garments with it, and to swear it was the blood of true men. I did that I did not this seven years before, I blushed to hear his monstrous devices.

P. Hen. 0, villain, thou stol'st a cup of sack eighteen years ago, and wert taken with the manner, and ever since thou hast blushed to the like.

Thou hast fire and sword on thy side, and yet thou ran'st away; What instinct hast thou for it!

Bard. My lord, do you see these meteors? do you behold these exhalations!

P. Hen. I do.

Bard. What think you they portend?

P. Hen. I think, they are cold corners. Bard. Choler, my lord, if rightly taken.

P. Hen. No, if rightly taken, halter.

Reculer FALSTAFF.

Here comes lean Jack, here comes barmone. How now, my sweet creature of bombast!4 How long is't ago, Jack, since thou sawest thine own knee?

Fal. Many a short while, before thou wast about thy business, Hal. I was not an eagle's talon in the waist; I could have crept into any alderman's thumb-rings; A plague of sighing and grief! it blows a man up like a bladder. There's villainous news abroad, here was sir John Bracy from your father; you must to the court in the morning. That same mad fellow of the north, Percy, and he of Wales, that gave Amiens a hussaing, and made him seven score old, and swore the devil his true regement upon the cross of a Welsh hook,—What, a plague, call ye him?

Paula. 0, Glendower.

Fal. Owen, Owen! the same;—and his son-in-law, Mortimer; and old Northumberland; and that sprightly scut of Scors, Douglas, that runs o'horseback up and down like a madman.

P. Hen. He that rides at high speed, and with his pastel kills a sparrow flying.

Fal. You have hit it.

P. Hen. So did he never the sparrow.

Fal. Well, that rascal had good mettle in him; he will not run.

P. Hen. What means this, that a rascal art thou then, to praise him so for running?

4 In the fact.  5 Drunkenness and poverty.  6 Bombast is the stuffing of clothes.

7 A demon; who is described as one of the four kings, who rule over all the demons in the world.
Fal. O'horsecap, ye cuckoo! but sfoot, he will not budge a foot.

P. Hen. Yes, Jack, upon instinct.

Fal. I grant ye, upon instinct. Well, he is there foot, and a thousand and blue-cap more: Worcester is stolen away to-night; thy father's beard is turned white with the news; you may buy land now as cheap as stinking mackerel.

P. Hen. It is a hot June, and this civil buffeting hold, we shall buy maidenheads as they buy hob-nails, by the hundred.

Fal. By the mass fast, thou sayest true; it is like, he will think to grow bigger, and his manner but tell me, Hal, art thou not horribly afraid? art thou being apparent, could the world pick thee out three such enemies again; as that fain Douglas, that spirit For God's sake, lords, convey my trustful queen. For tears do stop the flood-gates of her eyes. 6 Scutmen in blue bonnets. 7 A character in a tragedy by T. Preston, 1570. 8 Ofiissance. 9 Name of a strong liquor. 10 A trusty boy.

Fal. Well, thou wilt be horribly chid to-morrow, when thou comest to thy father: if thou love me, practise an answer.

P. Hen. Do thou stand for my father, and ex- examine me upon the particulars of my life.

Fal. Shall I? content—This chair shall be my state, this dagger my sceptre, and this cushion my mind.

P. Hen. Thy state is taken for a joint-stool, thy golden sceptre for a leaden dagger, and thy precious rich crown, for a pitiful tuld crown.

Fal. Glorious be the day! and not quite out of thee, now shall thou be moved.—Give me a cup of sack, to make mine eyes look red, that it may be thought I have wept; for I must speak in passion, and I will do it in king Cambyses' vein.

P. Hen. Well, here is my leg.1

Fal. And here is my speech:—Stand aside, nobil- ity.

Host. This is excellent sport, sir, I thank thee.

Fal. Weep not, sweet queen, for trickling tears are vain.

Host, O, the father, how he holds his counte- nance!

Fal. For God's sake, lords, convey my trustful queen. For tears do stop the flood-gates of her eyes. O, thou doest it as one of these harlotry players, as I ever see.

Fal. Peace, good pint-pot; peace, good tickle-brain. —Harry, I do not only marvel where thou standest, but I am drugged, and not accom- pany'd for though the canomile, the more it is trodden on, the faster it grows; yet youth, the more it is wasted, the sooner it wears. That thou art my son, I have, I have, 'tis my mother's word, nearly my own opinion: but chiefly, a villainous trick of thine eye, and a foolish hangiug of thy nether lip, that dost warn me. If thou then be son to me, here lies the sceptre, being son thou so pointed at! Shall the blessed sun of heaven prove a micer, and eat blackberries? a question not to be asked. Shall the son of England prove a thief, and take purse? a question to be asked. There is a thing, Harry, which thou hast often heard of, and it is known to many in our land by the name of pitch-fish, as an abject tree, then, by reason:—for, Harry, now do I speak to thee in drink, but in tears; not in pleasure, but in passion; not in my joy, but in woes also: And yet there is a virtuous man, whom I have often heard by company, but I know not his name.

Fal. What manner of man, an it like your majesty?

Fal. A good portly man, i' th' faith, and a corrup'tant; of a cheerful look, a pleasing eye, and a most noble carriage; and as I think, his age some fifty, or by- lady!—(cough, cough) and now and then I remember to me, his name is Falstaff; if that man should be lewdly given, he deceive me; for, Harry, I see virtue in his looks. If then the tree may be known by a few, or the fruit by the tree, then, percep- tually I speak it, there is virtue in that Falstaff: him keep with, the rest banish. And tell me now, thou naughty varlet, tell me, where hast thou been this month!

P. Hen. Dost thou speak like a king? Do thou stand for me, and I'll play my father.

Fal. Deposited! thou dost not, if not so gravely, so majestically, both in word and matter, hang me up by the heels for a rabbit-sucker, or a poultier's hare?

P. Hen. Well, here I am set.

Fal. And shall I stand as just, my masters.

P. Hen. Now, Harry! whence came you?

Fal. My noble lord, from Eastcheap.

P. Hen. The complaints I hear of thee are grievous.

Fal. Siblon't they are, my lord:—say, P. tickle ye for a young prince, sir, I think.

P. Hen. Swearest thou, ungracious boy! hence- forth ne'er look on me. Thou art violently cared away from a father, there is a devil without thee, in the likeness of a fat old man; a man of my substance. Why dost thou converse with that trunk of honors, that boltine-hutch, that beaethoven, that odious bundle of sack, that stuffer cloak bag of guts, that roasted Marmamtripes ox with the pudding in his belly, that revere's vice, that grey iniquity, that father ruffian, that vanity in years! Wherein is he good, but to taste suck and drink it? wherein neat and cleanly, but to carve a capon and eat it? wherein the art, but to pluck, and wherein virtue, but to villainy? wherein villains, but in all things! wherein worthy, but in nothing!

Fal. I would your grace would take me with your whom I am your grace.

P. Hen. That villainous abominable misleader of youth. Falsstaff, that old white-bearded Satan.

Fal. My lord, the man I know.

P. Hen. I know thou dost.

Fal. But to say, I know more harm in him than in myself, were I to say more than I know. That he is old (the more the pity) his white hairs do witness his years; but that he is serving your reverence a whack- master, that I utterly deny. If sack and sugar be a fault God help the wicked! 'Tis to old and merry be a sin, then many an an old host that I know, is such a man: if I should be hated, then Moll's lean kin are to be loved. No, my good lord; banish Petoe, banish Bardolph, banish Poins; but for sweet Jack Falstaff, kind Jack Falstaff, true Jack Falstaff, valiant Jack Falstaff, and therefore more valiant, being as he is, old Jack Falstaff, banish not him thy Harry's company; bandit plump Jack, and banish all the world.

P. Hen. I know not but also.

Host. Ofren Hostess, Francis, and Bardolph. Re-enter Bardolph, running.

Fal. O, my lord, my lord; the sheriff with a most monstrous watch, is at the door.

Fal. Out, you rogue! play out the play: I have much to say in the behalf of that Falstaff.

Re-enter Hostess, hastily.

Host. O Jesu, my lord, my lord!—

Fal. Heigh! heigh! the devil rides upon a fiddle- stick:—What's the matter?

Host. The sheriff and all the watch are at the door: they are come to search the house. Shall I let them in?

Fal. Dost thou hear, Hal! never call a true piece of gold, a counterfeit: thou art essentially mad, without sense, my lord.

P. Hen. And thou a natural coward, without instinct.

Fal. I deny thy major, if you will deny the sheriff, so; if not, let him enter: if I become not a cart as well as another man, a plague on my bringing up! I hope, I shall as soon be strangled with a halter, as another.

P. Hen. Go, take thee behind the arras;—the rest walk up above. Now, my masters, for a true face, and good conscience.

Fal. Both that I have had, but their date is out, and therefore I'll hide me. [Exeunt all but the Prince and Poins.

P. Hen. Call in the sheriff.—

Enter Sheriff and Carrier.

Now, master sheriff! What's your will with me!

FIRST PART OF

ACT III.

Scene I.—Bengo. A Room in the Archdeacon’s House.

Enter Hotspur, Worcester, Mortimer, and GLENDOVER.

Mort. These promises are fair, the parties sure, And our induction full of prosperous hope.

Hot. Lord Mortimer—and cousin Glendover— Will you sit down?—

And. uncle Worcester:—A plague upon it! I have forgot the map, And so, No, here it is.

Sit. cousin Percy; sit, good cousin Hotspur: For by that name as o’er as Lancaster Both speak of you, his cheek looks pale: and, with A rising sigh, he wisheth you in heaven.

And. You and you in hell, as often as he hears Owen Glendover spoke o’er.

Glend. I cannot blame him; at my nativity The front of heaven was full of fiery shapes, Of burning cresses? and at my birth, The frame and huge foundation of the earth Shadd like a coward.

Hot. Why, so it would have done At the same season, if your mother’s cat had But kitte’d, though yourself had never born. Glend. I say, the earth did shive when I was born. And. And I say, the earth was not of my mind, If you suppose, as tearing you it shook.

Glend. The heavens were all on fire, the earth did tremble.

Hot. O, then the earth shook to see the heavens on fire, And not in fear of your nativity. Diseased nature oftentimes breaks forth In strange eruptions: oft the teeming earth Is with a kind of colic pinch’d and vex’d By the imprisoning of unruly wind Within her womb; which, for enlargement striving, Shakes the old beldame earth, and topples down steeples, and moss-grown towers. At your birth, our grandad earth, having this distemper, In passion shook.

Glend. Cousin, of many men I do not bear these crossings. Give me leave To tell you once again,—that at my birth, The front of heaven was full of fiery shapes; The goats ran from the mountains, and the herds Were strangely clamorous to the frighted fields. These signs have mark’d me extraordinary; And all the courses of my life do show, I am not in the roll of common men. Here he lying—sipp’d in with the sea That chides the banks of England, Scotland, Wales,— Which calls me pupil, or hath read to me! And bring him out, that is but woman’s son.

Poins. Falstaff—fast asleep behind the arm, And snorting like a horse.

P. Hen. Hark, how hard he breathe: scarce a peacock. [Pons searches.] What haste thou found?

Poins. Nothing but papers, my lord.

P. Hen. Let’s see what they be:—read them.

Poins. Item, A capon, 2s. 6d.

Item, Sauce, 4d.

Item, Sack, two gallons, 6s. 8d.

Item, Three times four and a sack after supper, 2s. 6d.

Item, Bread, a half-penny.

P. Hen. O monstrous! but one half-pennorth of bread to this intolerable deal of sack!—What have you got there? [Lest the bag keep close, he will read it at more advantage; there let him sleep till day. I’ll to the court in the morning; we must all to the wars, and thy place shall be honorable. I’ll procure this fat kind of a thing for thee; and, I know, his death will be a march of twelve-score. The money shall be paid back again with advantage. Be with me betimes in the morning; and so good-morrow, Poins.

Poins. Good-morrow, good my lord.[Exeunt.

Can trace me in the tedious ways of art, And hold me pace in deep experiments.

Hot. There is no man speaks better Welsh:—

I will to dinner.

Mort. Peace, cousin Percy; you will make him happy.

Glend. I can call spirits from the vasty deep.[Hot.]

Why, so can I; or so can any man:

But will they come, when you do call for them?[Hot.]

Glend. Why, I can teach you, cousin, to command The devil.

Hot. And I can teach thee, coz, to shave the devil.

By telling truth; Tell truth, and shame the devil.— If thou have power to raise him, bring him hither, And I’ll be sworn, I have power to shame him.

Mort. O, while you live, tell truth, and shame the devil.

Mort. Come, come, No more of this unprofitable chat.

Glend. Three times hath Harry Bolingbroke made head

Against my power: thrice from the banks of Wye, And sandy-bottom’d Severn, have I sent him, Boothless home, and with weather-beaten back.

Hot. Home without boots, and in foul weather too! How ’scapes he agues, in the devil’s name?[Glend.

Come, here’s the map; Shall we divide our right, According to our three-fold order tis’en?[Mort.

The archdeacon hath divided it Into three limits, very equally:

England, from Trent and Severn hither, By south and east, is to my part assign’d: All westward, Wales beyond the Severn shore, And all the fertile land within that bound, To Owen Glendower—and dear coz, to you The remnant northward, lying off from Trent: And our indentures tripartite are drawn: Which being sealed, and interchanged back, (A business that this night may execute) To-morrow, cousin Percy, you, and I, And my good lord of Worcester, will set forth, To meet your father, and the Scottish power, As is appointed us, at Shrewsbury. My father Glendower is not ready yet, Nor shall we need his help these fourteen days: Within that space.[To Glend.] You may have drawn together

Your tenants, friends, and neighboring gentlemen.[Glend.

A shorter time shall send me to you, And in my conduct shall your ladies come: From whom you now must steal, and take no leave; For there will be a world of water shed, Upon the parting of your wives and yours.[Mort.

Methinks, my moity, north from Burton here, In quantity equals not one of yours:
Scene I. \n
KING HENRY IV.

See, how this river comes me cranking in,
And cuts me, from the best of all my land,
A halfoon, a monstrous wide rent out,
I'll have the current in this place damn'd up;
And here the sung and silver Trent shall run,
In a new channel, fair and evenly.
It shall not wind with such a deep indent,
To rob me of so rich a bottom here.

Glend. Not wind! it shall, it must; you see, it shall.

Hol. Well, I am schoold; good manners be your speech.

Here comes our wives, and let us take our leave.

Reciter GLENDOWE, with the Ladies.

Mort. This is the deadly spit that anger me,—
My wife can speak no English, I no Welsh.

Glend. My daughter weeps; she will not part with you,
She'll be a soldier too, she'll to the wars.

Mort. Good father, tell her,—that she, and my aunt Percy,
Shall follow in your conduct speedily.

[GLENDOWE speaks to her daughter in Welsh, andMusiciansasters her home in the tune.

Glend. She's desperate here; a peevish self-will'd harlotry,
One no persuasion can do good upon.

[LADY M. speaks to Mortimer in Welsh.

Mort. I understand thy looks; that pretty Welsh Which thou pourest down from those swelling heauens,
I am too perfect in; and, but for shame,
In such a parley would I answer thee.

[LADY MORTIMER speaks.

I understand thy kisses, and thou mine,
And that's a feeling disposition:
But I will never be a truant, love,
Till I have learned thy language; for thy tongue Makers Welsh so sweet, without highly pen'd, Singing a fine air in a summer's bower,
With ravishing division, to her lute.

[LADY MORTIMER speaks again.

Mort. O, I am ignorance itself in this.

Glend. She bids you upon the wanton rushes lay you down,
And rest your gentle head upon her lap,
And she will sing the song that pleaseth you,
And on your eye-brows crown the god of sleep,
Charm your blood with pleasing heaviness;
Making such difference between waking and sleep,
As is the difference between day and night,
The hour before the heavenly harness'd team Becins his golden progress in the east.

Mort. With all my heart I'll sit, and hear her sing:
By that time will our book, I think, be drawn.

Glend. Do.

And those musicians that shall play to you,
Hang in the air a thousand leaues from hence;
Yet straight they shall be here: sit, and attend.

Come, Kate, thou art perfect in lying down;
Come, quick, quick; that I may lay my head in thy lap.

Lady. P. Go, ye giddy goose.

GLENDOWE speaks some Welsh words, and then the Music plays.

Hol. Now I perceive the devil understands Welsh; And 'tis no marvel, he's so humorous.

My lady, how goes the ground with thee?

Lady. P. Then should you be nothing but musical; for you are altogether governed by humors.

Lie still, ye thief, and hear the lady sing in Welsh.

Hol. I had rather hear Lady, my brach, so howl in Irish.

Lady. P. Wouldst thou have thy head broken?

Hol. No.

Lady. P. Then be still.

Hol. Neither; 'tis a woman's fault.

Lady. P. Now God help thee!

Hol. To the Welsh lady's bed.

Lady. P. What's that?

Hol. Peace! she sings.

A compliment to queen Elizabeth.

6 Corner. 1 Cutting. 2 Candlestick. 3 Mole.
A Welsh SONG, sung by LADY MORTIMER.

Hot. Come Kate, I'll have your song too.

Lady P. Not mine, in good sooth.

Hot. Bed, by my soul, I hear thy voice, thou swear like a confabulator's wife! Not you, in good sooth; and, as true as I live; and, as God shall mend me; and, as sure as day:

And, as I promise thee, I have a secret saying for thine ears, As if thou never wak'st further than Finsbury; Swear me, Kate, by a lady, as thou art, A good mouth-filling oath; and leave in sooth, And, as I protest of pepper-sweetened To velvet guards, and Sunday citizens.

Come, say, Lads, I will not sing. Hot. 'Tis the next way to turn tailor, or be red-breast teacher. An the indentures be drawn, I'll away within these two hours; and so come in when ye please. [Exit.

Glend. Come, come, lord Mortimer; you are as slow.

As hot lord Percy is on fire to go:

And so our bodies and our soul shall be, and then more That to horse immediately.

To the pumps, with all my heart. [Exit.

SCENE II.—London. A Room in the Palace.

Enter KING HENRY, PRINCE OF WALES, and Lords.

K. Hen. Lords, give us leave; the prince of Wales, and I, Must have some conference: But be near at hand, For we shall presently have need of you.—

Come, come, my Lords; the more you are about the king. I know not whether God will have it so; For some dispensing service I have done, That in his secret doom out of my blood Has washed my wrongs, my repentance, and a scourge for me; But thou dost, in thy passages of life,

Make me believe,—that thou art only mark'd For the hot vengeance and the rod of heaven, That canst cut effusively, and bestow sooth, Could such inordinate, and low desires, Such poor, such bare, such low, such mean actions, Such barren pleasures, rude society,

As thou art match'd withal, and grafted to,

Accompany the greatness of thy blood,

All thy dearer, and all that is in thy heart?

P. Hen. So please your majesty, I would, I could Quit all affections with such clear excuse, As well as, I am doubtless, I can purge Myself of every thought of that kind: Yet such exultation let me be.

As, in reproof of many tales devise'd,—

Which oft the ear of greatness needs must hear, But not fast and grafted to the change I may, for some things true, wherein my youth Hath faultily wander'd and irregular,

Find pardon on my true submission.

K. Hen. Pardon thee!—yet let me wonder,

Harry,

At thy affections, which do hold a wing Quite from the flight of all thy ancestors, Thy place is even, thou hast not rarely lost, Which by the younger brother is supplied; And art almost an alien to the hearts Of all the court and princes of my blood: The hope and expectation of thy time Is ruin'd; and the soul of every man

Prophetically does fore-think thy fall. Had I a knowledge of thy present mood: So common hackney'd in the eyes of men, So state and cheap in vulgar company; Opinion, that did help me to the crown, Had still kept loyal to possession; And left me in reputable banishment, A fellow of no mark, nor likelihood. By being seldom seen, I could not stir, But like a comet, I was wonder'd at. That man would tell their children, This is he:

Others would say,—Where is which is Bolingbroke? And I, as I stole courtesy from heaven, And dressed myself in such humours, That I did pluck allegiance from men's hearts, Loud shouts and salutations from their mouths, Even in the presence of the crowned king.

3 In Moorfields. 4 Laced velvet, the finery of cockneys. 5 Vicious parasites.

Thus did I keep my person fresh and new; My presence, like a robe pontifical, Never seen, but wonder'd at: and so my state, Held in the munificent hands, showed never feast, And won, by raiment, such solennity; The skipping king, he ambled up and down With his countenance, in pride and fury, Soon kindled, and soon burn'd with all his state;

Minted his royalty with daring tools; Had his great name profaned with their scorn; And his dear country, with all the vain ceremony, To laugh at gibing boys, and stand the push of every meaning and vain comparative; Grew a companion to the common streets;

Endeed, to himself to popularly: That being daily swallowed by men's eyes, They surfeited with honey; and began To bathe the taste of sweetness, whereof a little More than a phial of it much too much.

So, when he had occasion to be seen,

He was out as the cuckoo is in June,

Heard, not regarded; seen, but with such eyes, As, sick and glutted with community, Afford no extraordinary gaze,

Such as is bent on sun like majesty

When it shames seldom in adorning eyes; But rather drowst, and hung their eyelids down,

Slept in his face, and rendered such aspect As cloudy men use to their adversaries;

Being in his presence glitter'd, gorg'd, and full.

And in that very line, Harry, stand'st thou: For thou hast lost thy princely privilege, With vile participation; not an eye of any common sort;

Save mine, which hath desir'd to see thee more; Which now doth that I would not have it do,

Make blind itself with foolish tenderness.

P. Hen. He shall be hereafter, my three-gracious lord Be more myself.

K. Hen. For all the world,

As thou art to this hour, was Richard then

I from France; and now the foot of a scavenger:

And even as I was then, is Percy now,

Now by my sceptre, and my soul to boot,

He hath no more worthy interest to the state,

Than thou, the shadow of succession;

For, of no right, nor color like to right,

He doth fill fields with harry in the realm,

Turn'st thou into a pernicious lion's armed jaws;

And, being no more in debt to years than thou,

Leads ancient lords and reverend bishops on,

To bloody battles, and to bruising arms.

Against renowned Douglas; whose high deeds,

Whose hot incursions, and great name in arms,

Hold'st from all soldiers chief majority,

And military title-crown of all.

Through all the kingdoms that acknowledge Christ!

Thrive hast this Hotspur Mars in swathing clothes,

And, as a warrior, in his enterprise,

Discomfiting great Douglas; in man once,

Enlarged him, and made a friend of him,

To lift the mouth of deep defiance up,

And shake the peace and safety of our throne.

And what say you to this! Percy, Northumberland,
The archbishop's grace of York, Douglas, Mortimer,

Captivate against us, and are up.

But what more do I tell these news to thee?

Why, Harry, do I tell thee of my foes,

Which art my nearest and dearest enemy!

Thou that art like enough,—through vassal fear,

Bose, and the arm of the start of war, —

To fight against me under Percy's pay,

To dog his heels, and court'ly at his frowns,

To show how much thou art degenerate.

P. Hen. Do not think so; ye shall not find it so; And God forgive them, that have so much sway'd

Your majesty's good thoughts away from me!

I will redeem all this with My own Percy's hand.

And in the closing of some glorious day,

Be hold to tell you that I am your son;

When I will a garment all of blood,

And so in my favours a bloody man.

Which wouldn't, shall scour my shame with it.

And that shall be the day, when'er it lights,

That this same child of honor and renown,

This same hot Hotspur, this all-praiseable Per,

And your unhought-of Harry chance to meet:

1 Brusheid. 2 Armor. 3 Combine. 4 Most fatal.
For every honor sitting on his helm,
Would they were multitudes; and on my head
My shame redoubled! for the time will come,
That in the name of this northern youth exchange
His glorious deeds for myfortunate
Percy is but my factor, good my lord,
To engross up glorious deeds on my behalf;
And I'll call him strumpet and impostum,
That he shall render every glory up.
Ten, even the slightest worship of his time,
Or I will tear the reckoning from his heart.
The name of this, the end of life cancels all bands;
And I will die a hundred thousand deaths,
Ere break the smallest parcel of this vow.
K. Hen. A hundred thousand rebels die in this:
 Thou shalt have change, and sovereign trust, herein.

Enter Blunt.

How now, good Blunt? thy looks are full of speed.
Blunt. So hath the business that I come to speak of.

Lord Marcher of Scotland hath sent word,—
That Douglas and the English rebels, met
The eleventh of this month at Shrewsbury;
A mighty and a fearful head they are,
It promises he kept on every hand,
As a elder coal player in a staid game.

K. Hen. The earl of Westminster set forth to-day:
With him may son, lord John of Lancaster;
For this advertisement is five days old:—
On Wednesday next, Harry, you shall set Forward; On Thursday, we ourselves will march:
Our meeting is Bridgnorth: and, Harry, you,
Shall march through Glosstershire; by which account, our business valued, some twelve days hence
Our general forces at Bridgnorth shall meet.
Our hands are full of business; let's away;
Advantage seeds him fat, while men delay.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Eastcheap. A Room in the Boar's Head Tavern.

Enter Falstaff and Bardolph.

Fal. Bardolph, am I not fallen away vilely since this last action? do I not bate? do I not dwindle? Why, my skin hangs about me like an old lady's loose gown; I am with'der'd like an old apple-John. Well, I'll repent, and that sudden. While I am in some liking; I shall be out of heart, shortly, and then I shall have no strength to repent. An I have not forgotten what the inside of a church is made of, and a general forces at Bridgnorth shall meet.

Bard. Why, you are so fat, sir John, that you must needs be out of all compass: out of all reasonable compass.

Fal. Do thou amend thy face, and I'll amend my lie: Thou art our admiral,4 thou hast beard the lantern in the poop,—but 'tis in the nose of thee; thou art the oddest of the burning lam.

Bard. Why, sir John, my face does you no harm.

Fal. No, I'll be sworn: I make as good use of it as many a man doth of a death's head, or a mæ-næ-corps: then will I give thee that, but I think upon hell-fire, and Dives that lived in purple; for there he is in his robés burning, burning. If thou wert any way given to virtue, I would swear by thy face; but I know to be sensible; By this fire: but thou art altogether given over; and wert indeed, but for the light in thy face, the son of utter darkness.—When thou ran'st up Gadsbhill in the night to catch my horse, if I did not think thou hadst been an ignis fatusus, or a ball of wildfire, there's no purchase in money. O, thou art a perpetual triumph, an everlasting bonfire-light! Thou hast saved me a thousand marks in blankets and torches, walking with thee in the night betwixt tavern and tavern: but the sack that thou hast drunk me, would have bought me lights as good cheap, at the dearest chandler's in Europe. I have maintain'd that shrivelled up, and yours with fire, any time these two-and-thirty years; heaven reward me for it!

Host. God-a-mercy! so should I be sure to be heart-burned.

* Enter Hostess.

How now, dame Partlet the hen? have you inquired yet who picked my pocket?

Host. Why, sir John! what do you think, sir John? do you think I keep thieves in my house? I have searched, I have enquired, so has my husband, man by man, boy by boy, servant by servant: the title of a hair was never lost in my house before.

Fal. You lie, hostess; Bardolph was shaved and lost many a hair: and I'll be sworn, my pocket was picked. God-a-mercy! so there.

Host. Who, if! I defy thee! I was never called so in mine own house before.

Fal. Host, to, I know you well enough.

Host. No, sir John; you do not know me, sir John: I know you, sir John: you owe me money, sir John, and now you pick a quarrel to beguile me of it; I bought a pair of your gloves, and I beguile you of them.

Fal. Downm, filthy dowsw; I have given them away to bakers' wives, and they have made bottes of them.

Host. Now, as I am a true woman, holland of eight shillings an ell. You owe money here besides, sir John, for your diet, and by-drinkings, and money lent you, four-and-twenty pound.

Fal. He laid his pounds on me.

Host. He! also, he is poor; he hath nothing.

Fal. How! poor! look upon his face: What call you rich! let them coin his nose, let them coin his cheeks; I'll not pay a denier. What, will you make a younder of me? shall I not take mine ease in mine inn, but I shall have my pocket picked? I have lost a seal-ring of my grandfather's worth forty mark.

Host. O Jesu! I have heard the prince tell him, I know not how off, that that ring was copper.

Fal. How! the prince is a Jack, a snuck-cup; and, if he were, he, I would engin him like a dog if he would so say.

Enter Prince Henry and Poins, marching. Falstaff meets the prince, playing on his truncheon like a lyre.

Fal. How now, lad! is the wind in that door, i' faith! must we all march!

Bard. Yea, two and two, Newcaste-fashion.

Host. My lord, I pray you hear, me.

P. Hen. What sayest thou, mistress Quickly? How does thy husband! I love him well, he is an honest man.

Host. Good my lord, hear me.

Fal. Pr'ythee, let her alone, and list to me.

P. Hen. What sales thy house lack?

Fal. The other night I fell asleep here behind the arras, and had my pocket picked: th's house is, turned bawdy-house, to say the truth. I'll not pay a denier.

P. Hen. What didst thou lose, Jack?

Fal. Wilt thou believe me, Hal? there, or four bonds of forty pound a-piece, and a seal-ring of my grandfather's.

P. Hen. A trifle, some eight-penny matter.

Host. So I told him, my lord; and I said, I heard your grace say so: And my lord, he speaks most vile to him, like or of you, at him, at the meanest man as he is; and said, he would engin him.

P. Hen. What! he did not?

Host. There's neither faith, truth, nor woman-bod in me else.

Fal. There's no more faith in thee than in a stewed prune; nor no more truth in thee, than in a drawn fox; and for womanhood, maid Marian\(^*\) may be the deputy's wife of the ward to thee. Go, you thin-ke.

Host. Say, what thing? what thing?

Faul. What thing? way, a thing to thank God on.

Host. I am not here to thank God on; I would thou shoul'dst know it: I am an honest man's wife, and, setting thy knighthood aside, thou art a knave to call me so.

Faul. Setting thy womanhood aside, thou art a beast to say otherwise.

Host. Say, what beast, thou knave, thou?

Faul. What beast! why, an otter.

Host. An otter, Sir John! why an otter?

Faul. Why, she's neither fish, nor flesh; a man knows not where to have her.

Host. Thou art an unjust man in saying so; thou or any man knows where to have me, thou knave thou!

P. Hen. Thou sayest true, hostess; and he slandered thee most grossly.

Host. So he doth you, my lord; and said this other day, thou oughtest him a thousand pound.

P. Hen. Sirrah, do I owe you a thousand pound?

Faul. A thousand pound, Hal! a million: thy love is worth a million; thou owest me thy love.

Host. Nay, my lord, he called you Jack, and said, he would cudgel you.

Faul. Did I, Bardolph?

Bard. Indeed, sir John, you said so.

Faul. Ye; if he said, my ring was copper.

Host. I say, his copper! Darest thou be so good as thy word now?

Faul. Why, Hal, thou knowest, as thou art man, I dare; but, as thou art prince, I fear thee, as I fear the roaring of the lion's whelp.

Host. And why not, as the lion?

Faul. The king himself is to be feared as the lion:

Dost thou think? I'll fear as I fear thy father! nay, an I do, I pray God, my girdle break!

P. Hen. O. if it be Jack, to the devil; how should thy guts fall about thy knees! But, sirrah, there's no room for faith, truth, nor honesty, in this bosom of thine: it is filled up with guts, and midnight. Charms an honest woman, thy bed, thy pocket? Why, thou whoremonger, impudent, embossed\(^1\) rascal, if there were any thing in thy pocket but tavern-refections, memorandums of lascivious-houses, and one poor penny-worth of sugar candy to make thee long winced; if thy pocket were enriched with any other injuries but those, I am a villain. And yet you will stand to it; you will not pocket up wrong:

Art thou a gentleman?

Faul. Dost thou hear, Hal! thou knowest, in the state of innocence, Adam fell; and what should poor Jack Falstaff do, in the days of villany! Thou hast more flesh than another man; and therefore more frailty. — You comest then, you picked my pocket?

P. Hen. It appears so by the story.

Host. Hostess, I forgive thee: Go, make ready breakfast; love thy husband, look to thy servants, cherish thy guests: thou shalt find me tractable to any honest reason: thou seest, I am pacified.—

Faul. Nay, pr'ythee, begone. [Exit Hostess,] Now, Hal, to the hall on: for the robbery, lad.—

Host. How is that answered!

P. Hen. O, my sweet beef, I must still be good angular, for the nonce; for it is hard to put back again.

Faul. O, I do not like that paying back, 'tis a double labor.

P. Hen. I am a good friend with my father, and may do anything.

Faul. Robs me the exchequer the first thing thou dost, and do it with unwashed hands too.

Bard. Do, my lord.

P. Hen. I have procured thee, Jack, a charge of foot.

Faul. I would, it had been of horse. Where shall I find one that can steal well? O for a fine thief, of the age of one and twenty, or thereabout! I am heinously unprovided. Well, God be thanked for these rebels, they offend none but the virtuous; I haunt them, I prize them.

P. Hen. Bardolph!

Bard. My lord.

P. Hen. Go bear this letter to lord John of Lancaster.

My brother John; this to my lord of Westmore-

land,—

Go, Points, to horse, to horse; for thou, and I,

Have thirty miles to ride yet ere dinner time—

Meet me to-morrow i'the Temple-hall.

At two o'clock i'the afternoon:

Thou shalt demand how thy charge is attended; and there receive the money, and order for their furniture.

The kind is burning; Percy stands on high;

And either they, or we, must lower he.

— See, I'll remove [Exit Falstaff, Poins, and Bardolph.]

Faul. Rare words! brave world!—Hostess, my breakfast; come—

0. I could wish, this tavern were my drum. [Exit]

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The Rebel Camp near Shrewsbury.

Enter Hotspur, Worcester, and Douglas.

Host. Very well said, my noble Scot: If speaking truth, In this fine age, were not thought blunder, Such attribution should the Douglas\(^*\) have, As not a soldier of this season's stamp.

Should go so general current through the world.

By heaven, I cannot flatter; I defy

The tongues of soothers; but a braver place In my heart's love, hath no man than myself.

Nay, task me to the word; approve me, lord.

Dougs. Thou art the king of honor:

No man so potent breathes upon the ground, But I could hurl him.

Host. Do so, and 'tis well—

Egier a Messenger, with Letters.

What letters hast thou there!—I can but thank you, Host. These letters come from your father,—

Hot. Letters from him! why comes he not himself?

Host. He cannot come, my lord; he's grievous sick.

Hot. Sounds! how does he the leisure to be sick, In such a justling time! Who leads his power? Under whose government come they along?

8 a female character, who attends morris-dancers; generally a man dressed like a woman. 9 Swoln, puffy.

10 This expression is applied by way of pre eminence to the head of the Douglas family.

Mess. His letters bear his mind, not 1, my lord.

Wor. I pray thee, tell me, doth he keep his bed?

Mess. That he did, my lord, four days before I set forth;

And at the time of my departure thence,

He was much afraid by his physicians.

Wor. I would, the state of time had first been whole.

Ere he by sickness had been visited;

His health was never better worth than now.

Hot. Sick now! droop now! this sickness doth infest

The very life-blood of our enterprise;

'Tis catching either, even to our camp,—

He who is here, hath no swords to stir his

But that his friends by reputation could not

Yet doth he give us bold advertisement,

That with our small conjunction, we should on,

To see how fortunate is disposed to us:

For as this venal, there is no qualifying now; Because the king is certainly possessed

Of all our purposes. What say you to it?

Wor. Your father's sickness is a main to us:

Hot. A perilous cash, a very limb lopp'd off—

And yet, in faith, 'tis not: his present want

Seems more than we shall find it: Were it good,

To set the exact wealth of all our states

All at one cast! to set so rich a main

*Languish.
Scene II.

KING HENRY IV.

On the nice hazard of one doubtful hour!
It was not good; for therein should we read
The very bottom and the soul of hope;
The very limits and the very utmost bound
Of all our fortunes.

Duck.

Faith, and so we should;
Where now remains a sweet reversion?
We may boldly spend upon the hope of what is to come in;
A comfort of retirement lives in this
A rendezvous of power, of light and loftunto,
It that the devil and mischief look big
Upon the mainhead of our affairs.

War.  But yet, I would your father had been here,
The quality and heart of our assembly
Brooks no division: It will be thought
By some, that know not why he is away,
That wisdom, loyalty, and more dislike
Of our proceedings, kept the edge of thought hence;
And think, how such an apprehension
May turn the tide of fearful action,
And breed a kind of question in our cause:
For well you know, we of the offering side
Must keep aloof from strict arbitrement;
And stop all sight-holes, every loop, from whence
The eye of reason may pry in upon us:
That bound of your father's death's-dead curtain,
That shows the ignorant a kind of fear
Before not dreamt of.

Duck. You stray too far,
I rather, of his absence make this use,—
It lends a lustre, and more great opinion,
A larger dare to our great enterprise,
That thus makes itself here: for men must think,
If we, without his help, can make our head
To push against the kingdom; with his help,
We shall overturn it, topsy-turvy down.—
Yet all goes well, yet all our joints are whole.

Duck. As heart can think: there is not such a word
Spoke of in Scotland, as this term of fear.

Enter Sir Richard Vernon.

Hol. My cousin Vernon! welcome, by my soul.
Ver. Pray God, my news be worth a welcome.

The earl of Westmoreland, seven thousand strong,
Is marching hitherward; with him with heart.

Hol. No harm: what more?
Ver.

The king himself in person is set forth,
Or hitherwards intended specially,
With strong and mighty preparation.

Hol. Where is his presence?
Ver.

The nimble-footed madcap prince of Wales,
And his companions that didst the world aside,
And bid it pass!

Ver.

All furnish'd, all in arms,
All plump'd like estridges that wing the wind;
Laid's like eagles having lately bath'd;
Glistening in golden coats, like images;
As full of spirit as the mouth of Alay,
And some are as the sun at midsummer;
Wanton as youthful goats, wild as young bulls.
I saw him harry,—with his beard on,
His ensigns on his thighs, gallantly arm'd,—
Rise from the ground like leather'd Mercury,
And vaulted with such ease into his seat,
As an angel drest out from the clouds,
To turn and wind a fiery Pegasus,
And watch the world with noble horsemanship.

Hol. No more, no more; worse than the sun in March.

This praise doth nourish agues;
Let them come;
They come like sacrifices in their train,
And to the fire-eyed maids of smoky war,
All hot, and bleeding, will we offer them:
The mantled Mars shall on his altar sit,
Up to the ears in blood. I am on fire,
To hear this rich repishal so nigh,
And, in this instant, do I set my horse,
Who is to bear me like a thunderbolt,
Against the bosom of the prince of Wales:
Harry to Harry shall, hot horse to horse,
Meet an adversite;—Come, let me drop down a corse.—
O, that glendor were come!

4 Limit.  5 Boundary.  6 The complexion, the character.  7 Ostrich.  8 Fresh.  9 Armor for the thighs.

Ver. There is more news
I learn'd in Worcester as I rode along,
He cannot draw his power this fourteen days.
Duck. This is the worst tidings I have hear of yet.
War. Ay, by my faith, that bears a frosty sound.
Hol. What may the king's whole battle reach unto?
Ver. To thirty thousand.
Hol. Forty let it be;
My father and Glendower being both away,
He can make his army seven hundred great.
Come, let us make a muster-speedily.
Doomsday is near; die all, die merrily.
Duck. Talk not of dying; I am out of fear
Of death, or death's hand, for this one half-year.
—Exeunt.

Scene II.—A public Road near Coventry.

Enter Falstaff and Bardolph.

Fal. Bardolph, get thee before to Coventry,
Fill me a bottle of sack, and soldiers shall march through;
We'll to Sutton-Colliford to-night.

Bard. Will you give me money, captain?
Fal. Lay out, lay out.

Bard. This bottle makes an angel.

Fal. An if it do, take it for thy labor; and if it make twenty, take them all, I'll answer the charge.
Bid my lieutenant Peto meet me at the town's end.

Bard. I will go, captain; I know the way.

Fal. If I be not ashamed of my soldiers, I am a soused gurnet.  I have misus'd the king's press dainty,
I have got in exchange of a hundred and fifty soldiers, three hundred and odd pounds,
I press me none but good householders, yeomen's sons, inquire me out contracted bachelors, such as had been asked twice on the bars; such a commodity of wretched fellows, as had as lief hear the devil as a drum; such as hear the report of a cannon worthier than a struck owl, or a hurt wild-duck.
I pressed me none but such toasts and butters, with hearts in their bosoms no larger than peas' heads, and they have bought out their services; and now my whole charge consists of ancients, corporals, lieutenants, gentlemen of companies, slaves as raged as Lazarius in the painted cloth, where the gullet's dogs licked their sores: and such as, indeed, were never soldiers, but discredited, unjust serving-men, younger sons to younger brothers, revolted taxtlers, and ostlers trade-callen; the cankers of a calm world, and a long peace; ten times more dishonourably raged than an old-faced ancient; and such have I to fill up the rooms of them that have bought out their services. I believe, I do think, that I had a hundred and fifty tattered prodigals, lately come from wine-keeping, from eating librely and having of the apple, the which some shall have, and some shall not; and told me I had unloaded all the zibbets, and pressed the dead bodies.  No eye hath seen such scare-crows. I'll not march through Coventry with them, that's what I say.

Fal. I'll have the news of the march wide with both the legs, as if they had gavies on; for, indeed, I had the most of them out of prison.
There's but a shirt and a half in all my company:
and the half shirt is two companions tucked together,
and thrown over the shoulders like a herald's coat without sleeves; and the shirt, to say the truth, stolen from my host at Saint Alban's, or the red-rose inn, in Daintree.

Fal. Dintree it's all one; they'll find linen enough on every hedge.

Enter Prince Henry and Westmoreland.

P. Hen. How now, blow Jack! how now, quiet!

Fal. What, Hal? How now, mad wag? what a devil dost thou in Warwickshire?—My good lord of Westmoreland, I cry you mercy; I thought your harmony had altered you to Shrewsbury.
West. 'Faith, sir John, 'tis more than time that I were there, and you too; but my powers are there already: The king, I can tell you, looks for us all: we must away; I'll sleep with you to-night.

Fal. Tut, never fear me; I am as vigilant as a cat to steal cream.

P. Hen. I think to steal cream, indeed; for thy theft hath made me and the villains blame
Jack; whose fellows are those that come after?

Fal. Mine, Hal, mine.
P. Hen. I did never see such pitiful rascals.

Fal. Tut, tut; good enough to toss; food for powder, food for powder; they'll fill a pit, as well as better; the death of man, mortal men, mortal men.

West. Ay, but sir John, methinks they are exceeding poor and bare; too beggarly.

Fal. Faith, for their poverty,—I know not where they have their livery to beg his bosom,—I am sure they never learned that of me.

P. Hen. No, I'll be sworn; unless you call three fisheries, half a thousand strange, sirrah, make haste; Percy is already in the field.

Fal. What, is the king encamped?

West. He is, sir John; I fear we shall stay too long.

Fal. Well.

To the latter end of a fray, and the beginning of a feast.

Fits a dull fighter, and a keen guest. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Rebel Camp near Shrewsbury.

Enter HOTSPUR, WORCESTER, DOUGLAS, and VERNON.

Hot. We'll fight with him to-night.

Wor. It may not be.

Dou. You give him then advantage.

Ver. Not a whit.

Hot. Why say you so? looks he not for supply?

Ver. So do we.

Hot. Wor. Good counsel, be advised; still not to-night.

Ver. Do not, my lord.

Dou. You do not counsel well; You speak it out of fear and cold heart.

Hot. I know no slander, Douglas, by my life, (And I dare well maintain it with my life.)

If well respected honor bid me on,

I hold as little counsel with weak fear,

As you, my lord, or any Scot that lives:—

Let it be seen to-morrow in the battle,

Which of us fears.

Dou. Yea, or to-night.

Hot. To-night, say I.

Ver. Come, come, it may not be.

Hot. To-morrow, me thinketh, may be great leaders.

Wor. See, if you force not what impediments

Drag back our expedition: Certain horse

Of my cousin Vernon's are not yet come up;

Your uncle Worcester's horse came but to-day;

And now their pride and mettle is asleep,

Their courage with hard labor tame and dull,

That not a horse is half the half himself.

Hot. No, they are the horses of the enemy.

In general journey-hated and brought low;

The better part of ours is full of rest.

Wor. The number of the king exceedeth ours:

For God's sake, counsel, stay till all come.

[The Trumpet sounds a parley.

Enter Sir Walter Blunt.

Blunt. I come with gracious offers from the king.

If you vouchsafe me hearing, and respect,

Hot. Welcome, sir Walter Blunt; And would to God,

You were of our determination,

Some of us love you well: and even those some

Envy your great deserving, and good name;

Because you are not of our quality:—

But stand against us like an enemy.

Blunt. And God defend but still I should stand so,

So long, as is the term of limit, and true rule,

You stand against an authorized majesty.

But to my charge.—The king hath sent to know

The nature of your griefs; and wherupon

You may remove from the trust of the state.

Such bold hostility, teaching this dastard land

Audacious cruelty: if that the king

Have any way your good deserts forgot,—

What he bids you name your griefs; and, with all speed,

You shall have your desires, with interest;

And pardon absolute for yourself, and these,

That have been to your suit of Northumberland.

Hot. The king is kind; and, well we know, the king

Knows at what time to promise, when to pay.

My father, and my uncle, and myself;

To give him that same royalty he wears:

And, when he was not six-and-twenty strong,

Sick in the world's regard, wretched and low,

Poor and unknown, outcast from the world,

My father gave him welcome to the shore:

And, when he heard him swear, and vow to God,

He came but to be duke of Lancaster,

As it was thought, and so you see.

With tears of innocence, and terms of zeal,—

My father, in kind heart and pity mov'd,

Takes his assistance here, and perform'd it too.

Now, when the lords and barons of the realm

Perceiv'd Northumberland did lean to him,

The more and less came in with cap and knee;

Met him in borrowed cities, villages,

Attended him on bridges, stood in lanes,

Laid gifts before him, profered him his oaths,

Gave him his heirs; as pages followed him,

Even to the heels, in golden multitudes.

He presently,—as greatness knows itself,—

Steps me a little higher than his vow

Made to my father, while his blood was poor,

Upon the naked shore at Ravenspur:

And now, forsakes, takes on him to reform

Some certain elects, and some scant decrees,

That he too heavy on the commonwealth:

Cries out upon abuses, seems to weep

Over his country's wrongs; and, by his face,

This seeming brow of justice, did he win

The hearts of all the rest, that he did angle in

Proceeded further; cut me off the heads

Of all the favorites, that the absent king

In deputation left behind him here,

Where he was present in the Irish war.

Blunt. Tut, I came not to hear this.

Hot. Then, to the point,—

In short time after, he depos'd the king;

Soon after that, depri'd him of his heir;

And, in the neck of that, task'd the whole state:

To make that worse, suffer'd his kinsman, March, (Who is, if every other man were well placed,

Indeed my king,) to be ingrafted in Wales,

There without renown to lie forlorn:

Disgrace me in my happy victories;

To entrap me with my intelligence,

Rated my uncle from the council-board;

In rage dismiss'd my father from the court;

Broke oath on oath, committed wrong on wrong:

And, in conclusion, drove us to seek

This head of safety; and, withal, to pry

Into his title, the which we find

Too indirect for long continuance.

Blunt. Shall I return this answer to the king?

Hot. Not so, sir Walter; we'll withdraw awhile.

Go to the king; and let there be impaw'd

Some security for a safe return again,

And in the morning quittance shall make

Bring him our purposes: and so inewell.

Blunt. I would, you would accept of grace and love,

Hot. And, may be, so we shall.

Blunt. Pray heaven you do! [Exeunt.

Enter the Archbishop of York, and a Gentleman.

Arch. Sir, good sir Michael! bear this sealed brief, 1

With winched haste to the lord marshall; 2

This one to your lord, and one to this,

To whom they are directed: if you knew

How much they do import, you would make haste.

Gent. My good lord,

I guess their tenor.

Arch. Like enough you do.

To-morrow, good sir Michael, is a day,

Wherein the fortune of ten thousand men

Shall be determined: For, Sir Robert Vernon,

As I am truly given to understand,

The king, with mighty and quick-raised power,

Meets with lord Harry; and I fear, sir Michael,—

What you have seen in the sicknesses of Northumberland,

(Whose power was in the first proportion.)

And what with Owen Glendower's absence thence,

(Who with them was a rated sinew too, 3

The delivery of his lands. 4 The greater and the less.

Letter. A strength on which they reckoned.
And comes not in, o'er-cord'd by prophecies,
I fear the power of Percy is too weak
To wage an instant trial with the king.
Genl. Why, good my lord, you need not fear;
There's Douglas, and Mortimer.
Archl. No, Mortimer's not there.
Genl. But there is Mardake, Vernon, lord Percy
And there's my lord of Worcester; and a head
Of gallant warriors, noble gentlemen.
Archl. And so there is; but yet the king hath
The special head of all the land together:
The prince of Wales, lord John of Lancaster,
The noble Westmorland, and warlike Hunt;
And many more cornwells, and dear men
Of estimation and command in arms.
Genl. Doubt not, my lord, they shall be well op-
Arch. I hope no less, yet needful 'tis to fear.
And, to prevent the worst, sir Michael, speed:
For, if lord Percy thrive not, or the king
Dismiss his power, it may be to our loss.
For he hath heard of our confidence,—
And 'tis but wisdom to make strong against him.
Therefore, make haste: I must go write again
To other friends; and so far well, sir Michael.
[Exit severally.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The King's Camp near Shrewsbury.

Enter King Henry, Prince Henry, Prince John of Lancaster, Sir Walter Blakley, and Sir John Falstaff.

K. Hen. How bloody the sun begins to peer
Above you looks this hill! the day looks pale
At his dispersion. And, the southern wind
Both play the trumpet to his purposes;
And, by his hollow whistling in the leaves,
Foretells a tempest, and a blustering day.
K. Hen. This will not please the emperor;
For nothing can seem foul to those that win.

Trumpet. Enter Worcester and Vernon.

How now, my lord of Worcester? 'tis not well,
That you and I should meet upon such terms
As now we meet: you have deceived our trust;
And make us OUR easy robes of peace,
To crush our old limbs in tattered steel.
This is not well, my lord, this is not well.
What say you to't? will you again
This churlish knot of all-abhorred war,
And move in that disorderly career
Where you did give a fair and natural light;
And be no more an exalted meteor,
A prodigy of fear, and a portent
Of heaven's messenger to the unbound times?
Wor. Hear me, my liege:
For mine own part, I could be well content
To entertain the last-odd of my life
With these next hours; for the time is such
I have not sought the day of this dislike.

K. Hen. You have not sought for it; how comes it then?

Fol. Rebellion lay in his way, and he found it.
P. Hen. Peace, peace, peace.
Wor. If pleas'd your majesty, to turn your looks
Of favor from myself, and all our house;
And yet I must remember you, lay lord,
We were the first and dearest of your friends.
For you, my staff of office did I break
In Richard's time; and posted day and night
To meet you on the way, and kiss your hand,
When yet you were in place and in account,
Nothing so strong and fortunate as I.
It was, I say, my brother, and his son;
That brought you home, and boldly did outlast
The dangers of the time: You swore to us—
And you did swear that oath at Doncaster.—
That you did nothing purpose against the state;
Nor claim no further than your new-hall's right,
The seat of Gaunt, dukedom of Lancaster:
To this we swore our aid. But, in short space,
It came down from heaven upon your head;
And such a flood of greatness fell on you—
What with our help; what with the absent king;
What with the injuries of a wanton time;
The succeeding sufferances that you have borne;
And the contrarious winds, that held the king
So long in his unlucky Irish wars,
That all in England did repute him dead,—
And, from this swarm of fair advantages,
You took occasion to be quickly woud
To grasp the general sway into your hand;

Wor. Pat off. A chattering bird, a pie.

K. Hen. Forefit your oath to us at Doncaster;
And, being led by us, you used us so
As that unceutle gull, the cuckoo's bird,
Used the sparrow; did oppress our nest;
Grew by our feeding to import a bulk.
That even our love must not come near your sight,
For fear of swallowing; but with nimble wing
We were removed, for we were not cai'd.
Out of your sight, and made this present head:
Whereby we stand opposed by such means
As you yourself have forced against yourself;
By masked peace, disguised allegiance,
And violation of all faith and troth
Swear to me in your younger enterprise.
K. Hen. These things, indeed, you have articu-lated.
Proclaim'd at market-crosses; read in churches;
To lace the garment of rebellion
With some mix color, that in some place the eye
Of fickle changlings, and proud adventurers,
Which rape, and rub these hirelingnews
Of hasty fury nationations;
And never yet did trust, or wish
Such water-courses, for safety to dry;
Nor muddy haggards, as at some time
Of polished havoc and could do.

P. Hen. In both our armies, there is many a soul,
Shall pay full dearly for this encounter.
If once they join in trial. Tell your nephew,
The prince of Wales doth join with all the world
In praise of Henry Percy; by his pages,
The prince of Wales doth now address me;
I do not think, a braver gentleman.
More active-valiant, or more exalted, you,
More daring, or more bold, is now alive.
To grace this latter gentleman so nobly.
For my part, I may speak it to my shame,
I have a trump been to charity.
And so, I hear, he doth account me too:
Yet this before my father's majesty,
I am content, that he shall take the odds
Of his great name and estimation.
And will, to save the blood on either side,
Try fortune with him in a single fight.
K. Hen. And, prince of Wales, so dare we venture thee.
Albeit, considerations infinite
Do make against it;—No, good Worcester, no,
We love our people well; even those we love,
That are misdied upon your cousin's part;
And, will they take the oath of our grace,
Both he, and they, and you, yea, every man
Shall be my friend again, and I'll be his:
So tell your cousin, and bring me word
What he will, or that he will not yield,
Rebuke and death correction wait on us,
And they shall do their office. So, he gone;
We will not now be troubled with reply:
We offer fair, take it advisedly.
[Exit Worcester and Vernon.

P. Hen. It will not be accepted, on my life:
The Douglas and the Hotspur both together
Are confident against the world in arms.
K. Hen. Hence, therefore, every leader to his charges:

Exhibited in articles.
For, on their answer, will we set on them: And God befriend us, as our cause is just!

Exit King, BLUNT, and PRINCE JOHN.

Fad. Hal; Hai! Search me down, I'II have it wrong, and bestride me, so! —is a point of friendship.

P. Hen. Nothing but a colossus can do thee, that friendship. Say thy prayers, and farewell.

Fad. It bestrides the word, and all well.

P. Hen. Why, thou owest God a death.

Exit.

A rabbit.

It is not due yet; I would be loath to pay him before his day. What need I be so forward with him that cannot on me? Well, no matter; Honor pricks me on. Yea, but how if honor pricks me off when I come on? how then? Can honor start to a leg? No. Or an arm! No. Or take away the grave's sad sound? No. I have no skill in surgery then! No. What is honor! A word. What is in that word, honor! What is that honor! Air. A thing reasoning. Who hath it! He that died o' Wednesday. But this is both honest. No, Doth he hear it! No. Is it insensible then! Yea, to the dead. But will it not live with the living! No. Why! Detraction will not suffer it: therefore I'll none of it: Honor is a mere scutcheon, and so ends my catechism.

[Exit.]

SCENE II.—The Rebel Camp.

Enter WORCESTER and VERNON.

Wor. O, no, my nephew must not know, sir Richard. The liberal kind offer of the king.

Vor. 'Twere best he did.

Vor. Then are we all undone. The king should keep his word in loving us; He will suspect us still, and at a time To punish his offence in other faults: Such power shall be used without fault: For treason is but trusted like the fox; Who, me'er so tame, so cherish'd, and lock'd up, Will have a wild trick of her husband. Look how we can, or sad, or merrily. Interpretation will misquote our looks; And we shall feed on oxen at a stall, The better cherish'd, than the most in broth. My nephew's trespass may be well forgot, It hath the excess of youth, and heat of blood; And an adopted name of privilege,— A bare-brain'd Hotspur, govern'd by a spleen: All his offences live upon my head. And on his father's, we did trun him on; And, his corruption being ta'en from us, We shall turn all of us, shall perfit. Therefore, good cousin, let not Harry know, In any case, the offer of the king.

Vor. Deliver what you will, I'll say, 'tis so. Here comes your cousin.

Enter HOTSPER and DOGGLAS; and Officers and Soldiers, behind.

Hot. My uncle is return'd:—Deliver up My lord of Westmoreland.—Uncle, what news?

Wor. The king will bid you battle presently.

Dog. Defy him by the lord of Westmoreland.

Hot. Lord Douglas, go you and tell him so.

Dog. Marry, and shall, and very willing. [Exit. Wor. There is no seeming mercy in the king.

Hot. Did you beg any? God forbid!

Wor. I told him gently of our grievances, Of his oath-breaking; which he mended thus,— By how forswearing that he is forsworn.

Dog. My name is Douglas; and, as I do know thee in the battle thus, Thou cross'est me! what honor dost thou seek Upon my head?

Dog. Know them, my name is Douglas; And I do haunt thee in the battle thus, Because some tell me that thou art a king.

Blunt. They tell thee true.

Dog. The lord of Stafford dear to-day hath thought Thy likeness; for, instead of thee, king Harry, This sword hath ended him: so shall it thee, Unless thou yield thee as my prisoner.

Blunt. I will no more than to a rebel, and proud Scot: And thou shalt find a king that will revenge Lord Stafford's death.

[They fight, and BLUNT is slain. Enter HORSECA.

Hot. O Douglas, hadst thou fought at Holmedon thus, I never had triumph'd upon a Scot.

Dog. All's done, all's won; here breathless lies the king.

Hot. Where is he?

Dog. Here.

Hot. This, Douglas? no, I know this face full.

A galant knight he was, his name was Blunt: Semblably furnish'd like the king himself.

Recital. Own. The motto of the Percy family.
Dong. A fool go with thy soul, whither it goes, A bow'dr'd title hast thou bought too dear. Why didst thou tell me that thou wert a king? Hot. The king hath many marching in his coats. Dong. Now, by my sword, I will kill all his coats; I'll murder all his staves, piece by piece, Until I meet the king. Hot. Up, and away; Our soldiers stand full fairly for the day. [Exit. Other Alarums. Enter Falstaff. Fal. Though I could 'scape shot-free at London, I fear the shot here; here's no shooting, but upon the pate.—Sott! who art thou? Sir Walter Blunt;—there's honor for you: Here's no vanity!—I am as hot as a newly-wed, and as heavy, too; God keep lead out of me! I need no more weight than mine own bowels.—I have led my ragamuffins where they are pepper'd: there's but three of my hundred and forty thousand men: and they are for the town's end, to beg during life. But who comes here! Enter Prince Henry. P. Hen. What, stand'st thou idle here! I tend me thy sword: Many a nobleman lies stark and stiff Under the shadow of vaunting enemies. Whose deaths are unrevenged: Pr'ythee, lend thy sword. Fal. O Hal, I pr'ythee, give me leave to breathe a word. Pa-'gree yonder Percy draws his sword in arms, as I have done this day. I have paid Percy; I have made him sure. P. Hen. He is, indeed; and living to thee, Lost and mad, I pr'ythee. Fal. Nay, before God, Hal, if Percy be alive, thou get'st no sword; but take my pistol, if thou wilt. P. Hen. Give me it. What, is it in the case? Fal. Ay, Hal; 'tis hot, 'tis hot! 'tis will that shall sack a city. The Prince draws out a bottle of sack. P. Hen. What, is it a time to jest, and daily now! But 'tis the end of art, and exit. Fal. Well, if Percy be alive, I'll pierce him. If he do come in my way, so: if he do not, if he come in, willingly, let him make a carbide of me. I like not such cunning honor, as sir Walter hath: Give me life: which if I can save, so; if not, honor comes unlook'd for, and there's an end. [Exit. SCENE IV.—Another Part of the Field. Alarums. Exeunt. Enter the King, Prince Henry, Prince John, and Westmoreland. K. Hen. I pr'ythee, Harry, withdraw thyself; thou bleed'st too much— Lord John of Lancaster, go you with him. P. John. Not, my lord, unless I didst command too. P. Hen. I do beseech your majesty, make up, Lest your retirement do amaze your friends. K. Hen. I will do so. My Lord of Westmoreland, lead him to his tent. West. Come, my lord, I will lead you to your tent. P. Hen. Lead me, my lord! I do not need your help. And heaven forbid, a shallow scratch should drive The prince of Wales from such a field as this; Where stain'd nobility lies trodden on, And rebels' arms triumph in masses! P. John. Why, he's too long;—Come, cousin Westmoreland, Our duty this way lies: for God's sake, come. [Enter Prince John and Westmoreland. P. Hen. By heaven, thou hast decreed me, Lancaster, I did not think thee lord of such a spirit: Before, I lov'd thee as a brother, John; But now, I do respect thee as my master. K. Hen. I saw him hold lord Percy to the point, With justier maintenance than I did look for Of such an unwarred guardian. O, this boy Lends mettle to us all! [Exit. Alarums. Enter Douglas. Doug. Another king! they grow like hydra's heads! I am the Douglas, fatal to all these That wear those colors on them;—What art thou, That counterfeit'st the person of a king? K. Hen. The king himself; who, Douglas, grieves at heart, So many of his shadows thou hast met, And not the very king. I have two boys Seek Percy and thyself, about the field; But, secure them bullet on me so luckily, I will assay thee; so defend thyself. Dong. I fear, thou art another counterfeit; And yet, in faith, thou'rt not the king: at mine, thou art, whosoever be, And thus I win thee. [They fight. The King in danger, Enter Prince Henry. P. Hen. Hold up thy head, vice Scot, or thou art like Never to hold it up again! the spirits Of Shirley, Stalb, and Westmoreland. O, it is the prince of Wales, that threatens thee; Who never promised, but he means to pay.— [They fight. Douglas fies. Cheery, my lord; how fares your grace! Sir Nicholas Gawsewy hath for success sent, And so hath Clifton: I'll to Clifton straight. K. Hen. Stay, and breathe awhile; Thou hast redeem'd thy lost opinion; And shoul'dst thou mak'st so some tender of my life, In this fair rescue thou hast brought to me. P. Hen. O, heaven! they did me too much injury. That ever said, I hear'den for your death. If it were so, I might have little alone The insulting hand of Douglas over you; Which would have been as specious in my arms, As all the poisonous potions in the world, And sav'd the treacherous labor of your son. K. Hen. Make up to Clifton, I'll to Sir Nicholas Gawsewy. —Exit King Henry. Enter Hotspur. Hot. If I mistake not, thou art Harry Mornmouth, P. Hen. Thou speakest as if I would deny my name. Hot. My name is Harry Percy. P. Hen. Why, then I see A very valiant rebel of the name. I am the prince of Wales; and think not, Percy, To share with me in glory any more: Two stars shall not shine in one motion in the sphere; Nor can one England break a double reign, Of Harry Percy, and the prince of Wales. Hot. Nor shall it, Harry, for the hour is come To end this line of us and ours. Thy name in arms were now as great as mine! P. Hen. I'll make it greater, ere I part from thee; And all the budding honors on thy crest I'll crop to make a garland for my head. Hot. I can no longer brook thy vanities. [They fight. Enter Falstaff. Fal. Well said, Hal! to it, Hal!—Nay, you shall find no boy's play here, I can tell you. Enter Douglas; he fights with Falstaff, who falls down as if he were dead, and exit. Douglas. Hotspur is wounded, and falls. Hot. O, Harry, thou hast rob'd me of my youth, I better brook the loss of brittle life, Than those proud titles thou hast won of me; They would in thought's, worse than thy sword my life;— But thought's the slave of life, and life's foot; And time, that takes survey of all the world, Must have a stop. O, I could prophesy God, But that the earthly and cold hand of death Lies on my tongue:—No, Percy, thou art dust, And food for worms. [Die. P. Hen. After worms, brave Percy! Fare thee well, great heart! Ill-wea'd ambition, how much art thou shrunk! When that this body did contain a spirit, Kingdom for it was too small a bound; But now, two paces of the vilest earth Is room enough.—This earth that bears thee dead, Bears not alive so stout a gentleman. If thou wast sensible of courtesy, I should not make so dear a show of zeal:— But let my favors hold thine enraged face; And, even in thy behalf, I'll thank myself ¹ A piece of meat cut acrosswise for the grindron. ² Scarf, with which he covers Percy's face
For doing these fair rites of tenderness,
Adieu, and take thy praise with thee to heaven!
Thy ignominy sleep with thee in the grave,
But not remember'd in thy epitaph!

[Exeunt Falstaff on the ground.]

What! old acquaintance! could not all this flesh
Keep in a little life? Poor Jack, farewell!
I could have better spared a better man.
O, I should have a heavy miss of thee,
If I were much in love with vanity.
Death hath not strucks so fat a deer to-day,
Though many dearer, in this bloody fray:—
Embowed'll I see thee lie by and by;
Till then, in blood by noble Percy lie.

[Exit.]

Fal. [Reading aloud.] Embowed'll I thou en-

[Embowed''] I'll give thee leave to powder me, and eat me too, to-morrow. 'Shood, 'twas time to counterfeit, or that hot temperant Scot had paid me a seot and lot too. Counterfeit! I lie, I am no counterfeit: 'To die, is to be a counterfeit; for he is but the counterfeit of a man, who hath not the life of a man: but to counterfeit dying, when a man thereby liveth, is to be no counterfeit, but the true and perfect image of his indeed. The better part of valor is—discretion; in the which better part, I have saved my life. Zounds, I am afraid of this gunpowder Percy, though he be dead: How, if he should counterfeit too, and rise! I am afraid, he would prove the better counterfeit. Therefore I'll make him sure: yes, and I'll swear I killed him.
Why may not he rise, as full as I? Nothing con-futes me but eyes, and nobody sees me. Therefore, sirrah, [Stalking him] with a new wound in thy thigh, come thou along with me.

[Exeunt Hotspur en his back.]

Re-enter Prince Henry and Prince John.

P. Hen. Come, brother John, full bravely hast thee fished'sd
Thy maiden sword.

P. John. But, soft! whom have we here?
Did not tell me, this fat man was dead?

P. Hen. I did; I saw him dead, breathless and bleeding
Upon the ground.—

Art thou alive! or is it phantasy
That plays upon our eyesight? I pray thee, speak;
We will not trust our eyes, without our ears—
Thou art not what thou seem'st.

Fal. No, that's certain; I am not a double man:
but if I be not Jack Falstaff, then am I a Jack.
There is Percy: [Throwing the body down.] if your father will do me any honor, so; it not, let him hit the next Percy himself. I look to be either card, or duke. I can assure you.

P. Hen. Why, Percy I killed myself, and saw thee dead.

Fal. Didst thou?—Lord, lord, how this world is given to lying!—I grant you, I was down, and out of breath; and so was he; but we rose both at an instant, and fought a long hour by Shrewsbury clock. If I may be believed, so; if not, let them, that should reward valor, bear the sin upon their own heads. I'll take it upon my death, I gave him this wound in the thigh: if the man were alive, and would deny it, I would make him eat a piece of my sword.

P. John. This is the strangest tale that e'er I heard.

*Salt

P. Hen. This is the strangest fellow, brother
John.—
Come, bring your luggage nobly on your back:
for my part, if a lie may do thee grace,
I'll gild it with the happiest trusting grace.

[A Retreat is sounded.]

The trumpet sounds retreat, the day is ours.
Come, brother, let's to the highest of the field,
To see what friends are living, who are dead.

[Exeunt Prince Henry and Prince John.]

Fort. I'll follow, as they say, for reward. He that rewards me God reward him! If I do grow great, I'll grow less; for I'll purge, and leave sack, and live cleanly, as a nobleman should do.

[Exit, bearing off the body.]

SCENE V.—Another Part of the Field.

The Trumpet sound. [Enter King Henry, Prince
Henry, Prince John, Westmoreland, and others; with Worcester and Vernon, Prisoners.]

K. Hen. Thus ever did rebellion find rebuke.—
I'll-pardoned Worcester! did we not send grace,
Pardon, and terms of love to all of you?
And wouldst thou turn our offers contrary?
Misuse the tenor of thy kinsman's trust!
Three knights upon our party slain to-day,
A noble earl, and many a creature else,
Had been alive this hour,
If like a Christian, thou hadst truly borne
Betray our armies true in fortune's wave.

Wor. What I have done, my safety urged me to;
And I embrace this fortune patiently,
Since not to be avoided it falls on me.

K. Hen. Bear Worcester to the death, and Ver-on too:
Other offenders we will pause upon.—

[Exeunt Worcester and Vernon, guarded.]

How goes the field?

P. Hen. The noble Scot, lord Douglas, when he saw
The fortune of the day quite turn'd from him,
The noble Percy slain, and all his men
Upon the foot of fear,—died with the rest;
And, falling from a hill, he was so bruiz'd,
That the pursuers took him. At my ten;
The Douglas is; and I beseech your grace,
I may dispose of him.

K. Hen. With all my heart.

P. Hen. Then, brother John of Lancaster, to you,
This honorable bounty shall belong:
Go to the Douglas, and deliver him
Up to his pleasure, ransomless and free:
His valor shown upon our credits to-day,
Hath taught us how to cherish such high deeds
Even in the bosom of our adversaries.

K. Hen. Then this remains, that we divide our power,

You, son John, and my cousin Westmoreland,
Towards York shall bend you, with your dearest
speed.
To meet Northumberland, and the prelate Scoop,
Who, as we hear, are hasty in arms:
Myself,—and you, son Harry,—will towards Wales,
To fight with Glendower, and the earl of March.
Rebellion in this land shall lose his sway;
Meeting the check of such another day;
And since this business so fair is done,
Let us not leave till all our own be won. [Exeunt.]

SCENE, England.

INDUCTION.

Warkworth. Before Northumberland's Castle.

Enter RUMOR, painted full of Tongues.

Rum. Open your ears; for which of you will stop
The vent of hearing, when loud Rumor speaks?
I, from the east to the drooping west,
Making the wind my post-horse, still unfold
The acts commenced on this ball of earth:
Upon my tongues continual slander ride;
The which in every language I pronounce.
Studding the ears of men with false reports.
I speak of peace, while covert enmity,
Under the smile of safety, wounds the world:
And who but Rumor, who but only I,
Make fearful musters, and prepared defiance;
Whilst the big year, swollen with some other grief,
Is thought with child by the stern tyrant war,
And no such matter: Rumor is a pipe
Blown by surmises, jealousies, conjectures;
And of so easy and so plain a stop,
That the blunt monster with uncounted heads,
The still-dissonant wavering multitude,
Can play upon it. But what need I thus
My well known body to anatomize
Among my household? Why is Rumor here?
I run before King Harry's victory.
Who, in a bloody field by Shrewsbury,
Hath beaten down young Hotspur, and his troops,
Quenching the flame of bold rebellion
Even with the rebel's blood. But what mean I
To speak so true at first? my office is
To noise abroad,—that Harry Monmouth fell
Under the weight of noble Hotspur's sword:
And that the king before the Douglas' race
Stoop'd his anointed head as low as death.
This I have rumour'd through the peasant towns
Between that royal field at Shrewsbury
And this worm-eaten hold of ragged stone,
Where Hotspur's father, old Northumberland,
Lies crafty-sick: the posts come tiring on,
And not a man of them brings other news
Than they have learnt of me; From Rumor's tongues
They bring smooth comforts false, worse than true wrongs.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Warkworth. Before Northumberland's Castle.

The Porter before the Gate; Enter LORD BARDOLPH.

L. BARD. Who keeps the gate here, ho!—Where is the earl?

Port. What shall I say you are!
North. What news, Lord Bardolph! every minute now
Should bring the father of some stratagem:—
The times are wild; contention, like a horse
Full of high feeding, madly hath broke loose,
And bears down all before him.

L. Bard. Noble earl;
I bring you certain news from Shrewsbury.

North. Good, an heaven will!—
L. Bard. As good as heart can wish—
The time is almost wounded to the death:
And, in the fortune of my lord your son,
Prince Harry slain outright; and both the Blunts
Kill'd by the hand of Douglas: young prince John,
And his brother now are fled, to be lost the field; and Harry Monmouth's brawn, the hulk sir John,
Is prisoner to your son: O, such a day,
So short, so follow'd, and so finely won,
Cannot till now to dignify the times,
Since Caesar's fortunes!—

North. How is this deriv'd?
Saw you the field? came you from Shrewsbury?
L. Bard. I spake with one, my lord, that came from thence;
A gentleman well bred, and of good name,
That freely render'd me these news for true.

North. Here comes my servant, Travers, whom I sent
On Tuesday last to listen after news,
L. My lord, my servant's heart was in the way;
And he is furnish'd with no certainties,
More than he haply may retail from me.

Enter Travers.

North. Now, Travers, what good tidings come with you?

Trav. My lord, sir John Umfreivel turn'd me back
With full tidings; and my lord, better still,
Out-rode me. After him, came, spurring hard,
A gentleman, almost forspent with speed,
That stopp'd by me to breathe his bloody horse:
He spake no words, but just to his messenger
I did demand, what news from Shrewsbury.
He told me that rebellion had bad luck,
And that young Harry Percy's spur was cold:
With that he gave his able horse the head,
And, bending forward, struck his armed heels
Against the panting sides of his poor jade
Up to the rowel head; and, starting so,
He seem'd in running to devour the way,
Staying no longer question.

North. Hal—Again.
Said he, young Harry Percy's spur was cold?
On Horse-pur, coldspur? that rebellion
Had met all luck?

L. Bard. My lord, I'll tell you what;—
If my young lord your son have not the day,
Upon my honor, for a siker pet,
I'll give my barren: never talk of it.

North. Why should the gentleman, that rode by Give then such instances of loss?
L. Bard. Who, he?
He was some hilding, fellow, that had stol'n
The horse he rode on: and, upon my life,
Spoke at a venture. Look, here comes more news.

Enter Morton.

North. Yea, this man's brow, like to a tittleleaf,
Foretells the nature of a tragic volume:
So looks the strong; whereon the impetuous flood
Hath barr'd us; and we'd usurp the summer's shore.
Say, Morton, didst thou come from Shrewsbury?
Mor. I ran from Shrewsbury, my noble lord;
Where hateful death put on his ugliest mask,
To rend our part.

North. How doth my son and brother
Thou trembling; and the whiteness in thy cheek
Is sparier than thy tongue to tell thy errand.
Explain, my lord: it should be, ere he be heard,
So duff, so dead in look, so woebegone,
Drew Priam's curtain in the dead of night,
And would have told him, half his Troy was burn'd:
But he had found a man, ere to be his tongue,
And my Percy's death, ere thou report'st it.
This thou wouldst say,—Your son did thus; and thus;
Your brother, thus; so fought the noble Douglas:

1Important or dreadful event. 2 Lace tagged. 3 Hildering, base, cowardly.

Stopping my greedy ear with their bold deeds:
But in the end, to stop mine ear indeed,
Thus he led the horse to bade away the moment,
Ending with—brother, son, and all are dead.
Mor. Douglas is living, and your brother, yet
But, for my lord, your son,

North. Why, he is dead.

North. See, what a ready tongue suspicion hath!
He, that but fears the thing he would not know,
Hath, by instinct, knowledge from others' eyes,
That will not to the world is conversed. Why, Morton,
Tell thou thy ear, thy divinest lies:—
And I will take it as a sweet disgrace,
And make thee rich for doing me such wrong
Mor. We ourselves, like dogs and the gauntlet:
Your spirit is too true, your fears too certain.

North. Yet, for all this, say not that Percy's dead
I see a certain confession in this certain face:
Thou slkest thy head, and hast it fear, or sin,
To speak a truth. If he be slain, say so!
The tongue offends not that report his death:
And he doth sin, that doth belie the death:
Not he, which says the dead is not alive.
Yet the first bringer of unwelcome news
Hath but a losing office; and his tongue
Sounds ever after as a sullen bell,
Remember'd knolling a departed friend.

L. Bard. I cannot think, my lord, your son is dead.
Mor. I am sorry, I should force you to believe
That such a word is current in the world.
But these mine eyes saw him in bloody state,
Ren'd in faint quittance, 'weary and outbreath'd,
To Harry Monmouth: whose swift wrath beat down
The not daunted. Daur'd the way to the enemy.
From whence with fire he never more sprung up.
In few, his death, (whose spirt lent a fire
Even to the dullest present in his camp,)—
Heng was his once, to seek fire and to away
From the best temper'd courage in his troops:
For from his metal was his party stedd:
Which once in him abated, all the rest
Turn'd d'se themselves, like dull and heavy lead,
And as the thing that's heavy in itself,
Upon enforcement, flies with greater speed;
So did our men, heavy in Holquin's knees.
Lend to this weight such lightness with their fear,
That arrows fled not swifter toward their aim,
Than did our soldiers, aiming at their safety,
Fly from the field: Then was that noble Worcester,
Too soon ta'en prisoner; and that furious Scot,
The bloody Douglas, whose well-laboring sword
Had three times shann the appearance of the king,
Gan, with his unapprov'd, to the encounter, and did shame
Of those that turn'd their backs; and in his flight,
Stumbling in fear, was took. The sum of all
Is,—that the king hath won; and hath sent out
A special power, to a encounter; my lord,
Under the conduct of young Lancaster,
And Westmorland: this is the news at full.

North. Forthis I shall have time enough to mour
In pox'der or pleasure; and these news,
Having been well, that would have made me sick,
Being sick, have in some measure made me well:
And as the wretch, whose fever-weaken'd joints,
Like stately trees, with aches and weariness,
And shivering slavery, buckle under life,
Inpatient of his fit, breaks like a fire
Out of his keeper's arms; even so my limbs,
Weaken'd with grief; being now enraged with grief,
Are the叙 themselves: hence therefore, thou men,
 Cruz'l;
A scaly gauntlet now, with joints of steel,
Must glove this hand; and hence, thou sickly quoth,
Thou a great and tender man, to live so light.
Which princes, flesh'd with conquest, aim to hit,
Now bind my brows with iron; and approach
The raged'rt hour that time and spirits ring,
To crown upon the enrag'd Northumberland!
Let heaven kiss earth! Now let not nature's hand
Keep the wild flood confined; let order die;
And let this world, so long hee tilted, or:
To feel content in a lingering set;
But let one spirit of the first-born Cain
Reign in all bosoms, that each heart being set
On noblest brand the rude scene, or brand,
And darkness be the burner of the dead!

Trav. This strained passion doth you wrong, my lord.
Scene II.
KING HENRY IV.

L. BARD.  Sweet earl, divorce not wisdom from your honor.

MOR.  The lives of all your living complices
Lean on your health; the which if you give o'er
To stormy passion, must perforce decay.
You cast the scent of war, my noble lord,
And sadd'ned the account of chance, before you said—
Let us make head.  It was your presurriose,
That you did not stand up in thy dignity:
You knew, he walk'd o'er peris, on an edge,
More likely to fall in than to get o'er;
You were advis'd, his flesh was capable
Of this too feeble stroke, and his heroic spirits
Would lift him where most trade of danger ranged;
Yet did you say,—Go forth; and none of this,
Though strongly apprehended, could restrain
The even tide of fortune.  What a world!
Or what hath this bold enterprise brought forth,
More than that being which was like to be!

L. BARD.  We all, that are engaged to this loss,
Knew that we ventured on such oceanous seas,
That, if we wrought out life, 'twas ten to one:
And yet we ventur'd, for the gain proposed
Would the respect of likely peril to'd;
And since we were o'er, venture again.
Come, we will all put forth; body, and goods.

MOR.  'Tis more than time: And, my most noble lord,
I hear for certain and do speak the truth,—
The gentle archbishop of York is up,
With well-appointed powers; he is a man,
Who with a double sanctity binds his followers,
But this seal to freedom only on paper:
But shadows, and the shows of men, to'tight:
For that same word, rebellion, did divide
The action of their bodies from their souls:
And he that walk'd with question'd, and car'd,
As men drink potions; that their weapons only,
Seem'd on our side, but for their spirits and souls,
This word, rebellion, it hath froze them up,
As fish are in a pond: But now the bishop
Turns inscription to religion:
Suppose'd squire and holy in his thoughts,
He's follow'd both with body and with mind;
And both enhance his rising with the blessing
Of fair king Richard, scrape I from Penfret stones;
Derives from heaven his quartar, and his cause;
Tells them he doth bestride a bleeding land,
Gasping for life under great Robingk's reign:
And more, & less, do flock to follow him.

NORTH.  I knew of this before; but, to speak truth,
The devil had winded him with craft, and wip'd it from my mind.
Go in with me; and counsel every man,
The aptest way for safety, and revenue:
Get posts, and letters, and make friends with speed;
Never so few, and never yet more need.  [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—London.  A Street.

FALSTAFF, with his Page hearing his Sword and Buckler.

FALSTAFF.  Sirrah, you giant, what says the doctor to my water?

PAGE.  Sir, he said, the water itself was a good healthy water: but, for the party that owed it, he might have more diseases than he knew for.

FALSTAFF.  Men of all sorts take a pride to gird at me; The brain of this foolish-compounded clay, man, is in motion to blame any that is direct to laugh, more than I invent, or is invent on me; I am not only witty in myself, but the cause that wit is in other men.  I do here walk before thee, like a goose that hath shown all the feathers, but one.  If the prince put thee into my service for any other reason than to set me off, why then I have no judgment.  Thou wondrous mandrake, then art fitter to be set to the head of a horse, than to be the master, who's chin is not yet ledged.  I will sooner have a beard grow in the palm of my hand, than he shall get on his cheek; and yet he will not stick to say his face is a dishonorable.  God may finish it when he will, it is not a hair miss yet; he may keep it still as a face-royal, for barber shall never warm supper.

FALSTAFF.  Yet he will be crowing as if he had writ man ever since his father was a bachelor.  He may keep his own grace, but he is almost out of business.  For instance,—What do you say for the white and yellow about the satin for my short cloak, and slope?

PAGE.  He said, sir, you should procure him assurance but Bardolph: he would not take his bold any more; for, in the lives of all your living complices, FALSTAFF.  Let him be damned like a gluton! may his tongue be hotter! —A whoreson Achitophel! a rashly yea-foolish knave! to hear a gentleman in these matters, and stand upon security,—The whoreson smooth-pates do not wear nothing but high shoes, and bunches of keys at their girdles; and if a man is thorough with them in honest taking up, then they put them and stand upon security.  I had a hief they would put ratsbane in my mouth, as offer to stop it with security.  I looked he should have sent me two-and-twenty sheets of satin, as I am a true knight, and an honest gentleman; and give me, he may sleep in security; for they hath the horn of abundance, and the lightness of his wife shone through it: and yet cannot he see, though he have his own hatchet to light him.  Where's Bardolph?

PAGE.  He's gone into Smithfield, to buy your worship a horse.

FALSTAFF.  I bought him in Paul's, and he'll buy me a horse in grief: ye could get me but a worse in the stews, I was manned, horseed, and wived.  [Enter the Lord Chief Justice, and an Attendant.

PAGE.  Sir, here comes the nobleman that committed the prince for striking him about Bardolph. (mlcFeet close, I will not see him.

CH. JUSTICE.  What, to what end, that goes he?

ATTENDANT.  Falstaff, and please your lordship.

CH. JUSTICE.  He that was in question for the robbery of ATTENDANT.  He, my lord: but he hath since done good service at Shrewsbury; and, as I hear, is now going with some charge to the lord John of Lancaster.

CH. JUSTICE.  What, to York! Call him back again.

ATTENDANT.  Let him to Falstaff's hall.

FALSTAFF.  Boy, tell him, I am deaf.

PAGE.  You must speak louder, my master is deaf.

CH. JUSTICE.  I am sure, he, to the hearing of any thing good.—Go, pluck him by the elbow; I must speak with him.

ATTENDANT.  Sir John.

FALSTAFF.  What? a young knave, and beg! is there not war? What needs not employment? Doth not the king lack subjects? do not the rebels need soldiers? Though it be a shame to be on any side but one, it is worse, and to be less than to be on the worse side, were it worse than the name; rebellion can tell how to make it.

ATTENDANT.  You mistake me, sir.

FALSTAFF.  And, say you were an honest man, setting my knighthood and my soldiery aside, I had led in my throat if I had said so.

ATTENDANT.  I pray you, sir, then set your knighthood and your soldiery aside; and give me to tell you, you lie in your throat, if you say I am any other than an honest man.

FALSTAFF.  I give thee leave to tell me so! I lay aside that which grows to me! If thou get any leave of me, hang me; if thou take leave, thou wilt better be hanged: You hunt-counter, hence avante.

ATTENDANT.  Sir, my lord would speak with you.

CH. JUSTICE.  Sir John Falstaff, a word with you.

FALSTAFF.  My good lord!—God give your lordship good time of day. I am glad to see your lordship abroad: I heard say, your lordship was sick: I hope, your lordship goes abroad by advice. Your lordship, though not clean past your youth, hath yet some smack of age in you, some relish of the softness of time; and the best soldiers were first gentlemen, and but a lordship to have a reverend care of your health.

CH. JUSTICE.  Sir John, I sent for you before your expedition to Shrewsbury.

FALSTAFF.  What, to use your lordship, I hear his majesty is returned with some discomfort from Wales.

[In their debt.

4 Distribution.  Against their stomachs.  Greater.
Ch. Just. I talk not of his majesty:—You would not have me break my word? Fol. And I hear moreover, his highness is fallen into this same whorsen apoplexy. Ch. Just. Well, heaven mend him! I pray, let me have a little audience to approve my youth further. I will not: the truth is, I am only old in judgment and understanding; and he that will confer with me for a thousand marks, let him come and see the ugly legless Lancaster; this to the prince o’the ear that the prince gave you,—he gave it like a rude prince, and you took it like a sensible lord. I have checked him for it; and the young Ion retums: in this; in leathers, and sackcloth; but in new silk, and old sack. Ch. Just. Well, heaven send the prince a better companion. Fol. Heaven send the companion a better prince! I cannot rid my hands of him. Ch. Just. Well, the king hath severely you and your prince and sister, because you have been with the son of Lancaster against the archbishop, and the Earl of Northumberland. Fol. Yes; I thank your pretty sweet wit for it. But look, all this may be my life's peace at home, that our armies join not in a hot day! for, by the Lord, I take but two shirts out with me, and I meant not to sweat extraordinary: if it be a hot day, and I brandish anything but my bottle, I would I might never spit white rain. There is not a dangerous action can peep out his head, but I am hurst upon it: Well, I cannot last ever; But it was allowable for the sake of our much nation, if they have a good thing, to make it too common. If you will need say, I am an old man, you should give me rest. I would to God, my name were not so terrifying, the enemey as it is. I were better to be eaten to death with rust, than to be scour'd to nothing with perpetual motion. Ch. Just. Well, be honest, be honest; And God bless your econoncion! Fol. Will your lordship lend me a thousand pound, to furnish me with? Ch. Just. Not a penny, not a penny; you are too impatient to beat crosses. Fare you well: Commend me to my cousin Westminster. [Exit Ch. Justice.] Fol. [To Thane.] Chief Justice and Attend. [Exit Fol.] Fol. I'll send him, and a message to a three or four beheth. A man can no more separate age and covetousness, than he can part young limbs and lechery: but the gout galls the one, and the pawn pincers the other; and so both the degrees prevent my curses—Boy! Page, Sir! Page. What money is in my purse? Page. Seven groats and two-pence. Fol. I can get no remedy against this consumption of the purse: borrowing only lingers and lingers it out, but the disease is incurable.—To hear this little piece of spiritual Lancaster and Lancashire, this is to the earl of Westmoreland; and this to old mistress Ursula, whom I have weekly sworn to marry since I perceived her fair air on me, in the old Cherch: An I knew where to send me. [Exit Page.] A pox of this gout! or, a gout of this paw! for the one, or the other, plays the rogue with my good twenty. I will, after it, I do try, I play warm for my color, and my pension shall seem the more reasonable: A good wit will make use of any thing; I will turn diseases to commodity. [Exit.]

SCENE III.—York. A Room in the Archbishop’s Palace.

Enter the Arch Bishop of York, the Lords Hastings, Morewe, and Bardolph.

Arch. Thus have you heard our cause, and known our proofs; And, my noble friends, I pray you all, Speak plainly your opinions of our hopes; And first, lord marshal, what say you to it? Morewe. The signs tell all, and our eyes, and our auris; But studly would be better satisfied, How, in our means, we should advance ourselves To look with forehead bold and big enough Upon the color and pungence of the king. Bardolph. Our present musters grow upon the file To five-and-twenty thousand men of choice; And our supplies lie large in the country ofumberland, whose bosoms burn With an incensed fire of injuries.
L. Bard. The question then, lord Hastings, standeth thus:
Whether our present five-and-twenty thousand
May hold up head without Northumberlands.

Hast. With him, we may.

L. Bard. Ay, marry, there's the point:
But if without him we be thought too feeble,
My judgment is we should not stop too far
That we may have such a force, to
For, in a theme so bloody-faced as this,
Conquest, expectation, and surprize
Of aids uncertain, should not be admitted.

Arch. 'Tis very true, lord Bardolph; for, indeed,
It was young Hotspur's case at Shrewsbury.

L. Bard. It was, my lord; who lined himself
With hope,
Eating the air on promise of supply.
Flattering himself with project of a power
Much smaller than the smallest of his thoughts:
And so with great imagination,
Proper to madmen, fed his powers to death,
And, winking, leap'd into destruction.

Hast. But, by your leave, it never yet did hurt
To lay down likelihoods, and forms of hope.

L. Bard. Yes, in this present quality of war;—
Indeed the instant action (a cause on foot)
Lives so in hope, as in an early spring
We see the appearing buds; which, to prove fruit,
Hereafter not so mine commendation, as despair,
That frosts will bite them. When we mean to build,
We first survey the plot, then draw the model,
And when we see the tinge of the house,
Then must we rate the cost of the erection;
Which if we find outweights ability,
What do we then, but draw anew the model
In fewer offices, so at least, desist
To build at all? Much more, in this great work,
(Which is, almost to pluck a kingdom down,
And set another up,) we should survey
The plot of situation, and the model,
Consepts upon a sure foundation;
Question surveyors; know our own estate
How able such a work to undergo,
To weigh against his opposite; or else,
We fortify in paper, and in figures,
Using the names of men, instead of men:
Like one, that draws the model of a house
Beyond his power to build it; who, half through,
Gives o'er, and leaves his part-created cost
A naked subject to the weeping clouds,
And waste for churchful winter's tyranny.

Have I not said, that our hopes (yet likely of fair birth)
Should be still-born, and that we now possessed
The utmost man of expectation;
I think, we are a body strong enough,
Even as we are, to equal with the king.

L. Bard. What! is the king but five-and-twenty
Then, and no more?

Hast. To us, no more; nay, not so much, lord
Bardolph.

For his divisions, as the times do brawl,
Are, in the head, one power against the French,
And one against Gloucester; therefore a third
Must take up us; so is the uniform king
In three divided; and his coffers sound
With hollow poverty and emptiness.

Arch. That he should draw his several strength together,
And come against us in full puissance,
Need not be dreaded.

Hast. If he should do so,
He leaves his back unarm'd, the French and Welsh
Bailing him at the heels; never fear that.

L. Bard. Who, is it like, should lead his forces hither?

Hast. The duke of Lancaster and Westmoreland:
Against the Welsh, himself; and Harry Mommouth;
But who is substitute 'gainst the French,
I have no certain notice.

Arch. Let us on;
And publish the occasion of our arms.

Hosts and pages not so mine commendation, as despair,
Their over-zealous love hath surmiz'd:
An imitation giddy and unsure.

Hath he, the pulpit on the vulgar heart,
O thou noble man! with what loud applause
Didst thou beat heaven with blessing Bolingbroke,
Before he was what thou wouldst have him be!
And being now triumph'd in thine own desires,
Thou, honestly tender, art so full of him,
That thou provok'st thyself to cast him up.
So, so, thou common dog; didst thou disgorge
Thy gluton bosom of the royal Richard;
And now thou wouldst eat thy dead vanit,
And how'st, to find it. What trust is in these names!

They that when Richard liv'd, would have him die,
Are now become enam'd on his grave;
Thou, that threw'st dust upon his goodly head,
When through proud London he came sighing on
After the admir'd feats of Bolingbroke,
Cry'st now, O earth; yield us that king again,
And take thou this! 'O thoughts of men accurst!
Past, and to come, seem best; things present, worst.

March. The L. of Westmoreland, the L. of Westmoreland.
We go draw our numbers, and set out.

Hast. We are time's subjects, and time hus been gone. [Exit.]

ACT II.

SCENE I.—London. A Street.

Enter Hostess; Fang, and his Boy, with her; and SNAKE following.

Fang. Master Fang, have you entered the action?
Fang. It is entered.

Host. Where is your yeoman? Is it a lusty yeoman? will he stand to't?
Fang. Sirrah, where's Snares?
Host. O lord, ay; good master Snares.
Snares. Here, here.
Fang. Snares, we must arrest sir John Falstaff.
Host. Yes; good master Snares; I have entered him and all.

Fang. It may chance cost some of our lives, sir.
Host. Alas the day! take heed of him; he stabbed me in mine own house, and that most beastly; in good faith, 'tis no mischief he doth, if his weapon be out; he will join like any devil; he will spare neither man, woman, nor child.
Fang. If I can close with him, I care not for his thrust.

Host. No, nor I neither; I'll be at your elbow.
Fang. An I but sit him once; an I come but within my view.

1 Foolish multitude.

Host. I am undone by his going; I warrant you, he's an infinite thing upon my score—Good master Fang, hold him surey—good master Snares, let him not escape. He comes continually to Piccadilly, (saving your manhoods,) to buy a saddle; and he's inclin'd to dinner to the Lubber's Head in a humber'd horse. He has no more Smooth's the silkman: I pray you, since my eaxon is entered, and my case so openly known to the world, let him be brought in to his answer. A hundred marks is a long loan for a poor gentleman to bear, and I have borne, and borne, and borne; and have been tubbed off, and tubbed off, from this day to that day, that it is a shame to be thought on. There is no lounger business, but I would Smooth's unless a woman should be made an ass, and a beast, to bear every knave's wrong.

Enter Sir John Falstaff, Page, and Bardolph.

Fang. Sir John, I arrest you at the suit of mistress Quickly.

Host. I am undone by his going; I warrant you, he's an infinite thing upon my score—Good master Fang, hold him surey—good master Snares, let him not escape. He comes continually to Piccadilly, (saving your manhoods,) to buy a saddle; and he's inclin'd to dinner to the Lubber's Head in a humber'd horse. He has no more Smooth's the silkman: I pray you, since my eaxon is entered, and my case so openly known to the world, let him be brought in to his answer. A hundred marks is a long loan for a poor gentleman to bear, and I have borne, and borne, and borne; and have been tubbed off, and tubbed off, from this day to that day, that it is a shame to be thought on. There is no lounger business, but I would Smooth's unless a woman should be made an ass, and a beast, to bear every knave's wrong.

Fang. Sir John, I arrest you at the suit of mistress Quickly.
Fall. Away, varlets!—Draw, Bardolph; cut me off the villain's head; throw the quan in the channel. Host. I'll throw thee in the channel! Will thou? wilt thou? thou bastardly rogue!—Murder, murder! O thou honey-suckle villain! wilt thou kill God's officers, and the King's, and dost thou, thou bastardly rogue! thou art a honey-suckle; a man-queller, and a woman-queller. Fal. Keep them off, Bardolph. Faus. A rescue! a rescue! Host. Good my lord, be good to me! I beseech you. Ch. Just. How now, sir John? what, are you brawling here? Doth this become your place, your time, and business? You should have been well on your way to York— Stand from him, fellow; Wherefore hast thou that sum? Host. O my most worshipful lord, and please your grace, I am a poor widow of Eastcheap, and he is arrested at my suit. Ch. Just. For what sum? Host. It is more for some, my lord: it is for all, I have; he hath eaten me out of house and home; but I have put all my substance into that as a beggary. But I will have some of it out at once, or I'll ride thee o' nights, like the mare. Fal. I think, I am as like to ride the mare, if I have my vantage of ground to get up. Ch. Just. How comes this, sir John? Fye! what man of good temper would endure this tempest of exclamation? Are you not ashamed to enforce a poor widow to so rough a course to come by her own? Host. What is the gross sum that I owe thee? Host. Marry, if thou wert an honest man, thou, and the money too. Thou didst swear to me upon a parcel-gilt goblet, sitting in my Dolphin-chamber, at the round table, by a sea-coal fire, upon Wednesday in Whitson-week: when the prince broke thy head for liking his father to a singing-man of Windsor: thou didst swear to me then, as I was washing thy wound, to marry me, and make me my lady wife. Cost thee nothing! But not goodwife Kecheth, the butcher's wife, came in then, and call me gossip Quickly! coming in to borrow a mess of vinegar; telling us, she had a good drop of oil; not only thou wast thereby some; whereby I told thee, they were ill for a green wound! And didst thou not, when she was gone down stairs, desire me to be no more so familiar with such poor people; saying, that ere long they should call me madam? And didst thou not kiss me, and bid me fetch thee thirty shillings? I put thee new to thy book-sheet; deny it, if thou canst. Fal. My lord, this is a poor mad soul; and she says, up and down the town, that her eldest son is you; she hath been in good case, and the truth is, poverty hath distracted her. But for these foolish officers, I beseech you, I may have redress against them. Ch. Just. Sir John, sir John. I am well acquainted with your manner of warming me, and the cause of false way. It is not a confident brow, nor the throng of words that come with such more than impudent suavity from you, can thrust me from a level conscience. Thou hast, as it appears to me, practiced upon the easy-yielding spirit of this woman, and made her serve you uses both in purse and person. Host. Yea, in truth, my lord. Ch. Just. Pr'ythee, peace: Pay her the debt you owe her, and unpay the villainy you have done with her; the one you may do with sterling money, and the other with current repentance. Host. I am not unapt to answer this snap without reply. You call honorable boldness, impudent suavity: if a man will make court'sy, and say nothing, he is virtuous: No, my lord, my humble duty remembered, I will not be your suitor; I say to you, I do desire deliverance from these officers, being upon hasty employment in the king's affairs. Ch. Just. You speak as having power to do wrong; but answer in the effect of your reputation, and I will do the justice to you. Host. Come hither, hostess. (Taking her aside.) Enter Hostess. Ch. Just. Nay, now, master Gower; What news? Gower. The king, my lord, and Harry prince of Wales Are near at hand: the rest the paper tells. Fal. I am a gentleman;—Enter Gower. Ch. Just. How now, sir John; what news? Host. Nay, you said so before. Fal. As I am a gentleman;—Come, no more words of it. Host. Pray thee, this groundly I tread on, I must be fain to paim both my plate, and the tapestry of my dining-chambers. Fal. Glasses, glasses, is the only drinking; and for thy walsh, a pretty slight disorder, or the story of the prodigal, or the German hunting in waterwork, is worth a thousand of these bed-hangings, and these fly-bitten tapestries. Let it be ten pound, if these things be true, and an it were not for thy humor, there is not a better wench in England,—Go, wash thy face, and draw thy action: Come, thou must not be in this humor with me; dost not know me? Come, Sir John, I knew you to be a similar person. Host. Pray thee, sir John, let it be but twenty nobles; I'd faith I am left to pawn my plate, in good earnest, Sir. Fal. Let it alone; I'll make other shift; you'll be a fool still. Host. Well, you shall have it, though I pawn my gown, I hope you'll come to support you'll pay me all together? Fal. Will I live!—Go, with her, with her; [To Bardolph] Hook on, hook on, Host. Will you have Doll Tear-sheet meet you at supper? Fal. No more words; let's have her. [Exeunt Hostess, Bardolph, Officers, and Page. Ch. Just. I have heard better news. Fal. What's the news, my good lord; Ch. Just. Where lay the king last night? Gower. At Basingstoke, my lord. Fal. I hope, my lord, all's well: What's the news, my lord? Ch. Just. Come all his forces back? Gower. No; fifteen hundred foot, five hundred horse, Are march'd up to my lord of Lancaster, Again to Northumberland, and the archbishop. Fal. Come the king back from Wales, my noble lord? Ch. Just. You shall have letters of me presently: Come, along with me, good master Gower. Fal. My lord! Ch. Just. What's the matter! Fal. Master Gower, shall I entertain you with me to dinner? Gower. I must wait upon my good lord here: I thank you, good sir John. Ch. Just. Sir John, you loiter here too long, heeing you and your fashionables are up in company, as you go. Fal. Will you sup with me, master Gower? Ch. Just. What foolish master taught you these manners, sir John? Fal. Master Gower, if they become me not, he was a fool that taught them me.—This is the right fencing grace, my lord; tap for tap, and so part fair. Ch. Just. Now the Lord lighten thee! I thou art a great fool. [Exeunt.}

SCENE II.—Another Street. Enter Prince Henry and Poins. P. Hen. Trust me, I am exceeding weary. Poins. Is it come to that I had thought weariness come with the first of September, but thou wast set on so high blood. P. Hen. 'Faith, it doth me; though it discords the complexion of my greatness to acknowledge it; both it doth not show vividly in me, to desire small beer

4 Homilet. 7 Homicide, 8 Snub, check.

6 Suitably to your character. 1 Withdraw
Poins. Why, a prince should not be so loosely studied, as to remember so weak a composition.

P. Hen. Belike then, my appetite was not princely got; for, by my troth, I do now remember the tawdry wine, small beer. But, indeed, these humble considerations make me out of love with my greatness. What a disgrace is it to me, to remember thy name! or to know thy face to-morrow! or to remember thou hast any pair of silk stockings thou hast; riz, these, and those that were the peacock-colored ones! or to hear the inventory of thy shirts; a dignified impertinence, and the other for me—but that the tennis-court in the park looks better there; for it is a low ebb of learn with thee, when thou keepest not ratchet there; as thou hast not done a great deal else of the rebel duties of thy low-counties have made a shift to eat up thy holland: and God knows, whether those that bawl out the ruins of thy linen, shall inherit his kingdom; but the middle upon the world increases, and kindreds are mightily strengthened.

Poins. How ill it follows, after you have labored so hard, you should talk so idly! Tell me, how many good young princes would do so, their fathers being so sick as yours at this time?

P. Hen. Shall I tell thee one thing, Poins?

Poins. Ay, my lord, what's that good thing.

P. Hen. It shall serve among wits of no higher breeding than thine.

Poins. Go to; I stand the push of one thing that I will with mine own事.

P. Hen. Why, I tell thee,—it is not meet that I should be sad, now my father is sick: albeit I could tell thee, as to one it pleases me, for fault of a better; and to call my friend, I could be sad, and sad indeed.

Poins. Very hardly, upon such a subject.

P. Hen. By this hand, thou think'st me as far in the devil's book as thou art in God's; and that's a great doubt. And let the lesser men, he that's lowest in the world, be known, that he may know, who are above while he's below; and how to become to-morrow?

Poins. What's that to thee, I pray, that's my father's son?

P. Hen. Why, because you have been so loquacious, and so much engrossed to Falstaff.

Poins. By this light, I am well spoken of. I can hear it with my own ears: the worst that they can say of me is, that I am a second brother, and that I have the better fellow of my hands; and those two things, I cannot, I cannot help. By the mass, here comes Bardolph.

P. Hen. And the boy that I gave Falstaff: he had hurt him from my Christian; and, look, if the fat villain have not transformed him.

Enter Bardolph and Page.

Bard. Save your grace.

P. Hen. And yours, most noble Bardolph.

Bard. Come, you virtuous ass, [To the Page] you bashful fool, must you blushing be! Wherefore blush thou? When a man has a mind to learn, and are you become! Is it such a matter, to get a pot-pot's maidshead?

Page. He called me even now, my lord, through a red door in the gate. I have no part of his face from the window: at last, I spied his eyes; and, methought, he had made two holes in the ale-wife's new petticoat, and peeped through.

Bard. Two holes! In what degree? Is it a prank?

Page. Away, you scoundrel upon right, away!

Page. Away, you rascally Althea's dream, away! You are sent too! Make way, make way!

Page. Marry, my lord, Althea dreamed she was delivered of a fire-brand; and therefore I call him her dream.

P. Hen. A crown's worth of good interpretation.

—There it is, boy. [Gives him money.

Poins. And this, that this good blossom could be kept from cankers!—Well, there is xipence to preserve thee.

Bard. An you do not make him be hanged among you, the poor old carcass will cry in your faces.

P. Hen. And how dost thy master, Bardolph?

Bard. Well, my lord. He heard of your grace's coming to town; there's a letter for you.

Poins. Deliver in good respect. And how dost the martlemas, thy master?

Bard. In body health, sir.

Page. Harry, the immortal part needs a physician; but that moves not him; though that be sick, it does not.

P. Hen. I do allow this wen to be as familiar with me as my dog, and he holds his place; for, look you, how he writes.

Poius. [Reads.] John Falstaff, knight,—Every man must know that, as oft as he has occasion to name himself. Even like those that are kin to the king; for they never prick their finger, but they say, There is some of the king's blood spilt: How comes that? says he, that takes upon him not to be more noble than he is. Be not you, a borrower's slave; I am the king's poor cousin, sir.

P. Hen. Nay, they will be kin to us, or they will fetch it from Japhet. But the letter:

Poins. Sir John Falstaff, knight, to the son of the king reared his father; Harry prince of Wales, greeting,—Why, this is a certificate.

P. Hen. Peace!

Poins. Who will imitate the honorable Roman in brevity,—he sure means brevity in breath; short-winded,—I commend me to thee, I commend thee, and I leave thee. Be not too familiar with Poins; I will not be too familiar with thee; but if that I wish for he will not so soon ask; that he were to marry his sister Nell. Repeal all idle times as thou hast; and so farewell.

Thou, by men and men, (which is as much as say, as thou hast hired and fed Jack Falstaff, with my followers; John, with my brothers and sisters; and Sir John with all Europe."

My lord, I will steep this letter in sack, and make him eat it.

P. Hen. That's to make him eat twenty of his words, but do you use me thus, Ned? must I marry your daughter?

Poins. May the wench have no worse fortune! but I never said so.

P. Hen. Well, thus we play the fools with the time; and those rascals of the wise sit in the clouds and mock us,—Is your master here in London?

Bard. Yes, my lord.

P. Hen. Where sups he? doth the old boar feed in the old stall?

Bard. At the old place, my lord; in Eastcheap.

P. Hen. What company?

Page. Ephesians, my lord; of the old church.

P. Hen. Sup any women with him?

Page. None, my lord, but old mistress Quickly, and mistress Doll Tear-sheet.

P. Hen. What payage may that be?

Page. A proper gentlewoman, sir, and a kinswoman of my master's.

P. Hen. How muchKin, as the parish heifers are to the town-bull.—Shall we steal upon him, Ned, at supper?

Poins. I am your shadow, my lord; I'll follow you in all this.

P. Hen. Sirrah, you boy,—and Bardolph;—no word to your master that I am yet come to town: There's for your silence.

Bard. And for mine, sir,—I will govern it.

Page. Fare ye well:—[Exeunt Bardolph and Page. —This Doll Tear-sheet should be some new title.

Poins. I warrant you, as common as the way between Saint Alban's and London.

P. Hen. How might we see Falstaff bestow him self tonight in his true colors, and not ourselves be seen?
SCENE III.—Warwokth. Before the Castle.

Enter Northumberland, Lord Northumberland, and Lady Percy.

North. I pray thee, loving wife, and gentle daughter,
Givc every way unto my rough affairs;
Put not you on the visage of the times,
And be, like them, to Percy troublesome.

Lady X. I have given over, I will speak no more:
Do what you will; your wisdom be your guide.

North. Alas, sweet wife, my honor is at pawn;
And, but my going, nothing can redeem it.

Lady P. O, yet, for God's sake, go not to these wars!

The time was, father, that you broke your word,
When you were more endur'd to it than now;
When your own Percy, when my heart's dear Harry Threw many a northern look to see his father
Bring up his powers; but he did long in vain.

Who then persuad'd you to stay at home?
The shame and dishonour lose your father's
For yours,—may heavenly glory brighten it!
For his,—it stuck upon him, as the sun
In the grey vault of heaven; and by his light,
Did the chivalry of England shine.
To do brave acts; he was, indeed, the glass
Wherein the noble youth did dress themselves.
He had no legs, that practis'd not his cait:
And speaking thick, which nature made his Blemish,
Became the accents of the valiant:
For those that could speak low, and tardily,
Would not turn themselves to perfection at all,
To seem like him: So that, in speech, in gait,
In diet, in ablutions of delight,
In military rules, humors of blood,
He was a mark and glass, copy and book,
That fashion'd others. And him,—O wondrous one!

O miracle of men!—him did you leave,
(Second to none, unsecond'd by you.)
To look upon the luscid god of war
In disadvantage; to abide a field.
Where nothing but the sound of Hotspur's name
Did rouse the defenders—so you left him.
Never, O never, do his ghost the wrong,
To hold your honor more precise and nice
With others, than with him let them alone;
The disavowal, and the abjuration at last:
Had my sweet Harry had but half their numbers,
To-day might I, hanging on Hotspur's neck,
Have talk'd of Monmouth's grave.

North. Beware of your heart,
Fair daughter! you do draw my spirits from me,
With new launthing ancient oversights.
But I must go, and meet with danger there; Out I will seek in another place,
And find me worse provided.

Lady N. O, fly to Scotland,
Till you obtain the nobles, and the accurate counsels,
Have of their puissance made a little taste.

Lady P. If they get ground and vantage of the king,
Then you with them, like a rib of steel,
To make strength stronger; but for all our loves,
First let them try themselves; so did your son;
He was so suffer'd; so came I a widow;
And now I shall have length of life enough,
To run upon remembrance with mine eyes,
That it may grow and sprout as high as heaven,
For recollection to my noble husband.

North. Come, come, go in with me; 'tis with my mind,
As with the tide swell'd up unto its height,
That makes a still-stand, running neither way.
For though the arrows are so sharp,
But many thousand reasons hold me back—
I will resolve for Scotland; there am I,
Till time and vantage crave my company.
[Exeunt.]
Enter Pistol, Bardolph, and Page.

Pist. Save you, sir John!

Win. Welcome, ancient Pistol. Here, Pistol, I charge you with a cup of sack: do you discharge your commission?

Pist. I will discharge upon her, sir John, with two bulletts.

Win. She is pistoled-proof; sir, you shall hardly o'ertake her.

Pist. Come, I'll drink no poore, nor no bulletts: I'll drink no more than will do me good, for no man's pleasure. I'll drink to you, mistress Dorothy; I will chace you.

Dor. Chace me! I scorn you, scurril companion. What! you poor, base, rascally, cheating, blackguard fellow! I'll thrust my knife in your mouldy chaps, and play the saucy cuttle with me. Away, you bottle-rascal! you basket-hilt stabber, you! Since when, I pray you, sir, have you so much with, or so many points on your shoulder? much 14

Pist. I'll murder your ruff for this.

Win. No more, Pistol; I would not have you go about it: I charge you with yourself of our company, Pistol.

Pist. No, good captain Pistol; not here, sweet captain.

Dor. Captain! thou abominable damned cheat, and hark thee! we have been cursed 15 captains of our mind, they would truncheon you out, for taking their names upon you before you have earned them. You a captain, you slaver! I warrant you, none so poor whoreson ruff in a bawd-house!—He a captain! Hang him, rogue! He lives upon mouldy stewed primes, and dried cakes. A captain! these villains will make the world hold you for the plausibleest rogue, which was an excellent good word before it was ill-sorted: therefore, captains had need look to it.

Bard. Pray thee, go down, good ancient.

Dor. Hark thee hither, mistress Dorothy.

Pist. Not I: tell thee what, corporal Bardolph? I could hear thee;—I'll be revenged on her.

SECOND ACT

Fal. Let them play.—Play, sir.—Sit on my knee; Doll. A rascal bragging slave! the rogue fled from me, like quicksilver.

Doll. Truth, and thou followedst him like a charm. Thou whoreson little Batolphome loar-pig, when wilt thou leave fighting o’days, and joining o’ights, and begin to patch up thine old body for heaven!—Enter behind Prince Henry and Poins, disguised to Yewen.

Fal. Peace, good Doll! Do not speak like a death’s head; do not bid me remember mine end.

Doll. Sirrah, what humor is the prince of? Fal. A good shallow young fellow: he would have made a good pantler, he would have chipped bread well.

Doll. They say, Poins has a good wit.

Fal. He a good wit! hang him, bobbin! his wit is as thick as Tewkesbury mustard: there is no more conceit in him, than is in a mallet.

Doll. Why does the prince love him so then?

Fal. Because their legs are both of a bigness: and he plays at quoits well; and eats conzer and fennel; and drinks off candles’ ends for flaps-dragons; and rides the wild mare with the boys; and jumps at the deficit: and swears with a good grace; and wears his boot very smooth, like unto the sign of the leg; and breeds no bate with telling of discreet stories, and such other gambol faculties he hath, which a weak mind and an able body, for the which the prince admits him: for the prince himself is such another; the weight of a hair will turn the scales between their avoidance.

P. Hen. Would not this have of a wheel he have his ears cut off at?

Poins. Let’s beat him before his whore.

P. Hen. Look, if the widded elder hath not his port, he will be of no color.

Poins. is it not strange, that desire should so many years outlive performance?

Fal. Kiss me, Doll.

P. Hen. Saturn and Venus this year in conjunction! what says the almanac to that?

Poins. And, look, whether the fiery Trigon 4 his man, or no; putting to his man’s old tables; his note-book, his counsel-keeper.

Fal. Thou dost give me flattering busses.

Doll. Nay, truly; I kiss thee with a most constant heart.

Fal. I am old, I am old.

Doll. I love thee better than I love e’er a scurvy young boy of them all.

Fal. What stuff wilt have a kirkle 5 of? I shall receive money on Thursday: thou shalt have a cup to-morrow. A merry song, come: it grows late, we’ll bed. Thou’lt forget me, when we are gone. I think I should set me a weeping, an thou sayest so: prove that ever I dress myself handsome till thy return.—Well, hearken the end.

Fal. Some sack, Francis.

Fal. Hal! a bastard son of the king’s!—And art not thou Poins his brother?

P. Hen. Why, thou globe of sinful continents, what a life dost thou lead!

Fal. A better than thou; I am a gentleman, thou art a brace.

P. Hen. Very true, sir; and I come to draw you out by the ears.

Host. O, the Lord preserve thy good grace! by my faith, welcome to London.—Now the Lord less that sweet face of thine! O Jesu, are you come from Wales?

Fal. Thou whoreson mad compound of majesty—by this light flesh and corrupt blood, thou art welcome.

[Leaving his hand upon Doll.]

Doll. How! you fat fool, I scorn you.

Poins. My lord, he will drive your reverie, and turn all to a merriment, if you take not the heat.

P. Hen. You whoreson candle-mine, you; how wilt thou speak of me even now, for this honest, virtuous, civil gentlemanwoman?

Host. Blessing o’your good heart! and so she is, by my troth.

Fal. Dubh thou hear me?

*An astronomical term.
*A short cloak.

P. Hen. Yes; and you knew me, as you did when you ran away by Gads-hill: you knew, I was at your back; and spoke it on purpose to try my patience.

Fal. No, no, no; not so; I did not think thou wast within hearing.

P. Hen. I shall drive you then to confess the wilful abjuration; and then I know how to handle you.

Fal. No abuse, Hal, on mine honor; no abuse.

P. Hen. Not! to dispise me; and call me pantler, and baud-lecher, and I know not what!

Doll. Poins, Hal.

Poins. No abuse?

Fal. No abuse, Ned, in the world; honest Ned, none.

I despised him before the wicked, that the wicked might not fall in love with him: in which doing I have done the part of a careful friend, and a true subject, and thy father is to give me thanks for it. No abuse, Hal.—none, Ned, none;—no, boys, none.

P. Hen. See, now, whether pure fear, and entire cowardice, doth not make thee wrong this virtuous gentlewoman to cross with us? Is she of the wicked? is thine hostess here of the wicked? Or is the boy of the wicked? or Honest Bardolph, whose zeal burns in his nose, of the wicked?

Fal. Answer, thou dead elm, answer.

Fal. The fiend hath pricked down Bardolph irrecuperable; and his face is Lucifer’s privy kitchen, where he’s got nothing but roost and wattles; there is a good angel about him; but the devil outbids him too.

P. Hen. For the women—

Fal. Doth not every one of them,—she is in hell already, and burns, poor soul! For the other,—I owe her money; and whether she be damned for that, I know not.

Host. No, I warrant you.

Fal. No, I think thou art not; I think, thou art quit for that: Marry, there is another indictment upon thee, for suffering flesh to be eaten in thy house, contrary to the law; for the which, I think thou wilt how.

Host. All victualers do so: What’s a joint of mutton or two in a whole Lend! P. Hen. A gentlemanwoman.

Doll. What says your grace?

Fal. His grace says that which his flesh rebels against.

Host. Who knocks so loud at door? look to the door there, Francis.

Enter Peto.

P. Hen. Peto, how now! what news now!

Peto. The king, your father, is at Westminster, and there are twenty weak and weared posts, Come from the north: and there it is, with a dozen captains, Bare-headed, sweating, knocking at the taverns, and asking every one for sir John Falstaff.

P. Hen. By heaven, Poins, I feel me much to blame.

So silly to profane the precious time:

When tempest of commotion, like the south, Borne on black vapore, doth begin to melt, And drop upon our bare unarmed heads.

Give me my sword and cloak.—Falstaff, good night.

Exeunt. [Exit P. Hen., Poins, Peto, and Bard.

Fal. Now comes in the sweetest morsel of the night, and we must hence, and leave it unpicked.

[ Knocking heard. ] More knocking at the door!

Re-enter Bardolph.

Bardolph. How now? what’s the matter?

Bard. You must away to court, sir, presently; A dozen captains stay at door for you.

Fal. Pay the musicians, sirrah. [To the Page.] Farewell, hostess.—Farewell, Doll.—You see, my good wenches, how men of merit are sought after: the world is old bed, when they skimm the calling is called on. Farewell, good wenches: If I be not sent away post, I will see you again ere I go.

Doll. I cannot speak:—If my heart be ready to burst:—Well, sweet Jack, have a care of thyself.

Fal. Farewell, farewell.

[ Exit Falstaff, and Bardolph.

Fal. Well, fare thee well: I have known thee these twenty-nine years, come peaced-time; but an honest, and truer-hearted man.—Well, fare thee well, master.
Barth. [Within.] Mistress Tear-sheet,—
Host. What's the matter?

ACT III.

SCENE I.—A Room in the Palace.

Enter King Henry in his Night-gown with a Page.

K. Hen. Go, call the earls of Surrey and of Warwick.
But, erstwhile, bid them o'er-read these letters, and well consider of them: Make good speed. — [Exit Page.

How many thousand of my poorest subjects Are at this hour asleep!—Sleep, gentle sleep, Nature's soft nurse, how have I frighted thee, That thou no more wilt weigh my eyelids down, And steep my senses in forgetfulness? Why rather, sleep, liest thou in smoky cribs, Upon uneasy pallets stretching thee, And hush'd with buzzing night-flies to thy slumber; Thee was thereronics round the waters of the great, Under the canopies of costly state, And li'th with sounds of sweetest melody! O thou dull god, why liest thou with the vile, In foulsome beds, and lies thy pallets false, A watch-case, or a common larum bell? Wilt thou upon the high and giddy mast Seal up the ship-boy's eyes, and rock his brains In cradle of the rude unpromised surge; And in the visitation of the winds Who take the ruffling billows by the top, Curling their monstrous heads, and hanging them With downy chamfrons in the slippery clouds, That, with the hurly, death itself awakes! Canst thou, O partial sleep! give thy repose To the wet sea-bay in an hour so rude; To the dull brain and feverish sides, With all appliances and means to boot? Deny it to a king! Then, happy low, lie down! Uneasy lies the head that wears a crown.

Enter Warwick and Surrey.

War. Many good morrows to your majesty! K. Hen. Is it good morrow, lords? War. Tis one o'clock, and past. K. Hen. Why then, good morrow to you all, my lords.

Have you read over the letters that I sent you? War. We have, my liege. K. Hen. Then you perceive the body of our kingdom, How foul it is; what rank diseases grow. And what with danger, near the heart of it. War. It is but as a body, yet, distemper'd; Which to his former strength may be restored, With good advice, and little medicine:— My lord Northumberland will soon be cool'd.

K. Hen. O heaven! that one might read the book, And see the revolution of the times Make mountains level, and the continent (Wearied of solid fruities) melt itself Into the sea and lands to see The sandy girdle of the ocean Too wide for Neptune's hips; how chances mock. And changes all the cup of alteration With dying colors! O, if this were seen. The happiest youth,—viewing his progress through, What perils past, what crosses to encounter,— Would shut the book, and sit him down and die. This is not ten years past.

Since Richard, and Northumberland, great friends, Did last together, and, in two years after, Were they at war: It is but eight years, since This Percy was the man nearest my soul; Who like a brother told in my affairs. And had his love and life under my foot: Yet, far and near, gave me the eyes of Richard, Gave him defiance. But which of you was by, (You, cousin Nevil, as I may remember.) (To Warwick.

When Richard,—with his eye brimful of tears, Noise Those in lowly situations.

Then check'd and rated by Northumberland,— Did speak these words, now prov'd a prophecy? Northumberland, thou ladder, by the which My cousin Baling broke descends my throne;— Though then, heaven knows, I had no such intent But that necessity so bow'd the state, That I and greatness were comple'd to kiss:— The time shall come, thus did he follo it, The time will come, that foul sin, gathering head, Shall break into corruption.—so went on, Forseeing this same time's condition, And the division of our unity. War. There is a history in all men's lives, Figuring the nature of the times deceas'd: The which our need, a man may prophesy, With a near penetration of the manners As yet not come to life; which in their seeds, And weak beginnings, he intreasured. Such things become the hatch and brood of time; And, by the course and progress of this, King Richard might create a perfect guess, That great Northumberland, then false to him, Would of that seed grow to a greater malignity; Which should not find a ground to root upon, Unless on you. K. Hen. Are these things then necessities? Then let us meet them like necessities; And that same word even now go out on us; They say, the bishop and Northumberland Are fifty thousand strong.

War. (It cannot be, my lord; Rumor doth double, like the voice and echo, The numbers of the fear'd:—Please you your grace, To go to bed; upon my life, my lord, The powers that you already have sent forth, Shall bring this price in very easily. To comfort you the more, I have received A certain instance, that Glenelower is dead, Your majesty hath been this fortnight ill; And these unseasonable hours, perforce, must add unto your sickness. K. Hen. I will take your counsel; And, were these inward wars once out of hand. We would, dear lords, unto the Holy Land. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Court before Justice Shallow's House in Gloucestershire.

Enter Shallow and Silence, meeting; Mouldy, Shadow, Wart, Fleece, Bull-calf, and Servants behind.

Shal. Come on, come on, come on! give me your hand, sit, give me your hand, sit; an early sitter, by the road. And how doth my good cousin Silence?
Sil. Good morrow, good cousin Shallow.
Shal. And dost thou love my cousin, your belfrewell, and your fairest daughter, and mine, my god-daughter Ellen?
Sil. Alas, a black onzel, cousin Shallow.
Shal. By you say may, sir, I dare say, my cousin William is become a good scholar: He is at Oxford, still, is he not?
Sil. Indeed, sir; to my cost.
Shal. He must then to the inns of court, shortly: He was once of Clement's Inn; where, I think, they will talk of mad Shallow yet.
Sil. You are welcome:—to your cousin Shallow; then, cousin. Shal. By the mass, I was called any thing; and I would have done any thing indeed, and roundly too. There was I, and little John Doit of Staffordshire, and black George Bare, and Francis Pickbone, and Will Squeale, a Cotswold man,—you had not four such swinecucklers in all the inns of court again: and I may say to you, we knew where the boni-robins were. Then was Jack Falstaff,

[Cross.}
now sir John, a boy; and page to Thomas Bow-bray, duke of Norfolk.

Sir. This sir John, cousin, that comes either and amongst soldiers?

Shal. The same sir John, the very same; I saw him break Skagin's head at the court gate, when he was thus butt; and the very same day did I fight with one Sampson Stockechild, a fruiterer, behind Gray's Inn. O, the mad days that I have spent! and to see how many of mine old acquaintance are dead.

Sir. We shall all follow, cousin.

Shal. Certain, 'tis certain; very sure, very sure;
death, as the Poet saith, is certain to all; all shall die. How a good yoke of bullocks at Stanford fair!

Sir. Truly, cousin, I was not there.

Shal. Death is certain—is old Double of your town living yet?

Sir. Dead, sir.

Shal. Death!—see, see! he drew a good bow—
And death!—he shot a line shot; John of Gaunt loved his words and bettered much money on his head!—he would have chipped 't the clout at twelve score; and carried you a forborne slant at fourteen and a half, that it would have done a man's heart good to see.—How a score of crows now?

Shal. Thereafter as they be; a score of good crows may brook twelve tenants yet.

Shal. And is old Double dead!

Enter Bardolph and one with him.

Sir. Here comes two of sir John Falstaff's men, and think.

Bard. Good morrow, honest gentlemen: I be-greet you, which is justice Shallow.

Sir. I am Robert Shallow, sir; a poor esquire of this county, and one of the king's justices of the peace: What is your good pleasure with me?

Bard. My captain, sir, commands him to you: my captain, sir John Falstaff: a tall gentleman, by heaven, and a most gallant leader.

Shal. He gives me well, sir; I knew him a good backward word. How dost the good knight? I may ask, how my lady his wife does?

Bard. Sir; pardon; a soldier is better accommodated than with a wife.

Shal. That is not so, sir; and it is well said indeed too. Better accommodated!—it is good,ye yet, indeed; it is; good phrases are surely, and ever were, very commendable. Accommodated!—it cannot be better than marry a phrase.

Bard. Pardon me, sir; I have heard the word.

Phrase, call you it? By this good day, I know not the phrase; but I will maintain the word with my sword. sir, have I the word, and a word of exceeding good commend. Accommodated; that is when a man is, as they say, accommodated; or when a man is—being,—whereby—he may be thought to be accommodated, which is an excellent thing.

Enter Falstaff.

Shal. It is very just.—Look, here comes good sir John,—Give me your good hand, give me your worship's good hand: By my troth, thou look well, and bear your years very well: welcome, good sir
John.

Fal. I am glad to see you well, good master
Robert Shallow:—Master Sure-card, as I think.

Shal. No, sir John; it is my cousin Silence, in commission with me.

Fal. Good master Silence, it well bethos you should be of the peace.

Shal. Your good worship is welcome.

Fal. Eheu! this is not weather.—Gentlemen, have you provided me here half a dozen sufficient men?

Shal. Marry, have we, sir. Will you sit?

Fal. Let me see them, I beseech you.

Shal. Where's the roll? where's the roll? where's the place, let me see, 60, 60, 60: Yea, marry, sir,—Ralph Mouldy;—let them appear as I call; let them do so, let them do so.—Let me see who are Mouldy?

Mould. Here, can't please you.

Shal. What think you, sir John? a good limbed fellow: young, strong, and of good friends.

Fal. Is thy name Mouldy?

Mould. Yes, as I please you.

Shal. He, he, ha! most excellent, th'ain't things that are modest; lack use: very singular good—in faith, well sir, sir John: very well said.

Fal. How art!—To Shallow.

Mould. I was pricked well enough before, an you could have let me alone: my old dame will be un-brooked now, for she shall do to go her husband, and her drunkard: you need not to have pricked me; there are other men fitter to cut than I.

Fal. Go to peace, Mouldy; vitally, vitally Mouldy, it is time you were spent.

Mould. Aye, aye.

Shal. Peace, fellow, peace, stand aside; Know you where you are!—for the other, sir John—let me have a quiet soldier!—

Fal. Ay, marry, let me have him to sit under:
he's like to be a cold soldier.

Shal. Where's Shallow?

Shal. Here, sir.

Fal. Shadow, whose son art thou?

Shal. My mother's son, sir.

Fal. Thy mother's son! like enough and thy father's shadow: so the son of the female is the shadow of the male: it is often so; indeed; but no much of the father's substance.

Shal. Do you like him, sir John?

Fal. Why, he will serve for summer,—prick him for we have a number of shadows to fill up the master's book.

Shal. Thomas Wart?

Fal. Where's he!

Wart. Here, sir.

Fal. Is thy name Wart?

Wart. Ye, sir, which is justice Falstaff.

Fal. That art a very ragged warr.

Shal. Shall I prick him, sir John?

Fal. It were superfluous: for his apparel is built upon his back, and the whole frame stands upon single, prick him no more.

Shal. Ha, ha, ha!—you can do it, sir; you can do it: I commend you well.—Francis Feeble!

Fal. What trade art thou, Feeble?

Fee. A woman's tailor, sir.

Shal. Shall I prick him, sir?

Fal. You may: but if he had been a man's tailor he would have pricked you.—Witt thou make as many holes in an enemy's battle, as thou hast done in a woman's petticoat.

Fal. I will do my good will, sir; you can have no more.

Walt. Well, said, good woman's tailor! well said, courageous Feeble! That will be as valiant as the most magnanimous mouse.—

Prick the woman's tailor well, master Shallow, depth, master Shallow.

Fee. I work, Wart might have gone, sir.

Wart. Thou wast a man's tailor; that thou might'st mend him, and make him fit to go. I cannot put him to a private soldier, that is the leader of so many thousand: Let this suffice, most forcible Feeble.

Shal. It shall suffice, sir.

Fal. I am bound to thee, reverend Feeble.—

Who is next?

Shal. Peter Bull-calf of the green.

Fal. Ye, marry, let us see Bull-calf.

Bull. Here, sir.

Fal. For God, a likely fellow!—Come, pricks me puirt, says he again.

Bull. O lord! good my lord captain,—

Fal. What, dost thou roar before thou art pricked?

Bull. O lord sir! I am a diseased man.

Fal. What disease hast thou?

Bull. A whoreson cold, sir; a cough, sir; which I could not suppress in the king's absinthes, upon his composition-day, sir.

Fal. Come, thou shalt go to the wars in a gown;
we will have away thy cold, and I will take such orders, that thy friends shall ring for thee,—is here all?

Shal. Here is two more called than your numer! you must have but four here, sir—and so, I pray you, go in with me to dinner.

Fal. Come, I will go drink with you, but I cannot larry dinner. I am glad to see you, in good truth, master Shallow.

Shal. O, sir John, do you remember since we lay all night in the windmill in Saint George's field?

Fal. I have care of that, good master Shallow, no more of that.

Shal. Ha, it was a merry night. And is Jane Night-work alive?

Shal. She lives, master Shallow.

Shal. She never could away with me.

Fal. Never, never: she would always say, she could not abide master Shallow.

Shal. By the mass, I could anger her to the heart. She was then a bonâ-robâ. Doth she hold her own well?

Fal. Old, old, master Shallow.

Shal. Say, she must be old; she cannot choose but be old; certain she's old; and had Robin Nightwork by old Night-work, before I came to Clement's Inn.

Sil. That's fifty-five year ago.

Shal. Ha, cousin Silence, that thou hast seen that that this knight and I have seen!—ha, sir John, said I well?

Fal. We have heard the chimes at midnight, master Shallow.

Shal. That we have, that we have, that we have: in truth, sir John, we have. Our watch-word was, Hem, boys!—Come, let's to dinner; come, let's to dinner.—O, the days that we have seen!—Come, come, come.

Exeunt Falstaff, Shallow, and Silence.

Bard. Good master corporal Bardolph, stand my friend; and here is four Harry ten shillings in French crowns for you. In very truth, sir, I had as lief be hanged, sir, as go: and yet, for mine own part, sir, I do not care; but, rather because I am unwilling, and, for mine own part, have a desire to stay with my friends; else, sir, I did not care, for mine own part, so much.

Bard. Go to; stand aside.

Moot. And good master corporal captain, for my old dame's sake, stand my friend: she has nobody to do any thing about her, when I am gone; and she is old, and cannot help herself; you shall have forty, sir.

Bard. Go to; stand aside.

Fec. By my troth, I care not—a man can die but once;—we owe God a death:—I'll never hear a base mind;—an't be my destiny, so; an't be not, so: no man's too good to serve his prince; and, let it go which way it will he, that dies this day, is quit for him.

Bard. Well said; thou'rt a good fellow.

Fec. 'Faith, I'll bear no base mind.

Re-enter Falstaff and Justices.

Fat. Come, sir, which men shall I have?

Shal. Four, or which you please.

Bard. Sir, a word with you:—I have three pound to free Mouldy and Bull-call.

Fat. Go to; well.

Shal. Come, sir John, which four will you have?

Fat. Do you choose for me.

Shal. Marry then,—Mouldy, Bull-call, Feeble, and Shadow.

Fat. Mouldy, and Bull-call! For you, Mouldy, stay at home, still; you are past service; and let your part, Bull-call, grow till you come unto it; I will none of you.

Shal. Sir John, sir John, do not yourself wrong; they are your likeliest men, and I would have you served with the best.

Fat. Will you tell me, master Shallow, how to choose a man? Care I for the limb, the thewry, the stature, the height and big assemblage of a man? Give me the spirit, master Shallow.—Here's Wart;—you see what a ragged appearance it is: he shall charge you, and discharge you, with the motion of a pew-ter's hammer; come off, and on, swifter than he that gibe's on the brewer's bucket. And this same half-faced fellow, Shallow,—give me this man: he presents no mark to the enemy; the foeman may with great advantage at the death of a heart-knife: And, for a retreat, how swiftly will this Feeble, the woman's tailor, run off? O, give me the spare man, and spare me the great ones. Put me a cavalier in your best, Bardolph:—I'll bear no scab; hold, there's a tester for thee.

Shal. He is not his crafts master, he doth not do it right. I remember at Mite-end green, (when I lay at Clement's Inn,—I was then sir Daquinet in Arthur's show;) there was a little quiver fellow, and a would manage your piece thus: and a would about and about, and come you in, and come you in: rah, rah, rah, would 'a say; bound would 'a say; and away again would 'a go, and again would 'a come:—I shall never see such a fellow.

Fat. These fellows will do well, master Shallow.

—God keep you, master Silence; I will not use many words with you.—Fare you well, gentle men both: I thank you: I must a dozen come to-night.

—Bardolph, give the soldiers seats.

Shal. Sir John, heaven bless you and prosper your affairs, and send us peace! As you return, visit my house; let on old acquaintance be renewed: peradventure, I will with you to the court.

Fat. I would you would, master Shallow.

Shal. Go to; I have spoke at a word. Fare you well.

[Exeunt Shallow and Silence.

Fat. Fare you well, gentle gentleman. Oh, Bardolph; lead the men away. [Exeunt Bardolph, Recruits, &c.] As I return, I willitch off these justices: I do see the bottom of justice Shallow. Lord, lord, how subject we old men are to this vice of lying! This same stately justice hath done nothing but prate to me of the wildness of his youth, and the feats he hath done about Turnbull-street; and every third word a lie, too, paid poor to the nearer than the Turk's tribute. I do remember him at Clement's Inn, like a man made after supper of a cheese-paring: when he was naked, he was, for all the world, like a jenkied radish, with a head fantastically carved upon it with a knife: he was so forth, that his dimensions to any thick sight were invisible: he was the very Clement's Inn; yet lecherous as a monkey, and the whores called him —mandrake: he came ever in the rearward of the fashion: and sung those tunes to the over-scutched lawswives, and heard the carmen play for the GNANs: and swore—they were his fancies, or his good-nights. And now is this Vice's dagger become a squire, and talks so familiarly of John of Gaunt, as if he had been ever so near to him; and I'll be sworn, he never saw him but once in the Tilt-yard; and then he burst his head, for crowding among the marshal's men. I saw it; and told John of Gaunt, he beat his own name: for you might have trusted him, and all his apparel, into an eel-skin: the case of a treble hant-boy was a mansion for him, a court; and now he has his hand and heaves. Well; I will be acquainted with him if I return; and it shall go hard, but I will make him a philosopher's two stones to me: if the young dace be a bait for the old pig, I see no reason, in the face of God, but I may snap him. Let him shape, and there an end.
SCENE I.—A Forest in Yorkshire.

Enter the Archbishop of York, Mowbray, Hastings, and others.

Arch. What is this forest call’d?

Hist. 'Tis Guiltree forest, an’t shall please your grace.

Arch. Here stand, my lord, and send discoverers forth,
To know the numbers of our enemies.

Hist. We have sent forth already.

Arch. 'Tis well done.

My friends and brethren in these great affairs,
I must acquaint you that I have receiv’d
New-dated letters from Northumberland;
Their cold intent, tenor, and substance thus:
Here doth he wish his person, with such powers
As might hold sortance with his quality,
The which he could not levy; whereupon
He is retir’d, to ripe his growing fortunes,
To Scotland: and concludes in hearty prayers,
That your attempts may overlive the hazard,
And fearful meeting of their opposite.

Moteh. Thus do the hopes we have in him touch ground,
And dash themselves to pieces.

Enter a Messenger.

Hist. Now, what news?

Mess. West. Of this forest, scarcely o’er a mile,
In goodly form comes on the enemy:
And, by the ground they hide, I judge their number
Over the rate of thirty thousand.

Moteh. The just proportion that we gave them out,
Let us sway on, and face them in the field.

Enter Westmorland.

Arch. What well-appointed leader fronts us here?

Mowb. I think, it is my lord of Westmorland.

West. Health and fair greeting from our general,
The prince, lord John, and duke of Lancaster.

Arch. Say on, my lord of Westmorland, in peace.

What doth concern your coming?

West. Unto your grace do I in chief address
The substance of my speech. It that rebellion
Came like itself, in base and abject ronts,
Led on by bloody youth, guarded with rage,
And maintained by low and beggarly gentry,
I say, it dast not commotion so appear’d.
In his true, native, and most proper shape,
You, reverend father, and these noble lords,
Had not been here, to dress the ugly form
Of base and bloody insurrection.

With your fair honors. You, lord archbishop,— Whose see is by a civil peace main’tain’d;
Whose heard the silver hand of peace hath touch’d;—Whose learning and good letters peace hath tutor’d;—Whose white investments figure innocence,
The dove and very blessed spirit of peace,—Wherefore do you so still translate yourself,
Out of the speech of peace, that bears such grace,
Into the harsh and bounteous tongue of war?

Turning your books to graves, your ink to blood,
Your pens to lances, and your tongue divine
To a loud trumpet, and a point of war?

Arch. Wherefore do I this? so the question stands.

 المزيد إلى هذا الميدان.

And, with our surfeiting, and wanton hours,
Have brought ourselves into a burning fever,
And we must bleed for it: of which disease
Our dear lord, the king, Richard, England dieth,
But, my most noble lord of Westmorland,
I take not on me here as a physician;
Nay do I, as an enemy to peace.

Taken in the thongs of military men;

but, rather, show a white like fearful war,
To duct rank minks, sick of happiness;
And purge the obstructions, which begin to stop
Our very veins of life. Hear me more plainly,

I have in equal balance justly weigh’d
What wrongs our arms may do, what wrongs we suffer,
And find our griefs heavier than our offenses.
We see which way the stream of time doth run,
And are enforced from our most quiet sphere
By this rough terror of occasion.
And have the summary of all our griefs,
When time shall serve, to show in articles:
Which, long ere this, we offer’d to the king,
And rightly so, to gain our audience;
When we are wrong’d, and would unitl our griefs,
We are denied access unto his person.
Even by those men that most have done us wrong.
The manner of the days last newly compile’d
(Whose memory is written on the earth
With yet-appearing blood,) and the examples
Of every minute’s instance, (present now.)
Have put us in these ill-becoming arms;
Not to break peace, or any branch of it;
But to establish here a peace indeed,
Concerning both in name and quality.

West. Wherefore ever yet was you so speech denied?
Wherein have you been call’d by the king?
What peer hath been suborn’d to grapple on you?
That you should seal this lawless bloody book
Of forg’d rebellion with a seal divine,
And consecrate commotion’s bitter edge!

Arch. My brother general, the commonwealth,
To brother born a household cruelty,
I make my quarrel in particular.

West. There is no need of any such redress;

Or, if there were, it does not belong to you.

Mowb. Why not to him, in part; and to us all,
That feel the bruses of the days before;
And suffer the condition of these times,
To buy a heavy and unequal hand
Upon their honors?

O my good lord Mowbray,
Constrive the times to their necessities,
And you shall say indeed—it is the time,
And not the king, that doth you injuries,
Yet, for your part, it does not appear to me,
Either from the king, or in the present time.
That you should have an inch of any ground
To build a grief on; Were you not restor’d
To all the duke of Norfolks’s signiories,
Your noble and right-well remembered fathers’
Mowb. And, my lord, in honor, this good sort,
Lost, that need to be revival’d, and bounti’d in me?
The king, that lov’d him, as the state stood then,
Was, force perforce, compell’d to banish him:
And, therefore, when Harry Bolingbroke was Being mounted, and both rov’d in their seats,
Their neighboring coursers dairing of the spur,
Their armed slaves in charge, their hewers down,
To brother born a household cruelty,
And the loud trumpet blowing them together;
Then, then, when there was nothing could have said,
My father from the breast of Bolingbroke,
On, when the king did throw his warder down,
His own lie hung upon the staff he threw:
Then threw he down himself; and all their lives,
That didst indencur’d and tribelted,
Have since miscarry’d under Bolingbroke.

West. You speak, lord Mowbray, now you know

The earl of Hereford was reputed then
In England the most valiant gentleman;
Who knows, on whom fortune would then have smiled?
But if your father had been victor there,
He never had borne it out of Coventry:
For all the country, in a general voice,
Cried him upon him, and all their prayers, and love;
We’re set on Hereford, whom they doted on,
And bless’d and grac’d indeed, more than the king.
But this is mere digression from my purpose.
Here come I from our princes in general,

1Be suitable.

2Grievances.

3Troubles.

4Nobleman.
KING HENRY IV.

To know your griefs; to tell you from his grace
That he will give you audience: and wherein
In such cases as appear that your estates stand in such
You shall enjoy them; every thing set off,
That might so much as think you enemies.

Maeb. But he hath forced us to compel this offer;
And it proceeds from policy, not love.

West. Mowbray, you overween't, to take it so;
This offer comes from mercy, not from fear.
For, lo! within a ken, our army lies:
Upon your honor, all too confident
To give admissence to a thought of fear.
Our men more full of names than yours,
Our men more perfect in the use of ariars,
Our armor all as strong, our cause the best;
Then reason with your hearts should be as good—
So shall we with you, our offer is.

Maeb. Well, by my will, we shall admit no parley.

West. That argues but the shame of your ollence:
A rotten case abides no handling.

Hast. Hath the prince John a full commission,
In every ample virtue of his father.

Arch. Westmoreland, this is the prince
For this contains our general grievances:
Each several article herein redres'd;
All members of our cause both here and hence,
That is more innumerable than yours.
Acquainted by a true substantial form;
And present execution of our wills
To us, and to our purposes consign'd;
We come within our lawful bounds again,
And knot our powers to the arms of peace.

West. This will I shew the general. Please you,
In sight of both our battles we may meet:
And either end in peace, which heaven so frame!
Or to the place of difference call the swords
Which most shall decide it.

Arch. My lord, we will do so. [Exit West.

Maeb. There is a thing within my bosom, tells me
That no conditions of our peace can stand.

Hast. Fear you not that: if we can make our peace
Upon such large terms, and so absolute,
And such conditions shall stand firm as rocks.
Our peace shall stand as firm as rocky mountains.

Maeb. Ay, but our valuation shall be such,
That every sight and false-derived cause,
You take that cannot for the true reason,
Shall, to the king, taste of this action:
That, were our royal faiths martyrs in war,
We shall be winnow'd with so rough a wind,
That even our corn shall seem as light as chaff,
And good from bad find no partition.

Arch. No, no, my lord; Note this,—the king is weary
Of doing, and such picking 4 grievances:
For he hath found,—to end one doubt by death,
Revises two greater in the heirs of life,
And therefore will he wipe his tables 5 clean;
And keep no idle talk in his council.
That may repeat and history his loss
To new remembrance: For still well he knows,
He cannot so precisely weed this land,
As he misdoubts presence in occasion.
His foes are so enroiled with his friends,
That plucking to units an enemy,
He doth uninstall so, and shake a friend.
So vast this land, like an action wise,
That hath enshrined him on to offer strokes;
As he is striking, holds his infant up,
And hangs resolv'd correction in the arm
That was up'ard to be excision.

Hast. Besides, the king hath wasted all his rods
On late offenders, that he now doth lack
The very instruments of chastisement:
To the prince's purpose, that his befalling
May offer, but not hold.

4Think too highly. 5Significant.

Arck. This very true—
And therefore be assure may good lord marshal,
If we do now make our assembly well.
Our peace will, like a broken link united,
Grow stronger for the breaking.

Maeb. Be it so.

Here is return'd my lord of Westmoreland.

Re-enter WESTMORELAND.

West. The prince is here at hand: Placest thou his lordship,
To meet his grace just distance between our armies!

Maeb. Your grace of York, in God's name then set forward.

Arch. Before, and greet his grace:—my lord, we come.

[Exit.]
Upon my soul, they shall. If this may please you, Discharge against the rebels in several counties, As we will ours; and here, between the armies Let's drink together friendly, and embrace; That all their eyes may bear those tokens home, Of our united love, and amity.

Arch. I take your princely word for these redresses.

P. John. I give it you, and will maintain my word.

And thereupon I drink unto your grace.

Hast. Go, captain, [To an Officer.] and deliver to the army

This nobly; let them have pay, and part: I know I will well please them; Hie thee, captain.

[Exit Officer.]

Arch. To you, my noble lord of Westmorland.

Wcl. I pledge your grace: And, if you knew what pains

I have bestow'd, to breed this present peace, You would drink freely; but my love to you Shall show itself more openly hereafter.

Arch. I do not doubt you.

Wcl. For health to my lord, and gentle cousin, Mowbray.

Mowb. You wish me health in very happy season;

For I am, on the sudden, something ill.

Arch. A peace is of the nature of a conquest; For then both parties nobly are subdued;

And neither party lost.

P. John. Go, my lord,

And let our army be discharged too.

[Exit Westmoreland.]

And, good my lord, so please you, let our trains March by us; that we may persecute the men

We should have cop'd withal.

Arch. Go, good lord Hastings,

And, ere they be dismissed, let them march by.

Re-enter Westmoreland.

P. John. I trust, my lord, we shall lie to-night together.

Re-enter Westmoreland.

Now, cousin, wherefore stands our army still?

Wcl. The leaders, having charge from you to

Will not go off until they hear you speak.

P. John. They know their duties.

Re-enter Hastings.

Hast. My lord, our army is dispers'd already: Like youthful steers anyhow'd they take their courses.

East, west, north, south; or, like a school broke up, Each hurries towards his home, and sporting-place.

Wcl. Good tidings, my lord Hastings; for the

I do arrest thee, traitor, of high treason— And you, lord bishop,—and you, lord Mowbray, Of capital treason I attach you both.

Now, is this proceeding just and honorable?

West, is your assembly so?

Arch. Will you thus break your faith?

P. John. I promise redress of these same grievances, Whereof you did complain; which, by mine honor, I will perform with a most Christian care.

But, for you, rebels—look to have the same

Meet for rebellion, and such acts as yours.

Most shallowly did you these arms commence.

Fondly brought here, and foolishly sent abroad.

Shall you not receive such severe chidition

Heaven, and not we, have scanty fought to-day;

Some guard these traitors to the block of death,

Treason's true bed, and yeilder up of breath.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—Another Part of the Forest.

Auroras: Excursions: Enter Falstaff and Colevile, meeting.

Fal. What's your name, sir? of what condition are you? and what is your place? I pray you.

Cole. I am a knight, sir; and my name is Colevile of the daie.

Fal. Well then, Colevile is your name, a knight is you; and of what place, the daie; Colevile shall still be your name,—a traitor your degree; and the dungeon your place,—a place deep enough; so shall you still be Colevile of the daie.

Cole. I see you are a knight, Sir John Falstaff.

Fal. As good a man as he, sir, who'er I am.

Do ye yield, sir? or shall I sweat for you? If I do sweat, they and drop of the lovers, and they will bear for the daie; therefore rise up fear and trembling, and do observance to my mercy.

Cole. I think you are sir John Falstaff: and, in that thought, yield me.

Fal. I have a whole school of tongues in this belly of mine; and not a tongue of them all speaks any other word but my name. An I had but a belly of the like difference, I were simply the most active fellow in Europe: My womb, my womb, my womb, undoes me.—Here comes our general.

Enter Prince John of Lancaster, Westmoreland, and others.

P. John. The heat is past, follow no further:—

Call in the powers, good cousin Westmoreland.

[Exit Westmoreland. Now, Falstaff, where have you been all this while?

When every thing is ended, then you come: These tardy tricks of yours will, on our life,

One time or other break some gallowes' back.

Fal. I will be sorry, my lord, but it should be thus; I never knew yet, but rebuke and check was the reward of valor. Do you think me a swallow, an arrow, or a bullet have I, in my poor and old motion, the expedition of thought! I have speeded hither with the very extremest imp of possibility: I have had time, or score and odd posts; and here, travel-taunted as I am, have, in my pure and immaculate valor, taken sir John Colevile of the daie, a most valiant knight and valorous enemy: But what of that! he saw me, and yielded; that I might, as usual, with the hook-nosed fellow of Rome, 4

I came, saw, and overcame.

P. John. It was more of his courtesy than your deserving.

Fal. I know not; here he is, and here I yield him: and beseech your grace let it be booked with the rest of this day's deeds; or by the Lord, I will have it in a particular ballad else, with mine own picture on the top of it, Colevile kissing my foot: To the which course, if I be enforced, if you do not all show me the kind offices to me: and may the sky of fame, over-shining you as much as the full moon doth the earrings of the element, which shew like pins' heads to her; believe not the word of the shadow. Therefore let me have right, and let desert mount.

P. John. Thine is too heavy to mount.

Fal. Let it shine there.

P. John. Thine's too thick to shine.

Fal. Let it do something, my good lord, that may do me good, and call it what you will.

P. John. Is thy name Colevile?

Cole. It is my lord.

Cole. And a famous true subject took him.

Cole, my lord, but as my betters are;

That led me hither: had they been ruled by me,

You should have won them nearer than you have.

Fal. I know not how they sold themselves; but thou hast done well, if thou hast.

Gavest thyself away, and I thank thee for thee.

Re-enter Westmoreland.

P. John. Now, have you left pursuit?

Wcl. Retreat is made, and execution stay'd.

P. John. Send Colevile, with his confederates,

To Westmoreland. Say, that we are present so kind and blunt, lead him hence; and see you guard him sure.

[Exeunt some with Colevile.

And now despatch we toward the court, my lords. I hear, the king my father is sore sick:

4 Foolishly.

5 Julius Caesar.
Scene IV. King Henry IV.

Our news shall go before us to his majesty,—
Which, cousin, you shall bear;—to comfort him: And we with sober speed will follow you.

Fal. Humph. Do beseech you, give me leave to go through Glossthere; and, when you come to court, stand my good lord, pray, in your good report.
P. John. Fare you well, Falstaff! I, in my condition,

Shall better speak of you than you deserve. [Exeunt.

Fal. I would, you had but the wit: 'Twere better now than your dukedom.—Good faith, this same young soldier's notion, nor have such men before: they cannot make him laugh;—but that's no marvel, he drinks no wine. There's never any of these demure boys come to any proof: for thin drink doth so help the blood to mend many a fainthearted meal, that they fall into a kind of male green-sickness; and then, when they marry, they yet wench:—they are generally tools and cowards;—which some of us should be too, but for inflammation. A good sherris-sack hath a two-fold operation in it. It ascends me into the brain; dines me there all the foolish, and dull, and crudy vapours which environ it; makes it apprehensive, quick, forgetive. Full of nimble, fiery, and delectable shapes; which delivered o'er to the voice, (the tongue, which is the breath, becomes excellent wit. The second property of this most vinous liquor, the warming of the blood; which, before cold and settled, left the liver white and pale, which is the badge of pusillanimity and cowardice: but the sherry warms it, and makes it burn, and thereby enflamesthe heart. It illumineth the face; which, as a beacon, gives warning to all the rest of this little kingdom, man, to array himself and then the vital communions, and into the petty spirits, muster me all to their captain, the heart; who, great, and puffed up with this retinue, doth any deed of courage: and this valor comes of sherris. So that still in the weapon is nothing without sack: for that sets it a-work: and learning, a mere gold of god, kept by a devil; till sack commences it, and sets it in act and use. Herecelf comes into it; the force therefore that skill of the weapon; for the cold blood he did naturally inherit of his father, he hath, like lean, sterile, and bare land, manured, husbanded, and tilled, with excellent endeavor of drinking good, and goodly ferment thereof. Therefore my grief stretcheth itself beyond the hour of death; The blood weeps from my heart, when I do shape, in forms imaginary, the ungirded days. And rotten times, that you shall look upon When I am sleeping with my ancestors. For when his headstrong root hath no curb, When rage and hot blood are his counsellors, When tumults and false counsellors combine, O, with what wings shall his affections fly Towards fronting peril and oppos'd decay! War. My gracious lord, you look beyond him quite: The prince but studies his companions, Like a strange tongue: wherein, to gain the language, 'Tis needful that the most ignorant word He look'd upon, and heeded, which once attain'd, Your highness knows, comes to no further use, But to be known and hatred. So, like gross terms, The prince will, in the perfectness of time, Cast off his followers, and make his monarchy Shall as a pattern or a measure live, By which his grace must meet the lives of others; Turning past evils to advantage.

K. Hen. Is it a thing so selfishly done? War. I think he's gone to hunt, my lord at Windsor.
P. John. And how accompanied?

K. Hen. I do not know, my lord.

P. John. Is not his brother, Thomas of Clarence, with him?

K. Hen. Humphrey, my son of Glouster, whom the prince your brother

P. Humph. I think he's gone to hunt, my lord at Windsor.
P. John. And how accompanied?

P. John. I do not know, my lord.

K. Hen. Is not his brother, Thomas of Clarence, with him?

P. Humph. No, my good lord, he is in presence here.

Cla. What would my lord and father?

K. Hen. He loves you, and thou dost neglect him, Thomas; Thou hast a better place in his affection, Than all thy brothers; cherish it, my boy; And noble offices thou mayst effect

Between his greatness and thy other brethren: Therefore omit him not; but love not his love; Nor lose the good advantage of his grace, By seeming cold, or cautiousness of word. For he is gracious, if he be observed; He hath a tear for pity, and a hand OPEN as day, for melting charity: Yet withstanding, being incurred, he's d'tint; As humorous as winter, and as sudden As flaws concealed in the spring of day. His temper, therefore, must be well observed: Chide him for faults, and do it reverently, When you perceive his blood inclined to mirth: But, being moody, give him line and scope; Till that his passions, as a while on ground, Confounded with themselves, shall learn this Thomas, And thou shalt prove a shelter to thy friends; A hoop of gold, to blind thy brothers in; That the united vessels of the realm May be mended with the assistance of the heart, Mingleth venom of suggestion. (As, for perforce, the age will pour it in,) Shall never leak, though it work as strong As an incensed and raging volcano.

Cla. I shall observe him with all care and love.

K. Hen. Why art thou not at Windsor with him, The Earl?

Cla. He is not there to-day; he dines in London. K. Hen. And how accompanied? canst thou tell that?

Cla. With his friends, and other his continual followers.

K. Hen. Most subject is the fattest soil to weeds; And he, the noble image of my youth, Is overspread with them. There are my griefs Stretched itself beyond the hour of death; The blood weeps from my heart, when I do shape, in forms imaginary, the ungirded days. And rotten times, that you shall look upon When I am sleeping with my ancestors. For when his headstrong root hath no curb, When rage and hot blood are his counsellors, When tumults and false counsellors combine, O, with what wings shall his affections fly Towards fronting peril and oppos'd decay! War. My gracious lord, you look beyond him quite: The prince but studies his companions, Like a strange tongue: wherein, to gain the language, 'Tis needful that the most ignorant word He look'd upon, and heeded, which once attain'd, Your highness knows, comes to no further use, But to be known and hatred. So, like gross terms, The prince will, in the perfectness of time, Cast off his followers, and make his monarchy Shall as a pattern or a measure live, By which his grace must meet the lives of others; Turning past evils to advantage.

K. Hen. Is it a thing so selfishly done? War. I think he's gone to hunt, my lord at Windsor.
P. John. And how accompanied?

K. Hen. I do not know, my lord.

P. John. Is not his brother, Thomas of Clarence, with him?

K. Hen. Humphrey, my son of Glouster, whom the prince your brother

P. Humph. I think he's gone to hunt, my lord at Windsor.
P. John. And how accompanied?

P. John. I do not know, my lord.

K. Hen. Is not his brother, Thomas of Clarence, with him?
K. Hen. O Westmoreland, thou art a summer-bird,
Which ever in the branch of winter sings
The lifting up of day. Look! Here's more news.

Enter Hardcourt.

Har. From enemies heaven keep your majesty;
And when they stand against you, may they fail
As those that I am come to tell you of:
The ear Northumberland, and the lord Bardolph,
With a great-power of English, and all Scots,
Are by the sheriff of Yorkshire overthrown:
The manner and true order of the fight,
This packet, please it you, contains at large.

K. Hen. And wherefore should these good news make me sick?
Will fortune never come with both hands full,
But write her fair words still in loudest letters?
She gives a stomach, and no food,—
Such are the poor, in health; or else a feast,
And takes away the stomach,—such are the rich,
That have abundance, and enjoy it not.
I should rejoice now at this happy news:
And now my sight fails, and my brain is giddy:—
O me! come nearer, now I am much ill. [Swounds.

P. Humph. Comfort, your majesty!
Cla. O, my royal father!
West. My sovereign lord, cheer up yourself, look
War. Be patient, princes; you do know, these fits
Are with his highness very ordinary.
Stand from him, give him air; he'll straight be well.
Cla. No, no; he cannot long hold out these pangs;
The certain care and labor of his soul
Hath wrought the more,6 that should confine it in,
So thin, that life looks through, and will break out.

P. Humpf. The people fear me;7 for they do ob-serve,
Unfather'd heirs, and loathly birds of nature;
The seasons change their manners, as the year
Had found some months asleep, and leapt them over.
Cla. The river hath thrice flowed, no ebb between?
And the old folk, time's dotting chronicles,
Say, it did so, a little time before
That great-grand sire, Edward, sick'd and died.
War. Speak lower, princes, for the king recovers.
P. Humpf. This apoplexy will, certain, be his end.
K. Hen. I pray you, take me up, and bear me hence
Into some other chamber; softly, pray.

[They convey the King into an inner part of the room, and place him on a bed.

Let there be no noise made, my gentle friends;
Unless some dul'd and favorable hand
Will whisper music to my weary spirit.
War. All for the music in the other room.

K. Hen. Set me the crown upon my pillow here.
Cla. His eye is hollow, and his changes much.

War. Less noise, less noise.

Enter Prince Henry.

P. Hen. Who saw the duke of Clarence?
Cla. I am here, brother, full of beauneess.
P. Hen. How now! rain within doors, and none abroad.
How doth the king?
P. Humpf. Exceeding ill.

P. Hen. Heard he the good news yet?
Tell it him.
P. Humpf. He alter'd much upon the hearing it.

P. Hen. With joy, he will recover without physic.
War. Not so much noise, my lords:—sweet prince, speak low;
The king your father is disposed to sleep.
Cla. Let us withdraw into the other room.

War. Wilt'ple ease your grace to go along with us?
P. Hen. No; I will sit and watch here by the king.

[Exeunt all but P. Henny.

Why doth the crown lie there upon his pillow,
Being so troublesome a belifeloud?
O foolish perturbation! golden care!
That keepeth yet the parts8 of sleep, and open wide
To many a watchful night!—sleep with it now!

Yet not so sound, and half so deep sweetly
As he, whose brow, with homely beauty, bound,
Snored out the watch of night. Of majesty!
When then dost push thy bearer, thou dost sit
Like a rich armor worn in heat of day,
That scents with safety. By his gates of breath
There is a lowly chamber, which stinks not,
Did he suspect, that light and weightless down
Perforce must move.—My gracious lord! my father!
This sleep is sound indeed; this is a sleep
That from this golden rigid9 hath divorced
So many English kings. Thy due, from me, is tears, and heavy sorrow of the blood;
When that great prince, how tall and full of tenderness,
Shall, O dear father, pay thee plentifully;
My due, from thee, is this imperial crown;
Which, as immediate from thy place and blood,
Dervies itself to me. Lo, here it sits.

[Putting it on his head.
Which heaven shall guard; And put the world's whole
Into one giant arm, it shall not force
This linclal honor from me: This from thee
Will I to mine leave, as'tis left to me.

[Exit.
K. Hen. Warwick! Gloster! Clarence!
Re-enter Warwick, and the rest.

Cla. Both the king call!
War. What would your majesty! How fares your grace!
K. Hen. Why did you leave me here alone, my

War. We left the prince my brother here, my liege,
Who undertook to sit and watch by you.
K. Hen. The prince of Wales! Where is he? let me see him:
He is not here.

War. This door is open; he is gone this way,
P. Humpf. He came not through the chamber where we stay'd.
K. Hen. Where is the crown? who took it from my pillow!
War. When we withdrew, my liege, we left it here.
K. Hen. The prince hath taken it hence.—go, seek him out:
Is he so hasty, that he doth suppose
My sleep my death!
Find him, my lord of Warwick; chide him hither.

[Exit Warwick.

This part of his conjures with my disease.
And helps to end me.—see, sons, what things you are!
How quickly nature falls into revolt,
When gold becomes her object!
For this the bold and over-careful fathers
Have broke their sleep with thoughts, their brains with care,
Their bones with industry;
For this they have the crossed and pilled up
The chamber'd heaps of strange-achieved gold;
For this they have been thoughtfull to invest
Their sons with arts, and martial exercises:
When, like the bee, tolling9 from every flower
The virtuous sweets;
Our thighs packed with wax, our mouths with honey,
We bring it to the hive; and, like the bees,
Are murder'd for our pains. This bitter taste
Yield his engrossments9 to the ending father.

[Re-enter Warwick.

Now, where is he that will not stay so long
Till his friend sickness hath determined10 me
War. He, my lord; I found the prince in the next room,
Washing with kindly tears his gentle cheeks;
With such a deep deumner in great sorrow,
That tyranny, which much never queller blood,
Would, beholdling him, have wash'd his knote
With gentle eye-drops. He is coming hither.
K. Hen. But wherefore did he take away the crown?

[Re-enter Prince Henry.

Lo, where he comes.—Come hither to me, Harry;
Depart the chamber, leave us here alone.

[Exeunt Clarence, Prince Humphrey,
Lords, &c.
Scene IV.

KING HENRY IV.

P. Hen. I never thought to hear you speak again.
K. Hen. Thy wish was safer, Harry, to that thought:
I stay too long by thee, I weary thee,
Dost thou so hunger for my empty chair,
That thou wilt needs invest thee with mine honors
Before thee to be ripe? O foolish youth!
Thomas K. I thought to have disdained that thee.
Stay but a little; for my cloud of dignity
Is held from falling with so weak a wind,
That it will quickly drop; my day is dim.
Therefore, which is good, let us begin the hour,
That we have been below, and since that few hours,
Were thine without offence; and, at my death,
Thou hast seal'd up my expectation:*
Thy life did manifest, thou lovest me not,
And thou wilt have me die a case of it,
Thou hid'st a thousand daggers in thy thoughts;
Which thou hast whetted on thy stony heart,
To stab at half an hour of my life:
What canst thou not forbear me half an hour?
Then get thee gone, and dig my grave thyself;
And bid the merry bells ring to thine ear,
That thou art crowned, not that I am dead.
Let all the tears that should bedew my heart,
Be drops of balm, to sanctify thy head;
Only compound me with begotten dust;
Or thou hast, which I know thou hast,
Pluck down my officers, break my decrees;
For now a time is come to mock at form,
Harry the Fifth is crown'd:—Up, vanity!
Down, royal state! Sails upon royal oars, hence!
And to the English court assemble now,
From every region, apes of idleness!
Now, neighbor confines, purge you of your scum:
Hence, Lex talionis, that will war, drink, dance.
Revel the night: rob, murder, and commit
The oldest sins the newest kind of ways!
Be happy, he will trouble you no more;
England shall be double, and his guilty
For the fifth Harry from curb'd license plucks.
The muzzle of restraint, and the wild dog
Shall dash his tooth, and every inch incense,
O my poor kingdom, sick with civil blows!
When that my care could not withhold thy riots,
What will thou do, when riot is thy care?
O, thou wilt be a wilderness again,
Peopled with wolves, thy old inhabitants!

P. Hen. O pardon me, my liege! but for my tears, Kneeling.
The most impediments unto my speech,
I had forestall'd this dear and deep rebuke,
Ere you with grief had spoke, and I had heard
The course of it so far. There is your crown;
And that, which is my greatest blessing,
Long guard it yours! If I affect it more,
Than as your honor, and as your renown,
Let me no more from this obedience rise,
Which may my most true and hearted duties
Teach't, this prostrate and exterior bending!
Heaven witness with me, when I here came in,
And sound no course of breath within your majesty,
How cold it struck my heart! If I do reign,
O, let me in my present wildness die;
And never live to show the incredible world
The noble change that I have purposed!
Come, let us look on you, thinking you dead,
(And dead almost, my liege, to think you were,) I spake unto the crown, as having sense,
And thus upbraided it. The care on thee depending, Husbands upon the body of my father;
Therefore, thou, best of gold, art worst of gold,
Other, less pine in care; is more precious,
Precious in my heart; couldst thou be bold:
But thou, most fair, most honored, most renowned,
Hast cut thy enter bawr. Thus, my most royal liege,
Accus't, I put it on my head;
To try with it,—as with an enemy,
That had before my face murder'd my father,—
The quarrel of a true inheritor.
But if it did infect my blood with joy,
ACT V.

Enter SHALLOW, FALSTAFF, BARDOLPH, and Page.

Shal. By cock and pye, sir, you shall not away to-night.—What, Davy, I say?

Davy. You must excuse me, master Robert Shallow.

Shal. I will not excuse you; you shall not be excused; excuses shall not be admitted; there is no excuse shall serve; you shall not be excused.—Why, Davy!

Enter Davy.

Davy. Here, sir.

Shal. Davy, Davy, Davy,—let me see, Davy; let me see:—yea, marry, William cook, bid him come hither.—Sir John, you shall not be excused.

Davy. Marry, sir; thus; these precepts cannot be served: and, again, sir,—Shall we sow the headland with wheat?

Shal. With red wheat, Davy. But for William cook,—there are no young pigeons.

Davy. Yes, sir.—Here is now the smith's note, for shoewing and plough-rones.

Shal. Let it be cast, and paid:—sir John, you shall not be excused.

Davy. Now, sir, a new link to the bucket must needs be had: And, sir, do you mean to stop any of William's wyes, about the sack he lost the other day at Huncleby fair?

Shal. He shall answer it:—some pigeons, Davy; a couple of short-legged hens; a joint of mutton; and any pretty little tiny kiekskave, tell William cook.

Davy. Both the man of war stay all night, sir?

Shal. Yes, Davy, I will use him well; A friend the court is better than a penny in purse. Use his men well, Davy; for they are arrant knaves, and will backbite.

Davy. No worse than they are back-bitten, sir; for they have marvellous foul linen.

Shal. Well concert, Davy. About thy business, Davy.

Davy. I beseech you, sir, to countenance William Visor of Wincet, against Clement Perce of the hill.

Shal. There are many complaints, Davy, against that Visor; that Visor is an arrant knave, on my knowledge.

Davy. I grant your worship, that he is a knave, sir: but yet, God forbid, sir, but a knave should have some countenance at his friend's request. An honest man, sir, is able to speak for himself, when a knave is not. I have served my worship truly, sir, these eight years; and if I cannot once or twice in a quarter bear out a knave against an honest man, I have but a very little credit with your worship. The knave is my honest friend, sir; therefore, I beseech your worship, let him be countenanced.

Shal. Go to; I say, he shall have no worse. Look about, Davy. [Exit Davy.] Where are you, sir John! Come, off with your boots.—Give me your hand, master Bardolph.

Bard. I am glad to see your worship.

Shal. I thank thee with all my heart, kind master Bardolph:—and welcome, my tall fellow. [To the Page.] Come, sir John. [Exit Shallow.] Davy, I'll follow you, good master Robert Shallow. Bardolph, look to our horses. [Exit Bardolph and Page.] If I were sawed into quantities, I should make four dozen of such bearded hermit's staves as is in my hand. It is a wonderful thing to see the semblable coherence of his men's spirits and his: They, by observing him, do bear themselves like foolish justices; he, by conversing with them, is turned into those-servants: their spirits are so married in conjunction with the participation of society, that they flock together in consort, like some scolding wives. If I had a suit to master Shallow, I would humor his men with the imputation of being near their master: if to his men, I would carry with master Shallow, that no man could better command his servants. It is certain, that either wise bearing, or ignorant carriage, is caught as men take diseases, one of another: therefore, let men take heed of their company. I will devise and open out of this master Shallow, to keep prince Harry in continual laughter, the wearing- out of six fashions, (which is four terms, or two actions,) and he shall laugh without intercessions. O, it is a thing, that with a sight, and a jest, with a sad brow, will do with a fellow that never had the ache in his shoulders! O, you shall see him laugh till his face be like a wet cloak all laid up.

Shal. [Within.] Sir John!

Fal. I come, master Shallow; I come, master Shallow. [Exit Falstaff.

SCENE II.—Westminster. A Room in the Palace.

Enter WARWICK, and the LORD CHIEF JUSTICE.

War. How now, my lord chief Justice! whither away?

Ch. Just. How doth the king?

War. Exceeding well; his cares are now all ended.

Ch. Just. I hope, not dead.

War. He's walk'd the way of nature; And, to our purposes, he lives no more.

Ch. Just. I would his majesty had called me with the service that I truly did his life, Hath let me open to all injuries.

War. Indeed, I think the young king loves you.

Ch. Just. I know he doth not; and do arm myself; To welcome the condition of the time; Which cannot look more hideously upon me Than I have drawn it in my fantasy.

Enter Prince John, Prince Humphrey, Clarence, Westmoreland, and others.

War. Here comes the heavy issue of dead Harry: O, that the living Harry had the temper Of him, the worst of these three gentlemen! How many nobles then should hold their places, That must strike soul to spirits of vile sort! Ch. Just. Alas! I fear, all will be overturn'd.

P. John. We meet like men that had forgot to speak.

War. We do remember; but our argument Is too heavy to admit such talk.

P. John. Well, peace be with us, least we be heavier.

P. Humph. O, good my lord, you have lost a friend indeed:

And I dare swear, you borrow not that face Of seeming sorrow; it is, sure, your own.

P. John. Though no man be assur'd what grace to find, You stand in coldest expectation: I am the worse; would I were otherwise.

Ch. Just. Well, you must now speak sir John Falstaff fair;

Which swims against your stream of quality.

Ch. Just. Peace be with us, least we be heavier.

P. John. Though no man be assur'd what grace to find, You stand in coldest expectation: I am the worse; would I were otherwise.

Ch. Just. Peace be with us, least we be heavier.

P. John. Though no man be assur'd what grace to find, You stand in coldest expectation: I am the worse; would I were otherwise.

Ch. Just. Peace be with us, least we be heavier.

P. John. Though no man be assur'd what grace to find, You stand in coldest expectation: I am the worse; would I were otherwise.

Ch. Just. Peace be with us, least we be heavier.

P. John. Though no man be assur'd what grace to find, You stand in coldest expectation: I am the worse; would I were otherwise.

Ch. Just. Peace be with us, least we be heavier.

P. John. Though no man be assur'd what grace to find, You stand in coldest expectation: I am the worse; would I were otherwise.

Ch. Just. Peace be with us, least we be heavier.

P. John. Though no man be assur'd what grace to find, You stand in coldest expectation: I am the worse; would I were otherwise.

Ch. Just. Peace be with us, least we be heavier.

P. John. Though no man be assur'd what grace to find, You stand in coldest expectation: I am the worse; would I were otherwise.

Ch. Just. Peace be with us, least we be heavier.

P. John. Though no man be assur'd what grace to find, You stand in coldest expectation: I am the worse; would I were otherwise.

Ch. Just. Peace be with us, least we be heavier.
King. This new and gorgeous garbment, majesty,
Sits not so easy on me as you think,—
Brothers, you mix your sadness with some fear;
The next thing is the English Turkish court;
Not Amurath an Amurath succeeds,
But Harry, Harry: Yet be sad, good brothers,
For, to speak truth, it very well becomes you;
So now so royally in your gowns of noble council,
That I will deckly put the fashion on,
And wear it in my heart. Why then, be sad:
But entertain no more of it, good brothers,
There is a joint hurdle and a fatal terror
For me, by Heaven, I bid you be assured,
I'll be your father and your brother too;
Let me but bear your love, I'll bear your cares.
You keep, that Harry, and will I; But Harry lives, that shall convert those tears,
By number, into hours of happiness.
[Exeunt.]

KING.

Scene III.—Gloucestershire. The Garden of Shallows' House.

Enter Falstaff, Shallow, Silence, Bardolph, the Page, and Davy.

Shal. Nay, you shall see mine orchard: where, in an arbor, we shall eat a last year's pippin of my own grafting, with a dish of carraways, and so forth;

Fal. Fore God, you have here a goodly dwelling, and a rich.

Shal. Barren, barren, barren; beggars all, beggars all, beggars all. —I'll put you in, good sir.—Spread, Davy; spread, Davy; well said, Davy.

Fal. This Davy serves you for good uses; he is your serving-man, and your husbandman.

Shal. A good varlet, a good varlet, a very good varlet, sir John.—By the mass, I have drunk too much suck at supper:—A good varlet. Now sit down, now sit down,—come, cousin.

Sil. Hark, sir, this is your quibbling.—Let us do nothing but eat and make good cheer.

Singing.

And praise heaven for the merry year,
When flesh is cheap and female fair,
And lusty lads roam here and there,
So merrily.

And ever among so merrily.

Fal. There's a merry heart! Good master Silence, I'll give you a health for that anon.

Shal. Give master Bardolph some wine, Davy.

Davy. Jove, sir, or, in speaking Bardolph and the Page at another table: I'll be with you presently, my sweet sir, sit: Master page, good master page, sit: produce! What you want in meat, we'll have in drink. But you must bear; the heart's all.

[Singing.

Bardolph. Shal. Be merry, master Bardolph:—and my little soldier there, be merry.

Sil. Be merry, be merry, my wife's as all;

[Singing.

For woman ere she's, both short and tall;
'Tis merry in hall, when hearts wag all,

And welcome merry, wrong, or true.

Bardolph. Fal. I did not think master Silence had been a man of this mettle.

Shal. Who, if? I have been merry twice and once, ere now.

Re-enter Davy.

Davy. There is a dish of leather-coats for you.

[Setting them before BARDOLPH.

Bardolph. Davy. Your worship?—I'll be with you straight.

Singing.

A cup of wine, that's brisk and fine.

And drink unto the lady mine,

And a merry heart lives long a.

FAL. Well said, master Silence.

Sil. And we shall be merry;—now comes in the sweet of the night.

Fal. Health and long live to you, master Silence. Sil. Fill the cup, and let it come;

I'll pledge you a mile to the bottom.

[Singing.

Summon. Sil. Italians, much good may it do you.

[Apples commonly called rusticines.
Act V.

Enter Beadles, dragging in Hostess Quickly, and Doll Tearsheet. Host. No, that arrant knave; I would, I might die, that I might have thee hanged: thou hast drawn my shoulder out of joint.

1 Bead. The constables have delivered her over to me; and she shall have whipping-sheer enough, I warrant her: there had been a man or two lately killed after her. Doll. Nut-hook, nut-hook, you lie. Come on! I'll tell thee what, thou damned tripe-swigged rascal; and the child I now go with, do miscarry, thou hadst better thou hadst struck thy mother, thou paper faced villain! Host. O Lord, that sir John were come! he would make this a bloody day to somebody. But I pray God, the fruit of her womb miscarry! Doll. If I do, you shall have a dozen cushions under your legs; and I'll give you another. Host. Well, that is a bitter thing, why, come, what? and you and Pistol beat among you.

Doll. Come, you fine bloke! I'll tell thee what, thou thin man in a coat! I will have you as soundly sworn for this, you blue-bottle rogue! you filthy, distempered corporator! if you be not swung, I'll foresew half your livers.

1 Bead. Come, come, you knave, and come, your lady, I think 'a be; but goodman Puff of Barson.

Doll. Come, you rogue, come; bring me to a justice.

Host. Ay, come, you starved blood-hound.

Doll. Goodman death! Goodman bones! Doll. Thou atom, thou!

Doll. Come, thou thin thing; come, you nurse! 1 Bead. Very well.

SCENE V.—A public Place near Westminster Abbey.

Enter two Grooms, ac'ompanied by Rushes.

1 Groom. More rushes, more rushes.

2 Groom. The trumpets have sounded twice.

1 Groom. It will be two o'clock ere they come from the coronation: Despatch, despatch.

[Exit Grooms.

Enter Falstaff, Shallow, Pistol, Bardolph, and the Page.

Fal. Stand here by me, master Robert Shallow; I will make the king do you grace: I will leer upon him, as he comes by; and do but mark the countenance that he will give me.

Pist. God bless thy lungs, good knight.

Fal. Come here, Pistol; stand behind me. If I had hard time to have made new liveries, I would have borrowed the thousand pound I borrowed of you. [To Shallow.] But 'tis no matter; this poor show doth better: this doth infer the zeal I had to see him.

Shall. It doth so.

Fal. It shows my earnestness of affection.

Shall. It doth so.

Fal. My motto.

Shall. If it doth, it doth.

Fal. As it were, to ride day and night; and not to deliberate, not to remember, not to have patience with him.

Shall. It is most certain.

Fal. But to stand staid with travel, and sweating with desire to see him: thinking of nothing else; putting us matters else in oblivion; as if there were nothing else to be done, but to see him.

1 A term of reprehension for a catchpole.

2 To stuff her out to counterfeit pregnancy.

3 Beadles usually wore a blue livery. 4 short cloaks.
And, as we hear, you do reform yourselves,
We will,—according to your strength, and qual-
tics,—
Give you advancement.—Be it your charge, my son.

To see perform'd, the tenor of our word.—

Set on. [Exeunt King, and his Train.

Fal. Master Shallow, I owe you a thousand pound.

Shal. Ay, marry, sir John; which I beseech you to let me have home with me.

Fal. That can hardly be, master Shallow. Do not you grace at this; I shall be sent for in private to him: look you, he must seem thus to the world.
Fear not your advancement; I shall be the man that shall make you great.

Shal. I cannot perceive how; unless you give me your doublet, and stuff me out with straw. I beseech you, good sir John, let me have five hundred of my thousand.

Fal. Sir, I will be as good as my word: this that you heard, was but a color.

Shal. A color, I fear, that you will die in, sir John.

Fal. Fear no colors; go with me to dinner. Come, lieutenant Pistole;—come, Bardolph:—I shall be sent for soon at night. [Exeunt.

Re-enter Prince John, the Chief Justice, Officers, &c.

Ch. Just. Go, carry sir John Falstaff to the Fleet;
Take all his company along with him.

Fal. My lord, my lord,—

Ch. Just. I cannot now speak: I will hear you soon.

Take them away.

Pist. St. Ffairme, me tormenta, spera me contenta. [Exeunt Fal, Shal, Pist, Bard, Page, and Officers.

P. John. I like this fair proceeding of the king's;
He hath intended, list, would followers
Shall all be very well provided for;
But all are banish'd, till their conversations
Appear more wise and modest to the world.

Ch. Just. And so they are.

P. John. The king hath call'd his parliament, my lord.

Ch. Just. He hath.

P. John. I will lay odds,—that cre this year expire,
We bear our civil swords and native fire,
As far as France: I hear a bird so sing,
Whose music, to my thinking, pleas'd the king.

Come, will you hence! [Exeunt.

EPILOGUE.—Spoken by a Dancer.

First, my fear; then, my court'sy; last, my speech. My fear is, your displeasure; my court'sy, my duty; and my speech, to beg your pardon. If you look for a good speech now, you unde me: for what I have to say is of mine own making; and what, indeed, I should say, will, I doubt, prove mine own marring. But to the purpose, and so to the creature,—Be it known to you (as it is very well) I was lately here in the east of a displeasing play, to pray your patience for it, and to promise but a better. I did mean, indeed, to pay you with this speech, as much like an ill-timed speech, as come unexpectively home. I break, and you, my gentle creditors, now.
Here, I promised you, I would be, and here I convinced my body to your mercy: bade me some, and I will not be false to you, and as most debtors do, promise you instantly.

If my tongue cannot entreat you to acquiesce, will you command me to use my legs? and yet

KING HENRY V.

PERSONS REPRESENTED.

King Henry the Fifth.
Duke of Gloucester.
Duke of Bedford.
Duke of Exeter, Uncle to the King.
Duke of York, Constable of the Realm.
Earls of Salisbury, Westmoreland, and Warwick.
Archbishop of Canterbury.
Bishop of Ely.
Earl of Cambridge, Conspirators against the King.
Sir Thomas Grey.
Sir Thomas Erpingham, Gower, Flitellere, Marmorise, Jamy, Officers in King Henry's army.
Bates, Court, Williams, Soldiers in the same.
Nym, Bardolph, Pistol, formerly Servants to Falstaff, now Soldiers in the same.
Boy, Servant to them.

A Herald.
Chorus.

Charles the Sixth, King of France.
Lewis, the Dauphin.
Dukes of Burgosny, Orleans, and Bourbon.
The Constable of France.
Kambures, and Grandpre, French Lords.
Governor of Harleum.
Montjoy, a French Herald.
Ambassadors to the King of England.
Isabel, Queen of France.
Katharine, Daughter of Charles and Isabel.
Alice, a Lady attending on the Princess Katharine.
Quickly, Pistol's Wife, an Hostess.

Lords, Ladies, Officers, French and English Soldiers, Messengers, and Attendants.

The SCENE, at the beginning of the play, lies in England; but afterwards wholly in France.

Enter Chorus.

O, for a muse of fire that would ascend
The brightest heaven of invention!
A kingdom for a stage, princes to act,
And monarchs to behold the swelling scene!
Then should the warlike Harry, like himself,
Assume the port of Mars; and at his heels,
Leash'd in like hounds, should famine, sword, and fire,
Crouch for employment. But pardon, gentle all,
The flat unraised spirit, that hath dared
On this unworthy scaffold, to bring forth
So great an object: Can this cockpit hold
The vasty fields of France, or may we cram
Within the woof of a fair vision? 1
That did at last the air at Agincourt?
O, pardon! since a crooked figure may
Attest, in little place, a million;

And let us, ciphers to this great account,
On your imaginary forces 2 work:
Suppose, within the girdle of these walls,
Are now confined two mighty monarchies,
Whose high upraised and und/ilting fronts
The perilous narrow ocean parts asunder.
Fierce out our imperfections with your thoughts,
Into a thousand parts divide one man,
And make imaginary puissance:
Think, when we talk of horses, that you see them
Printing their proud hoofs in the receiving earth:
For 'tis your thoughts that now must deck our kings;
Carry them here and there; jumping o'er times;
Turning the accomplishment of many years
Into an hour-glass; For the which supply,
Admit the Chorus to this history;
Who, prologue-like, your humble patience pray,
Gently to hear, kindly to judge, our play.

ACT I.

Enter the Archbishop of Canterbury, and Bishop of Ely.

Cont. My Lord, I'll tell you, that self bill is urgent,
Which, in the eleventh year of the last king's reign,
Was like, and had indeed against us pass'd,

1 An allusion to the circular form of the theatre.
2 Powers of fancy.
SCENE II. — A Room of State in the same.

Enter KING HENRY, GLOSTER, BEDFORD, EXETER, WARWICK, WESTMORELAND, and Attendants.

King.

K. Hen. Where is my gracious lord of Canterbury?

Sir. Not here in person.

K. Hen. Send him, good uncle.

West. Shall we call in the ambassador, my liege?

K. Hen. Not yet, my cousin; we would be re-serve his presence: — before we hear him, of some things of weight.

That task our thoughts concerning us and France.

Enter the ARCHBISHOP of CANTERBURY and BISHOP of ELY.

Cent. God, and his angels, guard your sacred throne.

And make you long become it!

K. Hen. Please you to proceed;

And justly and religiously unfail.

Why the law Salique, that they have in France,

Or should, or should not bar us in our claim.

And God forbid, my dear and faithful lord,

Your diocese, or whatever court your reading,

Or nicely charge your understanding soul!

With opening titles misdrawn, whose right

Suit not in native colors with the truth:

For God did know, how many things of health,

Shall drop their blood in approbation

Of what your reverence shall invite us to:

Therefore take heed how you impawn our person,

How you smoke the sleeping sword of war;

We charge you in the name of God, take heed:

For never two such kingdoms did contend,

Without much fall of blood; whose guiltless drops

Gainst his, whose wrongs give edge unto the swords

That make such waste in brief mortality.

Under this conjunction, speak, my lord:

And we will hear, note, and believe in heart,

What that you speak is in your conscience wash'd

As pure as sin with baptism.

Conf. This is before the gracious sovereignty, and you peers,

That owe your lives, your faith, and services,

To this imperial throne: Therefore, —

To make against your highness' claims to France,

But this which they produce from Frainand,—

In terram Salicam motiles ni succentin,

No ususum salicem in Salicem transigere,

Which Salique land the French unjustly cloze, &

To be the realm of France, and Pharamond

The founder of this law and female bar,

Yet their own authors faithfully affirm,

That the land Salique lies in Germany.

Between the douts of Saha and of Elfie:

Where Charles the great, having subdued the Saxons

There left behind and settled certain French;

Who, holding in disdain the German women,

For some dishonest manners of their life,

Established here the French law to this day

Should be inheretrix in Salique land;

Which Salique, as I said, 'twixt Elfie and Saha,

Is at this day in Germany called — Messen.

Thus doth it well appear, the Salique law

Was not devised for the realm of France:

Nor did the French possess the Salique land

Until four hundred one-and-twenty years

After deduction of king Pharamond,

Idly suppos'd the founder of this law:

Who died within the year of our redemption—

Four hundred twenty-six; and Charles the great

Subdued the Saxons, and did send the French

Beyond the river Saha, in the year

Eight hundred five.  Besides, their writers say,

King Pem, which disposed Childeric,

Died, as far as general, being descended

Of Bithild, which was daughter to king Clothair,
KING HENRY V.  Act I.

Make claim and title to the crown of France.
Hugh Capet also,—that usurped the crown Of Charles the duke of Lorain, sole heir male Of the house and name of Lothair the great,—
To find his title with some show of truth, (Though, in pure truth, it was corrupt and naught,) Came to his throne as his right held, Angage, Daughter to Charles, who was the son To Lewis the emperor, and Lewis the son Of Charles the great. Also king Lewis the tenth, Who was as sole heir to the usurped state, Could not keep quiet in his conscience, Wearing the crown of France, till satisfied That fair queen Isabel, his grandmother, With bride of the Frangre, upon which Daugther to Charles the foresaid duke of Lorain: By the which marriage, the line of Charles the great Was re-united to the crown of France. So that, as clear as is the sun in heaven, King Pepin's title, and Hugh Capet's claim, King Lewis his satisfaction, all appear.

To hold in right and title of the female; So do the times of France unto this day:
Howbeit they would hold up this Salique law, To bar your highness claiming from the female; And rather choose to hide them in a net, Than amply to inharb 4 their crooked titles Usurp'd from you and your progenitors.

K. Hen. May I, with right and conscience, make this question?

But that the Scot on his unpard’l’d kingdom Came pouring, like the tide into a breach, With ample and brim fullness of his force; Girding with grievous siege, castles and towns; That England, being empty of defence, Hath shook, and troubled at the ill neighborhood. Cont. The time has been then more hard’n 4 than harm’d, my liege: For hear her but exampl’d by herself,— When her chivalry had been in France, And she a mourning widow of her nobles, She hath herself not only well defended, But taken, and impounded as a stray, The king of France, and all his land she dote to France,— To fill king Edward’s farm with prisoner kings: And make your chronicle as rich with praise, As is the ozso and bottom of the sea: With such h_v_a’d names and罕见 assurances. West. But there’s a saying, very old and true,—

If that you will France win, Then with Scotland first begin.

For once the eagle England being in prey, To her ungranted nest the wnosly Scot Comes sneaking, and so sucks her princely eggs; Playing the mouse, in absence of the cat, To spoil and havoc more than she can cat.

Exc. It follows then, the cat must stay at home: Yet that’s the cat’s and necessity’s
Since we have locks to safeguard necessarys, And pretty traps to catch the petty thieves. While that the armed hand doth tight abroad, The armless head droops itself naked bare: For government, though high, and low, and lower, Put into parts, doth keep in one concet; Congruing 6 in a tall and natural close, A true principle.

Cont. True: therefore doth heaven divide The state of man in divers functions, Setting each reader to his proper count: To which is fixed, as an aim or butt, Obedience: for so work the honey bees; Creatures, that, by a rule in nature, teach The art of order to the unpolict kingdom. They have a king, and officers of sorts: 9 Where some, like magistrates, correct at home; Others, like merchants, venture trade abroad; Others, like soldiers, armed in their stings. Make boot upon the summer’s velvet buds; Which pillage they with merry march bring home To the tent-royal of their emperor; Who, busied in his majesty, on’s way, The singing masons building roots of gold; The civil citizens kneading up the honey; The poor mechanic porters crowing in Their hard burdens and his narrow space; The sad-eyed justice, with his surly hum, Delivering o’re to executors’ pale The lazy yawning drone. I this infer,— That many things, though having full revenue, To one concet, may work contumaciously; As many arrows, skewed several ways, Fly to one mark; As many several ways meet in one town; As many fresh streams run in one self sea; As many lines close in the打扫 centre; So ran a thousand confederates, one and all End in one purpose, and be all well borne Without defeat. Therefore to France, my liege, Divide your happy England into four; Where you may take your quarter into France, And you withal shall make all Gallia shake. If we, with thrice that power left at home, Cannot defend our own door from the dog, Let us be warned; and our nation lose The name of hardness, and policy.

K. Hen. Call in the messengers, sent from the dauphin.

[Enter a messenger, The King ascends his throne. Now are we well resolv’d: and,—by God’s help, And yours, the noble signers of our power,— France being ours, we’ll bond it to our awe, And keep it still to pieee: Or else we’ll eat, Ruling in large and ample empire, 8 Of France, and all her almost kingly dukedoms; Or lay these honours in an unworthy urn,

4 Frightened. 5 Agreeing. 6 Diffe.ent degree. 7 Exceptioners. 8 Domin. an.
Tombless, with no remembrance over them:
Either our history shall, with full mouth,
Speak freely of our acts; or else our grave,
Like Turkish mute, shall have a tongueless mouth,
Not worshipp'd with a word of pith.

Enter Ambassadors of France.
Now are we well prepar'd to know the pleasure
Of our fair cousin dauphin; for we hear,
Your greeting is from him, not from the king.
Am't. May it please your majesty, to give us leave
Freely to render us without such an charge;
O: shall we sparingly show you far off
The dauphin's meaning and our embassy!
K. Hen. We are no tyrant, but a Christian king;
Under whose power grace and values must be
As are our wretched larder's in our prisons:
Therefore, with frank and with uncurbed plainness,
Tell us the dauphin's mind.
Am't. Thus then, in few.
Your highness, lately sending into France,
Did claim some certain dukedoms, in the right
Of your great predecessor, king Edward the third.
In answer of which claim, the prince our master
Says—that you savoir too much of your youth;
And bade you be advis'd, there's nothing in France,
That can be but that which is written in a book;
You cannot reveal dukedoms there:
He therefore sends you, meeter for your spirit,
The tim of treasure; and, in lieu of this,
Besides your claim, the dukedoms you claim,
Hear no more of you. This the dauphin speaks.
K. Hen. What treasure, uncle?
Am't. Tennis-balls, my liege.
K. Hen. We are glad, the dauphin is so pleasant
With us,
His present, and our pains: we thank you for:
When we have match'd our racket to these balls,
When our game, or any game, play a set,
Shall strike his father's crown into the hazard:
Tell him, he hath made a match with such a
That all the courts of France will be disturb'd
With chances.
And he understand us well,
How he comes over us with our wild days,
Not measuring what use we made of them.

Enter Chorus.
Chor. O hear! O hear! All the youth of England are on fire,
And will maintain in the wars with the French, now
Now thrive the armers, and honored's thought
Maintain solely in the breast of every man;
Thy shall the pastime now, to buy the horse;
Following the mirror of all Christian kings,
With winged heels, as English Mercenaries.
For now sits Expectation in the air;
And hates a sword, from darts unto the point,
Which these imperial, crowns and coronets,
Traised to Harry, and his followers.
The French advised by good intelligence
Of this most dreadful preparation,
Shall in their turn, and with pale policy
Seek to divert the English purposes,
O England!—model to thy inward greatness,
Like little body with a mighty heart,
What strength's but that, that honor would thee do,
Were all thy children kind and natural!
But see thy talents! France hath in them found
A nest of hollow basins, which he tills
With treacherous crowns: and three corrupt men—
One, Richard earl of Cambridge; and the second,
Henry lord Sceaux of Manchester, the third,
Sir Robert Grey, knight of Northumberland;—
Have, for the gift of France, (0 guilt, indeed!)
Conform'd conspiracy with traitor France;
And to their lusty France of loves must die,
(If hell and treason hold their promises)

ACT II.

We never valued this poor seat of England;
And therefore, living hence, did give myself
To barbarous cruelties; As 'tis ever common,
That men are meanest when they are from home.
But tell the dauphin—I will keep my word—
Be like a king, and show my son of greatness.
K. Hen. When I do house me in my throne of France:
For that I have laid by my majesty.
And plodded like a man for working-days;
But I will rise there with so full a glory,
That I will dazzle all the eyes of France.
Yea, strike the dauphin blind to own;
And tell the pleasant prince—this mock of his
Hath turned his balls to gun-stones; and his soul
Shall stand sure charged for the wasteful vengeance
That shall be with them: for many a thousand Widows
Shall this his mock mock out of their dear husbands;
Mock mothers from their sons, mock castles down;
And some are yet unscorn'd, and unborn.
That shall have cause to curse the dauphin's scorn.
But this lies all within the will of God,
To whom I do appeal; and in whose name,
Tell you the dauphin, I am coming on,
To venge me as I may, and to put forth
My rightful hand in a well-barrow'd cause.
So, set your horses in pace, and with the dauphin,
His jest will savour but of shallow wit.
When thousands weep, more than did laugh, at—
Convey them with safe conduct,—fear you well.

Exit Ambassadors.

Enter Chorus.
Chor. This was a merry message.
K. Hen. We hope to make the sender blush at it.
Therefore, my lords, unto no happy hour,
That may give furniture to our expedition:
For we have now no thought in us but France;
Save these to God, that ran before our business.
Therefore, let our proportions for these wars,
Be soon collected; and all things thought upon,
That may, with reasonable swiftness, add
More feathers to our Lyon; for, God secure,
We'll cause this dauphin at his father's cost.
Therefore, let every man now task his thought,
That this far action may on foot be bro't,
In defeat.
KING HENRY V.

Act II.

I will do as I may; that is my rest, and that is the rendezvous of it.

Bard. It is certain, corporal, that he is married to Nell Quickly; and, certainly, she did you wrong; for you were trothed to her.

Nym. I cannot tell; but, as we may say, men may sleep, and they may have their throats about them at that time, knives have no eyes; it must be as it may; though patience be a tired mare, yet she will plot. There must be conclusions. Well, I cannot tell.

Enter Pistol and Mrs. Quickly.

Bard. Here comes ancient Pistol, and his wife—good corporal, be patient here. How now, mine host Pistol?

Pist. Base take, call'st thou me—host! Now, by this hand, I swear, I scorn the term; nor shall my Nell keep lodgers.

Quick. No, by my troth, not long; for we cannot lodge a dozen or fourteen gentlewomen, that live honestly by the prick of their needles, but it will be thought we keep a bawdy-house straight. [Nym draws his sword.] O well-a-day, Lady, if he be not drawn now! O Lord! here's corporal Nym's—now shall we have willful adultery and murder committed. Good yeoman Bardolph,—good corporal, offer nothing here.

Nym. Pish! Pist. Pish for thee, iceland dog! thou prick-ear'd car of Iceland! Quick. Good corporal Nym, show the valor of a man, and put up thy sword.

Nym. Will you shog oil? I would have you solus. [Beheading his sword.] Pist. Solus, egregious dog! O nature vile! The solus in thy most marvellous face; the solus in thy teeth, and in thy throat, and in thy hateful lungs, yea, in thy maw, perdy; and which is worse, within thy nasty mouth! I do retract the solus in thy bowels: For I can take, and Pistol's cock is up, and flashing fire will follow. I am not as Dobson; you cannot confine me. I have a humor to knock you indifferently well: If you grow foul with me, Pistol, I will scour you with my rapier, as may be, in fair terms; If you would walk off, I would prick your guts a little, in good terms, as I may; and that's the humor of it.

Pist. O bragard vile, and damned furious wight! The grave doth gap, and doating death is near; Therefore exhale. [Pistol and Nym draw.] Bard. Hear me, hear me, what I say; he that strikes the first stroke, I'll run him up to the butt-hole, as I am a soldier. [Draws.] Pist. An oath of mickle might; and fury shall abate.

Give me thy fist, thy fore-foot to me shall.

Thy spirits are most tall.

Nym. I will cut thy throat, one time or other, in fair terms; that is the humor of it.

Pist. Come, garge, that's the word! I thee defy again.

O hound of Crete, think'st thou my spouse to go yet?

No; to the spital go, and from the powdering tub of infancy. Fetch forth the lazar kite of Cresideas's kind. Doth thy name by name, and her espousal have, and I will hold, the quadruple Quickly For the only she; and—Peace, there's enough.

Enter the Boy.

Boy. Mine host Pistol, you must come to my master—and you, hostess—he is very sick, and would to bed.—Good Bardolph, put thy nose between these sheets, and do the office of a warmingpan: faith, he's very ill.

Bard. Away, you rogue, Quick. By my troth, he'll yield the crow a pudding of these days; the king has killed his heart. Good husband, come home presently.

[Exit Mrs. Quickly and Boy.

Bard. Come, shall I make you two friends! We must to France together; Why, the devil, should we keep knives to cut one another's throats?

Pist. On news of o'erseas, and foods for food bawn on! Nym. You'll pay me the eight shillings I won of you at betting?

Pist. Of the slave that pays.

Nym. That now I will have; that's the humor of it.

Pist. As manhood shall compound; Push home. Bard. That's the sword, he that makes the first thrust, I'll kill him; by this sword, I will.

Pist. Sword is an oath, and oaths must have fair course.

Bard. Corporal Nym, an thou wilt be friends, be friends; an thou wilt not, why then be enemies with me too. Pr'ythee, put up. Nym. I shall have my eight shillings, I won of you at betting?

Pist. A noble shall thou have, and present pay. And liquor likewise will I give to thee, and friendship shall continue, and brotherhood: I'll live by Nym, and Nym shall live by me;—is not this just?—for I shall sutter Be unto the camp, and profts will accrue. Give me thy hand.

Nym. I shall have my noble!

Pist. In cash most justly paid.

Nym. Well, then, that's the humor of it.

Re-enter Mrs. Quickly.

Quick. As you ever came of women, come in quack, quack, quack, quack! A poor heart! he is shaken of a burning quotient, that it is most lamentable to behold. Sweet men, come to him.

Nym. The king hath run bad humors on the knack; it's the envy of it.

Pist. Nym, thou hast spoke the right. His heart is fracted and corroborate.

Nym. The king is a good king: but it must be as it may. He possesses some humors, and cares.

Pist. Let us condole the knight; for, lambkins, we will live. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—Southampton. A Council-Chamber.

Enter Exeter, Bedford, and Westmoreland.

Bed. 'Fore God, his grace is bold, to trust these traitors.

Exe. They shall be apprehended by-and-by.

West. How smooth and even they do bear themselves!

As if allegiance in their bosoms sat, Crowned with faith, and constant loyalty. Bard. That is the king hath note of all that they intend, By interception which they dream not.

Exe. Nay, but the man that was his bedellow, Whom he hath cloy'd and grace with princely,

That he should, for a foreign purse, so sell His sovereign's life to death and treachery!

Trumpet sounds. Enter King Henry, Scroop, Cambridge, Grey, Lords, and Attendants.

K. Hen. Now sits the wind fair, and we will aboard.

My lord of Cambridge,—and my kind lord of M三千,—

And you, my gentle knight,—give me your thoughts:

Think you not, that the powers we bear with us, Will cut their passage through the force of France? Doing the confession, and the act, For which we have in head assembled them? Scroop. No doubt, my liege, I trace man do his best. K. Hen. I doubt not that: since we are well persuaded, We carry not a heart with us from hence, That grows not in a fair consent with ours; Nor have not one believing, that doth not wish Success and conquest to attend on us.

Cam. Never was monarch better fear'd, and lov'd. Than is your majesty; there's not, I think, a subject, That is not heart-great and awe-serv'd. Under the sweet shade of your government.

Grey. Even those, that were your father's enemies, Have sleep'd their calls in honey; and do serve you With hearts create of duty and of zeal.

* A coin, value six shillings and eight-pence. 1 Force.
K. Hen. We therefore have great cause of thankfulness; And shall forget the office of our hand, Sooner than you quit3ce of desert and merit, According to the weight and worthiness. Scoop. So service shall with steed sinews fail; And hair shall renew itself with hope; To do your grace incessantly. K. Hen. We judge no less.—Uncle of Exeter, Enlarge the man committed yesterday, That can stand against our present consideration, It was excess of wine that set him on; And, on his more advice, we pardon him. Scoop. That's mercy, but too much security: Let him pull himself together; best example, Breed, by his sufferance, more of such a kind. K. Hen. 0, let us yet be merciful. Cane. So may your highness, and yet punish too. Grey. You show great mercy, if you give him life, After the taste of much correction. K. Hen. Alas, your too much love and care of me Are heavy crosses against this poor wretch. If little faults, proceeding on distemper, Shall not be wuk'd at, shall we stretch our eye, When capital crimes, chew'd, swallow'd, and di5ed. Appear before us!—We'll yet enlarge that man, Though Cambrook, Scoop, and Grey,—in their dear care, And tender preservation of our person,— Would have him punish'd. And how to our French causes; Who are the late commissioners? Crop. One, uncle, have I thought of. Your highness here your paper to ask it for to-day. Scoop. So did you me, my liege. Grey. And me, my royal sovereign. K. Hen. The Lord Richard, earl of Cambridge, there is yours; There yours, lord Scoop of Masham; and, sir knight, Grey of Northumberland, same is yours: Read them; and know, I know your worthiness. My lord of Westmoreland,—and uncle Exeter,— We will abash to-night.—Why, how now, gentle- man, What see you in those papers, that you lose So much complication!—look ye, how they change! Their checks are paper.—Why, what read you there, That hath so cowardly and chaz'd your blood Out of appearance! Con. I do confess my fault: And I submit to your highness' mercy. Grey. Scoop. To which we all appeal. K. Hen. The mercy, that was quick; 2 in us but slow. By your own counsel is suppress'd and kill'd: You must not dare, nor shame, to talk of mercy; For your own reasons turn into your bosoms, As dogs upon their masters, worrying them.— See you, my princes, and my noble peers, These English monsters! My lord of Cambridge here,— You know, my love, it isapt our love was, to accord To furnish him with all apperiments Belonging to his honor; and this man Bath, for a few light crowns, lightly conspired And sworn unto the practices of France, To kill us here in Harfleur, and there, This knight, no less for bounty bound to us Than Cambridge is,—hath likewise sworn:—But O! What shall I tell you, lord Scoop? thou cruel, Ingratitude, savage, and inhuman creature! Thou, that didst bear the key of all my counsels, That knew'st the very bottom of my soul, That didst first shew true counsels into gold, Wouldst thou have practis'd on me for thy use? May it be possible, that foreign hire Could out of thee extract one spark of evil, That didst give me true and plain intelligence, That though the truth of it stands off as gross As black from white, my eye will scarcely see it. Treason, and murder, ever kept together. As thou hast swallow'd sworn to either's purpose, Working so grossly in a natural cause, That admiration did not whoop at them: But thou, against all proportion, distrest in Wonder, to wait on treason, and on murder: And whatever cunning friends and kindred That wrought upon thee so piecemeal, If 't had the voice in hell for excellence: And other devils, that suggest by treasons, Do fetch us all; and base, base, base, base.— With patches, colours, and with forms being fetch'd From glistering semblances of piety; But be the treaper'd base, base thee stand up, gave thee no instance why thou shouldst do treason, Unless to dub thee with the name of traitor. If that same insolently, by health and fortune, Thou thus, shouldst with his own gait, walk the whole world, He might return to wary Tartar back, And tell the legions—I can never win so sole so soul as soul-slain Micheal; 0, how last thou with jealousy infected The sweetness of alliance! Show men dainties! Why, so didst thou: Seem they grave and learned! Why, so didst thou: Come they of noble family! Why, so didst thou: Seem they religious! Why, so didst thou: Or are they spare in diet; Free from gross passion, or of mirth, or anger; Constant and firm, not serving the blood; Garnish'd and dechrist'd in modest complement; Not working with the eye, without the car, And, but in purged judgment, trusting neither! Such, and such, I didst withhold from them; And thus thy fall hast left a kind of blot To mark the full-forged man, and best indued, With some suspicion. I will weep for thee; For this regard, my love, methinks, I should Another fall of man.—Their faults are open, Arrest them to the answer of the laws,— And God accept them of their practices!

Erc. I know thee high treason, by the name of Richard earl of Cambridge. K. Hen. I arrest thee of high treason, by the name of Henry lord Scoop of Masham. K. Hen. I arrest thee of high treason, by the name of Thomas Grey, knight of Northumberland. Scoop. Our purposes God justly hath discover'd; And I repent my fault, more than my death; Which I beseech your highness to forgive, Although my body pay the price of it. Con. For me—the gold of France did not seduce; Although I did admit it as a motive, The sooner to effect what I intended: But heaven be thanked for prevention; Which I in suffrance heartily will rejoice, Beseeching God, and you, to pardon me. Grey. Never did faithful subjects more rejoice At the discovery of most dangerous treason, Than I do at this hour joy o'er myself, Prevented from a damned enterprise; My fault, not my body, pardons sovereign. K. Hen. God quit you in his mercy! Hear you sentence.

You have conspired against our royal person, Join'd with an enemy proclain'd, and from his coffers Receiv'd the golden earnest of our death; Wherein you would have sold your king to slaughter, His princes and his peers to servitude, His subjects to oppression and contempt, And his whole kingdom into desolation. Ton'ning such pernicious plots, we no wise1 think; But we our kingdom's safety must so render, Whose ruin you three sought, that to her laws We do deliver you. Get you therefore hence, Poor miserable wretches, to your death; The taste whereof, God, of his mercy, give you patience to endure, and true repentance Of all your dear offended:—Be rid them hence. (Exeunt Conspirators, guarded.)

Now, lords, for France; the enterprise whereof Shall be to you, as us, like glorious. We doubt not of your heart to Juno bear. Since God so graciously hath brought to light This dangerous treason, lurking in our way, To hinder our beginnings, we doubt not now, not every one is such Kingmaker in life. Then forth, dear countrymen; let us deliver 8 Recompense. 9 Prayers. 10 Lately appointed. 11 Living.

KING HENRY V.

Act II.

Our puissance into the hand of God,
Putting it straight in expedition.
Cheerly to sea; the signs of war advance:
No king of England, if not king of France.

[Execut.

SCENE III.—Mrs. Quickly's House in Eastcheap.
Enter Pistol, Mrs. Quickly, Nym, Bardolph, and Boy.

Quick. Prythee, honest sweet husband, let me bring thee to Staines.
Pist. No; for my manly heart doth yearn.—
Bardolph, be blithe.—Nym, rouse thy vaunting venery.
Boy, bristle thy courage up; for Falstaff he is dead,
And we must yearn therefore.

Bard. 'Would, I were with him, wherefore or he there, in heaven, or in hell!
Quick. Nay, sure, he's not in hell; he's in Arthur's bosom, if ever man went to Arthur's bosom.
A made a finer end, and went away, as it had been any christo's child; a ported even just between twelve and one, e'en at turning o' the tide: for after I saw himumble with the sheets, and play with flowers, and smile upon his finger's ends, I knew there was but one way: for his nose was as sharp as a pen, and a 'babbled of green fields. How now, sir John! quoth i: what, man! be of good cheer.

Bardolph. 'Tis our God, God! three or four times now I, to comfort him, bid him, 'a should not think of God; I hoped, there was no need to trouble himself with any such thoughts yet: So, 'a made me lay more on his feet: I put my hand into the bed, and felt them, and they were as cold as any stone; then I felt to his knees, and so upward, and upward, and all was cold as any stone.

Nym. They say, he cried out of sack.
Quick. Ay, that 'a did.
Bard. And of woman.
Quick. Nay, that 'a did not.

Boy. Yes, that 'a did; and said, they were devils incarnate.

Quick. 'A could never abide carnation: 'twas a color he never liked.

Bardolph. 'A said once, the devil would have him about women.

Quick. 'A did in some sort, indeed, handle women: but then he was rheumatic and talked of the whom of Babylon.

Boy. Do you not remember, 'a saw a flea stick upon Bardolph's nose; and 'a said, it was a black soul burning in hell-fire!

Bard. Well, the fuel is gone, that maintained that fire: that's all the riches I got in his service.

Nym. Shall we shog off! the king will be gone from Richmond.

Quick. Come, let's away.—My love, give me thy lips.

Look to my chattels, and my moveables:
In haste, senseable; the word is, Pitch and pay.

Trust none;

For oaths are straws, men's faiths are waxer cakes,
And hold-fast is the only dog, my duck;

Therefore, cedro, be thy counsellor.

Go, clear thy crystals.—Yoke-fellows in arms,
Let us to France! like horse-leeches, my boys,

To suck, to suck, the very blood to suck!

But that is bad but unwholesome food, they say.
Pist. Touch her soft mouth and march.

Bardolph, farewell, hostess. [Kissing her.

Nym. I cannot kiss, that is the humor of it; but, adieu.

Quick. Let housewifery appear; keep close, I thee command.

Quick. Farewell; adieu. [Execut.

SCENE IV.—France. A Room in the French King's Palace.
Enter the English king attended; the Dauphin, the Duke of Burgundy, the Constable, and others.

Fr. King. Thus come the English with full power upon us;
And more than carefully it us concerns,
To answer royalty in our defences,
Therefore the duke of Berry, and of Bourgogne,

Grief.

Mrs. Quickly means bounty.

Of Brabant, and of Orleans, shall make forth,—
And you, prince dauphin,—with all swift despatch
To line, and new repair, our towns of war,
With all manner of courage, and with means despatchable:
For England his approaches makes as free,
As waters to the sucking of a gull.
It fits us then, to be as provident
As fear may teach us, out of late examples
Let by the fatal and neglected English
Upon our fields.

Daup. Most. My most redoubled father,
It is most meet we arm us against the foe:
For peace itself should not so dully a kingdom,
(Though war, nor no known quarrel, were in question)
But that defences, ministers, preparations,
Should be maintained, assembled, and collected,
As were a war in expectation.

Therefore I say, 'tis meet we all go forth,
To view the sick and leisure parts of France:
And let us do it with no show of fear!
No; with no more, than if we heard that England
Were beset with a strong and desperate enemy:
For, my good liege, she is so idly king'd,
Her sceptre so fantastically borne
By a vain, giddy, shallow, humorous youth,
That fear attends her not.

Con. O peace, prince dauphin! You are too much mistaken in this king:
With what great state he heard their embassy,
How well supplied with noble counsellors,
How modest in exception, and, withal,
How giddy at confidence of his kingdom.
And you shall find his vanities fore-spent
Were but the outside of the Roman Brutus,
Covering discretion with a coat of folly;
As gardeners do with ordure hide those roots
That shall first spring, and be most delicate.

Daup. Well, 'tis not so, my lord high constable,
But though we think it so, it is no matter:
In canting defence, 'tis his best to watch
The enemy more mighty than he seems,
So the proportions of defence are hid;
Which, of a weak and negligently projection,
Doth, like a miser, spoil his coat, with scarring
A little cloth.

Fr. King. Think we king Harry strong;
And, prince, look you strongly arm to meet him.
The kindred of him hath been flushed upon us;
And he is bred out of that bloody strain,
That haunted os in our familiar paths:
What with the tempests, our too much memory now,
When Cressey battle fatality was struck,
And all our princes captiv'd, by the hand
Of that black name, Edward black prince of Wales;
Whose head upon his mountain sire,—on mountain standing,
Up in the air, crown'd with the golden sun,—
Saw his heroic seed, and smiled to see him
Mange the work of nature, and dole.
The patterns that by God and by French fathers
Had twenty years been made. This is a stem
Of that victorious stock; and let us fear
The native mightness and fate of France.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Ambassadors from king Henry of England do crave admittance to your majesty.

Fr. King. We'll give them present audience. Go, and bring them.

[Exeunt Mess. and certain Lords.

You see this chase is hotly follow'd, friends.

Daup. Turn head, and stop pursuit: for coward dogs
Most spend their mouths, when they see they are to threaten,
Runs far before them. Good my sovereign,
Take up the English short; and let them know
Of what a monarch you are the head;
Self-love, my liege, is not so vile a sooner
As self-neglecting.

Re-enter Lords, with Exeter and Taun.

Fr. King. From our brother England! Ext. From him: and thus he gives your majesty [Lineage.

9 Render it callous, insensible.
10 In making objections.
Act III. Scene I. KING HENRY V.

He wills you, in the name of God Almighty,
That you direct and lay apart
The borrowed glories, that, by gift of heaven,
By law of nature, and of nations, long
To him, and to his heirs; namely, the crown,
And all the rested honors that pertain,
By custom and the ordinance of times,
Unto the crown of France. That you may know,
'Tis no sinister, nor any awkward claim,
But all the restor'd honors of your days,
Nor from the dust of old oblivion raked,
He sends you this most memorable line,
(Gives a paper.)

In every branch truly demonstrative;
Willing you overlook this pedegree;
And, when you find him every derived
From his most to'md of famous ancestors,
Edward the third, he bids you then resign
Your crown and kingdom, indirectly held
From him, the natural and true challenger.
Fr. King. Or else, what follows?

Eex. Bloody constraint; for if you hide the crown
Even in your hearts, there will be rake for it;
And therefore in fierce tempest is he coming,
In thunder, and in earthquake, like a love;
(That it requiring fait, he will compel)
And bids you, in the bowels of the Lord,
 Deliver up the crown; and to take mercy
On the other souls, for whose sins this war
Opens his vasty jaws; and on your head
Turns he the widows' tears, the orphans' cries,
The dead men's blood, the pining maidens' groans,
For hundred rich, for whose loss this war;
That shall be swallow'd in this controversy.
This is his claim, his threatening, and my message;
Unless the dauphin be in presence here.
To whom expressly I bring greeting too.

Fr. King. For us, we will consider of this further;
To-morrow shall you hear our full intent
Back to our brother England.

Dau. For the dauphin,
I stand here for him; what to him from England!

Eex. Surely and defiance; slight regard, contempt,
And any thing that may not misplease
The mighty sender, doth he prize you at.
Thus says my king; and, if your father's highness
Do not, he grant of all demain of all their days,
Sweeten the bitter mock you sent his majesty,
He'll call you to so hot an answer for it,
That crowns and wounds you in France.
Shall shade your trespass, and return your mock
In second accent of his ordinance.

Dau. Say, if my father render fair reply,
It is against my will I desire
Nothing but odds with England: to that end,
As matching to his youth and vanity,
I did present him with these Paris balls.

Eex. He'll make your Paris Louvre shake for it,
Were it the mistress court of mighty Europe;
And, be assured, you'll find a difference,
(As we, his subjects, have in wonder found,) Between the promise of his greener days,
And these he masters now: now he weighs time,
Even to the utmost grain; which you shall read
In your own losses, if he stay in France.

Fr. King. To-morrow shall you know our mind at full.

Eex. Dispatch us with all speed, lest that our king
Come here himself to question our delay;
For he is footed in this land already.

Fr. King. You shall be soon despatch'd with fair conditions;
A sight is but small breath, and little pause,
To answer matters of this consequence. [Exeunt.

ACT III.

Enter Chorus.

Chor. Thus with imag'in'd wing our swift scene flies,
In motion of no less eternity
Than that of thought. Suppose, that you have seen
The well-appointed king at Hampton pier
Embracing his royalty; and his brave feet
With pace the streamers that the youth of France
Play with your fancies; and in them behold,
Upon the hempen tackle, ship-boys climbing;
Hear the shrill whistlet, which doth order give
To those that row, and in whose oar the war
Opens his vasty jaws; and on your head
Turns he the widows' tears, the orphans' cries,
The dead men's blood, the pining maidens' groans,
For hundreds rich, for whose loss this war;
That shall be swallow'd in this controversy.
This is his claim, his threatening, and my message;
Unless the dauphin be in presence here.
To whom expressly I bring greeting too.

Scene I.—Before Harleuf.

Alarum. Enter King HENRY, EXETER, BEDFORD, GLOSTER, and Soldiers, with Scaling Ladders.

K. Hen. Once more unto the breach, dear friends, once more;
Or close the wall up with our English dead! In peace there's nothing so becomes a man, As modest stillness and humility; But when the blast of war blows in our ears, Then imitate the action of the tiger! Stiffen the sinews,ardy the blood, Disguise fair nature with hard' r' fadge; Then lend the eye a terrible aspect; Let it pry through the portage of the head, Like the transmuted lion, let the brow o'erwhelm it, As fearfully, as doth a galloped rock O'erhang and jutty his confounded base, Swill'd with the wild and wasteful ocean. Now set the helm, and stretch the nostril wide; Hold hard the breath, and bend up every spirit To his full height!—On, on, you nobles! English, Whose blood is let from fathers of war-proof! Fathers, that like so many Alexanders, Have, in these parts, from morn till even fought, And sheathed their swords for lack of argument, Dishonor not your mothers; now be those That those, whom you call'd fathers, did heget you!
Be copy now to men of grosser blood, And teach them how to war!—And you, good yeomen, Whose limbs were made in England, show us here The meetle of your pastures; let us swear That you will worth your breeding; which I doubt not:
For there is none of you so mean and base, That hath not noble lustre in your eyes. I see you stand like greyhounds in the slips, Straining upon the start. The game's about; Follow your spirit: and, upon this charge, Cry— God for Harry! England! and saint George! [Exeunt. Alarum, and Chantiers go off.

1 Bank or shore.
2 Sterns of the ships.
3 The staff which holds the match used in firing cannon.
4 Small pieces of ordnance.
5 A mole to withstand the enroachment of the tale.
6 Worn, wasted.
7 Petechia.
8 Matter, subject.
SCENE II.—The same.

Forces pass over; then enter Nym, Bardolph, Pistol, and Boy.

Bar. On, on, on, on! to the breach, to the breach!

Nym. Pray thee, corporal, stay; the knocking is too hot; and, for mine own part, I have not a case of lives: the humor of it is too hot, that is the very plain song of it.

Pist. The plain-song is most just; for, for murders do abound;

Knocks go and come; God's vassals drop and die;

And sword and shield,

In bloody field,

Both win immortal fame.

Boy. Would I were in an alehouse in London! I would give all my fame for a pot of ale and safety.

Pist. And I:

If wishes prevail with me,

My purpose should not fail with me,

But futter would I die.

Boy. As duly, but not as truly, as bird doth sing on bough.

Enter Fluellen.

Flu. God's providence!—Up to be preach'd, you rascals! will you not up to the preachings?

[Drumming them forward.]

Pist. Be merciful, great duke, to men of mould!

Abate thy rage, abate thy manifold rage!

Abate thy rage, great duke!

Good hawkward, tate thy rage! use lenity, sweet chuck!

Nym. These be good humors!—your honor wins bad humors.

[Exeunt Nym, Pistol, and Bardolph, followed by Fluellen.]

Boy. As young as I am, I have observed these three swashers. I am hoy to them all three: but all they three, though they would serve me, could not be man to me: for, indeed, three such morasses do not amount to a man. For Bardolph, he is white-livered, and red-faced; by the means whereof, 'tis faces it out, but fights not. For Pistol, 'tis a killing tongue, and a quiet sword; by the means whereof, 'tis breaks words, and keeps whole weapons. For Nym, 'tis heard that men of few words are the best men; and therefore he seems to say his prayers, lest 'a should be thought a coward; but his few bad words are match'd with a few good deeds: for 'a never broke any man's head but his own; and that was against a post, when he was drunk. They will stand upon any thing and call it purchase. Bardolph store a late-case; bore it twelve leagues, and sold it for three half-pence. Nym, and Bardolph, are sworn brothers in hatching; and in hatching a stile a fire-shovel: I know, by that course of service, the men would carry coals. They would have me as familiar with men's pockets as their clover, or their handkerchiefs; which makes much against my manhood, if I should take from another's pocket, to put into mine; for it is plain pocketing up of wrongs. I must leave them, and seek some better service: their villany goes against my weak stomach.

Re-enter Fluellen, Gower following.

Gow. Captain Fluellen, you must come presently to the mines; the duke of Gloucester would speak with you.

Flu. To the mines! tell you the duke, it is not so sweet to come to the mines: For, look you, the mines is not according to the disciplines of the war; the conceivableness of it is not sufficient; for, look you, the adversity (you may discourse into the duke, look you) is digg'd him in four yards under the counterfeit names: by Cheslin, think, 'a will plow up all, if there be not better directions.

Gow. The duke of Gloucester, to whom the order of the mines is given, is altogether directed by an Irishman; a very valiant gentleman, faith.

Flu. It is captain Macmorris, is it not?

Gow. Think'rt.

Flu. By Cheslin, he is an ass, as in the 'orld: I will vary as much in his heart: he has no more directions in the true disciplines of the war, look you, of the Roman disciplines, than is a puppy-dog.

*Bravest. *Pocket afronts. *Digge. 1

Enter Macmorris and Jame, at a distance.

Gow. Here 'a comes; and the Scots captain, captain Jame, with him.

Jame. Captain Jame is a marvelous fair-looking gentleman, with order and good sense, and knowledge, in the ancient wars, upon my particular knowledge at his directions: by Cheslin, he will maintain his argument as well as any military man in the discipline of the primitive wars of the Romans.

Jame. I say, gud-day, captain Fluellen.

Flu. God-den to your worship, gud captain Jame.

Jame. Gow. How now, captain Macmorris? have you quitted the mines? have the pioneers given o'er?

Mac. By Chrish, I, tisch ill done! This work is give over; I am ship-shape and sound the retreat. By me, I swear, and by my father's soul, the work ill done; it ishe give over: I would have blew up the town, so Chrish save me, la, in an hour. A tisch ill done, tisch ill done; by my hand, tisch ill done!

Flu. Captain Macmorris, I peseche you now, will you vouchsafe me, look you, a few disputations with you, as partly touching or concerning the disciplines of the war, the Roman wars, in the way of argument, look you, and friendly communication; partly, my opinion, and I call it the satisfaction, look you, of my mind, as touching the direction of the military discipline; that is the point.

Jame. It shall be very gud, gud faith, gud captains both: and I shall quit you with gud dese, I may pick occasion; that shall I, marry.

Mac. It is no time to discourse, so Chrish save me, the day is hot, and the weather, and the wars, and the king, and the dukers: it is no time to discourse. The town is beseech'd, and the trumpet calls us to the breach; and we talk, and, by Chrish, I am like to break one of you.

Jame. Is that the war, is there no hope? is there no chance that we may rescue mine; by the grace of the Lord! I was full fain heard some question 'twixt you yway.

Flu. Captain Macmorris, I think, look you, under your correction, there is not many of you—

Mac. Of my nation! what ish my nation? ish a villain, and a bastard, and a knave, and a rascal! what ish my nation! Who talks of my nation?

Flu. Captain, I would have you know, that if you take the matter fairer than is meant, captain Macmorris, peradventure, I shall think you do not use me with that affability as in discretion you ought to use me, look you; being so good as you are in the disciplines of war, and in the derivation of my birth, and in other particularities.

Mac. I do not know you so good a man as myself; so Chrish save me, I will cut off your head.

Gow. Gentlemen both, you will make each other.

Jame. Au! that's a foul part! [1 Parley sounded.]

Gow. The town sounds a parley.

Flu. Captain Macmorris, when there is more better opportunity by the required, part you will be so bold as to tell you, I know the disciplines of war; and there is an end.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—Before the Gates of Harflor.

Gow.-gentlemen and some Citizens on the Walls; the three forces before. Enter King Henry and his Train.

K. Hen. How yet resolves the governor of the town?

This is the latest parle we will admit: Therefore, to our best mercy give yourselves: Or, like a brother, do not destruction.

Defy us to our worst: for, as I am a soldier, (A name, that, in my thoughts, becomes me best.) If I begin the battle once again, I will not leave the half-sacrificed Harflor,

*Require, answer.
Scene V.

Till in her ashes she be buried.
The gates of mercy shall be all shut up:
And the flesh'd soldier—rough and hard of heart,—
In liberty of bloody hand, shall range
With certain wide, wide field, moving like grass
Your fresh-air virgins, and your blooming infants.
What is it then to me, if impious war.—
Array'd in thames, like to the prince of fiends,—
Do, with holy stoop, and houpplexion, all felsr
Enkind'd to waste and desolation!
What is't to me, when you yourselves are cause,
If your puny arms fall into the hand
Of hot and forcing violation?
What rein can hold hecubous wickedness,
When down the hill he holds his fierce career?
While patience, and your patience's son command
Upon the enraged soldiers in their spoil,
As send precepts to the Levithian
To come ashore. Therefore, you men of Harlequin
Take pity of your town, and of your people.
Whilest ye, my soldiers, are in my command;
Whilest yet the cool and temperate wind of grace
O'erblows the filthy and contagious clouds
Of deadly murder, spoil, and villany.
If not, why, in a moment, look to see
The blind and bloody soldier with foul hand
Deild the likes of your shrill-shrieking daughters;
Your fathers taken by the silver beards.
And their most reverend heads, dashed to the walls;
Your naked mants spitted upon pikes;
Whilest the mad mothers with their howls confus'd
Do break the clouds, as did the winds of war.
At Herod's bloody-hunting slaughtermen.
What say you? will you yield, and this avoid?
Or, guilty in defence, be thus destroy'd?
And if your expectation hath this day an end:
The dauphin, whom of snuer we entreated.
Returns us—that his powers are not yet ready
To raise so great a siege. Therefore, dread king,
With all your town, and live to do your mighty:
Enter our gates; dispose of us, and ours;
For we no longer are defensible.
K. Hen. Open your gates.—Come, uncle Exeter,
Gad, madam, and enter Harlequin; there do sit.
And fortify it strongly 'gainst the French:
Use mercy to them all. For us, dear uncle,—
The winter coming on, and sickness growing
Upon our soldiers,—we'll retire to Calais.
To-might in Harlequin will we be your guest;
To-morrow for the march are we address'd.

Flourish. The King, &c, enter the Town.

Scene V.—Rothen. A Room in the Palace.

Enter the French King, the Dauphin, Duke of Bourbon, the Constable of France, and others.

Fr. King. 'Tis certain, he hath pass'd the river
Some.

Con. And if he be not fetched with my lord,
Let us not live in France: let us quit all,
And give our vineyards to a barbarous people.

Dan. O Dieu vivent! shall a few sprays of us,
The emptying of our fellows' luxury remain;
Our seons put in wild and savage stock,
Spirt up so suddenly into the clouds,
And overlook their gravers!

Bour. Normans, but bastards Normans, Norman bastard's.

Mort de ma vie! if they march along
Unthought withal, but I will sell my dakedown,
To buy a slabbbery and a dirty farm
In that book-sotten isle of Albion.

Con. Dieu de battailles! where have they this mete?
Is not their climate foggy, raw, and duff?
On whom, as in despite, the sun looks pale,
Killing their fruit with frowns: I can sodden water,
A drench for sur-rein'd jades, their barley broth,
Can they no longer do us such vict'ry heat?
And shall our quick blood, spiritied with wine,
Seem frosty? O, for honour of our land,
Let us not haste like roaring ivolce.
Upon our houses' thigh, whiles a more frosty people
Sweat drops of gallant youth in our rich fields;
Poor—we may call them, in their native lords.

Our madmen neek at us; and plainly say,
Our mettle is bred out; and they will give
Their bodies to the lust of English youth.
To new-increase wicked bastard warriors.

Bour. They bid us——to the English dancing schools,
And teach fashionable high, and swift eorantae;—
Saying grace is only in our heels.
And that we are most fully runaways.

Fr. King. Where is Montjoy, the herald! sped

Let him greet her majesty with our sharp defiance.—
Up, princes; and with spirit of honor edg'd,
More sharper than your swords, hie to the field—
Charles! Sidney! Bertrand, high constable of France.
You dukes of Orleans, Bourbon, and of Berry,
Alencon, Barabant, Bar, and Burgundy;
Jacques Chatillon, Rambures, Vaudemont,
Bourbon, Blaxill, Roussy, and all your numbers,
Foilz, Lestraile, Bourciqault, and Charolais;

Last. 7 Shooting into promontories.

1st. Over-Hidden. 9 Dances.
High dukes, great princes, barons, lords, and knights,
For your great seats, now quit you of great shames.
But Harry England, that swerves through our land
With poisons painted in the blood of Harlequin:
Kush on his host as doth the melted snow
Upon the vales; whose low vassal seat
The mild Alp dispart and void his thorn upon;
Go down upon him,—you have power enough,—
And in a captive chariot, into Rouen
Bring him our prisoner.

KING. This becomes the great.

Sorry am I, his numbers are so few,
His soldiers sick, and famish'd in their march;
For, I am sure, when he shall see our army,
His heart will flow, and grace him heartily.
And, for achievement, offer us his ransom.
FR. KING. Therefore, lord constable, haste on speed.

And let him say to England, that we send
To know what willing ransom he will give,— Prince duphyn, you shall stay with us in Rouen.

Duke. Not so, I do beseech your majesty.
FR. KING. Be patient, for you shall remain with us.
Now forth, lord constable, and princes all;
And quickly bring us word of England's fall.

[Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—The English Camp in Picardy.

Enter Gower and Fluellen.

Gower. How now, captain Fluellen? come you from the bridge!

Flu. I assure you, there is very excellent service committed at the bridge.

Gower. Can the Duke of Exeter safe?

Flu. The duke of Exeter is as magnanimous as Macbeth, and a man that I love and honor with my soul, and my heart, and my duty, and my life, and my head, and my last gasp; he is not, (Got be praised, and praised!) any hurt in the 'orld; but keeps the prude most valiantly, with excellent discipline. There is an ensign there at his head, which I think very conspicuous; he is as valiant as Mark Antony; and he is a man of no estimation in the 'orld: but I did see him do gallant service.

Gower. What do you call him?

Flu. He is called,—ancient Pistol.

Gower. I know him not.

Enter Pistol.

Flu. Do you not know him? Here comes the man.

Pistol. Captain, I thee beseech to do me favors:
The duke of Exeter doth love thee well.

Flu. Ay, I praise God; and I have merited some love of hands.

Pistol. Bardolph, a soldier, firm and sound of heart, Of luxum valor, hath,—by earl fate,
And giddy fortune's furiousickle wheel,
The careless blind.

That stands upon the rolling restles stone.—

Flu. By your patience, ancient Pistol. Fortune is painted blind, with a muller before her eyes, to signify to you that fortune is blind: And she is painted also with a wheel; to signify to you, which is the moral of it, that she is turning, and meanest, and variations, and mutabilitie; and her foot, which is fixed upon a spherical stone, which rolls, and rolls, and rolls;—In good truth, the poet make a most excellent description of fortune; fortune, look you, is an excellent moral.

Pistol. Fortune is Bardolph's foe, and frowns on him:
For he hath stol'n a pig, and hanged must 'a be,
A damned death!

Let gallows-gate for dog, let man go free,
And let not hep in his windpipe suffocante:
But Exeter hath given the doom of death,
For as much as of lifetime.
Therefore, go speak, the duke will hear thy voice.
And let not Bardolph's vital thread be cut
With edge of penny curb, and vile reproof:
Speak, captain, for his life, and I will then requite thee.

1 A folio of linen which partially covered the face.
2 A small box in which were kept the consecrated waters.

Flu. Ancient Pistol, I do partly understand your meaning.

Pistol. Why then, rejoice therefore.

Flu. Ancient Pistol. Why then, to be a thing to rejoice at; for, if look, you were my brother, I would desire the duke to use his good pleasure, and put him to executions; for disciplines ought to be used.

Pistol. And die be damned; and figo for thy friendship.

Flu. It is well.

Gower. Why this is an arrant counterfeited rascal; I remember him now; a bad, a cupurse.

Flu. Go to. Sir; you are a utter'd as prances at the bridge, as you shall see in a summer's day: But it is very well; what he has spoke to me, that is well, when time is, the song is.
